As there is no place on this iron-bound coast where ships can touch at, peculiar means must be adopted to catch the European news on its way west. The Associated Press of America therefore employ vessels to cruise constantly in the neighbourhood of the Cape, and board the outward-bound steam-ships. Having got the important intelligence, they hasten to the shore, and forward their despatch by wires passing through Newfoundland, across the sea between it and Breton Island, and afterwards the Gut of Canseau, through Nova Scotia, across the head of the Bay of Fundy, to the United States.

This arrangement of telegraph brings Europe practically within seven days of America. Thus the Canard ships leaving New York on Wednesday are off Cape Race the following Sunday; being there boarded by the telegraph-boat, they receive the New York news up to that time; on the following Sunday that ship arrives at Cork harbour, Ireland, when its news is instantly forwarded to London. And the same on the outward-bound voyages.

Since the introduction of the electric telegraph this lonely mass of storm-washed rock, whose existence was scarcely known to any one except the mariner, who sought it only that he might know his whereabout and carefully avoid it, has become as well known and as familiar as is that of New York or Boston. It would be difficult to take up an American newspaper now without finding a paragraph headed "Latest News from Europe, vià Cape Race."

On the western side of the States the telegraph ends at the Missouri River; but, as the States on the west side of the Rocky Mountains are as anxious for early news as the Yankees themselves, the latest intelligence from Europe, being passed through to the Missouri, is then taken up by a remarkable line of communication called the Pony Express—a line of small, fleet horses being maintained across the great plains, over the Rocky Mountains, to San Francisco. On arrival of the telegraph from Cape Race at St. Joseph, on the Missouri, a horse starts at a gallop with the news, and at the end of the distance of a fresh horse is employed to carry the telegraph message. The journey is performed in about nine days, and in about ten days, or according California with England in little over a fortnight.

THE FEMALE BLONDIN.

THE success which has attended the performances of Blondin has had its natural effect in producing imitators. It is the law of trade. On Monday se'nnight a female Blondin essayed the extraordinary exploit of crossing the Thames at Cremorne on a tight rope; and had it not been for the accidental delay of the boat in front of the rope the exploit would, almost a little doubt, have been quite successful. The lady ascended from the damp side, and in the inclement state of the distance and weather when she was observed to falter. The moment was one of painful suspense. She made her way backwards, however, and at last, once again essayed the ascent, and when she stepped when a considerable way across, sat down and made signs to the people below, as if to cast up a rope. This was done, and she let herself down by a rope to the centre of the river, and was taken up in a boat. The absence of guide-ropes to steady the main rope would have been the cause of the danger. The ropes gentlemen had huge lumps of lead attached to them; and it is understood the ropes were cut away by some thieves. The courage displayed by the lady in the trying circumstances surrounded almost a greater amount of admiration than would have been produced had the rope been there, and the many fluttering hearts relieved. The interest exhibited in this performance was immense, and both sides of the river were densely thronged.

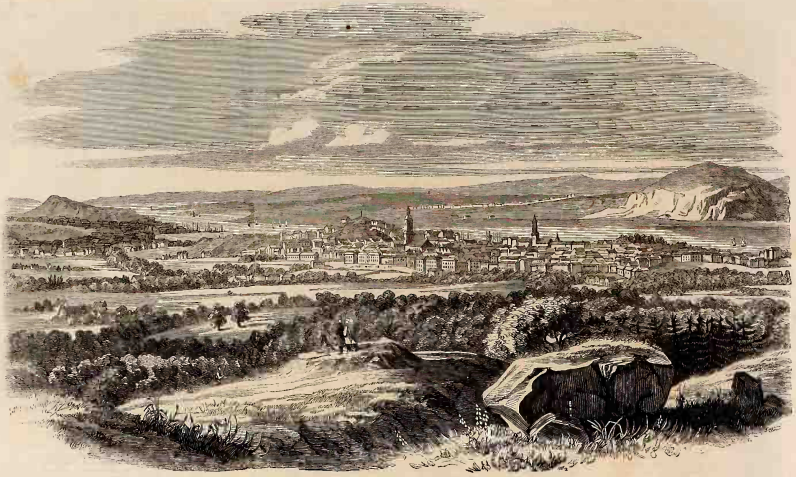
The delicacy in the management of the rope across the Thames at Cremorne having been remedied, the female Blondin made her second attempt on Monday last, which was also crowned with success, the failure last week was in the appliances. The daring equilibrist began her exhibition of skill and courage from the first compartment on the Surrey side, and then from the Battersea side of the water. She stood forth in the light of the declining sun, her gold-broidered dress and white pole glittering resplendently in the beams, and at times quite bright, the whole distance being traversed in seven minutes. Thousands of people lined the banks of the river on each bridge, and every spot where a view could be obtained; and the gardens themselves, owing to the excellent opportunity the esplanade offers of seeing the daring performance, were crowded. Every one seemed delighted at the lady's success, and as she proceeded on her way towards the gardens, steadily but confidently, the cheers of the people on the bridges were deafening.

On Tuesday next there will be a special gala and fete, for the benefit of Mr. Adams, the secretary of the establishment, when the Female Blondin will perform, and a most excellent concert entertainment. Mr. Adams has rendered valuable service as secretary of the gardens for upwards of ten years.

THE TREASURY, ALGIERS.

THE seat of the French finance offices in Algeria, called Le Trésor, which stands almost a solitary specimen of the very old Moorish style of architecture in the suburbs of Mustapha, is situated on the slope of the railroad from that city to Bliidah. No apology need, therefore, be offered for presenting to our readers an illustration of this curious specimen of the art of building as it used to be thought of and used by the Moors. The building, which now also stands our Engraving, is almost the only one of its kind now remaining in Algiers. It consists of a square house, with a marble basin in front, and has a conduit round it, and is covered with a kind of canopy, consisting of a dome supported by four columns, and round the dome a sloping tiled roof projects, which is upheld at certain points by columns. The tiles are painted green, the woodwork a bright yellow, and the columns red and green.

BRITISH FISHERIES.—The annual report of the commissioners for the British fisheries notices the growing tendency to open the Continental markets to the fishermen of this country by a reduction of the duties which the trade has been chiefly with Prussia and the Baltic ports, but France has already made the commencement of a movement in the same direction, which is enough yet to allow a thriving trade to be pushed in that quarter. Negotiations are also on foot with Austria and Russia for the same purpose. The unfortunate tech nations, if Austria could be induced to relax her tariff. The British herring fishery in 1860 was unusually large, and the Irish herring fishery considerable. The herring, cod, and ling fisheries employed 12,711 boats, manned by 54,410 fishermen and boys, and the boats and nets and lines engaged were of the estimated value of £750,176. The administration of the fishery cousists in the appointment of fishery guards and overseers and in the superintending of the harbours, and, although the fisheries employed 12,711 boats, manned by 54,410 fishermen and boys, and the number of vessels and boats employed was 21,913 barrels were branded last year, 317,656 were cured in bulk, and 21,913 barrels were branded last year, 317,656 were cured in bulk, and 21,913 barrels were branded last year, 317,656 were cured in bulk, and

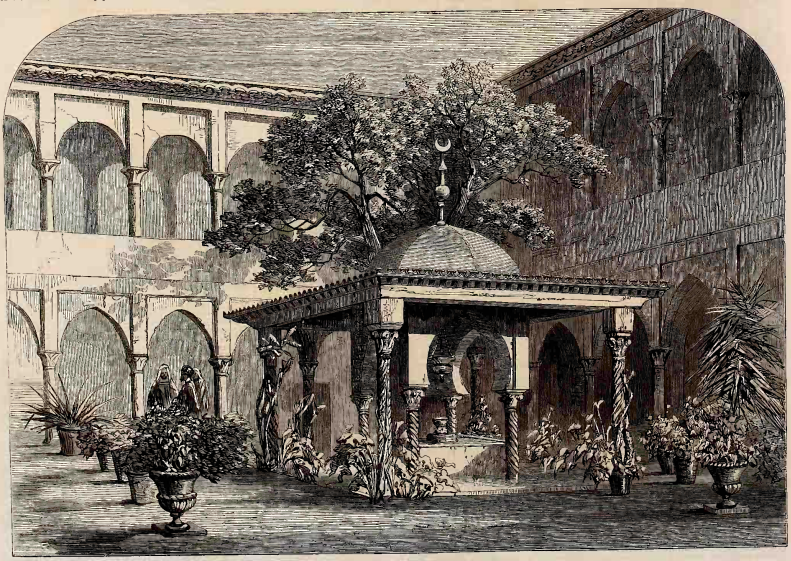


GOTTENBURG, SWEDEN.

GOTTENBURG, SWEDEN.

Now that the London season is over, those who form the great world of the metropolis are off to the country, or out of the country—no inconsiderable portion of its members winging, or rather steaming, their way to Gottenburg, thence to spread over Sweden and Norway whilst the King of those realms has been recreating himself in England.

Gottenburg, Gothenburg, or Gotheborg—for so the place is variously spelled—is a seaport city of West Sweden, the capital of a lan or province of the same name, at the head of a fiord on the Kattegat, which receives the Gotha River, immediately opposite the north extremity of Denmark. It has a population of about 30,000. Many of the merchants are Englishmen, and our language is pretty generally spoken there. The town is divided into the upper and lower: the former is a marshy plain, intersected by canals, and the latter on the adjacent rocky heights. Its principal street, called Great Harbour-street, runs from east to west, and divides the town into two nearly equal parts. The houses are mostly built of stone, or bricks well stuccoed. Most of the streets are regular, intersecting each other at right angles. Gothenburg bears a great similarity to many of the towns in the Netherlands, the banks of the canals which run through its streets being planted with trees. The upper town, from its situation, is irregularly built; but it has an imposing appearance, the houses rising one above another, in the form of an amphitheatre. Among its principal edifices are the exchange, arsenal, East India House, townhall, cathedral and seven other churches, theatre, barracks, and hospitals. It has a school for 100 children of soldiers, free school for the board of 200 and education of 300 children, and two orphan asylums, with a college and public library, a society of arts and sciences, and a chamber of commerce. The town has factories for weaving, spinning, and printing cotton goods, manufactures of woollens and sailcloth, snuff, glass, and paper, porter breweries, tanneries, and shipbuilding docks. Its exports are iron, timber, tar, copper and other metals, oak-bark, bones, berries, and rock-moss; its imports being salt, rice, and herrings, which last were formerly the chief article of export. The harbour is commodious for vessels of moderate size, and is defended by three forts.



THE TREASURY, ALGIERS.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

A BOER'S WILD-BOAR HUNT IN ALGERIA.—SEE PAGE 204.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Winchester, old fifty-gun frigate, will proceed to Liverpool as a training-ship forthwith at the Canway.

The scheme devised by Lord Herbert for attracting officers to the cavalry, by equalising the prices of the commissions with those of the infantry, has had the effect of reducing the vacancies to nil.

The Board of Admiralty is now engaged in obtaining information from the several ports as to the exact depth of water, the nature and dimensions of docks, gridirons, &c., in order to register them for the benefit of the naval and mercantile services.

The whole of the available troops in Chatham Garrison assembled on Wednesday week on the Lines, under their respective brigadier officers, in a considerable number of spectators had the satisfaction of beholding an excellent field-day, under the direction of Major-General H. Eyre, commandant. The evolutions occupied above three hours.

Arrangements are now being made for commencing the military roads in connection with the defences at the north-east end of Hull. Each portion of the establishment has a plot of land allotted to him for cultivation. The general number of inmates, chiefly recruits from the three divisions of Chatham, Portsmouth, and Woolwich, is 400; and, as a proof of the advantages of rescuing young recruits from the contaminating influences from which it is worthy of remark that during the three months since the depôt has been opened no inmate has been discharged for misconduct.

The 15th Hussars, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Jeaynes and Colonel E. Ryan, have left Aldershot for Brighton, where the regiment will be quartered. The Government has made extensive arrangements for occupying the stabling at the Royal Pavilion. The 1st Regiment will remain at Brighton until the 1st of October, when it proceeds to Aldershot. The 32nd Regiment arrived on the 22nd proceeds to the westward, the 6th Regiment proceeds to Dublin, the 1st Battalion 3rd Buffs, will leave Hilsea Barracks on the 31st of August for the depôt at Canterbury, No. 11 battery of the depôt brigade, Royal Artillery, is commanded by Captain Goodwin, and the 2nd Troop, Royal Horse Artillery, by Captain Webber-Smith Adderley.

A circular memorandum has been issued from the War Office, signed by the Duke of Cambridge, dated the 20th inst., by which, in consequence of questions arising as to the extent of quarters, &c., to which commissioned officers are entitled, and also as to the rank of commissioned, warrant and non-commissioned officers employed in the several branches of the Army, and also of departmental establishments, the following regulations, viz.:—Field-Marshal, A.D. C. Those placed in class A will be considered first-class chief officers, and will consist of commissioned officers, warrant officers, under-sergeants, schoolmasters of the first, second, and third class, schoolmistresses, superintendents of nursing of the first class, hospital sergeants, dispensary first and second class, militia conductors of stores, paymaster's clerk, orderly-room clerks, hospital sergeants, and the medical staff sergeants. The non-commissioned officers belonging to class B will be considered as second-class chief officers.—viz., Armourer-sergeant, bandmaster, bugle-major, sergeant, or lady-room sergeants, colour-sergeants, company sergeant-majors, paymasters' sergeants, quartermasters of the third class, and regimental sergeants. Those in class C will consist of assistant-schoolmasters, sergeant instructors of gunnery, farrier-sergeants, armourers, military clerks, and all other first-class clerks of the third class. The above classification has been sanctioned by the Duke of Cambridge.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF PORTSMOUTH.—Not alone are the new defences of Portsmouth being rapidly advanced towards completion, but the armament of the existing defences is being completed. Forty 10-pounder Armstrong guns are ordered to be forwarded to Portsmouth for the use of the artillery volunteers of the sea face of the defences and the western approaches to the harbour. The Royal Portsmouth Artillery have also been ordered to equip the present 68-pr. pivot smooth-bore gun mounted at the St. Jamer's gate, the remaining 68-pr. field-gun battery, and the 32-pr. field-gun battery at the new King's Bastion. The auxiliary earthen redan cut and vest at Southsea Castle will also be armed with guns, and the earthen redan at Lumps and Eastney will also be armed with the same description of weapon. Lumpsfield Battery will also receive its guns. The 68-pr. guns mounted on the sea face of the defences on the island of Portsea. The remaining 32-pr. guns will be mounted between Blockhouse and Eastney, the auxiliary earthen batteries of Fort Monckton and at Brownsdown, the earthen redan at Southsea Castle, the fort at Cliff end and Victoria Park. The fortifications, present and projected, for the defence of Portsmouth harbour dockyard and arsenal, may be divided into three separate groups—viz., the works to defend the approaches to Spithead and the southern shores of the Isle of Wight—1. The inner line of defence, consisting of the works now existing surrounding the towns of Portsmouth, Portsea, and Gosport, with the Blockhouse Gosport fort, and Royal Shell Battery, and the fort on the harbour's mouth. 2. Southsea Castle, Lumps, Eastney, and Cumberland forts, with their auxiliary earthen batteries. The Hilsea lines form no part of the entrance to the island of Portsea by land. The line of detached forts (two from Tipner Point to Rudmore Point and the defensive works now existing

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1862.

We have from time to time recorded the progress of the International Exhibition building at South Kensington; and we now give some further particulars on the subject, extracted from two interesting, and in some respects amusing, articles which have just appeared in the Times on the Great Exhibition of next year:—

PROGRESS OF THE BUILDING.

Every day now adds visibly to the growth of the stupendous structure which is being built in connection with each rapidity at South Kensington. Of the latter there is already the appearance of a gallery of art—and, very soon, thousands of colossus, giddery, and the wonders of the Exhibition of 1862 will be ready for their public places. The remainder are being rapidly forwarded, and shall be in time for the opening of the Exhibition of next year, at which time we believe all the framework for the Exhibition of last year will have been erected. In all these 200 tons of cast and wrought iron are daily put connecting.

The progress which could on Mr. Barnes, of Stanley, who has been intrusted with the fitting of the works, and he has been enabled to do so with extraordinary rapidity in such an exceedingly short time. The all these columns are already erected. There are 150 of these, 30 feet high, 12 columns are already erected. There are 150 of these, 30 feet high, 12 inches round, which run from South Kensington to the Crystal Palace at each end to the Royal Horticultural Gardens Gallery will be all ready in their Nursery. Early in October, and will also be used for refreshments. These after the exhibition of 1862 will be the most difficult thing that has been done in the metropolis in Kensington ever needed them more.

The wonder of the work for the present is rapidly advancing towards completion at the works of the Thames Iron Company. The iron of each dome will weigh about 800 tons. Each dome, as we have said, will be 160 feet in the largest ever constructed. They are to be decolegated in shape, 160 ft. high by 160 ft. in diameter. The dome at the north is 140 ft. in diameter and 75 ft. high; the dome in the halls of Carcasis was 111 ft. in diameter, 120 ft. high, and the dome in the Crystal Palace was 141 ft. in diameter, 104

PRINCE LOUIS OF HESSE.

PRINCE LOUIS OF HESSE.

His Grand Ducal Highness Prince Frederick William Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt is the eldest son of Prince Charles William Louis (who is the eldest son of the Grand Duke Louis III.) by the Princess Marie Elizabeth Caroline Victoria, daughter of Prince Frederick William Charles of Prussia, uncle of the late and of the present King. The affianced husband of the Princess Alice is, therefore, heir in the direct line, although in the second, to the Grand Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, which is under the rule of the second main branch of the house of Hesse, and was founded in 1567 by George I., youngest son of Philip the Generous, who is noted for having introduced the Reformation into his Landgravate of Hesse, and who divided his dominions among his four sons. William, the eldest, obtained one-half, with Cassel, the capital; Louis a fourth part, with Marburg; Philip an eighth, with Rheinfels; and George an eighth, with Darmstadt. But Philip and Louis dying without issue, there remained only the two main branches of Hesse-Cassel, the Electorate, and Hesse-Darmstadt, the Grand Duchy. This latter consists of two large portions, which are separated from each other by a long strip of land, extending from east to west, belonging to Hesse-Cassel and the city of Frankfort. The northern portion is bounded on the west by Prussia and Nassau, and on the south-east and south by Hesse-Cassel. The southern portion is bounded on the north by Nassau, Frankfort, and Hesse-Cassel; and on the other sides by Bavaria and Baden. The area of the whole is about 3000 square miles.

The Grand Duchy, which is divided into three provinces as a part of the German Confederation, is the ninth in rank, has three votes in the full Council and one in the Minor Council, furnishes a contingent of 6195 men to the second division of the eighth corps of the Confederate Army, and contributes 1500 florins annually to the treasury of the Confederation. Hesse-Darmstadt is, on the whole, an agricultural country, its chief production being cereal. There are some mines of copper, iron, coal, and salt; and some manufactures of woollens, cottons, linen, leather, and hardware. The revenue is estimated at 5,576,105 florins, and the expenditure at an equal sum. The military establishment in times of peace is 6288 men. The religion of the State is Protestant, but a number of the population, which amounts to 718,000, are Roman Catholics. There is a University—Giessen—and a fair proportion of elementary and training schools. Darmstadt, the capital, is situated on the River Darm, between the Maine and the Neckar, about ten miles from the Rhine, and also from the commencement of the Bergstrasse, a Roman road leading from Darmstadt to Basle. It is divided into the old and new town, the former inclosed within old massive walls. It has six gates, five public squares, the Grand Ducal residence; a large edifice, containing a library of about 100,000 volumes; a museum of natural history, a small but choice gallery of pictures and antiques, and extensive pleasure-grounds. The Opera House is remarkably handsome and convenient, and, as a whole, the future residence of a daughter of England is considered to be one of the pleasantest towns in that part of Germany. It should be added that Prince Louis was born in 1837, is a Captain in the 1st Regiment of the Prussian Guards, and Colonel of the Russian Regiment of Hussars of Kliastitzy.

PRINCESS ALICE.

On the 9th instant the ceremonial of signing the marriage contract between Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse took place at Osborne House. We this week present our subscribers with Portraits of the affianced Prince and Princess. Her Royal Highness Alice Maud Mary, Princess of the United Kingdom, is the third child and second daughter of her Majesty the Queen, and was born at Buckingham Palace on the 25th of April, 1843, and baptised on the 2nd of June in the same year. On more than one occasion speculation was abroad on the subject of the marriage of her Royal Highness, and at that time rumour assigned to the Prince of Orange, the heir to the throne of Holland, the claim to her hand. About a year ago, however, it became understood that the choice of all parties concerned had fallen on his Highness Prince Louis of Hesse; and in May last a formal intimation of the fact of the betrothal was made to Parliament, and a sum of £30,000 as a dowry and an annuity of £6000 were granted by the House of Commons to her Royal Highness unanimously and without a word of discussion. It is believed that the marriage of the Princess will take place early in the ensuing spring.

Our portraits of Prince Louis of Hesse and Princess Alice are from photographs by J. and C. Watkins, of Parliament-street.

WILD BOAR HUNT IN ALGERIA.

Among the exercises that contribute most towards forming good military riders are certainly the hunts organised by the French Algerian authorities for the destruction of dangerous animals. The French troops in Africa require activity; they are sent thither as to a school of adversity, to become inured to toil and hardships; and when not employed in fighting the Arab tribes, or in opening up new routes, or in constructing forts and outworks, the chase affords an opportunity for the exertion and exercise necessary for the due maintenance of the Gallic soldier's health and vigour. During an excursion made by the 1st Regiment of the Chasseurs d'Afrique, this pastime of the hunt was got up at almost every halt. A scene from a hunt of this description that took place at Bordj-Bouira, on the 8th of May last, was sketched by M. Girardin, a young painter, following the column as an amateur, and his drawing having been placed at the disposal of our artist, Mr. Jean Weir, that distinguished draughtsman has reproduced the interesting and picturesque sporting scene with his habitual talent.

On arriving at the bivouac of Bordj-Bouira the neighbouring ravines were pointed out to Colonel Lascours, who commanded the column, as the resort of boars and other wild beasts. By the Colonel's orders a grande chasse was immediately organised, and promised more than the ordinary amount of excitement, as the natives had announced the news of a lion having been recently seen in the vicinity. The hunting-ground comprised a number of parallel ravines, somewhat deep, descending from the spur of the Jurjura, the ridges of the different passes trending gradually towards the plain of the Hamza. All the country about here is either wooded or covered with formidable thickets; there are but very few regular paths, and those only practicable for the surefooted Arab horses.

At the appointed hour the native chiefs brought to the "meet" at least three hundred scouts, a certain number of whom were on horseback and provided with firearms, the remainder on foot, and merely armed with mattrags, or thick sticks. All these Arabs were placed upon the same line, in the plain opposite the mountain, the shooters being distributed along the ridges and wherever there was a chance of seeing a wild boar pass. On a preconcerted signal being given the scouts advanced, hasting up the thickets of jumper and jujube trees, and uttering loud and almost deafening cries so as to drive out the animals from their cover in the ravines. A troop of wild boars soon took flight in the direction of the mountain; some of these were promptly killed by the armed scouts at their different posts. But immediately afterwards the scene changed: the Arab mounted scouts, as well as the French troopers, animated by the sight of the numerous animals and by the sounds of the firearms, hastened to the pursuit of the boars that had succeeded in forcing the lines of the tirours, and then began one of those headlong races in which it is difficult to say whether we most admire the skill and boldness of the riders, or the energy, grace, and suppleness of their Arab horses, which, going at the top of their speed, clear every obstacle with a surety of foot that is never deceived, even in the steepest and most rugged paths.

The remainder of the fugitive herd was speedily surrounded by all the huntsmen, both French and Arab being carried away by all the excitement, both French and Arab being carried away by all the excitement, and electrified, as it were, by mutual excitement. Gunshots and pistol-shots were fired off on every side, so that there was a certain amount of danger in being present at such a mêlée, for whenever an Arab smells powder he becomes intoxicated, and fires away indiscriminately to the right or to the left, not at all heeding who may be near.

The hand having been thus destroyed without accident to the "assistants," the trumpets sounded the recall. The number of victims was fourteen full-grown boars and six young ones; they were all brought to the place of rendezvous, and put upon mules, to be taken in triumph into the camp. The chasseurs, with their Colonel at the head of the column, formed the escort; the march was enlivened by repeated flourishes of trumpets; and at the entrance of the bivouacking-ground a kraal-poje was discharged to the air in front of them who had remained behind, but who had come out to meet the "return from the hunt"—not the least brilliant of the scenes composing the general action, on account of the great variety of the costumes and the gayety of the Arabian horsemen wheeling about on their splendid steeds under the rays of the bright African sun. The wild beasts were afterwards arranged in order on the ground, and each sportsman sought to recognise the animal which he supposed had fallen from the effects of his powder.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS ALICE.

"FLORIZEL AND PERDITA," BY O. A. TESTAR, R.A., AT THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—SEE PAGE 205.

In the evening of the 8th of May the licence of the 1st Regiment of Chasseurs was particularly gay; the men, arranged as in small tables, took their seats around the large kettles that gave forth an appetite-exciting odour, and, as they partook of the savoury slices of boar-flesh, gave vent to each other their "opening events" of the day. Some openly expressed regret at not having encountered the lion; but many others—and these were the majority—inwardly rejoiced at having avoided him. However, unless a companion-piece were given to Julius Gerard, it is excusable to feel a certain emotion in the presence of that high and mighty personage.

"FLORIZEL AND PERDITA."

OUR Engraving is taken from the well-known picture, by C. Leslie, R.A., in the collection at the South Kensington Museum, and which, under the title of "Florizel and Perdita," illustrates one of the most charming scenes in "The Winter's Tale," and is that in act iv., sc. 3, where Perdita and Camillo indignantly answer to the mendacious admonishing of Perdita on her flowers. The skill and taste in the grouping of the five characters in the picture, which is apparent enough on the face of it, is a reference to the fine lines spoken by Perdita and Polixenes, and Florizel, which run thus:—

Per. Sir, welcome.
It is my father's will I should take on me
The hostess-ship o' the day:—You're welcome, sir!
Give me those flowers there, Dorcas.—Reverend sirs,
For you there's rosemary, and rue; these keep Seeming, and savour, all the winter long:
Grace and remembrance be to you both,
And welcome to our shearing!
Pol. Shepherdess
(A fair one are you!), well you fit our ages
With flowers of winter.
Per. Sir, the year growing ancient,—
Not yet on summer's death, but with the spring
Of trembling winter,—the fairest flowers o' the season
Are our carnations and streak'd gillyvors,
Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind
Have I not in my garden, nor make account,
But, with due reverence, sow such flowers as They say you have in Bohemia. Sure, this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

(To Pol.

Flo. What you do,
Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms,
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: when you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function. Each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deed,
That all your acts are queens.
Per. O, Doricles,
Your praises are too large. But that you have
But observation, which patience confers,
To my short course, which not discredits it,
I were afraid to speak your perfections,
Lest, you should nothing hear but yourself,
You would not do good faith.

(To Camillo.

Cam. I should know you
By your garb, weet, if looks did not proclaim
A mind as far as your's is above your fortune.
Your guest, then, madam: to be entertain'd
Is not a service, rather obsequy
Of nature's right to strangers.
Per. Take your flowers:
Methinks I play as I have seen them do
In Whitsun pastorals. Sure, this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

THE NEW BANKRUPTCY ACT.—The following are some of the most important changes made in the Act which received the Royal assent just ready to come into force on the 1st of November next. In respect of future debts. The seizure and sale of the goods of a debtor under an execution may be allowed to avoid the effect of bankruptcy, and no such execution may be put in motion, duly advertised. Percentages are no longer to be taken from bankrupts' estates, and all the proceeds of the estate are to be promptly realised in money, and paid into a public account. The Court of Bankruptcy may remove the proceedings to any County Court, or, if they think fit, direct a trial to be had in the ordinary course of law. The Court may determine whether the bankrupt shall have any and what allowance for support. The Court is to order in whose custody the books of account of the bankrupt shall be deposited. Solicitors' bills and papers belonging to the bankrupt's estate may be delivered to the assignees, whether the estate shall be realised by an official assignee or by assignees chosen by creditors, and no lien for costs shall attach upon the instrument of a paid messenger. All moneys received by the assignees of the bankrupt are forthwith paid into the Bank of England to the account of the Accountant in Bankruptcy, and in country districts where there shall be a branch of the Bank of England, into such other bank as the Court shall direct. The creditors' assignee must every three months submit a statement of his proceedings with vouchers to the official assignee for examination, and after such accounts have been passed the official assignee is to make a report of the proceedings and the condition of the estate, and result of the examinations and accounts of the assignee to every creditor who has proved upon the bankruptcy. The price of debts may be made by sending to the assignee through the general post a statement of such debt and of the amount claimed, between the creditor and the debtor, accompanied by a declaration signed by the creditor that such a statement is a full, true, and complete statement of the account between them. False declaration to be a misdemeanour. All statements of accounts are to be compared with the books and papers of the bankrupt, by the Official Assignee, unless otherwise ordered. Audited accounts shall after the passing of his last examination is to be entitled to an unconditional discharge. Very stringent penal clauses are provided, for a variety of offences the Court may summarily order imprisonment for any period not exceeding one year, or may refuse or suspend or qualify the bankrupt's attachment or threaten such future property. Fraudulent undischargeable under the Act to be held in force for a short term with or without a fine, at the option of the bankrupt, and, on conviction, may be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, and shall be liable to such punishment as may attached to the offence by any existing statute. The Court may direct the creditors' assignee to institute any civil proceeding in the name of the estate, and the costs of such prosecution will be borne in the same manner as the expenses of proceedings in bankruptcy are now borne, and other costs incurred by such prosecutor not so charged are to be paid out of the Accountant-General's fund. Most important sections are those which enable a debtor and his creditor to effect private arrangements under trust or composition deeds, a majority of creditors in number, including creditors for one-fifth in value, may, on execution of a deed of arrangement, and registering it in the county where the debtor resides, and as to lands in the county or counties in which they shall require its assistance to decide questions as to disputed claims, and such decision shall be binding on all parties.

BANKRUPTCY STATISTICS.—The number of bankruptcies gazetted in England and Wales during the seven months ending the 31st ult. was 1,319, or the ratio of 1145 per annum, as against the average of 1,100 in the corresponding period of the last seven years. The number in 1861 is thus shown to be 7·67 per cent above the average. The number of bankrupts gazetted this year in London alone is 1,015, or the ratio of 1,740 per annum, to the Manchester, 104 to the Birmingham, 91 to the Leeds, 47 to the Bristol, 32 to the Liverpool, and 11 to the Newcastle districts. In the London district there is an excess of 32·16 per cent; in the Manchester, an excess of 15·74 per cent; in the Birmingham, an excess of 71·79 per cent; in the Leeds, an excess of 46·93 per cent; in the Bristol, an excess of 29·58 per cent; in the Exeter, an excess of 14·09 per cent; and in the Preston, an excess of 18·28 per cent. Of course, these figures do not include the numerous private arrangements carried out for winding up and administering insolvent estates; but they nevertheless afford some indication of the commercial situation of the country.

The narrow gauge between Paddington and Reading was opened on Wednesday week for a short train, being run from Reading to London and back. There is now a mixed gauge between Birmingham and Paddington for a distance of 104 miles. The trains can be run without break of gauge from Liverpool to the metropolis direct.

A NAVAL BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. By WILLIAM R. O'BYRNE, F.R.G.S. O'Byrne Brothers.

This is the first volume of a new and enlarged edition of a work which professes, and with truth, to comprise the services of all living naval officers, together with those of the officers of the Royal Marines. Eleven years ago the first edition of the present was brought out, and up to that period England knew but little of her naval sons as a body beyond their names and the dates of their last commissions as given in the official Navy List, or such passing notices of individual performances as appeared from time to time in the public press. By the projection and publication of this work the Government has been enabled to place the public an index and something more to the services of every officer, from the Admiral of the Lieutenant, as well as those of Masters, Engineers, Mates, Second Masters, Chaplains, Naval Instructors, medical officers, Paymasters, and Assistant Paymasters—not alone the brilliant dashing deeds of the merry fortunate of war, but those of hard-working, continuous, hopeful, but often ill-requited services of the many who are helping together the arm of England's naval greatness. Since the first issue of the work, which was at once appreciated and sold by the Navy, but by the public in general, much has wrought gratefulness in the subjects of the biography. Of the newly 5000 officers whose names were given in more or less detail, 700 died during the progress of the work, while 1000 more have been added. This and the events of a European and two China wars rendered alterations and additions indispensable, and the result has been the issue of the present volume, which extends as far as the letter D. The same labour and the desire for accuracy usually, if not entirely, attained, and the effort to give to the whole the kind-hearted, yet critical and moral interesting biographical tone, which characterised the original work, are to be found in the new edition. As a book of reference for the international importance, while there are few private circles in this country for which its records will not have a personal interest.

WHAT TO OBSERVE; OR, THE TRAVELLERS' REMEMBRANCER. By the late Edward Forbes, F.R.S. Edited by John Hutton Balfour. Published by H. Norton Shaw, M.D., Acting Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Longman and Roberts.

The object of this work is to point out to the unlinitiated traveller what he should observe, and to remind the one who is well informed of many things which he is apt to overlook. In the words of the editor, addressed to the great facilities for travelling which now exist, this is an attempt to place before the general public a series of physical and moral research lies open to investigation by those who avail themselves of these facilities, and to lead to a true knowledge of the earth, and of the laws, religious, social, military, commercial, scientific, and, in short, leaves nothing unnoticed which enters into the sum of human knowledge. The plan upon which the work is arranged is as follows:—It is necessary to say that it is equally minute and equally comprehensive, but in a manner which will be found peculiarly suitable to enter into the shape of an index. We do not know if we give an accurate idea of the nature of the work when we say that it is not a mere treatise, but a kind of skeleton in which a man's, his, what is explanatory and laboratory in a general way, it also especially as being suggestive, and is therefore to be considered a systematic arrangement of the points of adaptation in detail to the matters to which it relates in the abstract. There is a very practical, and therefore a very philosophical, idea in this arrangement which would find useful, if not indispensable, to his researches in reference to geography and meteorology.

ON FOOD AND ITS DIGESTION: being an Introduction to Dietetics. By WILLIAM BRINTON, M.D. Lond. Member of the College of Physicians, Physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Lecturer on Physiology in that Institution. Longman.

Admirable as the whole subject of food and its operation on the human frame can never be wholly without interest; but when it is taken up from the most scientific view, and treated with all the aid which the most extensive observation and experience, it becomes of immediate and household value. The treatise before us is intended to explain the principles on which a healthy condition of body is to be kept up, and which it operates, and with the purpose which that food as thus understood will be found to be of different kinds, and in what manner it best hitherto published. It gives a more complete account of the several organs of digestion as regards both their structure and function. Starting from a very high point of view, Dr. Brinton has made the details of the demand for food to those of that process of bodily waste by which that demand arises. The introductory chapter, on the nature of the study of food with that of digestion, it everywhere keeps the natural history of the various alimentary substances in view, and thus adds to our knowledge of their value as food. Dr. Brinton while chiefly discussing the articles of food commonly used in this country, it views the question in a manner which

ARE OUR MEAT MARKETS UNDER PROPER INSPECTION?

It is to be hoped that we shall not be charged with a morbid appetite because we again bring the question of diseased meat within the range of public attention. It was stated in a recent paper that our present staff of inspectors was utterly inefficient to preserve the people of London from the effects of bad meat. An endeavour was made to support this assertion by evidence, and it was thought successfully. It may, however, be well to bring additional testimony to bear upon the assumed position, and in this a general feeling in favour of improved and more expensive supervision of our markets.

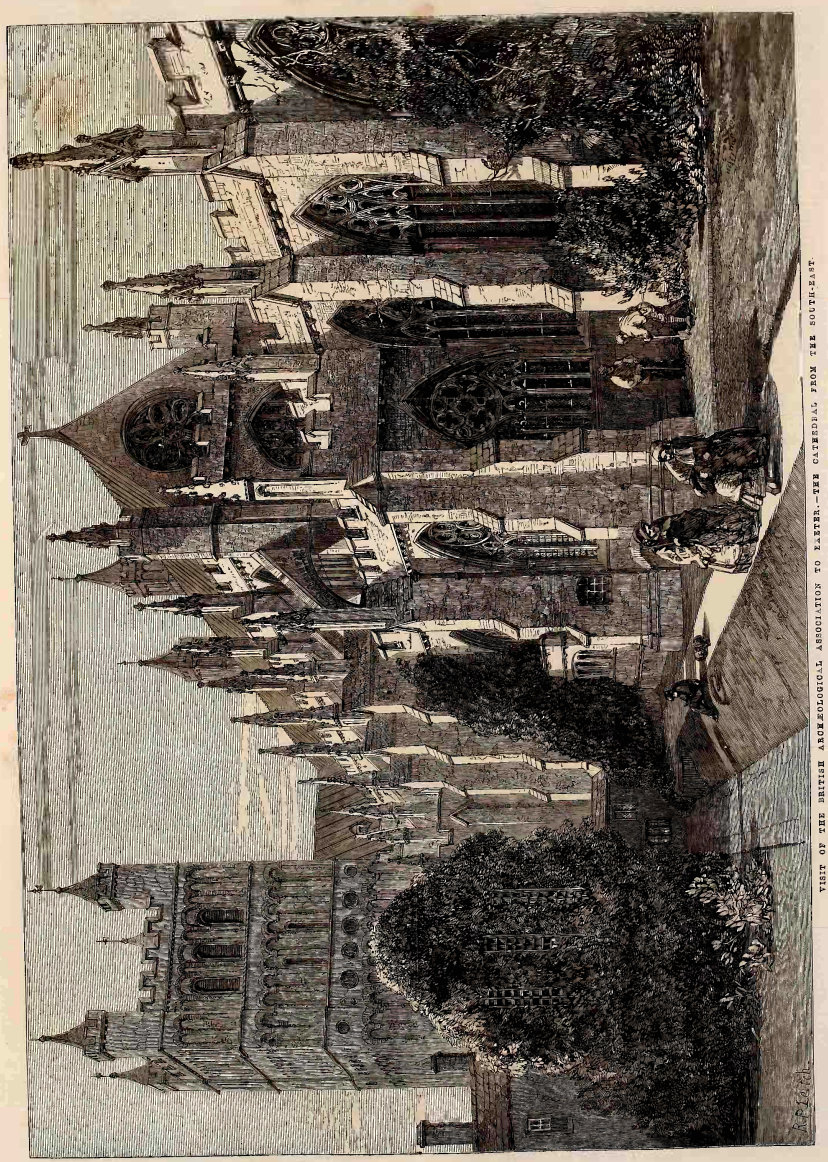
Dr. Letheby, whose name stands high in public opinion as one-of the first of chemists, and who, as he has rendered in pro-moting sanitary reform, expressly stated in a late report concerning the public health, that the inhabitants of London were exposed especially to three causes—bad dwellings, diseased meat, and deficient food. Though personal observation has quite prepared us to take the same ground, every conviction must needs be strengthened by such confirmation, and we feel glad to possess such an authority for calling public attention to the evil. We may, moreover, endeavour to show that it forms a portion of Dr. Letheby's duty to report every week upon the amount of meat and other articles suspected and seized by inspectors. We may suppose that these officers are therefore under his direction, and that he knows all about their operations. This being the case, the assertion he makes respecting the diseased influence of meat is the most amongst the metropolitan population, and particularly the poorer branches of it, possesses special weight. It is by no means that he speaks of the diseased meat which escapes detection. It is his opinion that more inspectors employed will be by every away to Cow-cross, there to be destroyed, as the objectionable animal food which constantly arrives, he would say nothing about diseased meat as a present cause of sickness and death. He would have us see it as an affection for which the remedy had been established, and if he did not dismiss it with less he would at any rate dismiss it with a few words of congratulation.

No blame attaches to any one official in the matter. We charge no one with neglect of duty. These inspectors who are appointed doubtless do their utmost, but there are not enough of them, as we have already shown, and they do not possess sufficient power to be masters of them. Three men are selected to do that for which twenty would barely suffice, and the assignment is left to the public conscience, either by reason of its pecuniary or ignorance. We are of opinion that parsimony has nothing to do with the matter, but that an ignorance of the subject is have if only a sufficient reason for putting forward but. The weekly reports of the Commissioners of Sewers, in fact, tends rather to show that the inspectors are overpaid, since the three or four thousands of pounds of meat are seized every week, people are led to think there can be no further danger.

The inhabitants of the metropolis had better be a little on their guard. They are, as we happen to know, the subjects of a great many practical jokes. Some of these are of a very serious nature, and they possess more importance than will, and terminate frequently, as in this case, in most disastrous results; and, although the practical jokers are our friends in the country, we cannot in the conflict of our duties, refrain or their practices. They have long been in the habit of sending to their London customers, at this period of the year, a present of some inflammatory attach that, should its condition be fair, it is dressed quickly, and eaten by a night-cap, it will be found to cause a relish by a flood, or worried to death by dogs, to be dressed for the London market. The old bull, worn out in long service, showing its diseased state by refusing to make the leap, is sent up to the London market, Birmingham, or Liverpool; and, while the butcher displays his choicest wild to the public appear the leaders, the fat cattle, which is afforded for that passantry which is usually characteristic of the occasion, are the objects of laughter and upon every remarks concerning the choice joints that will be "cured" for the ensuing winter.

What the animal dies of—no matter how had the flesh looks—if the butcher thinks he can palm it off upon the public as wholesome food without attracting the notice of the inspectors, up it comes on the chance of inducing a purchaser to a speedy end before he can be apprehended. The farmer enjoys his own meals as usual, and experiences no unpleasant dreams. Habit has rendered him unthoughtful. Would that he could but have a little care with the sufferings of his animals either by his ignorance or heartlessness! How many forms emanated by forty or fifty farm by toward pain, and how many more are produced by a blood, or worried to death by dogs, to be dressed for the London market. The old bull, worn out in long service, showing its diseased state by refusing to make the leap, is sent up to the London market, Birmingham, or Liverpool; and, while the butcher displays his choicest wild to the public appear the leaders, the fat cattle, which is afforded for that passantry which is usually characteristic of the occasion, are the objects of laughter and upon every remarks concerning the choice joints that will be "cured" for the ensuing winter.

What the animal dies of—no matter how bad



VISIT OF THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION TO EXETER.—THE CATHEDRAL FROM THE SOUTH-EAST

THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION AT EXETER.—ROUGEMONT CASTLE: INTERIOR OF GATEWAY, SEEN FROM CASTLE YARD.

THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION AT EXETER.—BERRY POMEROY CASTLE. SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION AT EXETER.

IN our Number of the 10th inst. we gave some Illustrations in connection with the visit of the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland to Peterborough; and we now perform the same friendly act for its kindred society, the British Archæological Association, which for its hundred society, the British Archæological Association, which has this week held its meetings at Exeter. We must defer the publication of the details of this interesting reunion to our next publication: the programme has appeared in this Journal. Meanwhile we give some Engravings of objects of interest in the city and neighbourhood in connection with the visit, and annexed are some descriptive details.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Rougemont Castle.—Exeter, the chief town of Devon, was the British Caer Isc, "the City of the River Exe," and the Jcan-Ceaster of the Saxons. The city was formerly surrounded by walls and strongly fortified. Leland, in speaking of it, says, "The toune is good mile, and more in compace, and is right strongly wanlid and maintained. Ther be diverse fare towers in the toune weal bytwixt the south and west gate. There be four gates in the toune, by names of Est, West, North, and South. The Est and the West Gates be now the fairest, and of one fascion of building: the South Gate hath been the strongest." Situated on a high eminence, on the north side of the town, are the ruins of the castle called Rougemount. When this castle was first erected is unknown; but it was either rebuilt or much repaired by William the Conqueror, who bestowed it on Baldwin de Briono, husband of Albreia, his niece, in the possession of whose descendants it remained till the 14th year of the reign of Henry III., who then took it into his own hands. Before the walls of Rougemount, as will be remembered, Richard III. forecast his impending death. It was completely dismantled during the Civil War, and has never since been rebuilt. In the area of the castle yard a session-house has lately been erected, which is a neat looking building, faced with Portland stone, and contains, in addition to two good-sized courts, a grand-jury room, magistrates' room, &c. In front is a fine open space, where county election, and other meetings are held. To the north of the castle is a delightful walk, shaded by fine old elm trees, called Northernay.

Exeter Cathedral.—The gable from Mackenzie Walcott's "Cathedrals of the United Kingdom," a work to which we have already been largely indebted, some historical and descriptive particulars of this building, of which we give a View at page 209. At the first page of the Number is an Engraving of the west screen:—

"The cathedral takes a high rank among those of the second class, but the unusual position of the towers and want of height render the exterior ineffective. The church is composed of a nave and choir, with aisles, Lady chapel, and a transept formed out of the towers, as at Ottery St. Mary, Narbonne and Chalons-sur-Marne in France. Blois has no transept; Angouleme has towers at the ends of the transepts. It is believed that these towers were at the west end of the old cathedral, of which St. Andrew's and St. James's Chapels were the transepts. The roof is crowned with a fleur de-lys ridge ornament of lead, the only example of that decoration which remains on an English cathedral.

"Bishop William Warelwast, 1107-36, began to build a cathedral 1112, of which the transept towers alone remain; it was not completed till the episcopate of Henry Marshall, 1194-1206. The present cathedral was commenced by Peter Quivil in 1283. The first four eastern arches of the choir were completed in 1310 by Bishop Stapledon. John Grandison, Bishop 1327-70, completed the choir, vaulted the nave, built by Bishop Bytton, 1295-1307, and, it is said, built the west front in 1366, and organ screen. Bishop Bewere, 1224-44, built the Lady in 1260, and organ screen. Bishop Bewere, 1224-44, built the Lady Chapel, completed by Bishop Quivil, 1281-91; Walter Bronescombe, Bishop 1327-80, the Chapels of St. Mary Magdalene and Gabriel. Bishop 1327-80, the Chapels of St. Mary Magdalene and Gabriel. Thomas Brentingham, Bishop 1370-95, made some minor additions to the west front, and added the cloisters and east window of the choir in 1393. Edmund Lacy Bishop 1420-58, built, and Bishop Booth in 1478 completed, the upper part of the chapter house, the lower portion being of the date of Henry III. John Booth, Bishop 1465-78, erected the episcopal throne. Bishop Stapleton erected the sedilia.

The reredos is by John Kendall, 1818. The pulpit dates from 1560. The havoc made by the rebels is only too apparent in the injured effigies. The stone font, a copy of that at Beverley Minster, by Rowe, was set up in 1842. The ancient wooden lectern is now in St. Thomas's Church.

"The stone of which the church, for the most part, was built came from Beer, near Colyton, that for the vaulting near Silverton. The iron Beer, near Colyton, that for the vaulting near Silverton. The iron pavement of the choir is Caen stone. The dimes of encaustic tiles on pavement of the choir is Caen stone. The dimes of encaustic tiles on the floors after the period of the Reformation was caused by the introduction of marble by John of Padua, and other Italian artists employed in England. The old painted glass was bought at Rouen, in Normandy, 1803, 1317-28. The west window bears date 1766, and is by Peckett. The west front, restored by Kendall, in 1817, is composed of three stories. The first is an elaborate screen, with a central doorway, and covered with canopied imagery work. In the second is the great west window of the nave, 32 ft. by 27 ft. (glazed by Peckett, 1766), of nine lights, trefoiled, with a superb rose of twelve quatrefoiled lights, and an inner foliated marigold of ten lights foliated. The upper story is formed by the gable. One very striking feature of the cathedral is the rich decorated tracery of the windows, set between bold flying buttresses. The buttresses of the nave and aisle have the 'Devonshire pinnacle' rising out of small battlements. Within, the splendid stone vaulting of nave and choir is the most beautiful in the kingdom, and the whole building is remarkable for grace and minute finish. The uniformity of the choir and nave renders it very imposing. The chapels and screens are numerous, and contain details of the utmost delicacy and beauty.

"On the south-west angle is St. Edmund's Chapel, now the Consistory Court; and into the five bays of the nave the north porch forms an entrance. Above it is an elaborate minstrels' gallery, with twelve quatrefoiled niches, with imagery of angels sounding instruments of music. It is of the reign of Edward III. The cithern, hagsipe, harp, organ, pipe, tambarine, trumpet, and shawm appear. On the east side of the north transept is St. Paul's, and to the east of the south transept St. John the Baptist's Chapel. Beyond the Chapel of St. Andrew on the north, and the Chapel of St. James on the north, form a sort of eastern transept. The aisles of the choir terminate in the Chapel of St. Mary Magdalene, with an adjoining Chapel of St. George, on the north, and in the Chapel of St. Gabriel, with an adjoining Chapel of St. Saviour, on the south. The triforium throughout the church is light, consisting of arcades of four trefoliated arches in each bay, with a gallery of open stonework, of double rows of quatrefoils, behind which rises the clerestory. The organ-screen of three arches, with its modern panelled additions, made in 1819, is very fine. Its panels are painted with examples of early art.—Scripture subjects from the Creation to Pentecost, forming thirteen oil paintings, in the style of the date of Edward III. There are two altars under this screen, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas. The stalls are of good design; the Bishop's throne, of black oak, is unrivalled, and forms a pyramid fifty-two feet in height, reaching almost to the roof. The three sedilia, with rich open-work canopies, are exquisite. The stained glass of the east window is the original glazing, 1390. The Early English Chapterhouse was built 1224-44; the upper part, Perpendicular, was added in 1457; into it, in 1822, the Library was removed from the Lady Chapel. It is an oblong, with a richly panelled and pointed roof, on the south side of the south transept tower. It has finely English arcading of couplets, and four-light Perpendicular side-windows, and a seven-light east window. The cloisters were destroyed by the fanatical Puritans, when the cathedral was parted by a traverse into two meeting-houses—one for the Presbyterians and one for the Independents. This wall Bishop Ward pulled down, and spent £25,000 on the restorations.

BED OF HENRY IV. OF FRANCE, IN THE CHATEAU PAU.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

"The westernmost arch of the choir is very acute, not more than a fifth of a circle in width, in order to accommodate it to the towers. The towers are of eight stages, buttressed-up. The north has four foiled arches, with square, streaked buttress-turrets. The north and south windows are rich Decorated; the east window is of five lights, cusped, in three compartments; Early Perpendicular, under a rose window of fifteen cusped lights. The south has a Decorated three-light window of nine cusped lights, as given by Bishop Grandison, and, having the tower, weighing 750lb., was given by Bishop Grandison. The towers have been cracked in ringing a peal for the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot, and rented by Act of 1676, to repair and support the famous Tom of Exeter, which weighs 12,060lb. This bell was brought from Lincoln Cathedral in 1484 by Bishop Courtenay, who built an octagon pinnacle at each corner on the north tower; they were removed April 25, 1752, and a pyramid on the north tower; they were removed before 1616. There is on the spire on the south tower was removed before 1616. There is on the ancient ecclesiastical chest of the duke of Edward III., in the north transept, given by Bishop Courtenay. The upper dial was added 1760, and the clock-house in the south transept. The north transept is St. Paul's; the south wing St. John's Tower.

"The organ, built by Lonsdale, cost, 1665, 1,000l. 1,000 pipes, and the gift of Bishop Ward, was rebuilt by H. Lincoln in 1810, and improved by Byfield and Grey. The musical service was celebrated in my other church of England with such great solemnity and grandeur. Cosmo de Medici mentions it in 1669 as the best in the kingdom; and Defoe, in his tour, says "The solemnity, the order, and affecting harmony of the music, and the numerous congregation who attend, summer and winter, 6 a.m. prayers, and their grave and decent behaviour, under the strictest discipline, are the choice, the envy of other choirs, and the admiration of strangers." Viols and other instruments, besides the organ, were used at Exeter until the civil wars, as at Lichfield. Here as at Lichfield, the Litany is sung by a Priest Vicar and a Lay Vicar. The falsetto is found here, at Canterbury, York, Lincoln, Lichfield, and Oxford.

"The dimensions of the cathedral in feet are as follow:—

	Length.	Breadth.	Height.		Length.	Breadth.	Height.
Nave ..	189	68	68	Lady Chapel	63	35	50
Choir ..	132	34	68	Choir-aisles	132	17	34
Transept	140	32	68	Cross-aisles	76	28	45
		The total length being 380 feet."

"The Chapter is composed of a Dean and six Canons; two stalls are suspended. There are four Priest Vicars and eight lay Vicars Choral (who form a college founded by Henry IV.), and ten choristers. There is also a college founded by Henry IV., and ten choristers. The Holy are two daily choral services at a quarter past ten and three. The Holy Communion is celebrated weekly. The income of the Chapter in 1852 was 41l.,15l., and their expenditure on the fabric in the preceding four years was 21l.,11s. The Library contains 5000 volumes, and includes the valuable MS. Domesday of Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset. Bishop the valuable MS. Domesday of Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset. Bishop Hall, alluding to the poverty of the see, said 'it made him a Bishop, but a thin one.'"

Berry Pomeroy Castle, now one vast ruin, was for a period of five hundred years, from the time of the Conquest to the reign of Edward VI., the stately seat of the Pomeroys. On visiting these magnificent remains (says the Hon. Grantley Berkeley, the Holy are two daily choral services at a quarter past ten and three. The Holy Communion is celebrated weekly. The income of the Chapter in 1852 was 41l.,15l., and their expenditure on the fabric in the preceding four years was 21l.,11s. The Library contains 5000 volumes, and includes the valuable MS. Domesday of Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset. Bishop Hall, alluding to the poverty of the see, said 'it made him a Bishop, but a thin one.'"

Berry Pomeroy Castle, now one vast ruin, was for a period of five hundred years, from the time of the Conquest to the reign of Edward VI., the stately seat of the Pomeroys. On visiting these magnificent remains (says the Hon. Grantley Berkeley, the Holy Isle by Bagley, of Exeter), the largest and most imposing of any in this county, the stranger will be struck with the solemn grandeur that pervades the whole locality. This is by very much half-hidden by the trees and thick foliage by which it is surrounded. The ruins themselves may be said to be literally covered with green. The yew hangs from the walls and windows, and the ash and oak have taken permanent root in the ramparts, and form out in lovely luxuriance from what at present remains standing, which is only the front facing the south, in a direct line of about eighty yards in length. The gable stands towards the west end of the front, over which, carved in moorstone, is yet remaining Pomeroy's arms. It had heretofore a double portcullis, whose entrance was guarded by a tower eight and thirty feet in length, which gate is turreted and embattled, as are the walls yet standing, three feet in thickness. The moat which once gave, yet in lands, a tower called St. Margaret's, from which several gentlemen of this county anciently held their lands. Within this is a large quadrangle, at the north side of which was the venerable family of Seymour (whose possession now is) built a magnificent structure, at the expense, as I have been informed, of upwards of thousand pounds, but never brought it to perfection, for the west side of the quadrangle was never begun; what was finished and inhabited before the door of the great hall was a noble walk, whose length was the breadth of the court, arched over with curiously-carved freestone, supported in the frequent bay-windows by pillars of the same stone, of great dimensions, after the Corinthian order, standing on pedestals having cornices of the same description, behind which were placed in the walls several seats of freestone also, cut in the form of an escalop shell, in which the company when weary might repose themselves. The apartments within were very large, especially the dining-room, which was adorned, besides paint, with statues and figures cut in alabaster with elaborate art and neatness, and the chimney-piece of polished marble, curiously engraven, was of great cost and value. Many other of the rooms were well adorned with paintings and freework, some of whose marble slabs were so delicately fine that they would reflect an object true and lively from a great distance. In short, the number and anatomonic of the whole is almost incredible, I report he true: that it was a good day's work for a servant but to open and shut the casements belonging to some of the windows thereof. 'Tis now demolished, and all this glory lieth in the dust, buried in its own ruins, there being nothing standing but broken walls, which seem to remain only as a shelter for sheltering, fearful, and timorous Berry Pomeroy, including the whole of these remains, and the surrounding grounds, is still belonging to the family of the present Duke Duke of Somerset. The castle is situated on an elevated rock, in a narrow valley, about three parts of a mile from the village of Berry, and has the same distance from the village of Bury Pomeroy. It is also approached by a road from Totnes, leading through this village.

FRENCH CRITICISM ON LORD DERBY.—The London correspondent of the Constitutionnel, who is supplying that paper with a series of "Parisian Observations," gives the following specimen of the style of "Brown, gaseous, obivarious, as a notice of the present blood, he dictions of Parliamentary orators and leaders of the House of Commons. Blessed Parliamentary orators and leaders of the House of Commons. Blessed be the country so infinitely removed in the tissue of articles in which his antagonists expose to all a proud distance, not to say a majestic epicism. He is second of being proud. He could be so elevated if he wished it, and he does not wish illustrious, and now to his pride of blood is added the conciseness of intellectual superiority, which he can exercise at will. Lord Derby is the first of Lords, how he towers above his colleagues! There are within these walls statesmen who would shine himself in a parliament, but who are obliged to embarrass him in any serious question, legists far superior to him in the matters of law, and yet he would not dare to consult them all, and in the midst of his brother Peers may be compared to Emmanuel Kant Coucouse in the midst of his colleagues. He is impetuous, and sometimes even passionate; his tissue disdain the elegant expressions of periphrases, and go straight to the consequences of things. Disraeli speaks his tone is rapid and sarcastic, his lips are compressed, the pupil of his eye contracted and sniffing. Lord Derby has the nostrils dilated, the big lips and fiery glance, seems ready to rush upon his antagonist and strike him to the ground. The former rises to a sentiment of the beautiful, whereas the lion by its exasperating attacks, the latter to Jupiter Tonans. Lord Derby is generally reasonable, and we fear not unjustly, with great weakness of character. He is accused of suffering himself to be led by Disraeli, and of being suddenly influenced by that deserter of all parties. Unfortunately, this opinion has been too much confirmed since the last unsuccessful attempt to form a Conservative Government—yes, conservative of all the fatal tradition which inflicted on Great Britain the stigma of St. Helena, but destructive of everything that constitutes the genius of a really Conservative Government at home.

The Augsburg Gazette says that the Diet has ordered 529 rifled cannon for the arming of the federal fortresses. The Diet has voted 5,440,987 florins for the armament of these fortresses. Of this sum 2,240,000 are for the purchase of rifled cannon, which are to be placed upon the ramparts by the end of the present year.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Y. E. H., Stratford-on-Avon.—1., Endeavour is a heavy game, wherever given it. 2. In the problem sent Black moves, so you will see that the game is not over. 3. The rule to give the King up if it will, and leave the game to be played out, is a matter of taste. 4. Your solution is given by mistake in your letter. Thanks.

R. Rogers.—Probably arrived too late for insertion in the usual list.

C. A.—Correct. Problem No. 913 is by Monsieur Bouvillon. 2. Your move cannot undertake to send it. You must apply to an publisher, Mr. H. G. Bohn, of York Street, Covent Garden.

LIMAT.—We have not time to have worked the several points of G. M.'s difficulties to-day, but in our opinion, an advantageous one for the defending player; but you should consult "Chess Praxis," where it is amply considered, and also for purposes.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 911.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P to Q3 8th	K to Q B 6th or	(b) 1.	K to K 4th or
	K to Q 4th	2. Q to Q B 7th	K to K 3rd
2. B to R 2nd (ch)	K to Q 6th	3. Q to Q 7th (mate)
(If he play 2. K to K 3rd, then White		(c) 1. Kt takes P	K takes P
answers 2. B to Q 6th, Q mates. Again, if		2. Q to Q B 7th (ch)
2. K to Q 4th, 3. Q to Q B 7th (ch), 4.			K to Q 8th
Q to Q 6th, and mates next move.)		3. B to Q 3rd (ch)	K to K 8th
2. Q to Q 8th	K moves	4. Q to Q 7th (mate)
4. Q mates

KEY-MOVES OF CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 1210.—1. R to Kt 4th (ch) 2. B to Q 2.

PROBLEM No. 913.

By Mr. W. MACKENZIE.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN LONDON.

Match between Messrs. ANDERSSEN and KOLTANOWSKI.

Subjoined are two more of the games in this contest.

(Sicilian Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. K.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K 3rd
3. P to Q 4th	P takes P
4. Kt takes P	Kt to K B 3rd
5. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q 4th
6. B to K 3rd	P to Q 5th
7. P to Q B 4th	B to K 2nd
8. Castles	Kt to Q B 3rd
9. P to Q Kt 3rd	Castles
10. P to Q B 5th	P to K 4th
11. P to Q Kt 4th	P to K Kt 3rd
12. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K R 3rd

Black has taken the bulldog of a Town, he had better, possibly, have played Q Kt to Q 2nd.

13. P takes B	B to K 3rd
14. P takes B	Kt takes Kt
15. P takes Kt	Q to K 2nd
16. Kt to Q 4th	Kt to K 4th
17. B to Q 3rd	B to Q 3rd

(If to Q 2nd would interfere brilliantly with the Queen's Rook's Pawn.)

18. Kt takes B	P takes Kt

(Time is not a good move, as we shall see by and by.)

19. P takes Kt	P takes P

(He should have preferred playing Kt to K B 5th.) &c., &c.

20. Q to K 2nd	Kt to K B 4th

Any other move would be fatal to White.

21.	B to Q 2nd

(Attacking the Queen's Rook's Pawn, which is apparently the defenceless, but he plays the Pawn to Queen's Rook's 3rd, with a little of his usual spirit.)

22. R to K B 3rd	R to Q B 2nd
23. R to K 3rd	R to Q 3rd
24. R to K B 3rd	R to Q B 2nd
25. R to K 3rd	R to Q 3rd
26. R to K B 3rd	R to Q B 2nd
27. R to Q B 7th	Q R takes K B P
28. R takes K B P (ch)	K to K 2nd
29. R to K takes Q B P	Q R take P (ch)
30. K to Q 2nd	R to Q B 8th
31. R to K 6th	R to K Kt 8th

And Mr. Kolltch resigned.

Between the same Antagonists.

(Sicilian Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. A.)	BLACK (Mr. K.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P to K 3rd
3. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q R 3rd
4. P to Q 4th	P takes P
5. P to Q 4th	K Kt to K 2nd
6. P to Q 5th	P takes P
7. B to Q B 3rd	P to Q 4th
8. P takes P (ch)	K to K 2nd
9. B to Q Kt 3rd	B to Q 3rd
10. Castles	B to Q 2nd
11. Castles	B to Q Kt sq

(The speaker is placed on both sides very much in the same position as in the last game, his opponent on either party winning only by accident.)

12.	K to R sq
13. P to Q R 4th	P to K B 4th
14. Kt to Q Kt sq	P to K B 5th
15. P to K Kt 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
16. B to K sq	B to Q 2nd
17. P to Q R 4th	P to K R 4th
18. B to Q 2nd	Q to K 4th
19. P to K Kt 4th	P to K R 5th
20. R to K B 2nd	R to K B 2nd
21. Q to K sq	R to K R 2nd

(Perceiving where the pressure will be exercised.)

21.	B to Q 2nd

(Kt to K R 5th would perhaps have been better play.)

22. Kt takes Kt P	P takes P
23. Kt takes Kt P	Q to K B 4th
24. Q to K 2nd	Q to K Kt 4th
25. Q to K Kt sq	Q R to K B sq
26. Q R to K B sq	Q to K R 4th
27. B to Q B 4th	Q to K Kt 4th
28. Q to K 2nd	Q to K R 4th
29. P to Q Kt 4th	Q to K Kt 4th
30. Kt takes Kt	Kt takes Kt

Relics of the Past.

BED OF HENRI QUATRE IN THE CASTLE OF PAU.

As the Château de Pau is the chief object of attraction to the visitor of the ancient capital of French Navarre and Béarn, to the relics preserved there of the "Bon Roi," Henry IV., who was born (Dec. 13, 1553) in that time-honoured castle, are the most interesting articles in the château itself. The most remarkable of these are the bed, the cradle, consisting of a huge tortoise-shell, suspended by cords, in which the illustrious Monarch was rocked; the bed, in the chambre-à-coucher du Roi, wherein he is said to have slept; and the couch of the sagacious and accomplished Jeanne d'Albret.

The cradle we have already given in a former Number, and the couch of Jeanne d'Albret we purpose illustrating hereafter. The present engraving represents the bed of Henry, which, like most of the ancient furniture, was collected by Louis Philippe in his attempt to restore the historic mansion to its primitive splendour.

The bed in question is curiously enriched with carvings in wood, the most notable among them being seventy-five medallion heads of the kings of France, and of celebrated French warriors. A small portion of the upper panelling is supposed to be of comparatively modern workmanship, but the rest is undoubtedly more centuries old. The pedigree, in fact, of this interesting piece of furniture can be distinctly traced from the time of Henry. During the life of Louis XIII. it was in possession of the beautiful Gabrielle d'Estrées, from whom it went to the Château of Richelieu. At the great Revolution it came into the hands of Count de Beaucaigneul, by whom it was faithfully preserved; and half a century later it was purchased of that nobleman by Louis Philippe for the Château de Pau, the building of the Second Empire that has ever swayed the destinies of France. In the chamber where it now stands the great Protestant champion probably first saw the light. It was there, in all likelihood, that his brave grandfather, Henri d'Albret, having first rubbed his infant lips with garlic, after the manner of the Béarnais, presented him to the anxious gaze of the fiery wine of Jurançon, and exclaimed, "Va, ta seras un vrai Béarnais (be the same brave grandchild that your family can boast of)!" "Ventre de saint gris!" to sing a merry song during the pangs of childbirth!

The old Château of Pau, which contains these relics of the sixteenth century, is one of the best preserved of all the early royal mansions on the Continent. It was erected towards the latter end of the fourteenth century, and, strange to say, a scion of the builder's race (dated 1373) is still extant; and it is Gaston, Count de Foix, who was the founder, undertaken to replace the habitation from the Palacios de Pau. What a crowd of varied associations are connected with the place! Alternately it was the prison of Reformers and Romanists during the religious wars of the sixteenth century. It was the refuge of Theodore Beza and other Protestant teachers under the protection of Jeanne de Navarre, by the pen and sword of Henri de Rohan and Marguerite de Valois it recorded to have given an asylum to Calvin and other persecuted Reformers, and to have listened to their preaching, though she never formally abjured the Church of Rome.

Close to this Tour de la Monnaye is the Tour Montauzet (in the language of Béarn "the mount of beauty"), which formerly contained the fearful oubliettes—stone cages formed within the massy walls, dimly lighted by narrow, thickly-barred apertures from the inside. M. Baron de Laguion, the historian of the castle, mentions a tradition, which is still current among the inhabitants of the town, that in times far back there was in the court of the château a subterranean passage, which was called the "Virgin," of which it will be remembered by our readers we gave a representation and description some months ago. That work is now in progress, and during the present month the oubliettes were opened for the first time, a deep well was discovered in one of them, which certainly originated in the days of the Huguenot persecutions. Good King Henry, it is true, once issued a decree that no more prisoners should ever be incarcerated in the dungeons of the castle, and observed the prohibition as he knew, was only partially obeyed. Criminals, real or suspected, continued to be confined in the keep until the beginning of the seventeenth century, when Louis XIII. ordered the removal of the prisoners to the Castle of Navarre, and with somewhat more success. But even since then the Castle of Pau has been the scene of many a tragedy. The last of them being the famous Abd-el-Kader, who arrived at Pau in April, 1848, and departed from it in December of the same year, through the instrumentality of Count d'Hautpoul, the then Minister of War. Round the Largitz, the Montauzet, and the Montrésors

THE EQUATORIAL IN GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.

This splendid instrument, which forms the latest addition to the instrumental equipment of the Royal Observatory, was completed in the spring of last year, its construction having occupied several years. It was designed by the Astronomer Royal, G. B. Airy, Esq.; and his plans were carried out by Messrs Ransome and Sims, of Ipswich, to whom the whole of the engineers' work was intrusted; Mr. Simms, of the same firm, supplying the optical parts, with the exception of the Fleet-street, supplying the optical parts, with the exception of the Fleet-street, supplying the optical parts, with the exception of the object-glass, which was furnished by Messrs. Merz and Sons, of Munich.

The instrument is erected on the third or highest floor of an edifice specially built for its reception, and is surmounted by a movable dome. The weight of the large masses of iron forming its component parts are supported and stability obtained by massive piers of solid brick work and masonry, striking several feet below the general foundation of the building, and rising to within a few inches of the floor of the room represented in the Engraving. Upon these piers are placed the supports for the upper and lower pivots of the framework generally known as the polar axis, which in this instrument is composed of a pair of skeleton prisms, each formed of three bars of wrought iron, tied together by diagonal and transverse bracing and thrusting-rods, and connected with each other at each end by oval frames having pivots in their centres turning on friction-wheels carried by the supports above noticed.

Midway between the extremities of the polar frame, and firmly fixed to it, are the supports and Ya of the declination axis. To this axis is firmly attached the telescope-tube and the declination-circle, a circle of cast iron 4 ft. in diameter, carrying on its circumference a band of silver cast iron 4 ft. in diameter, carrying on its circumference a band of silver inlaid, and very accurately divided into degrees and parts of degrees, and read by two microscopes at one end of the axis, which is inclosed in a triangular lattice frame, the roof of the revolving dome. The other circle seen in the drawing is the counterpoise circle, nearly balanced by the weight of the tube, and by the nearly the same position in the clamping-circle it is fixed to one of the points of the checks of the polar frame.

The telescope-tube is of mahogany. It holds at one end the object-glass 13 in. in diameter and 18 ft. focus; at the other the flanges and tubes necessary for carrying the peculiar descriptions of eyepieces requisite for the various observations this instrument is designed to make.

Upon the lower pivot of the polar axis turns the hour-circle, 6 ft. in diameter, graduated on a silver band round its circumference into its hours, minutes, and seconds, and read by microscopes fixed to the lower oval frame. When the instrument is in use this circle is geared with the de ving-clock, the motive power being water acting by means of a reaction-machine or Barker's mill, and the regulating power a conical pendulum controlling the speed of the mill by an apparatus known as Sieman's chronometric governor.

In making astronomical observations it is absolutely necessary that the instrument should be perfectly easy and comfortable. For this purpose the instrument is provided with an adjustable chair or couch carried by a framework so constructed as to command easy access to the eyepiece in any position of the telescope, and furnished with adjustments and contrivances so complete that the observer can, without taking his eye from the telescope, move either himself, the instrument, or the dome into any position he pleases. The theatre steps and inclined circle seen on the right of the drawing are for the purpose of supporting the observer when from the position of the object under examination the before-mentioned chair cannot be conveniently employed.

THE GREAT EQUATORIAL OF THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.

We may here remark that the sanctity of the observing-room is seldom disturbed by the presence of such visitors as the artist has inserted in the drawing: they are introduced merely to relieve the monotony of the picture, and to give an idea of the general proportions of the instrument.

On the merits of this equatorial it is almost needless to comment. Suffice it to say that every want that modern astronomy could suggest, and every appliance that modern science could devise, have been supplied, and the result is that the likes of the practical astronomer and the workings of skilful mechanics have produced an instrument that will long remain a monument of its designer's skill.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

The Electric Printing Telegraph of M. Dujardin, of Lille, is now exhibiting at Paris. It produces an ordinary Roman alphabet in seven seconds, eight alphabets in a minute, and writes and transmits a message of twenty-four words (about one hundred letters) in one minute. In place of wheels with heavy types M. Dujardin employs a very light and slender aluminium wheel, on which are cut letters similar to those employed in printing Bibles. The rest of the apparatus is equally simple. It is hoped that the Director-General of French Telegraphs will admit M. Dujardin's apparatus to a trial on a large scale.

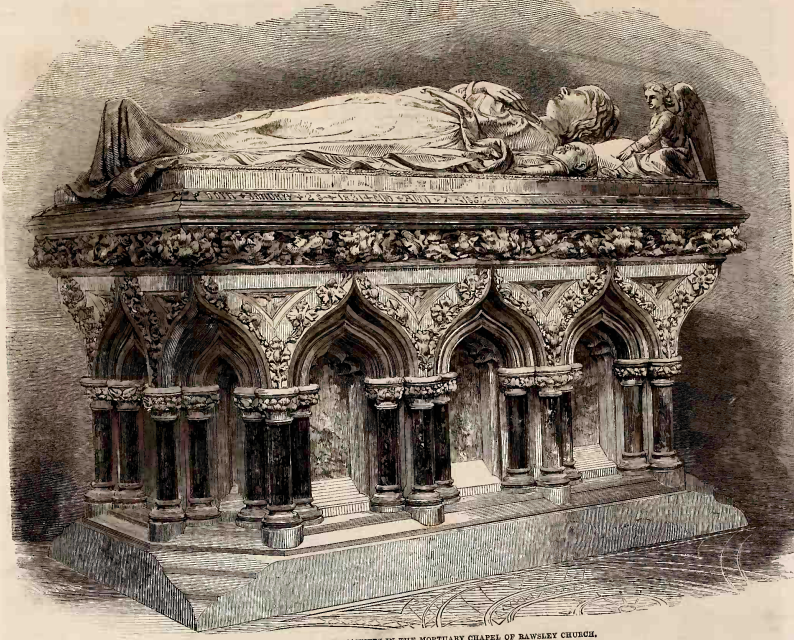
Insects in Texas.—A writer in the Annales de la Propagation de la Foi gives a terrible description of the nigua and garapata. Hardly is the traveller extended on the ground then myriads of these insects in close battalions rush to devour his skin. The nigua (which is hardly visible) prefers to burrow under the nails, whence it deposits its eggs. In less than two days seven or eight days more than twenty thousand grains each appear, which rapidly multiply. The wound of this insect is dangerous, and, if one be too taken, terrible will ensue. The seventeen remedy it behoves ask. The garapatas bury themselves in the head. The traveller vainly endeavours to detach them from his body by kindling a fire. The garapatas seem to spring up apart himself from it. He is compelled to walk about instead of sleeping. So it from their ashes. In the neighbourhood of Austin, Texas, they are found in the thousands of millions of all colours become visible, resembling fireworks in the rapidity and variety of their movements; and the song of "the bird with a hundred voices" enlivens the scene. The jackals occasionally add their voices to the nocturnal concert, which continues till daylight, when the tribes of porcupine rescue their distracting noise.

Bilin or Metalkalies is the name given to a new beautiful dye obtained by MM. Schoefer and Grue-Bemond by the reaction of the red of aniline on an alkaline solution of gum bic.

Turpentine as an Anæsthetic has been employed by Mr. J. Wilmshurst. It is sprinkled on a handkerchief and applied to the nostrils. In cases of severe neuralgia, cramp, and slight surgical operations it has been found to allay irritation and cause a gentle sleep, from which the patients awake without headache or any other unpleasant symptoms.

Dr. Lyse is a term given by Professor Graham, the Master of the Mint, to a method of analysis depending on the different degrees of diffusibility of various substances in water. Dear chemists are organised, which are marked by their tendency to crystallise, either when dissolved in water or when fused. When in a state of solution they are forcibly held by the solvent and affect the volubility of the water. Those salts are generally of fine form viscosity and sapidity, and their reagents exhibit no property affected. The class of low diffusibility, termed colloids, are of a frequently mineral origin. These have little tendency to crystallise, and in the mineral state of a viscous character. The colloidal is considered to be the organised state of matter, possessing energies. The crystalloid being the stalloid condition. Mr. Graham, in a paper read before the Royal Society, describes a method of separating these two classes of substances when in combination, such as sugar and gum, albuminous acid and metallic poison from organic fluids. Its as or and gum, albuminous acid and metallic poison from organic fluids. Its as or near its melting point appears to be a colloidal substance, and resembles firm jelly in its consistence, having a tendency to rend and to recombine.

Arsenated Alcohol has been employed by M. Lepricur for the preservation of specimens in natural history collections, especially for the preservation of specimens in natural history collections, especially for the preservation of specimens in natural history collections, especially



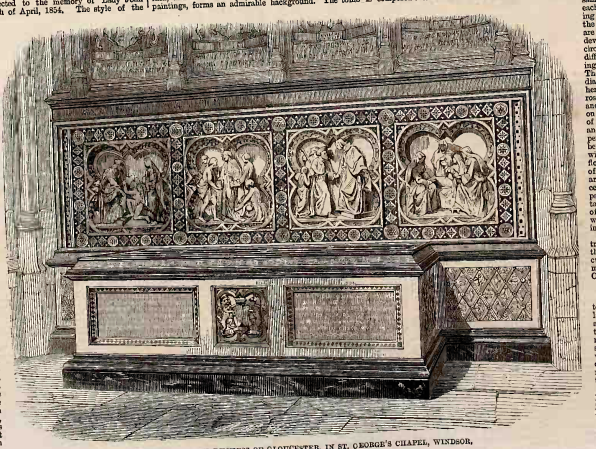
MONUMENT TO LADY JOHN MANNERS IN THE MORTUARY CHAPEL OF RAWSLEY CHURCH.

LADY MANNERS' MONUMENT.

THIS monument has been erected to the memory of Lady John Manners, who died on the 7th of April, 1854. The style of the monument partakes of the Middle Pointed Gothic, and the materials used are all from Derbyshire. It principally consists of stone known as Darley Dale, with russet marble columns, the carved capitals, the panels, and the figure being of alabaster. The monument is fixed in a mortuary chapel in Rawsley Church, which Lord J. Manners has caused to be erected for its reception. The floor is inlaid with rich marble mosaics, on the centre of which the monument is fixed. The effect is beautiful and striking, and altogether may be considered a good specimen of nineteenth-century art. The whole of the works were designed and carried out under the superintendence of Mr. A. Salvin, jun. The figure was executed by Mr. Calder Marshall, R.A.; and the sculpture and architectural part of the monument was by Mr. James Forsyth, of Edward-street, Hampstead-road.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.

THE Royal monument which forms the subject of our Illustration is the most recent addition to the architectural attractions of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. It is situated in one of the aisles of the choir, and, the light falling directly upon it from an opposite window, the delicate purity of its materials and enrichment are clearly apparent even by a mere glimpse at the work, naturally inviting closer inspection. The leading lines of the design have been adapted to combine with those of the ancient oak screenwork behind—a happy idea, and well carried out, for the said screen, with its curious old paintings, forms an admirable background. The tomb is composed principally of white marble; and the beautiful sculptured bas-reliefs behind (by Theed) representing the four acts of mercy—namely, Clothing the Naked, Feeding the Hungry with Bread, Relieving the Wearied Traveller on his Way, and Visiting the Sick-bed—are in the same material. Round each of these is an inclosing frame of mouldings, in the flat surfaces of which are introduced a variety of devices, such as roses, circles, triangles, &c., in different marbles, imparting great richness of effect. The dado of this portion is diapered with national heraldic badges—viz., the rose, thistle, and shamrock; and this pattern is repeated on both of the short sides of the tomb. The top slab and the plinth are of serpentine marble, the former being incised and inlaid with a metal cross of fleriated design. The front of the tomb has the family arms sculptured in the centre, and on either side a panel inclosing a brass tablet containing the names of different individuals whose remains are deposited in the vault beneath.



MONUMENT TO THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER, IN ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.

The commission was intrusted to Mr. Scott, A.R.A., the sculptures being executed by Theed, and the metalwork by Skidmore, of Coventry.

The subscriptions hitherto towards a statue to the late Sir Charles Barry amount to £975 4s. The total required for the monument is about £1500. The statue is proposed to be of white marble on a pedestal of freestone; and the commission for it is to be given to Mr. Foley.—Critic.

Lincoln has now a temporary Exhibition of its Fine Arts, Science, and Manufactures.

Lord Stanley has been appointed a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1106.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 31, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

WE know not to what particular circumstances, nor to whose suggestions and influence, Ireland owes the honour of a visit from her Majesty this year, but it strikes us as being eminently appropriate. Let us hasten to disclaim at once any reference to the political motives, if any there were, which fixed upon Ireland for the summer excursion of our Queen. It is probable enough that some political results will follow the footsteps of the Sovereign, and those, too, of a desirable character; but we are not aware that the sister country stood more in need of a Royal visit for such purposes than England or Scotland. Our view of its timeliness and suitableness has not been started by any thought or wish in connection with the Government. But it presents itself to our apprehension as being in pleasing unison with her Majesty's tone of mind, with the natural expectations of the people among whom she is staying, and with the present peculiar position, tendencies, and prospects of Ireland as an integral part of the United Kingdom.

A Royal visit—say, rather, a visit from Queen Victoria—had certainly become due to Ireland. She has, it is true, been there before, but hurriedly and informally. She has greeted her Irish subjects lovingly, but only, as it were, in passing. Her permanent residence is in England; her place of annual retreat when she would divest herself of State formalities is in Scotland. Ireland, hitherto, has seemed to be excluded from the advantages and gratification attendant on the periodical presence of the Court. In that country loyalty to the Sovereign has had but few opportunities of expressing itself in its personal form, and we all know that it is in this form that it is most satisfied to express itself. "There is besides in the Emerald Isle, as elsewhere, a sensitive regard for race, and a jealous attachment to country, which causes the Irish people, even if they do not resent, to feel painfully anything which seems like the withholding of that attention to which they justly deem themselves entitled; and it has, doubtless, been a matter of mortifying regret to a somewhat susceptible nation that, whatever may have been the cause, Ireland has not enjoyed the same share of distinction the Sovereign can confer which has fallen to the lot of her British sisters. We are glad, very glad, that her claim to Royal regard has this year secured recognition, and that the visit of her Majesty has taken place under circumstances which will suggest to her Hibernian subjects that she takes a deep and spontaneous interest in that part of her dominions.

If we may do so without trenching upon the respect due to personal feelings, we would observe that her visit to Ireland appears to us to be in beautiful keeping with her Majesty's tone of mind at the present time. It is not many months since all her people, without distinction, mourned with their Queen over the loss of her mother, her late Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. The sad event, though one to be anticipated in the ordinary course of nature, stirred in the Royal daughter's heart the depths of sorrow. Family ties have been cherished by Queen Victoria with affectionate and religious care, and the tie which bound her to her mother was felt to be peculiarly tender and sacred. Her Majesty has scarcely recovered even yet from the deep distress into which she was plunged by the death of her beloved and venerated parent; and it is understood that shortly before she set out for Ireland she spent a day at her mother's tomb. There may be something fanciful in the thought, but, to us, there is an indescribable expression both in the scenery and people of Ireland which renders them more grateful to a bruised heart than any other with which we are acquainted. There is a soothing tenderness—a sort of woman's softness—pervading the physical beauty of the country, more especially so at Killarney, and, mingled with the exhilarating vivacity of the people, there is a shade of melancholy suggestive of their readiness to sympathise with grief. We know not to what land we would more contentedly betake ourselves, upon leaving the presence of a great and overwhelming affliction the hold of which upon us we might feel it our duty to shake off, than to Ireland. She has charms all her own, like the glory of the rainbow—a bright and many-tinted glory in tears. There is a witchery of gentleness in her most frequented scenes which beguiles the troubled soul into tranquil rest, and even in her grander features there is a predominant pensiveness which soothes rather than excites. May her Majesty drink into her heart the healing influence!

SKETCHES FROM SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES: VIEW FROM SOUTH HEAD ROAD—THE HARBOUR IN THE DISTANCE.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 211.

But, besides this, one can hardly travel in Ireland just now without being struck with the signs everywhere apparent that, as a nation, she is herself recovering from a weary age of sorest trial ending in a terrible calamity. Grievous oppression has left behind it too many traces of the suffering it inflicted to fail in attracting notice even from the careless. It is impossible to go far in any direction without coming across unemployed and mournful proofs that the Irish people have not long escaped from a heavy yoke; and on the very surface of the soil, and in the habits of the people, the traveller will read in characters he can hardly misinterpret, a long history of woes impatiently endured. Indeed, it is but a few years ago that the whole of Ireland was one of unutterable despondency; and when famine and fever followed the track of political and social miseries, and swept off by death, or dispersed by emigration, countless swarms of her inhabitants, it seemed doubtful whether she could recover her energies within the already half-spent century, even under the most judiciously indulgent treatment. Of all this there are yet, as we have said, distinctly visible remains. Our fair but careworn sister has not wholly put aside her mourning attire. It is light and almost cheerful in comparison with what it once was, but it serves to remind one that she has not long emerged from the lowest depths of national affliction.

But two she has emerged. Of this cheering fact the proofs are numerous, widely scattered, and conclusive. The Ireland of to-day differs so strikingly for the better from the Ireland of 1848 that one is sometimes tempted to doubt her identity. A solvent habit of industry, a flourishing commerce, increased and increasing remuneration to labour, expanding commerce, equal laws, unsectarian education, religious liberty—such are the recent phenomena which make Ireland a pleasant place to visit. There is hope, bright hope, in the beaming of her countenance, and the elasticity of self-reliance in her step, and a pressure of unwonted strength in the grasp of her hand. Her Majesty is far too well informed, far too observant, and far too sympathising to miss these novel traits of Irish national experience and character. The cheerfulness of a people so capable of trouble is one, we trust, because with her own state of feeling and gently disperse by its mild and genial light the sombre thoughts which have overshadowed her spirits; for there is something irresistibly contagious in the hilarity of a rapid and unlocked-for convalescence. The more than ordinary gaiety of rude health is reviving to those whose faintness from still unhealed wounds cannot endure ordinary pleasures. It is a balm to a smarting heart. We entertain the belief that it is just this sort of quiet joy, still fragrant with sorrow, that will give most effectual relief to her Majesty. And this joy Ireland, in her national capacity, is full to overflowing.

There are few Englishmen, if any—at least of the most ordinary culture—by whom the Queen's visit to Ireland is not viewed with satisfaction. They are pleased with it, both for her sake and for the sake of the people of the country. They see in it an attitude to allay many of the prejudice and irritation which even now separate to some extent Celt from Saxon, Roman Catholic from Protestant. They regard it hopefully as a kind of ceremonious and formal inauguration of the better era already initiated by Divine Providence, and manifest by various liberal legislature. To strengthen in every way possible the ties of sisterhood between the two nations long united under the same Crown, and now for upwards of half a century united under the same Legislature and Government, is not only a duty which we recognise as owing to Ireland, but is a source of pleasure which we owe to ourselves. Great Britain, unquestionably, is chargeable with, and, of late, we are happy to add, has become conscious of, a long course of harsh treatment towards the people of the Green Isle. We are their debtors, if only in compensation for the bitter and unrighteous policy with which we so persistently tormented them, and we are the more inclined in consequence to take with forbearance our share of the inconveniences which are the natural fruit of our oppressive career. But, thank Heaven, the malignant spirit has gone out of us. We desire nothing from Ireland but a real union of hearts. We rejoice in Ireland's prosperity as we do in our own. We grudge her nothing which may help to develop her magnificent resources. We are grateful for everything which brings us into more active intercourse and closer intimacy. We have learned by painful experience that no part of the body politic can suffer without entailing suffering on the whole—that no part can flourish without imparting to the whole additional vitality. Therefore, while with heartfelt loyalty we pray "God speed her Majesty in her visit to Ireland," we pray not less cordially "God bless the people among whom she has gone!"

The pensions now paid by the French Treasury amount to 72,239,326f., distributed among 161,212 persons. The Duke de Malakoff receives 401,000f.; 11 high functionaries of the Empire receive 100,000f.; 30,000f.; 18 ex-Peers of France, 144,000f.; 7141 functionaries of the civil list and private domains of the late Government, 1,000,000f.; 1000 widows of Peers, Republic and Empire, 2,000,000f.; the remaining 153,000 services, civil, military, and ecclesiastic.

THE FRENCH IN COCHIN-CHINA.—A letter from Saigon, in Cochin-China, dated the 25th of June, is published in the Gazette de Paris. The writer says:—"Peace will be restored hereafter.—" Our town is most unwholesome, in the way of fevers, and we are going to change the site of it. Although such we really do not know what end, and if colonisation is to be attempted that does not concern us. We have but one business here, and that is to fight. We are preparing for an expedition to under our orders to Pnom-Penh, from which we hope to bring back important intelligence. The climate of Saigon is not suited for Europeans. . . . We are obliged to conduct ourselves here with as much firmness as though it were the plague, and keep ourselves hermetically shut up. Our huts, moreover, are but pleasant residences; regules of all kinds—insects everywhere, snakes in the yards, frogs, lizards, &c.—favourable to work, their company, and at night, in spite of our pale complexion, we are tortured by these fearful insects. When the weather is a little cloudy I take a ride on horseback; this is the only amusement we can propose, but the animals are such beasts that there is not much pleasure in travelling there. Bathing is a thing not to be indulged in, on account of the crocodiles, added to which fever is frequently the result of such excursions. I have written a little sketch of drawing and painting, for with the heat which devours us I fear not the exercise of the intellectual faculties a pencil or a brush."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor and the Prince Imperial left Paris at seven o'clock on Wednesday evening direct for Biarritz, the Emperor having previously presided at a Council of Ministers.

Monday's Moniteur contains a note in reference to Mr. Reuben's recent Sheffield speech, and his assertions respecting the cession of Savoy and Nice. Mr. Roebuck declared that he knew as a fact of a treaty by the provisions of which Savoy was to be annexed to the Government of France and Italy. The Moniteur gives in the most explicit terms a formal denial to the assertion. "It is only," says the Moniteur, "from such a convenient source as this that the thought of entering into negotiations on the subject with the Cabinet of Turin has never occurred to the Emperor's Government."

The Count de Morny on Tuesday opened the "Conseil General" of the Puy de Dôme, and delivered a speech which is looked upon as full of domestic questions. Alluding to the possibility of a war, he observed that the internal embarrassments of the several Powers, and the language held by the Emperor Louis Napoleon, taken together, removed all apprehensions of any war breaking out in which France could bear a part.

The Moniteur of Wednesday contains a report from the Minister of Marine to the Emperor on the inefficiency of the marines of officers in the Imperial navy. The Minister proposes to the Emperor to increase the number of officers within the current year by ten captains of vessels, twenty-four captains of frigates, fifty lieutenants, and twenty-five midshipmen. The Minister adds that this increase will not be sufficient, and declares his conviction that a still greater increase will have to be made next year. The Emperor approves the proposition of the Minister.

PORTUGAL.

The King has gone to visit the exhibition at Oporto.

He has decorated the Marquis de Sella with the Order of Christ.

The Cortes has confirmed the authorisation of the Government for opening the ports for the importation of foreign grain.

The Portuguese and the Infanta Donna Antonia with the Prince of Hohenzollern are fixed for the 12th of September. One of the Royal palaces is being prepared for their reception.

ITALY.

The departure of King Victor Emmanuel for Florence is fixed for the 12th of next month, and it is about that date that the exhibition of manufactures and products of Italy will be opened.

The reactionary band in the mountains of Somma was dispersed on Sunday. The brigands at first made a stout resistance, but by superior force four battalions were all killed or taken prisoners; 400 who endeavoured to cross the frontiers were taken by the French troops. On the 22nd the attempt was made by some contadini to assassinate Signor Benedetto del Tronto; they were, however, repulsed. Several journals announce that the Pope has established himself at Gaeta for the winter. In consequence of a speech pronounced by Francis II. at the Villa Patrizi, in which he boasted of huge promises having been made to him by the Emperor Napoleon, it is thought that he was convinced of the certainty of the early triumph of his cause.

The reactionary party have sent deputies in Australia to Garibaldi with promises to him at Cayrera on the 15th. Garibaldi's Aide-de-Camp has forwarded a despatch to Garibaldy of his last visit to Caprera, the men of suspicious appearance on the island of Caprera. During the night, while they were prowling in the neighbourhood of Garibaldi's dwelling, they were challenged by three gendarmes, who fired and wounded one of them, but they succeeded in effecting their escape.

PRUSSIA.

The more detailed programme for the festivities of the coronation of the King of Prussia bears the following items:—Solemn entrance of their Majesties in Konigberg on the 14th of October; 15th, day of rest and meditation; 16th, Birthday of his late Majesty; 17th, festivities given to and by his Majesty; 18th and 19th; coronation on the 18th, anniversary of the battle of Leipsic; 20th, festivities; 21st, review of the troops; 22nd, banquet in the Hall of Nonsovinks; 19th, representation day; entrance into Danzig and festivities of the town on the 24th; the whole to be concluded by a public entry into Berlin on the 22nd or 23rd of October.

The Crown Prince has arrived at Rheinbardbrunn on a visit to her uncle, Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg. Her Royal Highness goes thence to Coblentz.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

On Thursday week Field Marshal Count Haller, the Royal Commissioner, dissolved the Hungarian Diet by reading a short receipt from the Emperor, in both Houses. Mr. Deak, on the receipt, and after what had been heard from the respected President concerning the dreadful calamity which had happened to the dancer of another, ing force), further discussion was out of the question. They could not oppose resistance to military force, and [illegible] to the Emperor's decision, especially as [illegible] both Houses adopted yesterday." Whereupon the whole Chamber rose in a perfect tumult of excitement, and, as it appeared [illegible] and Deak, and [illegible] gave the cry of "Eljen Deak!" "Eljen a haza!" (Hurrah for Deak! Hurrah for our native land!) which was echoed by both Houses, and ended with loud accompaniment of clapping of hands. The minutes of the proceedings were then read and approved, and the House rose for the last time.

On Friday the Emperor made a communication in the Reichsrath at Vienna on the subject of what was taking place. The next day both Houses of the Reichsrath, the Upper as well as the Lower, assembled in loyal and grateful terms, the firmness of the Emperor in maintaining the Constitution of the Crown, declaring their belief in the determination of preserving in the constitutional path upon which he has entered, and for his policy in protecting the interests of the none German provinces. Lastly, they solemnly declared, in the name of the whole kingdom, their understanding with Hungary.

On Saturday the Council of Peath has decided on the determination to cease to collect the taxes, considering that they are illegally imposed by the Government. The functionaries of the Council have consented to continue their duties. The expenses of the Council will be covered by voluntary contributions and by the issuing of bonds.

The Hungarian Commissioners left Pesth on the 23rd. Order was not, however, disturbed.

TURKEY.

His Excellency Sir William Codrington had an audience of the Sultan yesterday week. His reception was particularly gratifying. The Sultan afterwards detained Sir Henry Bulwer for a long private interview.

The Duke of Montebello arrived at Constantinople on Sunday, and was received by the Sultan on Monday. His Excellency has visited Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and Marshal Williams.

The Viceroy of Egypt arrived on Monday, in order to do homage to his Sovereign. The Russian, Italian, and Belgian Ministers on the same day presented new credentials to the Sultan.

Omer Pacha has signed an armistice for ten days with the insurgents of Montenegro.

The town of Persitz, near Gallipoli, has been half destroyed by fire.

INDIA, CHINA, AND JAPAN.

The intelligence brought by the Calcutta and China mails possesses very little political interest.

The Indian Government was publishing official reports respecting the condition of the several districts of various provinces, and these reports generally represented the want of roads, and the absence of a steady demand as a remunerative price, as the main obstacles to an increase of production. Abundant rains have fallen throughout India, and the next crop is expected to be plentiful.

From China we learn that trade was increasing on the Yang-Tse-Kiang; but that it was impeded by the disorders and devastations caused by the hostilities between the rebels and the Imperialists. The Imperial and rebel successes are alternate. A new insurrection has broken out near Pekin.

The relations of the Europeans with the Japanese are again in an unsatisfactory state. The houses of the foreign merchants have been entered and robbed in open day. The Japanese Government is believed to sanction these proceedings. It is reported that the Governor of Kanagawa had dismissed the Mikado, who contemplated travelling overland from Nagasaki to Yedo, that he could give him no assurance of being molested on his journey.

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

By the United States' steamer Fulton we have received New York journals of the 17th inst.

MILITARY OPERATIONS ON SEA AND LAND.

The war which languishes in Virginia continues active in Southern Missouri. On the 10th inst. General Lyon, with about 5,000 Federals, well armed and provided with artillery, advanced into the south-east of Springfield, a force of the enemy greatly superior in numbers, but inferior in weapons and artillery, and consisting of troops from Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, and of Cherokee Indians, drawn from their intrenchments, and set fire to all their tents and baggage-waggons. General Lyon was killed early in the fight, and the command devolved on General Siegel (a German by birth, who has seen service in Europe). General Siegel, fearing for his communications, resumed the next day to Rolla, a station on the south-western branch of the Missouri and Pacific Railroad, in his retreat General Siegel left behind him three guns, which he spiked, and a waggon-train, which he destroyed. The Federals, who at first claimed a victory, now only regard it as a drawn battle. The loss of the Federals is set down at from 800 to half that number. The loss of the Confederates is unknown. Ninety prisoners were taken by the former.

The report of this engagement caused so much excitement among the people of St. Louis, where opinions about equally divided between the two parties, that General Fremont proclaimed that city in a state of siege and "effected a loan" of 200,000 dollars from the banks.

The blockade of the seaboards is hardly considered to apply to the Northerners. The Southern privateers are heard of everywhere on the coast of South America. The Secretary of the Navy is chartering or purchasing vessels and contracting for the building of gun-boats, so as to render the blockade really efficient.

MUTINY AND DESERTIONS.

The idleness of the army of the Potomac has bred a mutinous spirit. The 79th (Highland) Regiment, the 2nd Maine Regiment, and portions of several others, have refused to march, and have been forced by their arms. The ringleaders are under arrest, and will be punished to the fortunes group of islands. Desertions are numerous. The New York Fire Zouaves figure largely in the lists, and have been disbanded. The causes given for this conduct are dissatisfaction with their officers and indisposition to serve their country.

GENERAL M'DOWELL'S REPORT ON BULL RUN.

This officer has at length made a report on the battle of Bull Run which is commendable for its truthful and unbiassable character. After describing the position of the enemy's forces and their strength, and the loss in killed and wounded, he says:—

The action of the enemy during the night, I am sorry to state, the men supposed to be retiring having fallen into other regiments, and gone to Washington—many of the deserters to New York.

The causes of the defeat are stated to be the unavoidable delay in marching forward, arising from the hasty movements of the troops and the inefficient supply of provisions and subsistence waggons. The movement, which should have commenced on the 8th, was postponed until the 16th. The difficulties of the waggon-transport caused the delay of another day. The troops took two days instead of one to march thirteen miles, and the regimental and division officers insisted that the troops could not do better. They gave the men credit for their days' notice of the attack.

In estimating forces the General has forces to go against Manassas I regret not to have to be with the enemy's forces under Johnston, then kept in check by General Patterson. This was not done, and the necessary force was withdrawn from Patterson's command only because of the assurance of his railroad rolling stock and his supply of provisions for a few days. Had the enemy been in force, then, as I believe, [illegible] A large, and the best, part of my forces were three months' men, whose term of service had expired, and who left in spite of every effort I could make to prevent them. Among these was the Second Regiment of Volunteers, and the battery of Volunteer Artillery of the New York 2nd Brigade, whose term of service, limited to thirty days, had expired. I wrote to the regiment, expressing a request for them to remain a short time, and the Hon. Secretary of War wrote to the colonel, but the regiment left before the battery to remain at least five days. But in vain. They insisted upon their discharge that day, and it was granted, and the next morning, when the army moved forward into battle, these troops moved to the rear to the wood of the enemy's forces. In the next day's fight the 2nd Regiment had the loss [illegible] of the best armed, drilled, officered, and disciplined troops in the army. In other words, every day which added to the strength of the enemy made us weaker.

The object of the advance is declared to have been that of getting to the railroad in the rear of the enemy to the Valley of Virginia, and going on it far enough to break up and destroy the communications, and intercept whatever reinforcements might be coming to the Manassas road, could we have fought a day or a few hours sooner, there is everything to lead me to believe that we should have continued successful, and with which we contended.

The report of the Commissary-General avers that three days' provisions were served out to the divisional head-quarters on the day before the fight, but that after the soldiers threw their knapsacks away before going into battle, while the Commissaries of some regiments neglected to send for their rations to the divisional depôts. This accounts for the want of food of which the troops have since so much complained.

THE FEDERAL LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury has succeeded in negotiating 50,000,000 dollars of the national loan with the New York, Boston, and Philadelphia banks. The first-named establishments furnish three-fifths, Boston one-fifth, and Philadelphia one-tenth of the whole. The banks formed to back the loan by a syndicate, and have undertaken to pay 5 per cent Treasury notes. They made rather hard terms with Secretary Chase. He agrees not to issue any more notes bearing interest for 6 and 7 per cent bonds. The interest is to run on the loan from July 15, although the loan is only to be drawn from the banks by degrees and as it is wanted. [illegible] The Treasury notes already issued are to be accepted in part payment of the loan; seclusi, in fact, the banks only advance 50,000,000 dollars. They have undertaken to pay the balance of taking 100,000,000 dollars more on the same terms as the foregoing. On the other hand, Mr. Chase is allowed to accept tenders from the public for the national loan, and to issue Treasury notes payable on demand. This last stipulation was only carried after considerable opposition from some of the banks. Secretary Chase acted as a connecticut of this negotiation, and Mr. Chase has returned to Washington. He declared to the assembled bankers that his expenditure amounted to one million dollars a day.

THE STATUS OF SLAVES.

Secretary Cameron, in reply to the letter of General Butler, says that slaves escaping from the loyal masters in the Seceded States may be detained and set to work. "Upon the return of peace Congress will make provision to provide for and to restore [illegible] has received into the service of the Union, and for a just compensation to loyal masters." But the claims of peaceful citizens are not to be enlisted away, nor a law ordinary return of any fugitive to be hindered, except where inconsistent with the public good.

PRESIDENT.

Mr. Lincoln has issued proclamations for a national fast and humiliation on the last Thursday in September, and for prohibiting all commerce between the loyal States and those in rebellion. This is to be enforced, will put a stop to the intercourse which has been hitherto maintained through the State of Kentucky.

PERSONAL.

Prince Napoleon has visited the Southern army at Manassas, sleeping one night there with General Johnston. Mr. Seward made no objection to this visit, but it was eyed unfavourably by Northern public opinion. He reports that both armies are undisciplined, and that the result of the next battle will depend on an accident. The Prince has returned to New York, and was about to set out on his Western tour.

Major-General Wool, the officer in the United States' service sent to General Scott, has been ordered to Fort Monroe to supersede General Butler, a Massachusetts lawyer, in command of that post. The appointment gives universal satisfaction.

Postal M'Quillan, the incarcerated British subject, whom the Commander of Fort Lafayette refused to bring into court on a writ of habeas corpus, has been released by the Secretary of War in consequence of the intervention of Lord Lyons.

A Mr. Scrill, passenger to New York on board the Persia, who boasted that he had effected a loan on behalf of the Confederate States in England, was searched on his arrival in port, and £40,000 in Bank of England notes were discovered, concealed in a hollow about his person.

But the most important arrest that has yet been made is that of Mr. Faulkner, of Virginia, the late United States' Minister for France. Mr. Faulkner went to Washington to pay the usual visit of courtesy to the Foreign Secretary, and was thereupon arrested on a charge of treason, for not consulting at all by his purchased vote the interests of the Secession while representing the United States, and endeavouring to procure the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by the Government of France.

FATAL COLLISION ON THE LONDON AND BRIGHTON RAILWAY.

ONE of the most fearful railway collisions that ever happened in this country took place on Sunday morning in the Clayton tunnel, about five miles from Brighton, on the up-main-line train from that town to London. Twenty-three persons were killed and many others mutilated and scalded. The account of the accident is as follows:—

The Portsmouth train which passes through Brighton for London at 8.5 a.m. duly arrived at the Clayton tunnel, where the "All right" signal was displayed, and the train passed through without interruption. Directly afterwards the 8.15, from Brighton, came within sight of the signalman, who, remembering that the Portsmouth and up-country train had only gone by a very short time previously, alleges that he attempted to put on the "Stop" signal, which by Act of Parliament he is bound to put on the moment a red flag, indicating danger, to the driver of the Brighton train, who, however, was close upon the signal-man's box, near the tunnel's mouth, at the moment he exhibited this sign of peril. The engine-driver, thinking from the signal that the train which had preceded him had not got clear, immediately opened the steam full on the impetus with which he had been travelling prevented the train being pulled up before it had proceeded more than a few yards beyond the signal-man, perceiving that in spite of the red flag the second train did not stop, imagined that the driver had not seen it, and immediately telegraphed to the other end of the tunnel to the effect that the train had passed through, and received for an answer that it (meaning the Portsmouth train) had, not twenty minutes at the time that the train of the second train had seen the red signal, had reversed his engine, and that the train was in backward motion towards the south or Brighton end of the tunnel. At the moment that the signal-man was giving the Portsmouth train cause in sight, and the signalman having received the answer above referred to, and thinking that in the event of the second train have the usual signal for the train to proceed, which is did at the ordinary speed, being a very short distance in the mouth of the tunnel a fearful crash ensued, the second train backing having come into violent collision with the other train, which was rushing forward.

Lights having been procured, the fearful scene presented itself to be discovered. The engine of the third train had literally leaped upon the last carriage of the excursion-train, and was actually in part driven shivering the back of the next carriage in advance. The two carriages contained sixty persons, who were all more or less severely scalded, or otherwise injured. Several persons were soon on the spot, having been telegraphed for from Brighton, and some of the first-class passengers, having observed the lights of their carriages, proceeded to assist the sufferers.

Unfortunately in too many cases all medical aid was unavailing. Upon the fragments of the carriages being removed, upwards of twenty persons were found to be dead. The engine had literally sunk upon the second train, and the hinder part of the engine-driver was seen underneath. They had been either crushed or scalded to death. The dead bodies were in a ghastly condition; and one of the passengers, who said in some cases, it is feared, mortally, wounded were conveyed to the Brighton Hospital, and about twenty more to their own homes.

Among the killed is Mr. Parkhouse, who was at the Birmingham Musical Festival, for which he was engaged. Although he escaped with a slight cut on the hand, two fellow-passengers were killed by his side.

A passenger in the front part of the first Brighton train describes his experience in this way:—"The scene that followed I have no power to describe. The yells and shrieks of the people were awful, not only of those who were injured, but rest of the passengers in the other trains, where there, increased by the darkness, was intense. People were distracted with terror. We had many ladies in our carriages, and contusions in our carriage; but people yelled and shrieked and put up prayers, believing that they should never see daylight more. Their fears increased by the actual horror of the scene. I imagined that every moment other trains, either on the up or down line, would run into us, and there was no possible escape. For some time I was quite paralysed, remained in darkness; then lights were hung up against the sides of the tunnel, and the scene that presented itself was terrible in the extreme. I could dimly perceive a heap of carriages more or less in fragments, which seemed to have been piled one upon the other. I was among the mass, and assisted in all directions. Dead bodies, disgrish people lying, stirring, or running to and fro, shrieking and groaning. I never witnessed such a scene in my life."

A passenger furnishes the following interesting account of the accident:—"I left Brighton by the excursion train at 7.30 a.m. on Sunday morning. We did not start till twenty-five minutes past eight, being ten minutes behind time. We went on at the usual speed until we got a few hundred yards into the Clayton tunnel, when the engine and train began to slacken its speed, and all at once stopped. I thought nothing of it, and was quite content to wait till we began to go, but time we stopped again. I then became convinced that something was wrong, and knowing that there was a train to leave Brighton at half-past eight—that is, only five minutes after the time we started—I started.

I jumped out of the carriage on to the rails, and got on to the down line. I got about two carriages from the engine, and stopped to look. It was perfectly dark, so that a man could not see his hand. I struck a light with a lucifer, and ignited a piece of paper. I looked to see if the line was clear, and, finding it so, thought that I imagined to be the place of the sun, but I soon became aware that it was the lamp of another train. I shouted out, 'Here comes the Brighton train!' and I then leaned against the wall of the tunnel on the down line. The way came nearly up the tunnel, and I thought that I heard the usual noise and crash, and by the light of the firebox I could see a carriage on the top of another one, all across the line. The screaming and the groaning was awful. Every one was shrieking and crying out. I then approached a little nearer, and saw the engine with the firebox open. I saw a lady (she is only five miles from the tunnel) sitting on a little child, who was screaming and crying. I then saw several men and women on the rails. Some seemingly wounded. I told them to keep on the up line, and assisted some to get into carriages. This was done by the light of pieces of newspapers which the passengers ignited. By the means a light was kept up for a considerable time. Some persons walked out of the tunnel at the Hassock's-gate end, but the majority remained in the train. No conductors could I perceive, half an hour after the accident, and then two or three men came down with lamps, and were asked many questions by the people, and by whether we should remain where we were. They said they knew nothing about it—they were poor labouring men, and could not advise us to do anything. The passengers in the train kept continually screaming for nearly an hour. The scene all the time was most heartrending. The first part of the train was knocked, and we proceeded towards Hassock's-gate. On emerging from the tunnel there were three or four trains filled with excursionists from London, waiting the prevention of their way. We then went on to Hassock's-gate station, and put down the injured persons, some of whom had fractured limbs, some cuts and scalp wounds, while others had received severe contusions. . . . We remained at Hassock's-gate about half an hour, and then proceeded on to London, stopping at every station on our way, in order that writer might be given to those who required it."

A committee has been formed, consisting of the directors of the Croydon Railway, to obtain contributions for the sufferers by the late fatal accident.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received at Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

FRANCE—Paris, Aug. 29.—The Paris evening papers state that the English squadron left Naples and returned to Malta on the 26th inst. Lord Clyde is expected at the camp of Chalons, after visiting which he will proceed to Germany. The Pays of this evening says the interview between the Emperor and the King of Prussia will not take place until after the latter's coronation.

THE APPEAL OF M. MIRES.—Paris, Aug. 29.—The Imperial court-of-law delivered judgment this morning in the case of M. Mires. The Court exempted from the former judgment the charge of fraud, and also the charge of fraudulently appropriating 21,127 shares of the Union Générale. The Court, however, confirmed the sentence of April. As regards the other charges the Court concurred in the views of the former decision. The effect of the acts on which these charges are based had been frequently repeated by M. Mires, and had caused great scandal and enormous loss to private individuals, affected the existence of commercial houses. M. Mires was, consequently, condemned to the pains of the appeal. As regards the appeal of Count Simeon, the decision of the first Judges was confirmed.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna, Aug. 29.—A very violent debate on the address took place to-day in the Chamber of Deputies. The speakers were Hungarians, Poles, Slavonians, Swiss and Czechs, demanded the modification of the Constitution.

HUNGARY.—Pesth, Aug. 29.—The Stadthalter, in an official manifesto, declares that the Diet has abused the right of the address; against the dissolution of the Diet, had attacked the rights of the King; and even before the immediate discontinuance of the sittings of the Assembly of the Comitat.

Pesth, August 30.—The conscripts have been ordered to assemble on the 8th of September. Any person who shall be found to have given to obey the order will be tried by court martial and severely punished.

ITALY.—TURIN, Aug. 29.—The Warsaw journals of yesterday publish an address to the Poles addressed to General Langiewicz, of which is conciliatory. The Emperor gives orders to General Lambert to proceed to Warsaw, and there to receive the petitions of the Polish citizens, and promises that Poland shall in future enjoy greater independence. His Majesty also declares that he will entirely forget the events of the past.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Times announces the translation of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol to the see of Hereford in succession to Dr. Musgrave, deceased on report, Dr. Thomson, the Provost of Queen's College, Oxford.

The parish church of Bradford, Yorkshire, in the dale, restored by Sir Gilbert Scott, was opened by the Bishop of Ripon, assisted by the Bishops of Chester, Richmond, and Selkirk (diocesan architects), was consecrated by the Bishop of Lincoln on Thursday, the 25th inst.

The parish church of Ansford, Castle Cary, was reopened on Thursday week, after being rebuilt, under the superintendence of Mr. Giles, architect, at a cost of £1000.

The foundation-stone of the chapel of the church parish of the Birmingham Cemetery at Witton was laid on Monday se'nnight by the Mayor of Birmingham, in the absence of the Bishop of Worcester.

A great festival of church choirs of the district took place on Tuesday week in St. James's parish church, Morpeth, when upwards of 200 surpliced choristers from the various parishes assembled.

Schools for 150 children were recently opened in the parish of Astrington, Devon, and the event was celebrated by a parish feast, at which upwards of 400 persons were present.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells was sufficiently recovered to take part in the ceremony of the consecration of the new church at Frankley, which has been both restored and enlarged by the addition of a north aisle, on Thursday.

The Bishop of London is on a confirmation tour on the Continent. On Tuesday week his Lordship held confirmations at Calais and Boulogne, and yesterday week at Dieppe. He was to be there next day at Switzerland.

The foundation-stone of a memorial church to Sir Robert and Lady Vaughan was laid at Llanvyr-Beth, near Corwen, on Tuesday, in the presence of the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, the Rev. Henry Vaughan, Rural Dean, Rector of Corwen, and a large body of the local gentry, who attended in their full dress.

The Rev. John Darst, Curate of St. Stephen's, Norwich, has been presented with a silver salver by the poor and visitors of his district, on his leaving it for Wymondham, in Norfolk, where he has been presented to a testimonial from the parishioners.

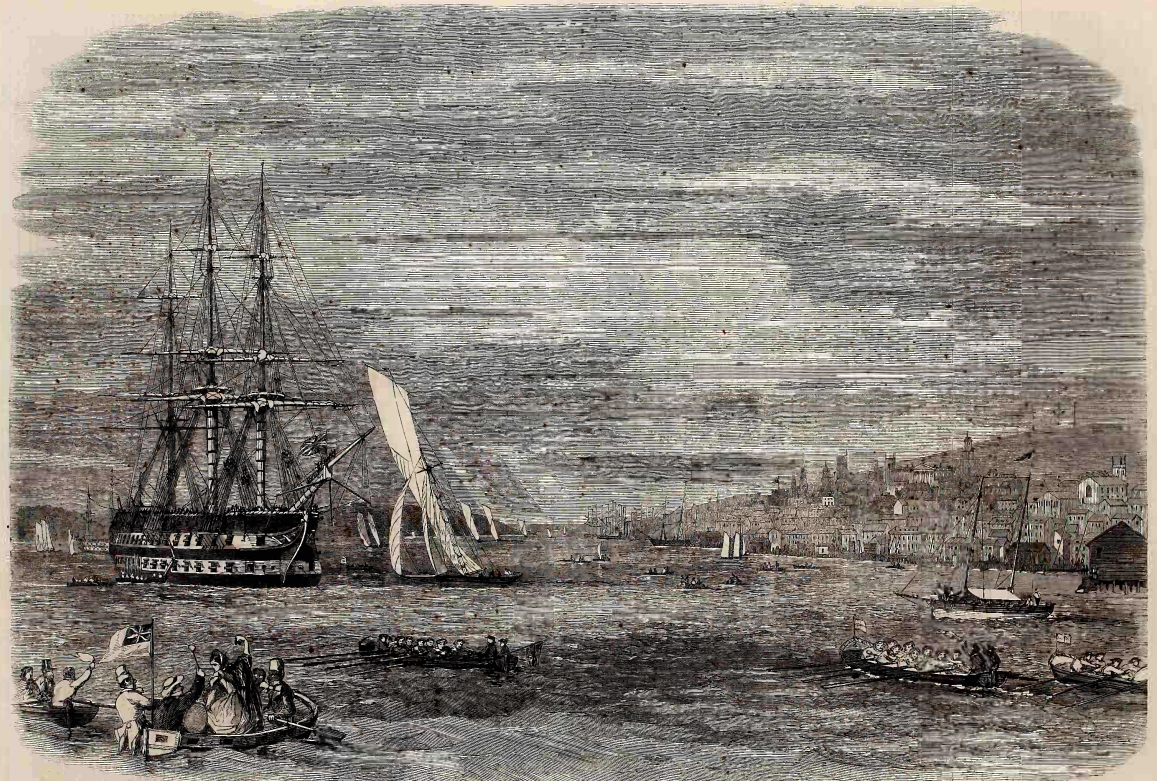
The Bishop of Oxford has appointed the Rev. Richard Corbett, Fellow, M.A., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, to be Vice-Principal of the Diocesan Theological College, Cuddesdon. The new college is to be under the presidency of the Rev. C. J. Ellicott, the newly-appointed Dean, the Bishop of the diocese having resigned the office on his recent elevation.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has consented to preside at the annual meeting of the Canterbury Diocesan Board of Education which is to be held at Maidstone, on Thursday, the 29th inst., when the Lord Mayor of Rochester, Mr. Catherine Hasty, M.P., Sir Brooke Bridges, Bart., M.P., and the Rev. Dr. Scott will attend.

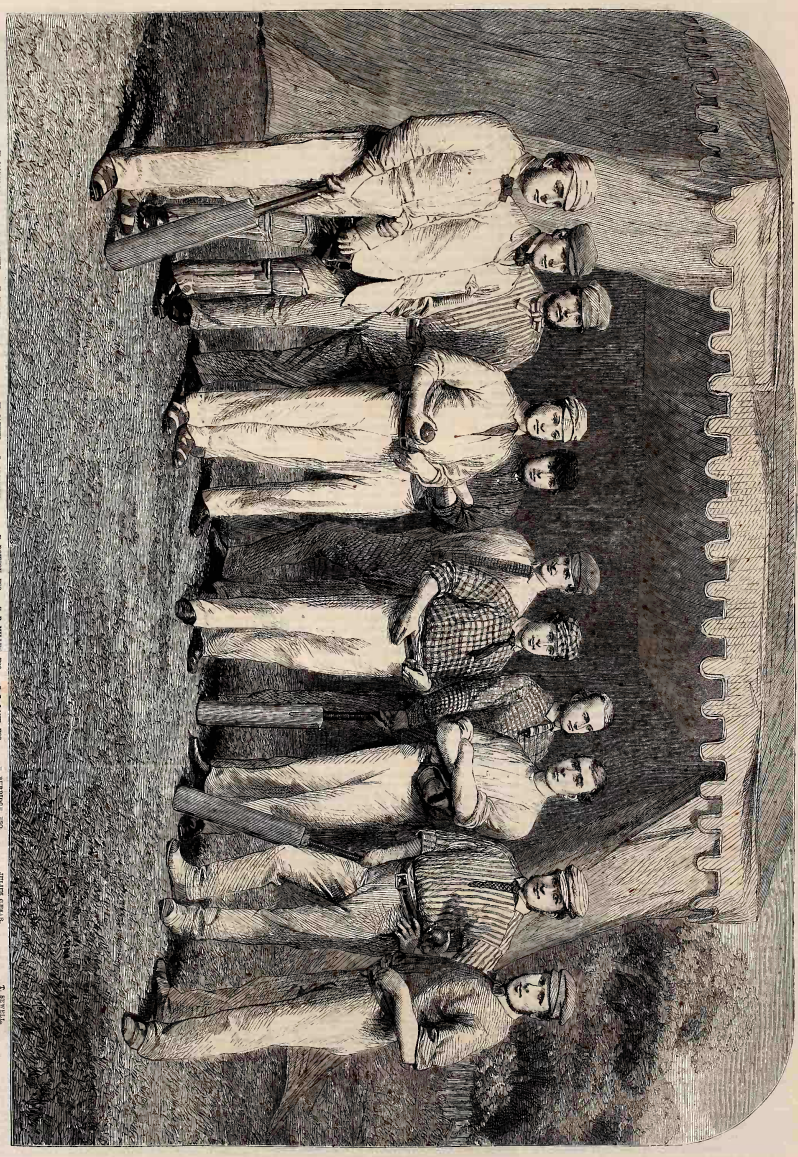
A sum of £300 has been granted by the War Department, and a similar sum by the Admiralty, in addition to the £1000 given by the Queen, which has been commenced on the Gold Coast, in connection with the Church Missionary Society, for the benefit of the Protestant Churches, and the sending of a clergyman to be nearly all free and open.

The church at North Barrow, Somerset, the roof of which fell down a short time since, has been completely restored, and reopened for divine service by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, with the exception of the tower, from the designs of Mr. Edmund Sedding, of Bath. The cost of the restoration, which has been borne by the rector, Mr. Thomas Hanbury, and his family, and the late Rector, the Rev. Richard Hanbury, and his family, and recently Senior Assistant-Master in the Royal School, Armagh, to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

THE CLERGY LIST OF APPOINTMENTS.—Recorder: The Hon. and Rev. A. Byron to Kirby Mallory, Leicestershire; Rev. B. D. Lagden to Great Gaddesden; Rev. N. J. Ellis to Sandhurst, Berks; Rev. C. Bell to Maunsell to Twelve Comrings, with the Chapelry of Partridge, Dorset; Worcester Herald: Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. J. Lewis to Mowsley, Essex; Rev. J. Lewis to Lamber, Cardiganshire; Rev. R. C. Perry to Hanbury; Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. C. Bell to Maunsell; Rev. J. Brooke, Suffolk. Ironmonger: Rev. F. G. Lee to St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, London; Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. J. Lewis to Mowsley, Leicestershire; Rev. J. Lewis to Lamber, Cardiganshire; Rev. R. C. Perry to St. Augustine's Priory, Canterbury. Reigate Coroner: Rev. W. Milton to Hanbury; Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. J. Lewis to Worcestershire; Rev. G. Sowden to Holden Bridge, York-shire. Gentleman's Magazine: Rev. J. Brooke, Essex; Rev. J. Lewis to Mowsley, Leicestershire; Rev. J. Lewis to Lamber, Cardiganshire; Rev. R. C. Perry to Hanbury; Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. J. Lewis to Worcestershire; Rev. G. Sowden to Holden Bridge, York-shire. Guardian: Rev. J. Brooke, Essex; Rev. J. Lewis to Mowsley, Leicestershire; Rev. J. Lewis to Lamber, Cardiganshire; Rev. R. C. Perry to Hanbury; Rev. J. Hutchinson to Hanbury; Rev. J. Lewis to Worcestershire; Rev. G. Sowden to Holden Bridge, York-shire. *Ecclesiastic



REGATTA IN HALIFAX HARBOUR, NOVA SCOTIA.—SAILING MATCH FOR THE PRINCE OF WALES' CUP: THE WINNING YACHT WAVE CROSSING THE BOWS OF THE ST. GEORGE.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 220.



THE SOUDAN EXPEDITION.—SEE PAGE 212.
W. MORTIMER.
T. BOWYER.
H. M. STEPHENSON.
W. CUTTS, JUNR.
CHARLES GRIFFITH.
F. DODSON, ESQ.
F. A. MARSH, ESQ.
C. E. LEES, ESQ.
C. BUTLER, ESQ.
JULIUS CÆSAR.
T. BENTLY.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, September 1.—Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 2.—Great Fire of London, 1666.
TUESDAY, 3.—British Bank stopped, 1816. [Sun.
WEDNESDAY, 4.—New Style introduced, 1752. New Moon, 10h. 18m.
THURSDAY, 5.—Old St. Bartholomew.
FRIDAY, 6.—Americans entered Rochester, 1814.
SATURDAY, 7.—Ramillies. Battle of Borodino, 1812.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE.
FROM THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 7, 1851.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M.	M.	M.	M.	M.	M.	M.
0 15	0 45	1 15	1 45	2 15	2 45	3 15

Will be published at the end of October,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1852, price 1s., containing Groups of Domestic Animals (printed in Colours), from Drawings by Harrison Weir, and humorously Illustrated Poems on the same subject, by Thomas Hillier; Twelve Fine-Art Engravings; also, Astronomical Diagrams (printed in Colours), &c., &c. remarkable Phenomena, astronomical, history by A. Breen; together with Illustrations of the Seasons, by A. Hunt.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—
Whole Page, £70. Half Page, £36. Quarter Page, £18.
Any smaller Advertisement, 2s. 6d. per line (double columns).
. ILLUSTRATED ADVERTISEMENTS will be received.
GUARANTEED CIRCULATION, 100,000.

With be ready on the 14th of September,

THE ILLUSTRATED PENNY ALMANACK for 1852, containing Twelve Original Designs emblematic of the Months, numerous Engravings selected from the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS—Tables of Stamps, Coins, Stamp Duties, and Lessons, Effects of Astronomical Appearances—Remarkable Events—Fine Exhibitions and Sights in London—Lists of Fairs, Post-Office Regulations, &c. &c. Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvendors. For Trade supplied by W. M. CLARK, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row; and by G. VICKERS, Angel-court (172), Strand, London.

ILLUSTRATIONS FOR OUR NEXT NUMBER.

SEVERAL highly-finished Engravings, from Sketches by our Special Artists, will appear in the forthcoming Number of this Journal in connexion with the following subjects:—

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.
The Installation of Lord Palmerston as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports.
The Interior of St. Mary Redcliffe Church, Bristol.
The Civil War in America.

Besides these, our next week's Impression will contain other Engravings of various kinds.

Price of Number and Supplement, Fivepence; Stamped, Sixpence.

Office, 198, Strand.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1851.

THE mournful disaster in the Clayton Tunnel has been naturally absorbing public attention during the whole week. The inquiry, before the Coroner at Brighton is still proceeding, and we are glad to observe that the Government official is proceeding on his part with a vigour and determination which seem eminently calculated to elicit, not merely the causes of this isolated case, but the risks of the railway excursion system in general. At this stage of the evidence there would be an obvious impropriety in commenting on the deplorable event as a whole, but one or two points have been so clearly and unmistakably eliminated that the conclusion of the inquest or of any other proceedings can in no possible way bear upon them, and we may therefore fairly bring them before our readers' notice—the more so as they in no way affect the Brighton line, which we know to be a generally well-managed one. Bradshaw is the only witness needful for our first point. When what have now come to be called the "trunk lines" were first planned there was very little if any forethought for the extraordinary various system of branch lines which has since sprung from each centre. The consequence is that en conduit, calculated merely to carry water from one reservoir to another, is now called on to bear in addition the contributions of a dozen and more of tributaries, ever pouring their contents into what was never constructed to receive them. The Brighton line, for instance, was originally, and very judiciously, designed as the high road between London and Brighton. A glance at the witness we have called will show that the same single pair of rails which was laid down for this purpose is now called on to carry the traffic from a whole list of places more or less considerable, and more or less every direction. Next, it appears that the duty of sealing this enormously overgrown traffic safe through a long tunnel is intrusted to a couple of men with salaries of 4*l.* a week each, one of whom is on duty once in every week for five-and-twenty hours on and a self-acting signal, which is often out of order; and a telegraphic code, which is capable of being misunderstood. Under these circumstances can any one be surprised that the signalmen, who very manfully volunteered their statements in spite of the Coroner's warning, evinced an amount of agitation at the time of the accident and an amount of confusion and self-contradiction during their examination which rendered it utterly impossible even for the lawyers engaged to make out any reconcilable story from their evidence? What if the result of this inquiry should lead to two far more important ones—one, are the trunk lines sufficient for their present duty?—the other, are excursion trains a necessary of life?

We in Europe, who are, unfortunately, only too accustomed to war, watch with much interest the progress which our American kinsmen are making in the study of this noble art. A second engagement, on nothing like the scale of the Bull Run affair, but of quite sufficient importance to earn its title of a "battle," has fully justified the Premier in saying, as he did at Dover, that there is no want of pluck among them, only of discipline. We gladly indorse the judgment. We all know what a dozen disciplined policemen accustomed to act in concert can effect against a wild, scrambling mob; and the "rapid movement" at Bull Run is only a new proof of the truth of the old military axiom that of undisciplined men the more you have the greater your danger. The Springfield affair shows what sort of stuff there really is in these kinsmen of ours; and we only grieve to think what a bitter school is that in which they are learning, and how bitter for many a year to come may be the fruits of this system of education to them, to us, and to the world.

Quite apropos of which is the report of the Manchester Cotton Company. Our own Indian empire seems for the present the focus of attraction. Mr. Haywood receives a handsome sum towards his expenses, the Government afford every assistance, and it seems far from improbable that before twelve months are over we may be receiving from our own possessions in the East a supply which, if it do not render us independent of, may at any rate justify us in being indifferent to, the shutting or opening of the Southern ports of the States. The real difficulty lies in about two, or perhaps three, intervals of three months. We have cotton enough in England to keep all hands fully employed for three months; then, assuming no arrivals from the Southern ports, enough to keep all hands half employed for three months more, the next three months would be an utter blank, the next three half employment, and after that we may reasonably hope for a resumption.

The Premier's installation in his newly-acquire office of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports has proved an event and a refreshing episode in the proverbial dullness of the dog-days. We hail his Lordship an opportunity for making one of those well-adapted speeches for which he is famous—an aphorism about the dignifying influence of ancient traditions was well calculated to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of all Red Reformers, and a significant allusion to the original design of the Cinque Ports as an outwork against foreign invasion will not be lost on the country. We are glad, but not at all surprised, to observe that the Premier's delay in signifying his acceptance of the post arose from serious doubts whether the Wardenship ought not to be conferred among those worn-out relics of antiquity which come in the lapse of ages to be mere empty shams. Having satisfied himself on this head, however, our overgreen Premier announces himself ready to perform the duties of his ancient office with all possible vigour, and we feel that the country should arise; but, in case of the territory guarded by the Cinque Ports being put by a foreign Power to its old use, and made the point for an invasion, we dare swear the Lord Warden will be found in the place of his most predecessors, at the head of a valiant body of local defenders as mustered on the downs on Wednesday, to defend his post "as it hath been accustomed."

Every one admits that we are in the very heart of a revolution In the construction of vessels for naval warfare, but very few seem to have an idea of the principles under which the new ships are to be constructed. We arrived—a long time after the French—at the conclusion that iron sheathing on a very different plan to that employed on the floating batteries built for the Russian War was indispensable. The results are the Warrior, now lying at Greenhithe, and some smaller ships launched in Scotland and elsewhere, and all, we believe, getting ready for a trial of their powers and appliances at official and private disposal will admit of; but the Warrior and the rest of our iron-clad frigates, in common with the much-vaunted Globe, Normandie, and other French ships, are all straight-sided ships, through whose armour Sir William Armstrong undertakes to drive his 200-lb. round shot at six hundred yards as easily as a rifleman's bullet is driven through a deal door at twenty. Meanwhile Mr. Jones has successfully proved at Portsmouth that if the ship's sides be inclined inwards, on the very old-fashioned system, at something like the half of a right angle, the force of the shot will be thus got off altogether. If this idea should be acted on, a new navy, or at least an entire reconstruction of the old one, is inevitable.

The regulations of Mr. Gladstone's Post Office savings banks have appeared. That they seem eminently calculated to invite the confidence and insure the safety of the depositor else we do not deny, the leading feature being the responsibility of the Government through its Postmaster-General; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the regulations entail—on the supposition that this medium of deposit is only moderately used—an enormous increase of correspondence on the part of the Post Office officials. Considering that we are already not without complaints of overwork and underpay in this department, we fear we must prepare ourselves next Session for an application for a Parliamentary grant on the Chancellor of the Exchequer's considerate boon to the working classes. We doubt, however, whether this will be objected to.

INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS.—On Wednesday last, the ceremony of the Installation of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, the ceremony being performed at Dover, with accompaniment of form and splendour such as have not been witnessed for many years. There was a procession by land and a procession, comprising the Lord Warden, the civic dignitaries and the members of the Cinque Ports Yacht Club, by water, from the pier to the Court of Shepway, by which body the ceremony of installation was performed. In the evening there was a grand banquet at the Townhall. We intend to give a special illustration of the proceedings of the Installation Ceremony in our Number for next week, till when we must reserve the detail.

A letter from Bayreuth, in the Patrie, states that the French squadron on the coast of Syria is very active, constantly cruising on the coast to show the flag and to protect the Latins. The Greek Bishops are also busy, being eager to see all and judge of everything that is going on. He recently went to Beyrout, and on to the Sea of Galilee in order to satisfy himself of the state of Palestine, which he found extremely tranquil. During the Abraham's visit to Nazareth, the Bishop of Nazareth, installed in sight of Carmel, was an object of admiration to the population.

A correspondent quoted from a travelling passage-ticket at Ostenburg, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, a few days ago, and he was afterwards seen in the Secker, in the neighbourhood of Ravensburg. In consequence of his presence in the entire the local authorities published the individuals from his dress. Two days back some fishermen succeeded in capturing him by means of very strong nets. His escape was sent for, and when he appeared the constable considered great joy—how is not stated.

A letter from Dresden states that the congress of German lawyers, the number of whom was last year 640, and is now 1168, is about to assemble in that city. Among the new members are the Ministers of Justice of Saxony, Brunswick, Austria, Wirtemberg, and Baden, and several Presidents of Appeal Courts and other minor tribunals. Saxony has contributed 113 to his increase.

THE COURT.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY AT THE VICEREGAL LODGE.

The Royal party reached the Viceregal Lodge as stated in our Journal last week, on Thursday. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by Colonel Bruce, arrived at the Viceregal Lodge at two o'clock on Thursday, and, having partaken of luncheon with her Majesty, the Prince Consort, the Princesses, the Lord Lieutenant, &c., he returned to the camp at the Curragh, accompanied by his brother, Prince Alfred, at half-past five. The Queen drove in the evening along the Lucan road, but in so unostentatious a manner as to render her in almost the strictest incognito. The Prince Consort, accompanied by the Lord Lieutenant, Sir R. Peel, and Major-General Wyndham, visited the Art-Exhibition, Trinity College, and the Albert model farms at Glasnevin; but these visits were not of the most private character, for in the evening there was a grand banquet at the lodge.

On Friday the Queen, accompanied by Lord Mayor of Dublin at eleven o'clock, she presented a loyal and dutiful address to her Majesty from the Corporation of the city. Her Majesty was attended by Earl Granville, K.G., Viscount Sydney (Lord Chamberlain), and the ladies and gentlemen in Waiting. The Prince Consort, attended by Major De Fiat, went to the review on the Curragh at Naas. His Royal Highness lunched with the Prince of Wales, and returned to the Viceregal Lodge at about four o'clock. Princesses Helena and Alice, and Prince Alfred, accompanied by the Hon. Victoria and Mr. Stuart Wortley, visited the castle on during the morning. They next went through the entire suite of apartments of the Royal Hospital of St. Patrick's Hall, and then proceeded to Trinity College, where they visited the Examination Hall, the Library, and the Museum. At Royal Highnesses next proceeded to the National Education Board. The Queen and the Prince Consort, with Princesses Alice and Helena, and accompanied by the Lord Lieutenant, drove out in the afternoon.

HER MAJESTY AT THE CAMP OF THE CURRAGH.

The Queen, accompanied by the Prince Consort, Princess Alice Princess Helena, and Prince Alfred, left the Viceregal Lodge at half-past ten on Saturday for the camp at the Curragh. His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, Colonel Cowell, Captain the Hon. H. Arbuthnot, and Captain Marshall (A.D.C.s in waiting), likewise accompanied her Majesty. Her Majesty and the Royal party were conveyed in the Lord Lieutenant's carriage, followed by a party of the Royal Horse, to the Kingsbridge station of the Great Southern and Western Railway. The officers in waiting, in attendance, and in charge of the Royal saloon carriage, in which her Majesty and the Royal family travelled to the Curragh camp station.

The Royal carriages and horses were there in attendance, and the Queen proceeded to review the troops stationed at the camp. In the carriage with her Majesty were her Royal Highnesses Princesses Alice and Helena, and Lady Churchill, Lady in Waiting, and in a second carriage were the Hon. Victoria Stuart Wortley, Miss Bruce, and Dr. Jenner. His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, with his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, Earl Granville, Viscount Sydney, and the gentlemen in attendance, rode on horseback. The division was drawn up in contiguous columns at quarter distance, when her Majesty received the Royal salute. The troops then marched past in columns of grand divisions at quarter distance. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was in the ranks of the 1st battalion Grenadier Guards, to which his Royal Highness is temporarily attached, and marched past the Queen, and went through the evolution of the line in command of a company. The troops were under the command of General Sir George Brown, G.C.B., and at the conclusion of the review her Majesty and the Royal party drove to the hut of the Prince of Wales, where luncheon was prepared. A guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards was drawn up in front of the entrance to the hut. The Prince of Wales was the lieutenant of the Guard.

RETURN OF HER MAJESTY TO DUBLIN.

Her Majesty, with the Prince Consort and the Princesses, and the ladies and gentlemen of the suite, returned to Dublin at about five o'clock. His Royal Highness Prince Alfred, with Major Cowell, remained on a visit to the Prince of Wales.

On Sunday her Majesty, the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Princess Helena attended Divine service at the Viceregal Lodge in the morning. In the afternoon the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred arrived from the camp at the Curragh. At five o'clock her Majesty left the lodge, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses Princess Alice and Princess Helena, visited the Royal Hospital, where they were received by General Sir George Brown. His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred, visited the Mountjoy Prison and the Reformatory in Smithfield.

HER MAJESTY AT KILLARNEY.

Monday being the birthday of the Prince Consort, his Royal Highness received the congratulations of the Royal party at breakfast. At noon a quarter before one o'clock the Queen and the Prince Consort, with the Prince of Wales, Princesses Alice and Helena, and Prince Alfred, left the Viceregal Lodge for the Kingsbridge station. Upon the arrival of the Royal carriage at the Kingsbridge station her Majesty was cordially received by the Royal commissioners, directors and the directors of the Great Southern and Western Railway. The train arrived at the Killarney station at half-past eight o'clock. Her Majesty was received by Viscount Castlerosse, the Right Hon. H. Herbert, Lord Lieutenant of the county, and other gentlemen. Her Majesty, with the Prince Consort and the rest of the Royal party, entered the carriages which were waiting, and proceeded, amidst the cheers of an immense multitude, to Killarney House, the residence of Viscount Castlerosse, where her Majesty passed the night.

At twelve o'clock on Tuesday the Royal party embarked at Ross Castle amidst the cheers of the people, and in the midst of an immense flotilla of boats which followed the Queen's barge during the day. In the boat which contained the Queen, the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, Princess Helena, Lady Churchill, Lord Granville, and Lord and Lady Castlerosse, the celebrated guide steered. After rowing round Innisfallen, the Royal party landed at one o'clock at Glena. After a short excursion through the romantic valley so dear to the eighteenth debtater at Glena Cottage. The stay at Glena was an hour and a half. The Queen was cordially received by the cheers again rang forth. After re-embarking, the procession of boats, the Royal boat leading, went through the middle of the Lake, and a half. The Queen was cordially received by the "Eagle's Nest" into the Upper Lake, en route for Derrycunihy. This point was reached in four o'clock. The Royal party partook of refreshments at the ties. On the return the boats passed through the Muckross Lake, and under the old weir bridge, through the Lower Lake, to Ross Island, where they landed amidst renewed acclamations.

The Royal party returned to Killarney House, entered the carriages in waiting, and proceeded to visit the ruins of Muckross Abbey, the seat of Mr. Herbert. Here there was an assemblage, and the Queen was loudly cheered.

The Royal party drove on Wednesday morning, attended by Colonel Herbert, round Dinis Island and other portions of Muckross demesne. They visited Ross Castle, and took leave of the sagacious Colonel Herbert to take place. There was a great assemblage of boats, crowded by people, who cheered the Queen as she passed by. She remained on the lake till six, and the Stags barge were repeatedly through the flotilla of boats. The Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred were rowed about in a race gig. A stag was started, but still the efforts of men and hounds (Maurice O'Connell's pack) failed to drive the stag into the lake. The Queen and party reached Muckross House.

ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN AND CHILDREN IN SCOTLAND.

The younger members of the Royal family—Princesses Louisa and Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and Prince Arthur—arrived at Holyrood Palace, on Thursday evening, en route for Balmoral. There was a large assemblage of people at the station and at the entrance to the palace, and the arrival of the Royal party was the signal for loud cheers from the crowd. On the platform of the station the Lord Provost, Sheriff Gordon, and other gentlemen waited to receive the Royal party, who proceeded immediately in a close carriage to the Palace. The Royal children remained in Edinburgh until Saturday, when they proceeded by special train to Aboyne, and thence to Balmoral, where they arrived at half-past five.

LITERATURE AND ART.

THERE is the season of the year when the theatrical critics of the daily press smilingly betake themselves to the Rhine or the Highlands, Baden or the Trossachs, and confide their important duties to managing deputies who, delighted with the task, and with the privilege of going to the play for nothing, forgo that the eyes of Europe in general, and of the metropolitan managers in particular, are upon them; because as much care in the notice of a twenty minutes' farce as in that of a new five-act comedy by Bulwer, Tom Taylor, and occasionally waste their acumen on a stale, old, translated melodrame, under the impression that it is a perfectly fresh and original production. Life is the season when statesmen writers cram a parcel of books, to be slaughtered, into their travelling bags for the delectation of the public in the long and dusty journey and rests at the same time, and cover their globe-trotting brains and pens with the smoothing oil of the sea-gull among the "common objects of the seashore," or the pumice of the season when writers make up the records of numbers in advance, and defy the printer's diabolus "from Sulk's-lock or Purple's-shore;" from the Alps or the Apennines, or the more classic shores of Italy, Greece, or the Levant. In the season writers are not to be seen in the flesh anywhere, and are supposed to be "feeding on their characters" and writing books, and publish it between this date and the end of September. Of course, in London, everybody knows precisely where I am writing and going on. There are two or three millions of people living and dying between the Lea or Dogs and Kensal Green; but all our readers are known to us, and there is "nobody in town"! when the exhibitions are closed, and the theatres are closing, and the season when the unhappy slaves of the gossamer pen who are compelled to remain in town—who have no holiday, all the year round, or have had it months ago—quash their little fits and vent their hair, and behold their wretched lot; and, being forced to write, indite the happy labours they themselves think of spread over other creatures. It would be well for our enemy not to write a book

THE MOTTRAM VIADUCT ON THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 224.

QUEEN PHILIPPA INTERCEDING WITH HER HUSBAND EDWARD III. FOR THE BURGESSES OF CALAIS.—SEE DESCRIPTIVE PAGE.—"QUEEN PHILIPPA INTERCEDING WITH HER HUSBAND EDWARD III. FOR THE BURGESSES OF CALAIS." BY JOHN GILBERT.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Monday last was the birthday of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, and salutes were fired at all the dockyards and naval stations.

Her Majesty has been pleased to approve Mr. Westley Richards's breech-loading rifled carbine being adopted in the cavalry.

The head-quarters and staff of the 73rd Regiment, from India, arrived at Sydney Cove on Saturday morning.

A portion of the 57th Regiment, consisting of the 1st, 5th, 8th, and 10th companies, arrived at Chatham last Saturday. The 73rd left England in 1846 for the Cape of Good Hope, and went to India in 1857.

The barracks at Newcastle, Sunderland, and Tynemouth, which have been tenantless for a considerable period, are now occupied by a detachment of the 84th Regiment.

General Francis Moore, the senior General in her Majesty's service, died on Thursday week at Bath, in his ninety-fourth year. He had served seventy-four years.

We are glad to learn from the Army and Navy Gazette that Lord Clyde will leave town in a few days for Germany, as then Her Majesty resolved at Balmoral at the ingestion, with the consent of the Prussian army, about to take place between Coblentz and Düsseldorf.

The 42nd, 92nd, and 93rd Highlanders have just been given extended exercise ammunition whilst lying encamped on Aldershot Common. The first are now formally enrolled as the "Royal Highland Black Watch," the 92nd as the "Gordon," and the 93rd the "Sutherland" Highlanders.

His Grace the Duke of Somerset, Admiral Sir F. Grey, Admiral Robertson, Captain Drummond, Lord Frederick Paget, Secretary, Mr. Whitmarsh, all the members of the Board of Admiralty, made the annual official inspection of Chatham Dockyard last week.

By an Act of Parliament the Commander-in-Chief and her Majesty is enabled to record the services of officers of the merchant service as officers of reserve to the Royal Navy. Any one so qualified will be entered on a register kept for the purpose by the Admiralty, and can be re-called, or their widows, to the same pay or pension as officers of equal rank in the Royal Navy.

No. 10 dock at Portsmouth Dockyard, after seven years' continuous labour, has at length been completed. By its immense size it is now the largest dock in the world, and it contains from the bottom to the coping-stone, and of much softer stone and massive depth of water than the original dock, which is the eighth counted from the top.

Some important experiments were made at Portsmouth last week with a variety of testing the strength of iron. The trial was on the ships of war, invented by Mr. Jones, of Liverpool. A target formed of this material, for a considerable time by Mr. Jones, at his own cost, at his Armstrong gun, and the Times informed us that the resistance offered to the shot was "almost unprecedented in the annals of artillery practice."

The following movements of military regiments have been ordered:—The depôt companies of the 4th (King's Own) regt. will be ordered—The depôt companies of the 4th (King's Own) regt. will be ordered to Gosport, and are expected to be the last battalion of the regiment; the 2nd battalion of the 73rd, from Chichester to the Curragh; the 1st battalion of the 86th, from Portsmouth to Ireland; the 2nd battalion of the 88th, from Ireland to the line battalion of the regiment. The depôt companies have just been relieved at Chatham (Fort Pitt Barracks) by the depôt companies of the 57th.

The arrangements for the introduction of the newly-arranged mails departure at into Chatham Dockyard were completed last Saturday. The superintendent of the Royal Dockyard Establishments, Captain Mr. H. W. R. Wellesley, from the office of the Accountant-General of the Navy, who will visit this port on each succeeding Saturday, a staff of clerks will be employed in performing the Pecessary duties being appointed at each of the naval stations. At present the head of the Admiralty Office is represented by Mr. Brierley, R.C.B., the Accountant-General.

On Monday afternoon an explosion took place in one of the sheds attached to the laboratory department of Woolwich Arsenal. Since the last explosion, which occurred in the same department, the sheds have been fitted up with new roofs, with rods of corrugated iron, and means of rapid built perhaps of wood, upon the principle which has been found to be one of great importance against the fire. The roofs were so constructed that the force of the explosion would be directed in a perpendicular manner, and not in a horizontal direction, which is generally the case. The explosion on Monday was caused by the ignition of a quantity of powder which was being dried in a room in one of the sheds. The explosion was heard throughout the whole of the arsenal, and the shock was felt in the houses in the neighbourhood. Fortunately, however, no one of the persons employed in the building was injured, although the roof was blown off, and the walls of the building were considerably damaged. The damage done by the explosion will be repaired by the Royal Engineers, on the requisition of the commanding officer. Where a strictly regimental system of superintendence is carried out, in barrack-rule, there is no necessity for any such supply, but the existing system of separate is to be followed.

The arrangements for the reorganisation of the cavalry are gradually settling, as regards clothing and equipments, will come into operation on April 1, 1862. The twenty-eight regiments are to be clothed and dressed three classes. The 1st Royal Dragoons, and the Scots Greys, the 2nd Regiment of Guards, the 1st Royal Dragoons, and the Scots Greys, form the first class. The second class will comprise the King's Dragoon Guards, the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Dragoon Guards, the Royal Horse Guards, Enniskilling Dragoons, 5th, 6th, 7th, 10th, and 11th Hussars, the undress uniform of the prescribed by the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Dragoon Guards, and the cavalry staff will be designated and assigned as instance, and will consist of a scarlet serge jacket, the 5th, 6th, 7th, 10th, and 11th Hussars, for which the standard length will be 26 in., 24 in., 23 in., 22 in., and 21 in. respectively, with a change of training will be in the case of the four light dragoon regiments, and for their service in heavily mounted regiments will be limited to trade and the substitution of a busby for a shako.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

A War Office circular points out to the commanding volunteer corps that it is another method by which effective status he has attended at the annual general inspection of those corps, to which attendance is compulsory. The inspecting officer will be informed of every case will be taken that the general have also power to grant leave of absence to volunteers who are unable to attend on the convenience of the volunteers.

The Colonelcy of the Victoria Regiment of Volunteers for one of the metropolitan districts, rendered vacant by the nomination of Major Nelson to be Lieut.-Colonel of the battalion, will not be filled up. A correspondent of the Army and Navy Gazette, "have now arrived at such a state of organisation in and remained in command of the regiment, the supervision and control of the auxiliary reason this reduction of the inspecting staff has taken place."

It appears that the annual inspection of the Victoria Rifles was held at the head-quarters last Saturday, for the purpose of recommending to the Court of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir W. Clay, Bart., M.P., Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Claude Scott, Bart., M.P., and Major Nelson, C.B., the following resolution was unanimously carried:—"That, as Sir William Pinsent Clay, Bart., M.P., has resigned the command of the 1st Middlesex, and Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, Major Richards, to whom the country is so greatly indebted for his patriotism and constant exertions in the cause of the volunteer movement, and who originated and successfully accomplished the formation of the corps, and devoted so much time and labour to bringing it to a state of efficiency, is eminently entitled to succeed Sir William de Bathe to the command."

The detachment of the Hon. Artillery Company, under the command of Major Holmes, which has for the last week been occupied in the Tilbury Fort, on the Essex, having completed their allotted period of drill, returned to their head-quarters at Finsbury last Saturday. Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Lindsay they have been daily exercised in carriage and artillery practice upon the lands, and have made very excellent shooting with the guns. The men, during their ordinary duties several spirited matches have taken place, the prizes being of the value of £10 for the first, £5 for the second, and £2 for the third.

The North-East London Rifle Brigade has within the last few months received an unusually large accession of strength.

A review of the cadet companies of the several rifle corps in the metropolis and adjacent districts is intended to be held in the course of the month in Hyde Park, on Wednesday, the 15th proximo.

The first prize to the members of the St. George's rifles who have been successful in recent competitions at Wimbledon Scores took place on Thursday week, in quadrangle of Burlington House.

The 1st Kent (Gravesend) Artillery, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gulliver, has been engaged in the last week at Shornmead, the practice having been and 68 pounder guns, and 13-inch shell. A target was laid out about a mile from the shore, and the first shot struck the flagstaff on the target, and cut it in two. The second shot from the same gun struck the target itself, and smashed it to atoms.

The 9th Kent (Plumstead) Artillery closed their practice with solid shot for the season last week, when five guns were mounted in the Government battery, and fired with a distance of 100 yards. In all rounds from the guns the target was struck, and in the last round the target was completely shot away.

A volunteer fete, numerously attended by the members of various Kentish corps and inhabitants of the district, took place on Thursday week in the park of Sir T. M. Wilson, Old Charlton.

Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer proposes, if the project receives the approbation of his Royal Highness the General Commanding-in-Chief and the Secretary of State for War, to form a volunteer encampment and brigade for one day on Barking Common, Essex, on Monday, Sept. 24.

A competition took place at Windsor during the course of last week for silver cups given by Sir Theodore H. Brinckman, and Mr. William Brinckman, of the 1st Kent Engineers, for the best corps. The competition, compelled twenty-five volunteers, being three picked out of each section of the two companies. Sir Theodore Brinckman's cup, for seven volunteers, was won by Mr. John Hollis. Yesterday week eight of the highest shots out of the twenty-five were selected to fire for the value of £10, which was won by the fortunate number. In the afternoon the members of the corps assembled at the Bromley Arms, Bromley Common, and partook of an invitation of Colonel the Hon. A. K. Hood, in procession to Cumberland Lodge, by the kind permission of the Ranger, Lord Ernest Hamilton.

The annual competition of the Hastings and St. Leonards Butts took place on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last on Ecclesbourne Glen, Hastings. Among the volunteer corps represented were the Lewes Scottish, London Irish, Dublin Irish, Brighton, Eastbourne, Battle, Rye, and Hastings Artillery, and numerous local and Sussex corps. The first prize open to all volunteers, and not confined to the Sussex corps, consisted of a purse of £60 value, with long or short Enfields, Government pattern. The best shots in the first stage were Sergeant Rose, of the Hastings Rifles, who made a score of seven each. On changing off the prize was won by Sergeant Rose. The second prize, a purse of £30, was won by Sergeant Forsaith, of the Rye corps, out of 20 yards. The first prize was won by Private Nisbet (1st Chapel Corps). The other prizes were well competed, and numerous shots were made.

A review of the whole of the artillery and rifle volunteer corps of the county of Surrey, by Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Edward Mumey Colebrooke, Bart., on Thursday, Sept. 13, in addition to the Lord Lieutenant, the reviewing officer will be Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, as Captain; and Lieutenant-Colonel Lamel, Inspector of Volunteers.

Several prizes will be given to be competed in connection with the Essex volunteers. A few weeks since a match between eight members of the Colchester rifle corps and eight of the Maldon corps, for a silver cup, was keenly contested. A return match between the same competitors has just taken place on Maldon Common, and consisted of seven shots at 200 yards. The members of the Maldon company presented Captain Hamilton, their commander, with a handsome silver cup, to be competed for by the members of the same piece of plate of the value of £16.

A rifle match of a novel character took place last week between six of the best shots of the two Essex Rifles and six of the Hon. Artillery Company at Wimbledon Common. The match was shot with Enfield rifles, at the five distances, 200, 500, and 600 yards—a challenge which was originally given by the Essex men at Brentwood. The Essex men's challenge was gladly accepted by the Essex six.

Several prizes are to be given in Suffolk. The Woodbridge Corps had a prize shooting match and anniversary dinner in the course of last week. The prizes were competed for on the ground of the Rifle Corps, by members of the Woodbridge and the neighbourhood, which was won by Private Parrick. On the following day the members of the Rifle Corps, with their friends, dined at Woodbridge, to the number of 60, at the Crown Inn. Captain Dorp, who presided, entertained the company in a most liberal manner. The healths of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Bunbury, and the officers of the corps, were proposed and received various manœuvres under the command of Assistant Barrack-master, Mr. Hall, and Sergeant-Instructor Hawkins, of the Rifle Corps.

The Earl of Leicester has made arrangements for receiving the various Norfolk corps at Holkham, on Saturday, Sept. 15, and Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 17. A challenge cup offered to the Yarmouth battalion by the Mayor of Yarmouth, for competition at the Holkham meeting, has been won by the Norwich Rifle Corps. The cup is to be held during one year by the corps which has the highest number of points. A silver cup (with a dozen of champagne), offered by the Norfolk Rifle Corps, for competition with the Norwich Rifle Corps, the Norfolk battalion, Captain Holloway, of the Holkham Corps, won a prize of £25, given by the Earl of Leicester, for competition among the Norfolk Artillery, was given by Mr. Middleton for the greatest number of hits over the same range.

The annual meeting of the Cambridgeshire Rifle Volunteers took place at Barnwell on Thursday week. After going through some evolutions, they were hospitably entertained by Mr. Hall, of the Bull Inn, Barnwell, where a dinner was provided for the officers and privates of the corps took place, nine on each side. The first prize, given by the Lord Lieutenant of the county, was competed for by ten members of the corps and ten of the 2nd Cambridgeshire (Wisbeach), and was won by the latter by a score of 49 points.

Several matches took place in the course of last week among Lincolnshire rifle corps. A match for a silver cup, to be competed for annually between the Boston single members of the Stamford Corps, at ranges of 200 and 500 yards, took place on Thursday week, at Boston, and resulted in the victory of the latter by 5 points to the opponents' 102. On Thursday week the various corps composing the Lincolnshire Rifle Brigade (the Lincoln Rifles, the Gainsborough Rifles, Horncastle Rifles, and the Louth Rifles) assembled at Louth, and marched to the Cornfield, a piece of ground kindly placed at their disposal by Mr. Wilkinson, where the Lincolnshire Rifle Volunteers (5th Worcestershire) took place at Stourport on Thursday week. Mrs. Woldyke, wife of Captain Woldyke, commanding the Stourport Rifles, presented the prizes to Captain Burrow, who stood at the head of his corps. After the proceedings had terminated, the corps marched to the Swan Hotel, where they partook of refreshments.

The Lincolnshire Rifle Association commenced their competitions at the Manor range on Monday. The prizes offered this year represent a sum of £100. The first prize is £30, the second £20, the third £15, and the fourth £10.

The first prize of the Cheshire Rifle Association opened on Wednesday week at Broughton Butts, near Chester, in connection with the annual meeting of the 6,000, exclusive of several rifles. The attendance was somewhat inadequate, the number of the Cheshire Rifle Volunteers (5th Worcestershire) took place at Stourport on Thursday week. Mrs. Woldyke, wife of

COUNTRY NEWS.

It is stated that recently one firm in Sheffield manufactured in the space of three months no less than 250 tons of stainless steel.

The Bath Advertiser says that Stowe is about to be restored from its fallen state, as steps are to be taken to refurnish suites of rooms for the Duchess of Buckingham and the present Duke and Duchess, for the Duchess of Cambridge, and the present Duke.

A sergeant of police, named Beard, has been married by the Rev. Mr. Bennett, Kensington, by more unexpectedness, when deputations by Little Dean, near Birmingham, by more unexpectedness, when deputations by embarrassment to prevent.

On Thursday fortnight a portion of the Cloth Hall at Warrington fell down with a great crash. It was a very old building, and was used as a warehouse by Mr. Marshall, grocer, merchant.

As the son of Mr. Bennett, postmaster at Chippenham, was getting through a hedge with one shooting a few days ago, his gun was caught by the hedge, and the contents shot through the body.

Hastings College, in which as many of the civil servants of India were trained under the old regime, is to be sold by auction, and the Secretary of State for India is the purchaser.

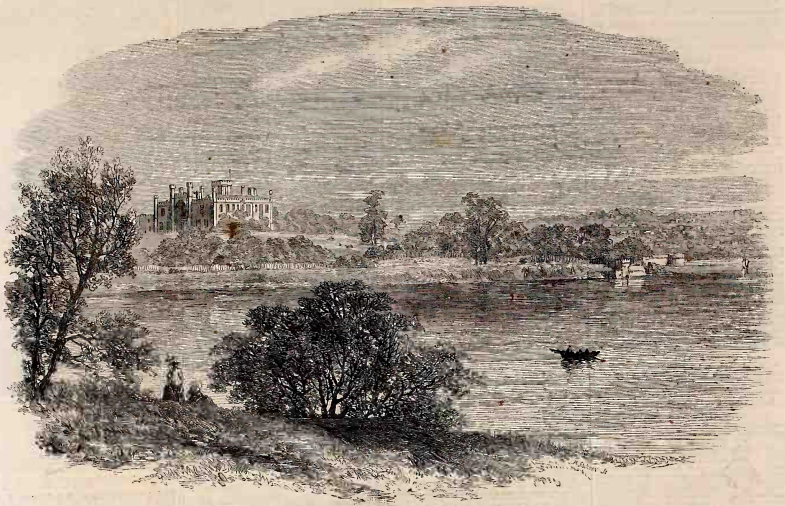
A prosecution has been commenced, by order of the Government, against thirty-eight of the apprentice boys of Derry for a breach of the Party Processions Act, during the occasion of the late celebration of the anniversary of the shutting of the gates.

Mr. Baron Wilde has been compelled to leave Liverpool in consequence of a severe attack of bronchitis, from which the learned gentleman was but slightly relieved on the resumption of the business of the Court yesterday in Chester, but is, fortunately, without complete success, was brought to Tuesday at Chester.

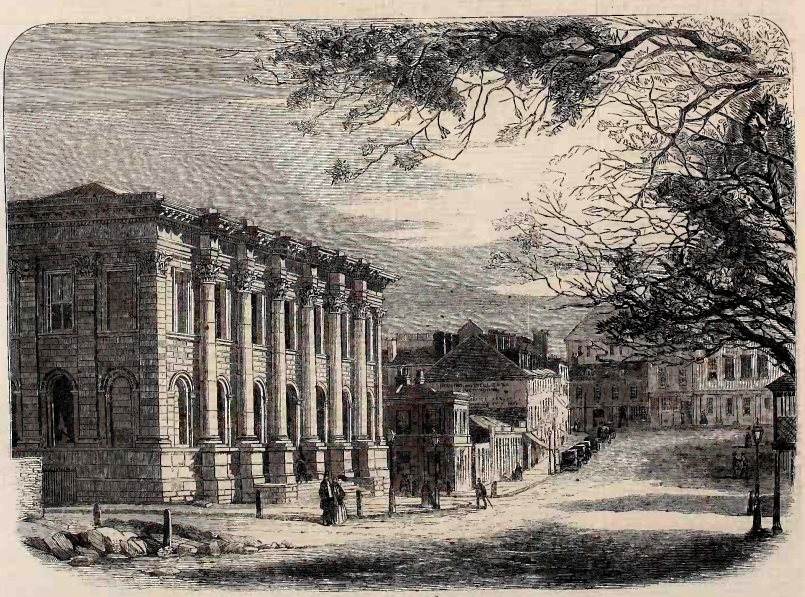
On Monday his Royal Highness the Prince Consort's birthday was celebrated at Windsor with a grand ball and pistol-shooting in the picturesque grounds of Virginia Water, near Windsor, the proceeds of which, yesterday at Windsor, and followed the example of the Lord Mayor, will be appropriated in aid of the funds of the Windsor Hospital

GENERAL VIEW OF SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 224.

SKETCHES FROM SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.



THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE, VIEWED FROM THE EASTERN SIDE OF THE LOWER BOTANIC GARDEN.



THE EXCHANGE.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 221.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each Announcement.

BIRTHS.

On the 22nd inst., at Harwich, Essex, the wife of Oliver John Williams, Esq., of a daughter.

On the 24th inst., at the Esplanade, Bishopsmeadow, Tenderden, the wife of Edward Hogworth Dunlop, Esq., of a son.

On the 22nd inst., at Newlands, Tooting Common, Mrs. J. Kinnersley Harper, of a son.

On the 24th inst., at The Rory, near Leamington, the Countess of Aylesford, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On the 15th inst., at Blackrock, near Dublin, by the Rev. J. Lee, Thomas W. Allen, Esq., H.E.I.C.S. Civil Service, to Maria Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Isaac Bellette Pollock, M.D., 13th Regiment, and niece to Richard Bellett, Esq., of Beetive Castle, in the county of Meath.

On the 27th of April, at St. John's Church, Brisbane, Queensland, by the Lord Bishop of Brisbane, Graham Wylie, Esq., 52nd Regiment, youngest son of the late Wylie, Esq., 52nd Regiment, youngest son of the late Thomas Wylie, of Aghintiebo, to Elizabeth Jane, eldest dau. of W. Frederick Wallis, Esq., Beaudesert, Cogan Pier, Penarth.

On the 21st inst., at the parish church of Battersea, Somerset, by the Rev. W. H. Dyer, Rector of Battersea, George Frederick Jackson, Esq., of the Inner Temple, to Margaret Amelia Anne, only daughter of the late Plymouth, to Margaret Amelia, only daughter of the late Captain George James Brodie, H.E.I.C.S., formerly of Brodie House, in the county of Devon. At the conclusion of the marriage ceremony she was presented at the Bridal Party Communion was administered to the bridal party and persons present.

On the 15th inst., at Dorchurch, by the Rev. Edmund Carr, Rector, Wm. Campbell Sykes, eldest son of Wm. Sykes, Esq., of Sledmere, Yorkshire, to Sara, third daughter of Martin Blackmore, Esq., of Dorchurch, Alfred Wright, Esq., of Ashtead, Surrey, to Mary Anne Jane, youngest daughter of Salisbury, the Earl of Cupar, Gladstone, R.N., M.P., Honorable, second daughter of Baroness Dudley.

On the 20th inst., at Hinchham Church, Suffolk, by the Rev. John Weeks, uncle of the bride, assisted by the Rev. Henry Bennett Rawlins, John Annandale, Esq., of Studley, Durham, to Emma Rose, eldest daughter of Ayton Rose, Esq., of the Cumbers-cement, London, and the Grove, Hinchham.

On the 21st inst., at Stoke Newington parish church, by the Rev. J. Smith, Incumbent of Tranmere, assisted by the Rev. R. Smith, Incumbent of St. George's, Camberwell, the Rev. Wm. Wagstaffe Wagstaffe, Vicar of Stoke, Yorkshire, to Sarah, youngest daughter of John St. Burke, Esq., of Stoke Newington.

DEATH.

On the 27th inst., at Newstead Abbey, Wilford, the infant son of William Frederick Webb, Esq., aged four months.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

This continuance of remarkably fine weather for harvest work, and the favourable accounts at hand from most quarters in regard to the prospects of the yield of corn in the new crops, have imparted considerable firmness to the market for all kindred securities. The purchases of Stock for Transfer have increased to some extent, and the operations for Time have been on an extensive scale. The Consolidated Bank has improved in value, and the dealings in it have been on a more liberal scale than for some days past.

The demand for money at the Bank of England has not been large, and the supply has been ample. The rate of discount by no means native, at the annexed rates, for the best commercial bills:—

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Short Bills	3 to 4	Four Months' Bills	4 to 4
Three Months' Bills	4 to 4	Six Months' Bills	4 to 4

Loans for short periods may be had in the Stock Exchange at from 2½ to 3 per cent on the security of Consols.

On Thursday the directors of the Bank of England announced their intention to raise all advances to five per cent.

There appears to be rather more inquiry for money on the Continent; nevertheless, in some instances, the rates of interest have shown advancing tendency. Subjoined are the several quotations:—

	Bank Rate per cent.	Open Market per cent.
Paris	3	2½
Vienna	4	3½
Berlin	4	3½
Frankfort	4	3½
Hamburg	4	3½
Genoa	5	4½
Brussels	3	2½
Amsterdam	3	2½
Hamburg	4	3½
St. Petersburg	5	4½

The average at New York has advanced to 107½. Another rise of one-half per cent would have the effect of bringing about a large quantity of gold. The last packet for New York took out under £2000 in bullion.

Owing to the continued hostilities of wheat and other produce for France, steady imports of gold are still expected from that Continent. The whole of the time continue to be disposed of to the Bank of England. From other quarters the arrivals have been on a very moderate scale.

The Liverpool cotton market continues somewhat excited, and the total stock of cotton is now known to be 800,000 bags, against 1,129,000 bags at the corresponding period in 1860.

There was considerable firmness in the Consol Market on Monday, and prices advanced 1 per cent.—Consols for Money and for Account, 92¼ ⅛; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92¼ ⅛; Exchequer Bills, March, 4s. to 6s. pm.; Ditto, June, 2s. to 4s. pm.; Ditto, July, 2s. to 4s. pm.; Bank Stock, 218 to 220; Long Annuities, 18 to 18½; India Stock, 214 to 216; Ditto Bonds, £3 10s. to £4 10s. pm.; Exchequer Bills, 70s. to 72s.; Exchequer Bonds, 99½ to 100; India Bonds, under £1,000, par. On Tuesday the market was rather weak:—Consols for Money realised 92¼ ⅛; for the Account, 92¼ ⅛; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92¼ ⅛; and Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 6s. pm.; Bank Stock sold at 218; India Stock, 214; Scrip, 10½ to ⅝.

At the half-yearly meeting of the General Steam Navigation Company a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent per annum was declared. The balance-sheet showed a profit of about £18,000.

The Ottoman and India tin takes out £500,013 in bullion, wholly on private account.

The transactions in the Foreign House has been only moderate. Turkish Stock has been rather heavy; nevertheless, changes in the general condition, compared with last week, have not been important.—Brazilian Five per Cents, 99½; Brazilian Small Half per Cents, 98½; Chilian Six per Cents, 102½; Chilian Four and a Half per Cents, 94½; Danish Five per Cents, 103; Equador Deferred, 12½; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Peruvian Six per Cents, 1844, 74½; Peruvian Four and a Half per Cents, 74½; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45½; Sardinian Five per Cents, 1859, 94½; Spanish Three per Cents, 45½; Spanish New Deferred, 21½; Turkish Six per Cents, 1858, 78; Ditto, New, 69½; Ditto, Small Bonds, 69½; Turkish Five per Cents, 1855, and 1860 Bonds, 69½; Turkish Five per Cents, 1858, and 1860 Bonds, 69½; Mallner per Cents, 64½.

In Joint-stock Bank Shares little business have not been done in the market, on the whole, has ruled steady. English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered have realised 219 ⅛; Ditto, London Chartered of Australia, 21½; Ditto, China, 10½; Ditto, London and County, 32½; Ditto, Colonial, 94; Ditto, New South Wales, 34; Oriental, 9½; Union of Australia, 46; Union of London, 37.

The leading quotations for shares in new undertakings are as follows:—Ocean Marine Insurance, 2½ to 3 pm.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 1 to 1 pm.; Universal Marine Insurance, 1 to 1 dis.; London Provincial Marine, par; General and General Marine, 1 dis. to par; Mercantile Commercial Union Fire Insurance Companies, 1 to 1 dis.

Colonial Government Securities have been very firm, and prices have had an upward tendency. Canada Sixes have sold at 105; Ditto, Five per Cents, 99; Cape Six per Cents, 1860, 109; Ditto, New South Wales Five per Cents, 1868 and upwards, 99½; and Victoria Six per Cents 1855.

On the whole, the Miscellaneous Market has ruled steady. Large transactions have been done at 84½ Copper Miners of England, Seven and a-Half per Cent Preference, 11; Crystal Palace, 24½; Ditto, Six per Cent Debentures, 1865, 104½; East India Irrigation and Canal, 11; Debentures, 1861, 104; East India Railway Australian Corpse, 3½; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 3½; National Steam Navigation, 3½; Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation, 10½; Ditto, Deferred, 10½; South British Australian, 1½; Peninsular and Oriental, 1½; Ditto, Deferred, 1½; Scinde Railway, 1860, 99½; London, 57; St. Katherine, 62.

The foreign dealings in railway shares has been much restricted. In the early part of the week Brighton Stock was in good demand, and rose to 126.—Eastern Counties, 12; and prices were barely supported. The total sales for September amount to only £469,000. An interim dividend of 1s. per share was declared.

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Eastern Counties, 12; Ditto, Extension, 1½; Great Northern, 112; Ditto, A Stock, 99½; Great Western, 71½; London and Brighton, 126; London and North-Western, 97½; Ditto, Extension, 1½; South-Eastern, 83½; South Wales, 63; Great Midland—Ditto, 1½.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—London, Chatham, and Dover, 1½.

LOAN LEASED AT A FIXED RENTAL. — Wilts and Somerset, 96.

LOAN POSSESSIONS.—Eastern Bengal, 19½; East Indian, 101½.

FOREIGN SHARES.—Southern of France, 25½.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending August 24 presents the following results, when compared with the previous week:—

A decrease of the circulation of		£20,625
An increase of the public deposits of		658,703
An increase of other deposits of		340,611
A decrease of securities of		340,611
An increase of the rest of		17,911
A decrease of cash of		20,625
An increase of the bullion of		679,016

The total circulation is now £20,224,146. Public deposits amount to £4,045,703; other deposits to £13,751,107; Securities are £27,854,195, and the stock of bullion is £15,104,272.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Aug. 26.—Only limited supplies of British wheat were on offer to-day, but the demand for both red and white qualities ruled inactive, last week's prices rather declining. Foreign wheat was in fair request, and quite as much was purchased, considering the time of the week, as on the previous market day. Barley was in moderate request, and steady, at late rates. Malt was in fair demand, and steady, at late rates. Beans and peas were very little inquired after, and rather lower than on the previous day.

ENGLISH.—There was very little business doing in any kind of wheat to-day, and prices were barely supported. Barley was getting over cleaned hands slowly, at late rates. In the value of malt no change occurred.

English—White, Essex and Kent, 40s. to 44s.; ditto white, 38s. to 42s.; ditto red, 36s. to 40s.; ditto mixed, 36s. to 40s.; grinding barley, 22s. to 24s.; malting ditto, 28s. to 32s.; Chevalier ditto, 30s. to 34s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 52s. to 54s.; Ware, 56s. to 58s.; Kingston and Hertford, 56s. to 58s.; Devon and Suffolk, 54s. to 56s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire ditto, 52s. to 54s.; Oxford, 54s. to 56s.; Scotch, 52s. to 54s.; black, 19s. to 21s.; Irish, 19s. to 20s.; oats, 18s. to 20s.; ditto, Scotch, 20s. to 22s.; Irish, 19s. to 20s.; maple, 30s. to 34s.; white, 30s. to 36s.; boilers, 36s. to 38s. per quarter; tick beans, 30s. to 32s.; ditto, new, 28s. to 30s.; ditto, Harrow, 32s. to 34s.; Lincoln and Essex, 32s. to 34s.; ditto, new, 30s. to 32s.; grey peas, 30s. to 32s.; maple, 32s. to 34s.; white, 32s. to 36s.; boilers, 36s. to 38s. per quarter; red clover seed, 40s. to 54s.; white ditto, 50s. to 60s.; trefoil, 20s. to 24s. per cwt.

FOREIGN.—The supply of wheat heard in the metropolis are from 6th to 9th, of barley and oats, from 3rd to 5th, of flour, from 1st to 2nd, per railway, 32s. 194 sacks, per steamer, 1,000 sacks.

Foreign—Wheat, Dantzic, Konigsberg, and Pomeranian, 52s. to 54s.; Marianopoli, 50s. to 52s.; Rostock, 48s. to 50s.; Danish and Holstein, 48s. to 50s.; Petersburg, Riga, and Archangel, 46s. to 48s.; Polish Odessa, 44s. to 46s.; Taganrog, 42s. to 44s.; Salonica, 40s. to 42s.; Egyptian, 38s. to 40s.; Barley, 22s. to 24s.; Grinding oats, 16s. to 18s.; Potato ditto, 18s. to 20s.; Beans, 30s. to 32s.; Peas, 32s. to 34s.; Flour, per sack, 40s. to 42s.; per barrel, 20s. to 21s.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J. HAMILTON, Glasgow, commission merchant.—J. DOUGLAS, Dundee, shoemaker.—J. MACLEAN, Glasgow, grocer.—J. MACLEAN, Glasgow, grocer.—J. WHITE, Glasgow, commission agent.—A. BAILLIE, Dundee, currier.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 27.

BANKRUPTCY.

(At Chancery Chambers, Lord, 2, Clement's-inn.)

To Thomas Gamble Lyon, 2, Clement's-inn, to be Gazetted.

Reginald Sapp, Hull, Yorkshire, Draper, Sept. 6, at 12.

Benjamin Hall, Wednesbury, Staffordshire, Grocer, Sept. 6, at 11.

Thomas Hall, Wednesbury, Staffordshire, Grocer, Sept. 6, at 12.

Stephen Bowden, Gateshead, Durham, Builder, Sept. 6, at 12.

Thomas

NEW MUSIC.

THE UNIVERSAL QUICK-STEP JOURNAL, with Parade Cover, is now now ready. Full Orchestra, 2s. 6d. net; post-free, 2s. 10d. Small Band, 1s. 6d. net; post-free, 1s. 8d. Septet or Quintet, 1s. net; post-free, 1s. 2d. "Merrie England" and "Gondoliers" Waltzes, "Pinafore" and "Patience" Quadrilles and Galops, and the Lancers in all the Operas, 1s. net each; post-free, 1s. 2d. "Bacon, Beefsteak, Bacon," "Sir Roger de Coverley," "Old Hundredth," and "Christmas Bells," 1s. net each; post-free, 1s. 2d. Chappell's Edition of "Pinafore" and "Patience" Waltzes, Quadrilles, Galops, and Lancers, 1s. net each; post-free, 1s. 2d. Lancers for the Seven Operas, 1s. net; post-free, 1s. 2d. Chappell's Edition of "Pinafore" and "Patience" Waltzes, Quadrilles, Galops, and Lancers, 1s. net each

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ITALIAN CAMPAIGN QUADRILLE on French Airs, beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." "The waltz of the season." —Morning Herald. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S ERIN GO BRAGH QUADRILLE. A new Quadrille on the most favourites of "Moore's Melodies," beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S FLORIMELLE. New Waltz. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. With Comic Accompaniment. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S PRINCE OF WALES or ST. JAMES'S GALOP. Just published, Beautifully Illustrated in 10 Colours of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by BAXTER.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S CHEAP WORKS FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS. Page 12, 64, each, post-free.
PIANOFORTE.
Chappell's Popular Violin Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Flute Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Cornet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular German Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Pianoforte Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Violoncello Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Duets.
Chappell's Popular Dulcimer Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmony Tutor.
VIOLIN.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Dances (Second Series).
Chappell's 100 Dances (Second Series).
Second Violin to the First Set Ditto.
Chappell's 100 Operatic Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Ye Bells Ye Maschers."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Arabian Waltz."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castille."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Trovatore" and "Traviata."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline" and "Victorine."
Chappell's 100 Hungarian, Bohk, Jap, &c.
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Welsh Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Airs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
FLUTE.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Dances (Second Series).
Chappell's 100 Operatic Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Ye Bells Ye Maschers."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castille."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Trovatore" and "Traviata."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Welsh Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Airs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
CORNET.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Operatic Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Airs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
ENGLISH CONCERTINA.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Operatic Melodies.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline" and "Victorine."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Duke Rock."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Airs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
GERMAN CONCERTINA.
Chappell's 100 Operatic Melodies for Treble Concertina, &c.
Chappell's 70 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments.
GUITAR.
Chappell's 100 Dances.
Chappell's Popular Songs, with Guitar Accompaniments, in two Series, 24 of each book, in all.
HARMONIUM.
Chappell's 56 Sacred Melodies.
Chappell's 50 Operatic Melodies.
Care should be taken to order CHAPPELL'S Cheap Works, as they often contain Airs and other copying Copyright Works.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, complete for a Band of Eight, Nine, Ten, Eleven, or more, Performers on the following Instruments:—Pianoforte Part in E flat, or Cornet in E flat, or Alto, Solo Piccolo, in B flat; 1 First Piccolo or Flageolets in B flat; Second Solo Piccolo in B flat; Second Piccolo or Flageolet in B flat; 2 Solo Cornets in E flat; 2 Solo Cornets or Saxhorns in B flat; 1 Alto in E flat; 2 Alto in E flat, 3rd Cornet in E flat, ad lib.; Trumpet in E flat, or 4th Euphonicon; First, Second, and Third Tenor Trombone; and ad lib.; Two Basses, Side Drum, Bass Drum, Containing Eight Interesting Quick Steps, Most Marching Tunes, Waltzes, Polkas, Galops, Quadrilles, Overtures, Airs from the Most POPULAR of the Popular Italian Operas, and Selections from the Best Popular Masters, Complete.

N.B.—Selections from Operas have a Conductor's Part.

Terms of Annual Subscription (Twelve Numbers, commencing in January, April, July, and October), 30s. Single Numbers, 3s. each. Subscribers may at any time commence with any Number, and Complete Sets Bindings and Numbers per annum extra charged for postage to India or any of the British Colonies.

Price of Single Numbers of the Journal (to Non-Subscribers), 7s. 6d.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest Tutor ever published, containing all the necessary instruction, with Examples, Exercises, and a great variety of the most popular Airs in progressive lessons. Sixty pages, full music size, price 2s., post-free.

N.B. A List of Brinley Richards' Popular Pieces will be sent on application.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF PRICE.—All Music, and the best Editions, at half the published price, sent post-free for postage on Penny Stamps.—Catalogue free.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street, W.

The Latest Enchantress.
COOTE'S DERVEY'S LAND GALOP on the celebrated Austrian Waltz Refrain. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 6s.; Orchestra, 3s. Very popular.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S LEOTARD POLKA, price 3s.; also LEOTARD WALTZES, LEOTARD GALOP, 3s. each. Illustrated with a splendid likeness of Leotard.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S "I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY" VALSE, introducing "Oh, if I had some one to love me!" 3s. Trios, 4s.; Septet, 5s.; Orchestra, 3s. Beautiful.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES on the Holiday Serenader Melodies. The best set ever composed. Price 4s. Solo or Duet; Septet, 5s.6d.; Full Band, 3s.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

OH, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME! Song. Price 2s. 6d. "Some where the sweetness lingers." Ballad, by FRANK MORI. Price 2s. 6d. "Sung by Miss Dolby."
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET. A most pleasing Song. The melody is simple and beautiful. By FRED. BOWLEY. Illustrated by the Hon. Price 2s. 6d.
HOWSON and CRAW, 69, New Bond-street.

THE NATIONAL MUSICAL LIBRARY. Edited by J. T. STONE. The following Operas are Now Published:—
No. 1. IL TROVATORE.
2. NORMA.
3. LUCREZIA DI LAMMERMOOR.
4. IL PURITANI.
5. LA SONNAMBULA.
6. UN BALLO IN MASCHERA.
7. THE DIAVOLO.
Each Opera, full size, price 2s. each.
London: BOOSEY and Co., 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street, W.

NEW MUSIC.

THE CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Thirty-two Pieces, from the Works of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Hummel, Clementi, Dussek, and Steibelt, all fingered and suitable for the youngest performers.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM, Second Edition, much enlarged, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Forty-six popular Airs, arranged for the Pianoforte. In addition to a Set of Quadrilles, Valse, Polka, Galop, and Mazurka, all fingered and suitable for the youngest performers.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL FOR BRASS BANDS, printed on serpentine, by WILLIAM HALL & SON, each containing the Melodies arranged for 21 performers, viz.:—Solo Cornet in E flat, Solo Cornet in B flat, Second Cornet, Third Cornet, Fourth Cornet, Fifth Cornet, Sixth Cornet, Seventh Cornet, Eighth Cornet, Ninth Cornet, Tenth Cornet, Eleventh Cornet, Twelfth Cornet, Thirteenth Cornet, Fourteenth Cornet, Fifteenth Cornet, Sixteenth Cornet, Seventeenth Cornet, Eighteenth Cornet, Nineteenth Cornet, Twentieth Cornet, Twenty-first Cornet, Bass Drum, Side Drum, Cymbals, Triangle, Tambourine, Conductor's Score. Boosey's "Quick-step Journal" comprises the most popular tunes, arranged by J. K. KITTL, Professor of Music, Royal Hanover. A specimen sent post-free for 8s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S 20 ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTCH AIRS, arranged as DUETS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, by WM. WATSON, in one book, with separate Violin part, price 8s. 6d. London: BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S 12 OPERATIO AIRS arranged as DUETS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, in one book (with separate Violin part), price 8s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

RODE, BAILLOT, AND KREUTZER'S 24 METHOD FOR VIOLIN—BOOSEY and SONS' New Edition (music size), published this day, price 3s. 6d. Also, for the use of Students, Rode's 24 Caprices, Baillot's 18 Caprices, and Rode's 10 Studies and 3 Concertos, in 1 vol., price 3s. 6d. each.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS by CLARIBEL.—Won't you tell me why (Claribel's New Song). Price 2s. 6d. The Brook (Ditto). 2s. 6d. The Rower's Parting, 2s.; Dreamland, 2s. 6d.; I remember it, 2s. 6d.; Claribel's Ballads, Book 1, 2, and 3. The Mother's Farewell, 2s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, No. 7, for September, is now ready, price 6d., and contains 11 of the most favourite Airs from "Il Trovatore," "La Traviata," "Lurline," "Victorine," "Ye Bells Ye Maschers," "Duke Rock," "Rose of Castile," Schottisch, Pearl of Seville Varsovienne, Original Varsovienne, Bloom Schottisch, and "Il Bacio" Waltz, arranged for Violin and Cornet with Violoncello. The first six numbers may be had, price 6d. each.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

NEW VOCAL DUETS.—HOPEFUL SPRING, JOYOUS SUMMER. Price Three Shillings, post at half price. "Hopeful Spring, joyous Summer, Autumn rich, and Winter hoar, Composer of these Four Seasons, Thou art Four Times Merry Minstrel," &c., are for latter verse, and, from their gay and sportive ring characters, will become very popular.
DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

MDME. OURY'S BARBIERE DI SEVIGLIA, Duet, Sung and Encored by Mdme. Oury at every concert, with extraordinary success; decidedly the best and most popular Duet. Price 3s. Also, Duet, Nos. 2 and 3. Handel and Haydn Society.
DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

CLARK'S "LOGIE O' BUCHAN."—A remarkably brilliant and effective arrangement of this favourite melody for the piano. Price 3s.
ADDISON and PARKY, 17, Hanover-square.

NEW MUSIC Post-free at HALF PRICE. Catalogues and Lists Gratis, Printed, Manuscript, and post-free at published prices. Income stamps to HALE and Co., Bedford-row.

NEW FIVE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDER, the best of all makers. In oak case, with 5 octaves, 2 rows of stops, 2 knee swells, and Venetian swell. Price Five Guineas.—At CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDER, the best of all makers, two feet broader, with 5 octaves. These instruments are lower in price and superior in the effect of their tone to any Harmoniums yet produced.—At CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street, and Co., 84, New Bond-street.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of keys, by ALEXANDER.—No. 1, with double bourdon, 4 stops, and 5 octaves of pedals, in handsome Mahogany case, No. 2, with double keyboard, 32 stops, and 6 rows of vibrators, in Oak case, with Venetian swell. These instruments are of the largest size, surpass all others in power, quality, and variety of tone, and are recommended for large churches and chapels. They are specially manufactured to meet the views of many of the most eminent organists, and are consequently not liable to derangement. Testimonials to the great merit of these instruments from the most eminent organists. Prices and particulars on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, W. Also, Mr. Hime, Mr. Potts, Herr Engel, and the most eminent professors of the pianoforte, have selected CHAPPELL'S Model Pianofortes on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The most extensive and only instantly available assortment in the kind that exists in town; from the simplicity of its organ-tone to the most elaborate and effective, and from a little old cabinet for the drawing-room to the manufactories. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, W.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS, from 4 to 14 guineas, manufactured throughout in England, and of the most substantial character. The best and most durable obtainable. The most fashionable ebonised instruments are fully equal to those of foreign manufacture. Every description of Harmonium kept in stock, or built to order in the manufactory, BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, W.

COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, Secondhand, by Broadwood and Collard, Erard, Pleyel, Dodd, Pether, Petzold, Lipsey, &c. A great variety of Pianofortes, by other eminent makers, from 15 guineas.
CRAMER, BEALE, and CO., 201, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO.'S MUSIC LIBRARY, Regent-street and 201, Regent-street. New Music of interest or by eminent Composers is added on publication.
201, Regent-street.

COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, Secondhand, by Broadwood, Collard, and other eminent makers, from £12 and upwards.—CRAMER, BEALE, and CO., 201, Regent-street.

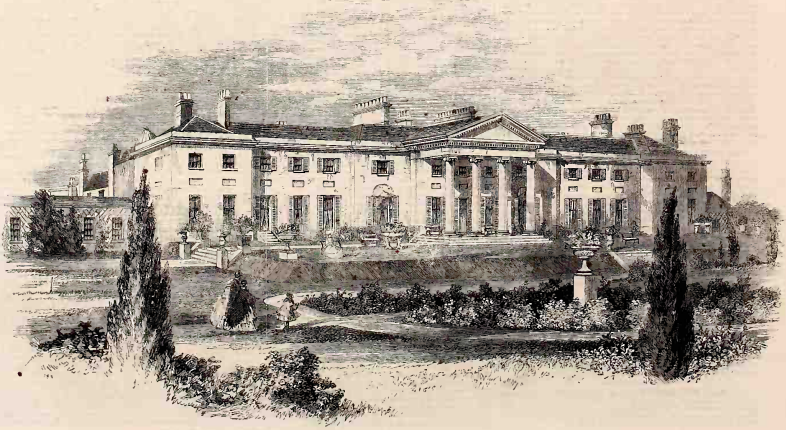
SECONDHAND HARMONIUMS of every description.—CRAMER, BEALE, and CO., 201, Regent-street.

VOLUNTEER and ARCHERY PRIZES. DOLMORE'S LANCASTRIAN, the most popular. W. and J. SUTTON, Halifax.

OPERA, RACE, FIELD, and general purpose GLASSES.—A large assortment of Opera Glasses, with Mother-of-Pearl, Ivory, and Tortoiseshell mountings, from 10 shillings each upwards, with other Glasses of every description, for Sporting, Marine, Military, Opera, Theatre, and Race Purposes, at very moderate prices, and of the best quality. They have been tested at the Object of Musketry Practice, and are recommended by the Volunteer Officers as suitable for the purpose of sighting. Also a large assortment of Telescopes, from 5 shillings each upwards, with other Glasses of every description, for Sporting, Marine, Military, Opera, Theatre, and Race Purposes, at very moderate prices, and of the best quality

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY LANDING AT KINGSTOWN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.



THE VICEREGAL LODGE, PHŒNIX PARK, DUBLIN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY LANDING AT KINGSTOWN.

THE Royal yacht came to anchor in Kingstown harbour at about a quarter to eleven on Wednesday ochaigth. Off the harbour the Edgar, Ariadne, and Hero were anchored, and inside the breakwater the Argus. All these were illuminated in the usual way, with a lamp in the mizzle of every gun, and burnt bootlights, as the yacht approached. Over the still water this had a very beautiful effect.

The morning proved an exception to the general rule, and when it expected as a matter of course on these occasions as "Queen's weather." It was not only not at all fine, but, on the contrary, in the last degree drizzly, dismy, and uncomfortable. Notwithstanding the cheerless weather there was a numerous concourse at Kingstown. Blocks of seats were erected on the Carlisle Pier, and these were thronged mostly with ladies.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant came down from Dublin soon after ten o'clock. He was in plain clothes, as were also Lord Gough and the new Secretary for Ireland, Sir Robert Peel. With his Lordship, also, were Lord Otho Fitzgerald, Sir Richard Griffith, Sir James Powell, Mr. Jurgen, Lord St. Lawrence, &c. There was no band, however, as a matter of course, on a full uniform, among whom the tall figure of Sir George Brown, the Commander-in-Chief, was at once conspicuous, each laden with bands and hearty as when at early dawn he used to turn out the Light Division for drill at Aldeer and Alma. There were also many officers from the fleet; so that, in spite of the absence of ceremonial, there was a good deal of brilliancy in the gold-lace way about the reception on the pier. Soon after ten the Royal yacht hove in sight, and presently passed a series of half turns ahead and astern, preparatory to coming alongside the pier. This, with a head of steam on, took some time to accomplish, and from the moment it commenced till the evolution was concluded and the Queen had landed the fleet remained with yards manned. In this interval the Royal barge was sent for his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, who at once went on board. Just as the Royal yacht was safe alongside the pier Sir Henry Keppel went over the quarter-deck, and the Royal Standard came on the quarter-deck. The Queen looked remarkably well, but was attended in the very deepest mourning, as, indeed, were all the other members of the Royal family. As soon as the gangway was laid Mr. Chambers went on board to present an address from the Corporation of Kingstown. This faint vestige of a formal ceremony scarcely occupied a minute in its dispatch. Mr. Chambers bowed and presented an address, which the Queen graciously accepted, and then was all. Sir George Brown was next sent for, and had a short audience with her Majesty; and after Sir Robert Peel, whom also the Queen spoke for a short while. By this time all the preparations for the landing were completed, and her Majesty, leaning on the Prince Consort's arm, passed down the gangway on to the pier, followed by Princesses Alice and Helena and Prince Alfred. As she did so the guard of honour from the 2nd battalion of the 19th, under Captain Kinsley, presented arms, and the ships in the harbour slowly thundered forth a Royal salute, while that best of all Royal salutes, a tremendous cheer, was given by the people on the pier and on the heights around. Her Majesty seemed much pleased with the warmth of her reception, and was occupied continually in bowing her acknowledgments on all sides. Close to the landing-place the Royal train was drawn up, with an exceedingly handsome State carriage, the same that was used on the occasion of the last Royal visit in 1853. Mr. Hen. Mr. Hancock, chairman to the company, was in attendance with Mr. Hornsby, to receive the Queen. The Royal party at once entered their carriages, and in another minute the train was on its way to Dublin.

THE VICEREGAL LODGE, DUBLIN.

In her recent visit to Dublin her Majesty was received at the residence of the Lord Lieutenant, which is known as the Viceregal Lodge, of which we give an Engraving. This phœnix park is situated in the famous Phœnix Park—a description which does not derive its name from any association with the fabulous bird of the like name, but its designation is simply a corruption of the Irish words Fionn-uisge, pronounced, short, Finniske, which signifies a spring of clear water. The existence of a spring in a glen near to the entrance lodge. The existence of a spring in a glen near to the entrance lodge, The existence of a spring in a glen near to the entrance lodge, and which has been long used as a chalybeate spa, sufficiently accounts for the appellation. The Viceregal Lodge stands on the north-east side of the park, not far from the Botanical Gardens, and is a building of no great pretension, although in every respect fitted to be a commodious and pleasant residence for the representative of the Queen, and quite adapted for the reception of Royalty itself. It stands in well-laid grounds of 40 acres. The house was originally built by the Earl of Leitrim, and was purchased from him by the Government in 1784. Additions have been from time to time made to it from the directors of successive Viceroys; and in 1806 the Duke of Richmond added the north portico, a structure of the Doric order, and also caused the entrance gate to be removed to the north entrance from the Dublin side. The north front consists of an Ionic portico, with four pillars supporting a pediment, and was built by the direction of Lord Whitworth, when Lieutenant.

THE WELLINGTON TESTIMONIAL, PHŒNIX PARK, DUBLIN.

One of the objects which first attract attention on entering Phœnix Park is the Wellington Testimonial, which stands on the highest ground in the park. It is 205 feet high, the lowest step, which forms the base, being 400 feet in circuit. The form is a monumental column or obelisk, and the substance is Wicklow granite. Sunken panels on each side of the pedestal, intended for the reception of relievos, have been filled with bronzes. One of these, seen in our Engraving, represents a change of the late Guards at the Battle of Waterloo. The other relief in the Illustration is a trophy, in English and Latin, in honour of the Duke of Wellington, by his brother, the Marquis Wellesley. The third bronze represents a battle in India. On one side of the fourth is shown Victory giving Wellington a wreath, and on the other the hero receiving the vote of thanks of Parliament. The small space seen on the base contains the following inscription:—

"This testimonial to the services of Arthur Duke of Wellington was erected by the private subscriptions of his countrymen. The inscriptions were written in honour of his brother by Richard Marquis Wellesley. The sculptures were executed by John Smith, and cast from cannon taken in battle. Begun 1817. Earl Whitworth, P.R. Finished in 1861, Earl of Carlisle, K.P., R. Redmond, M.P., Architect." On the four sides of the obelisk are inscribed the battles of the Iron Duke, except the Battle of Waterloo, which finds no place on the obelisk—a curious omission when the fate of that battle is borne in mind. This deficiency has, however, been partially supplied by one of the newly-added bronzes, which, as stated above, represents an incident of the great battle which was the crowning act of Wellington's military career. The cost of the obelisk was more than £20,000.

The Queen has appointed Henry Stanhope Freeman, now British Vice-Consul at Jamina, to be her Majesty's Consul at Corfu, of Her Majesty has approved of Mr. Patrick J. Devine as Consul at Cork, of Mr. Henry W. Lord as Consul at Manchester, and of Mr. John E. Newport at Cyprus as Turk's Island, for the United States of America.

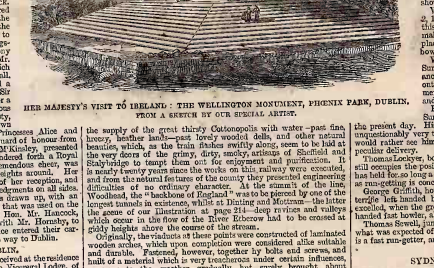
THE DINTING AND MOTTRAM VIADUCTS.

THE Engraving at page 214 illustrates one of the most important engineering works which have been completed during the past year. As many of our readers know, the line of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway winds its way amidst some of the most picturesque scenery in Derbyshire and Yorkshire—past the great artificial lakes which have been constructed in the bosom of the hills for the supply of the great thirsty Cottonopolis with water—past fine, breezy, heather lands—past lovely woods and dells, and other natural beauties which, as the train flashes swiftly along, seem to be laid at the very doors of the grimy, dirty, smoky, artisans of Sheffield and Staleybridge to tempt them out for enjoyment and purification. It is nearly twenty years since the works on this railway were executed, and from the natural features of the country they presented engineering difficulties of no ordinary character. At the summit of the line, Woodhead, the "backbone of England" was to be pierced by one of the longest tunnels in existence, while at Dinting and Mottram—the latter the scene of our illustration at page 214—deep ravines and valleys which cross the line in the fore of the River Etherow had to be crossed at eighty heights above the course of the stream.

Originally, the viaducts at these points were constructed of laminated wooden arches, which upon completion were considered alike suitable and durable. Fastened, however, together by bolts and screws, and built of a material which in very turbulence under certain influences, exposure to the weather gradually but surely brought about symptoms of decay. These were examined again and again with much skill during many years; but at length both the directors of the railway and their able engineer, Mr. Sacré, found that renewal was inevitable; and the only question was how this was to be done. The public safety was to be guarded at all risks, and, at the same time, the traffic over a great arterial line of railway could not be suspended. There was no means, except an enormous cost, of making a deviation in the lines of rails during the renewal of the viaducts; and the problem, therefore, was forced for solution of how to enjoy the plans without injury while the branch on which they grew was seen across below the gulleren. This problem has been solved, by the completion of the imposing and highly durable structure shown in our Engraving, without accident or loss of life. The director called in Mr. Fairbairn, of Manchester, who reported upon the old wooden structures, and, in conjunction with Mr. Sacré, submitted the design which has since been carried into effect. The work had to be accomplished without stopping a single train for a single hour, and the mode of operation was as follows:—

The iron girders, having been entirely put together in the first instance, and the piers and abutments having been taken to places and re-erected immediately over their respective spans, the old wooden arches were being used as platforms. When each girder was firmly riveted together deep cuttings were made in the piers below, and the girder was suspended by powerful screw-jacks. The wooden arch was then cut away, and the girder, which carried the new structure, was now cut away, and in the course of an hour the massive girder weighing eighty tons was gently lowered down upon the piers. This operation was repeated with each girder in succession, until one side of the new bridge was completed in its place. This being done, the roadbeams were next introduced under the rails of the working line of railway—a temporary road was made over the newly-finished girder, and the traffic was diverted whilst the process of finishing and lowering the other side of the main girders was being proceeded with. When all the main girders were fixed, the iron roadbeams were riveted to the piers, substantial permanent way was laid, the hand railings of the bridges were attached, and the job was finished.

The two bridges were completed in less than twelve months, without, as we have said, an accident of any kind. Great numbers of professional and non-professional persons watched the progress of the undertaking, and upon the final completion of the last arch all concerned—directors, engineers, and contractors—were warmly congratulated upon the successful accomplishment of an engineering difficulty.



HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND: THE WELLINGTON MONUMENT, PHŒNIX PARK, DUBLIN.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

the present day. His wicket-keeping is splendid; as a hitter he is unquestionably one of the best players in England, and Surrey would rather see him in any other capacity. His pace is fast, with a peculiar delivery.

Thomas Lockyer, born at Old Town, Croydon, Surrey, Nov. 1, 1828, still occupies the position of first wicket-keeper of the day which he has held for some years. As a batsman, too, few excel him, as far as run-getting is concerned.

George Griffith, born at Ripley, Surrey, Dec. 20, 1833, is a most terrific left-handed hitter. In fact, his brilliant hitting cannot be excelled, when the ground is favourable for the purpose. He is a left-handed bowler, with a splendid slip.

Thomas Sewell, born March 19, 1836, has proved himself to be what was expected of him—"a splendid man "all round." He is a fast run-getter, and a most useful bowler.

THE SURREY ELEVEN.

THE game of cricket has long been and still is cultivated with much zeal and pride by all classes of Englishmen, who have carried with them to the ends of the earth the knowledge and love of this national game. Sometimes we hear of cricket being played in regions—as, for instance, in India—where the climate seems little suited to the exercise which it requires. In such cases, probably, cricket is enjoyed less for itself than for the associations which it calls up of the native land, just as our countrymen at the antipodes celebrate Christmas at midsummer by partaking of the Christmas fare of their youth, the roast beef and plum pudding of Old England. With many, indeed, the love of cricket amounts to a passion. Thus, last year a picked eleven crossed the Atlantic, went through Canada and the States, challenging all and sundry to the fray, and finally returned to England with flying colours. On a like errand another picked eleven will start in a month or two for Australia.

Kent, Sussex, and Surrey have always been famous for skill in this game; and we give on page 211 Portraits of the celebrated Surrey Eleven. Our Engraving is from a photograph in the collection of Mr. Prol. Lilywhite, of Kennington Oval; and each of our readers as have attended the matches played at this ground will at once recognise the various players.

The first among the Surrey players is the "all round" and excellent player, Mr. H. H. Miles, of whom "Lillywhite's Guide" says that it would be difficult to find a more thoroughly cricketing in every sense of the word, as he is equally good in every department of the game.

Mr. F. Bennett is well known as a splendid bat, combining strong defence and free hitting powers. He is also first-rate as a field, especially at point.

Mr. Dowson, another gentleman of Surrey who has lately made a very prominent appearance before the public, is characterised as a first-rate bat, having a very pretty cut; and as being also a good forward player and field, in which last capacity he performed during the present season he has much distinguished himself.

Mr. C. G. Lane, one of the Surrey Eleven, and a member of the Cricket Club, is also said to be one of the most finished players, and as one of the best batsmen of the present day. He is also first rate as a field, and a great point and long leg.

The professional players among the Surrey Eleven are this season of as "Lillywhite's Guide"—

Julius Cæsar, born at Godalming, Surrey, March 25, 1830, has done his part in most distinguished manner during the past season, both in batting and fielding. For nerve, and the art of defence, no one can excel him. He can also hit hard, and is bowling should a bowler overtoss.

William Caffyn was born at Reigate, Surrey, Feb. 2, 1828. During the latter part of the past season this player had the misfortune, at Bradford, while standing in the long field, to break his left arm at place. He is also first rate both as batsman and bowler.

William Mortlock was born at Kennington, Surrey, July 18, 1832. Considering his long term across as long stop, he may be regarded as the best out; certainly no one can excel him in that department. He is also a consummate judge of batting, and generally scores.

Heathfield Harman Stephenson, born at Esher, Surrey, May 3, 1833, is one of the best cricketers of the day. His wicket-keeping is splendid; as a hitter he is unquestionably one of the best players in England

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

SYDNEY, the capital of New South Wales, is situated seven miles from the entrance of the magnificent and commodious harbour of Port Jackson. Its architectural style is generally that of the English towns of the large towns of Great Britain. Sydney is entirely equal many of the large towns of Great Britain. Sydney is entirely English in appearance, even to the architectural character of the buildings. The large Building seen in the Engraving on page 219 is one among them. It has a noble exterior, and its architecture is Grecian. The interior is well arranged, and fitted up in a chaste and elegant style, affording every convenience for the purposes for which it has been constructed. The Exchange is also admirably suited for public balls and other large rooms have been added to the architectural character of the building, by means of which the building is now enabled to which communication is made with Adelaide (South Australia), Melbourne (Victoria), and the Australian Colonies generally. The Exchange is in a good locality, in Bridge-street, one side leading to George-street North, the principal business streets of the town, and other to Government House. It faces Macquarie-place, around which other to Government House. It faces Macquarie-place, around which several fine English oaks are planted, some of which have reached a great height, and present a picture of the value of trees in a warm climate, conducing both to health and comfort. Near this building a fresh-water well has been sunk, and a pump has been constructed: this forms the Tank stream, now nearly covered.

The large Engraving of Sydney on page 218 takes in that portion looking towards the Domain, giving a view of the University in the distance near the globe land, Tooth's extensive brewery (Kent Brewery), the Australian Museum, Government House, &c. On the right is seen Darling Harbour, together with the recently-erected Pyrmont-bridge, connecting the suburban portion of the city erected Pyrmont-bridge, connecting the suburban portion of the city with the main body.

On entering the harbour of Port Jackson two high bluff points of land are seen, known as the North and South Heads, composed of sandstone rocks (of peculiar formation and yellow and ferruginous tint) covered with the usual Australian vegetation and deep-green foliage of stunted growth, which, with other peculiarities in the vegetation of New South Wales, give to the scenery a character of its own. Soon after entering the harbour we give on the first page a View taken from the South Head road. On sailing up the harbour numerous islets are seen laved about, covered by a sunny vegetation. On the main land of this beautiful harbour (a distance of seven miles having to be passed from the entrance) are numerous villas of every style of Sydney residents and neat villas, surrounded by gardens, all in English style, reminding the emigrant of his native home and its kindred associations, satisfying to his English habits and feelings. The View given in our Engraving at page 219 was taken off Farm Cove, and shows the noble castellated building of Government House and a portion of the Lower Botanic Garden; in the distance, on the opposite side of the harbour, the north shore, the combination of scenery forms an interesting landscape—the favourite drive on the South Head road, towards the lighthouse. Several beautiful views of the harbour, almost surrounded by picturesque and wooded hills, are obtained from this spot. During most of the year, but more especially in the spring and summer months, the country about these localities abounds in flowering plants, ornamental shrubs, and majestic forest trees, interspersed with the peculiar dark foliage of the native fig-trees; and the lofty gum-trees are often seen covered by the kowuhow, or native mistletoe, dropping over the branches, one species adorned with red and another with over the branches, one species adorned with red and another with beautiful orange-coloured blossoms; these, when seen mixed in the beautiful orange-coloured blossoms; these, when seen mixed in the handsome evergreen foliage of the gum-tree, give a gay huge masses of white myrtle-like flowers of the gum-tree, give a gay and peculiarly charming effect to the garden and forest scenery.

New South Wales enjoys an agreeable medium between the tropical heat of the northern districts and the colder region of Tasmania; and we see the bamboo, oleander, olive, banana, pomegranate, date, orange, all the varieties of the citron tribe, and all the choice grapes introduced from various parts of the world flourish luxuriantly in the open air during the warm and winter seasons of the year, and mingled with apple, pear, plum, mulberry, peach, apricot, nectarine, and almond trees bearing a profusion of delicious fruit, surrounded also by myrtles, roses, heaths, fuchsias, and magnolias, forming a wilderness of flowers carnations, lilies, and many of colder climes, adorning the gardens with their beauty and fragrance.

The Sydney Empire gives the following table respecting Australian progress:—"A quarter of a century ago, that is in 1841, the population of what is now the three colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland, numbered only a little more than 150,000, and now it exceeds 1,200,000. The exact figures were—1841, population, 145,369; exports, £1,023,351. The population of the colonies of Tasmania and South Australia at that time, probably amounted to less than 45,000; and their exports to no more than £50,000 or £70,000 per annum. It is probable that all the colonies, inclusive of Western Australia and New Zealand, could not in 1841 muster much over 200,000 inhabitants, and their exports produced no more than £1,100,000. Now, in 1861, the population of during the last twenty years can be seen at a glance, when it is known that the population has increased so rapidly that the Australian group now numbers nearly 1,500,000, say—New South Wales and Queensland, 730,000; Victoria, 550,000; South Australia, 150,000; Tasmania, 115,000; New Zealand (exclusive of the native race), 85,000; Swan River, 10,000: total, 1,600,000; or, exclusive of New Zealand, 1,515,000. As some of these figures, however, are only approximations, we will assume the population to be but one million and a quarter. The exports, as we have before said, amounted in 1841 to about £1,100,000; they now probably reach more than £20,000,000 per annum. The exports from New South Wales only, for 1859—the last year for which the official returns have been published—amounted in round numbers to £5,000,000, or at the rate of £10 11s. 6d. per head of the population. This estimate of exports, however, is almost one-third of the entire population of the whole of the Australian group; and assuming the same proportion of exports to population for the other colonies, and allowing for a very moderate increase since 1859, we shall certainly be within the mark when we estimate the total of Australian exports of every description at £15,000,000, or £12 per head in seventy-five years. At the same rate of increase, during the next twenty-five years, the population will amount to 2,000,000 in number, at the latter time, to £25,000,000 per annum. This rate of increase during the last twenty years is continued, we shall in that year number 180,000,000. Of course it is absurd to suppose that such a rate as this will continue for so long a period, and we merely give the figures to show that, under all the disadvantages of a position remote from the centres of our progress, there has been certainly rapid. Compared with other British colonies, Canada for instance, the results would be just as surprising as the increase in population is to the amount of our exports as a guide. Thus, while our population has increased about sixfold in twenty years, our exports have increased almost twentyfold, or from £1,100,000 in 1841 to £20,000,000 in 1861."

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.

It has been decided by the commissioners that prizes or rewards of merit, in the form of medals, shall be given in sections I., III., III.

These medals will be of one class, for merit, without any distinction of degree.

No exhibitor will receive more than one medal in any class or sub-class.

An international jury will be appointed for each class and sub-class of the exhibition, by whom the medals will be adjudged.

Each foreign commission will be at liberty to nominate one member of the jury for each class and sub-class in which exhibitors of their country and its dependencies are competitors.

The names of the foreign jurors must be sent to her Majesty's commissioners before the 1st of February, 1862.

The British jurors will be chosen in the following manner:—Every exhibitor will name three persons to the jury for each class or sub-class in which he exhibits, and from the persons so named her Majesty's commissioners will select nominations for the jury for each class, group or subdivision.

Her Majesty's commissioners reserve to themselves the power of modifying these arrangements in particular case where it may appear to them that in the strict application of the principles of these decisions would be attended with injustice.

The names of the jurors will be published in March, 1862.

The jurors will be required to submit their awards, with a brief statement of the grounds of each, to her Majesty's commissioners before the last day of May, 1862.

Should the reasons assigned for any award appear insufficient, or should no reason be given, her Majesty's commissioners reserve to themselves the right of confirming or rejecting it.

The awards will be published in the Exhibition Building, at a public ceremony, early in the month of June, 1862.

They will also be made known simultaneously attached to the counters of the successful exhibitors, and the grounds of each award will be very briefly stated.

If no exhibitor accepts the office of juror, no medal can be awarded in the class or sub-class to be appointed either to a medal withheld accordingly or to the term in which he may be a partner.

The medals will be delivered to the exhibitors on the last day of the exhibition.

Mr. Richard Hugh Hughes, of Hatton-garden, London, proposes to supply to the ventilation of galleries, mines, and other places where the air is impure by means of pipes under pressure. Air, he contends, may be supplied in this way by an apparatus very similar to that by which gas is furnished to towns.

THE NEW POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.—The "official regulations" in accordance with which the new Government Savings Banks are to be opened in connection with the Post Office, are to be conducted, has been issued from the Post Office. Though still the three hundred money-order offices will be at first opened on the 16th of September, yet the banking privileges will be gradually extended to them all. They are to be open every day consecutively increasing. Deposits of not less than 1s., and not more than £30, will be taken at all offices open for the purpose, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and may also rise to six, daily; and on Saturday evenings till eight o'clock. Not more than £50 in one year, or £150 in all, will be taken from any depositor. On the 31st of December in each year the interest, at 2½ per cent, which will daily be reckoned, being at the rate of 5l. per annum for every complete pound, will be calculated and added to the principal sum, which will thenceforth bear interest at the same rate. When the interest is added, the depositor's book will sum up at £600, no further interest will be added. It will be therefore necessary for withdraw a portion of it, or to allow the whole to remain without further interest. Deposits are taken in sums of a shilling, but no fractional part of a penny is to be paid. Any one of the sixty odd stations may receive, withdraw, or further deposits, the odd shillings are made up to a complete pound, the pound so completed will also bear interest at 2½ per cent from the first day of the calendar month next ensuing after the pound is so completed.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CLERICUS B. of Dublin.—Received with thanks. We have still a few of your former contributions on hand, with some slight modification might be rendered available. Shall they be returned.

A. W., Mayfair; J. B., City-road; R. S., R. R., Bayswater, W. S. B., and others.—The solution of No. 910 is as follows:—1. Kt to Q 5th (ch), K to Q 3rd, or 1. Kt to Q B 3rd, or 1. Kt to Q 5th, and mate next move. Again, if he play 1. P takes P, the reply is B takes P (ch), and mate next move.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 912.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Q 3rd	B to Q 6th
2. Mates accordingly.

(If Black play 1. B to Q 6th, then follow 2. Kt K Kt 2nd (ch), and mate next move. If he play 1. K to K 5th, then White play 2. Kt to B 5th (dis. ch), and mate next move. Again, if he play 1. P takes P, the reply is P to K 6th, and mate next move.)

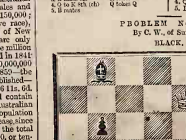
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 913.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to R 2nd	Q to Kt 4th (best)
2. Q to Q R 8th	Kt to Q 4th (dis. ch) or
	(ch) or
(a)	Kt to K 4th (ch)
3. R takes Kt	Q takes Q
4. Q to K 8th (ch)	Q takes Q
5. R mates

PROBLEM No. 914.

By C. W., of Sunbury.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

CHESS IN LONDON.

Match between MESSRS. ANDERSSEN and KOLISCH.

The following was the concluding game in this fascinating struggle.

(Irregular Opening).

WHITE (MR. K.)	BLACK (MR. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3rd
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th

(In this position the second player, perhaps, does better to play P to Q B 4th.)

3. Kt to K B 2nd	P to K 3rd
4. P to K B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd
5. B to K 2nd	B to K 2nd
6. Castles	Castles
7. P to Q Kt 3rd	P to Q 2nd
8. P to Q R 3rd	P to Q R 3rd
9. P to K R 3rd	P to K Kt 3rd

(This is a very unusual, apparently, at Mr. Kolisch's subsequent difficulties.)

10. P to Q B 4th	Kt to Q Kt 5th
11. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to K 6th
12. Q to Q 2nd	Kt to K Kt 5th
13. Q to K 2nd	Kt to Q 6th

(Well played if Black now capture the Kt, P, Kt, and Rook will be driven back, to the K Kt Form, and White can then take the Kt with Bishop, and win a Kt in return for the one confused.)

14. P to Q R 4th	P to Q R 3rd
15. Kt to Q R 3rd	B to K 8th

(This Bishop has been a formidable enemy in Black's attack.)

16. R to Q B 2nd	P to Q 4th
17. P to K Kt 3rd	B to K R 4th
18. P to K 5th	P to K 2nd

(The object of this move was to take Q B 4th, but White's next step—a manœuvre ultimately leading to the same result—is much more compact than he had reckoned on.)

19. P to Q Kt 4th	Q to Q B 2nd
20. P to Q B 5th	P to K Kt 4th
21. Kt to K B 2nd	P to K Kt 5th
22. Kt to Q 4th	P takes P
23. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to K Kt 6th
24. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
25. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
26. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
27. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
28. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
29. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
30. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
31. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
32. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
33. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
34. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
35. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 3rd
36. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
37. P takes Q P	P takes P
38. P to Q B 5th	P to Q 4th
39. Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q 3rd
40. P to K 6th	P takes P
41. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
42. Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q 3rd
43. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
44. Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q 3rd
45. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q 3rd
46. Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q 3rd

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA: ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN THE 71ST NEW YORK AND AN ALABAMA REGIMENT AT THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

PROFESSOR QUEKETT, F.R.S.

THE death of this distinguished member of the medical profession, in the very prime of life, took place on Tuesday, the 20th, at Faringbourne, Berkshire, to which place he had been removed a few weeks since, in the hope that the change might be the means of prolonging his invaluable life. The deceased was the fourth son of the late Mr. Quekett, Head Master of the Langport Grammar School, at which institution he received his education. As the early age of sixteen he gave lectures on microscopic science, illustrated by diagrams, and a microscope of his own making, and, truly, if anything were wanting to show the ingenuity of the boy, nothing could exhibit it so much as this instrument, made out of the rudest materials, and hammered into shape by his own hands. With this imperfect microscope his first discoveries were made; but such was his mechanical turn of mind that he set to work to construct an electrical apparatus; and in this department of science was equally a successful discoverer. Having determined upon entering the medical profession, he was sent up to his brother, the late Edwin Quekett, the Lecturer on Botany to the London Hospital, where he soon obtained the favourable notice of the medical officers of the institution. We now find him competing for the newly-established studentship in anatomy, just then established by the Royal College of Surgeons, which he obtained, and held for three years; at the close of which his superior attainments as an anatomist, especially in minute dissections and microscopical investigations, led to his permanent appointment in the Hunterian Museum. He was there principally occupied in extending and arranging the series of microscopical preparations commenced by himself, and which last year numbered, we believe, upwards of fifty thousand specimens: these have been mostly prepared by his own hands.

In consequence of the appointment of Professor Owen to the British Museum, in 1856, the council of the College of Surgeons appointed Professor Quekett Curator of the Hunterian Museum. This appointment gave universal satisfaction to the members of the college, by whom, as well as others interested in the progress of science, Professor Quekett's lectures on histology were thoroughly appreciated. The new building had just been finished, and now on the newly-appointed Curator rested the herculean labour and sole responsibility of an entirely new arrangement of the museum, and most satisfactorily was his task accomplished. But the work on which his great reputation as a histologist is chiefly based is the "Illustrated Catalogue" of the specimens showing the minute structure of tissues in the museum. His other published works—"Lectures on Histology," and "Practical Treatise on the Use of the Microscope," with numerous papers contributed to various journals—have a high and deserved reputation. Professor Quekett was a member of nearly all the learned societies of this besides many foreign countries. He held the office of President of the Microscopical Society of London, of which society he was one of the founders: for years laboriing most zealously as secretary, he had the satisfaction of helping to bring it to its present state of prosperity. His great experience in all matters relating to microscopical science and vast extent of information made his opinion of peculiar value, and in much request on obscure diseases and morbid alterations of structure; and the uniform readiness and urbanity with which he imparted his knowledge to all who visited for that purpose the museum of the College of Surgeons will make the memory of this most worthy and valuable officer gratefully cherished.

Physiological science and the medical profession have sustained a great loss in this excellent and indefatigable man. In private life John Quekett was equally beloved and respected by all. Many a poor family will miss the friendly hand ever ready to administer to their wants. He was carried off by a cruel disease, at the early age of forty-six, much too soon to enable him to make any provision for his wife and four boys, whom he leaves behind to deplore the irreparable loss of an estimable husband and most indulgent parent.

Our Portrait is taken from a photograph by Maull and Polybiank.

THE LATE PROFESSOR QUEKETT.

THE GRAND BANQUET AND BALL AT THE THEATRE DES VARIETES, ANTWERP.

OUR Artist sends us a Drawing of the interior of the Théâtre des Variétés at Antwerp, as arranged for the festivities held during the recent artistic congress. The first event was the banquet held on the 18th inst., when between 1200 and 1500 persons sat down to a magnificent repast. For this occasion the whole of the audience part of the theatre, the stage, and the ball-room behind the stage, were thrown into one vast saloon, in which six rows of tables were placed—in all, some thousand feet in length. The audience portion was magnificently ornamented with flowers, greenery, and flags pendent from the ceiling, and round the entire front of the upper row of boxes was a splendid decoration, in which the armsof all nations were represented, interlaced in the folds of a broad waving band, on which was inscribed "Aux grangers de toutes nations." Below this were panels containing the names of the most celebrated painters of the past. The first circle of boxes was occupied by the principal table, where sat the Burgomaster, who officiated as president, and his more favoured guests. The toasts and speeches were given from one of the stage boxes. The stage portion of the salle was ornamented with trellis-work, plants, and flowers, filled with flowers, and the proscenium was painted in all the purity of its classic architecture, with the addition of a profusion of lights and mirrors. The company was magnificent, and altogether unlike anything of the kind that we have seen before.

BALL GIVEN IN THE THEATRE AT ANTWERP ON THE OCCASION OF THE ARTISTIC CONGRESS RECENTLY HELD IN THAT CITY.

On Monday, the tables being removed, this extensive edifice was turned into a ball-room for new decorations, including a fountain surrounded by flowers, being added. The orchestra was placed above, in the first circle of boxes. The ball was opened by the ambassador, in the absence of the presence of ladies, was a most brilliant one; and it is as soon on this occasion that our artist has chosen to represent it.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY MUSGRAVE.

Elizabeth, Dowager Lady Musgrave, was the third daughter of George Dalgleish, Esq., of Carse, Kirkcudbrightshire, N.B., Chipambaling, by her wife, Lady Mary, youngest daughter of John, ninth Earl of Westmoreland, and was the eldest child of the late Reverend Pindyer, Baron Musgrave, Bart., by his second marriage, the 21st of October, 1810, to Sir Philip Musgrave, eighth Baronet, of Hartley Castle, Cumberland, who died in July, 1817. By this union her Ladyship had an only daughter, Elizabeth Mary, who died the 31st of December, 1840. Lady Musgrave's remains were interred on the 21st inst.

GENERAL FRANKLYN.

Major General Charles Franklyn, C.B., who died on the 5th inst., in his fifty-fourth year, entered the army as an ensign and lieutenant, after a long course of gallant and arduous service, first through the different grades to that of Lieutenant-colonel, and afterwards to that of Major-general, which he attained March, 1858; and subsequently the 1st division, and was present at the defeat of the Sikhs at Sobraon, 1846, when the position in front of the bridge of high was assailed by the enemy in great force under the Sirdars, and was the first man on the bridge. He commanded the 1st Bengal Fusiliers in 1857. He was made C.B. in 1858, and a Major General on the 23rd of April, 1860.

THE REV. PERENDARY HENDERSON.

The Rev. Thomas Henderson, M.A., Perendary of St. Paul's, Vicar of Mensing, Essex, and Rural Dean, met with an awfully sudden death on Sunday, the 4th inst., by being fatally struck with apoplexy while in the act of addressing the sacrament in Mensing Church. The rev. gentleman was educated at Worcester College, and was admitted a Queen's Scholar, in 1809. In 1810 he was chosen elected student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1820; graduating B.A. in Hilary, 1813, and M.A. in 1816. He succeeded Vicar of Mensing, Essex, in 1828; and from 1831 to 1846 he held also the rectory of Coine Valeis, near Hinchinbrook. In 1842 he was appointed to the perpetual of Chamberlain wood in St. Paul's Cathedral.

ALEXANDER LAMONT, ESQ., OF KNOCKDOW.

The gentleman was of a different description. He was of an Argyleshire family, died at Knockdow, on the 21st inst., aged seventy seven. He is succeeded in his estates by his son, who was born in 1818, and married in 1844 to a daughter of Sir John Colquhoun, Bart. He is a Deputy-lieutenant and a justice of the peace for the county of Argyle.

THE MARCHIONESS OF BREDALBANE

died at her seat on the 14th inst., after a long illness. Her ladyship was the eldest daughter of the late Sir Charles Imbrie Ross, Bart., of Balnagown Castle, in the county of Ross, by Christian, his wife, eldest daughter of the late Sir Hector Munro, Bart., of Novar, in the same county. She was married to the late Marquis of Breadalbane, who died in 1834, and by whom she had issue a numerous family, of whom the eldest son, the present Marquis, was born in 1796.

LITERATURE.

NARRATIVE OF THE CIRCUMNAVIGATION OF THE GLOBE BY THE AUSTRIAN FRIGATE NOVARA, undertaken by order of the Imperial Government, in the Years 1857-8-9. By Dr. KARL SCHERZER. Saunders and Otley.

We are so much accustomed to look at Austria as a purely military Power that we are apt to ignore the fact that she has a Navy; and, considering the extent of her seaboard, and that she has been such for ages, the possessor of Venice—a city which is so completely associated with maritime triumphs and a large commerce carried on by means of shipping—it is a notable fact that the impulse which has denied believe should not have cultivated her mercantile marine to a greater extent. It is, however, by no means unamiable, and she reckons amongst her population not a few hardy and trained sailors, especially those who come from the island and barony of Dalmatia, which is now the seat of her most advantageous naval power a very respectable maritime appearance in the Mediterranean, and do something by the expansion of her commerce to the abolition of the slave trade, which we hear every day to be inevitable. A false and ruinous policy, nevertheless, has dictated to Austria the construction of all her ships, able resources in men and money on the organisation and keeping up of an immense army, which, magnificent as the means of a military Power, has been of late years in bad repute because of the suppression of revolt in Hungary and the repulse of France in an attack on her Italian possessions. The present Archduke Maximilian, brother of the Emperor, who lately paid a visit to this country, and was congratulated on his appointment to the command of the navy, which is directed towards bringing into play an capacity for commerce and exercise which, it is to be hoped, will not be without a result in the success of Trieste and Vice-Admiral that so remarkable an occurrence has been presented to the world as a voyage of circumnavigation going round the globe, and visiting every part of the habitable globe, as has the work before us is the record. The chronicler—who is the author of a book published in Germany, and which, in the course of all her scientific corps attached to the expedition, and having had placed at his disposal the comprehensive journal of the chief commander Wullerstorf and the other members of the scientific corps; and in the place there is no country and races visited during the cruise in the different regions of the world. In thus dealing with the general information and history of the world, the author makes his work without pretension, but everything that he has set down is characterised by the utmost fulness and exhaustiveness. In the matter of observation, while his devotion to the scientific pursuits in which he was engaged are sufficiently obvious without being unnecessarily obtrusive.

The frigate Novara, which was selected for the expedition, was fitted out at Pola, and left that port on the 30th of April, 1857, and was accompanied by the screw steamer Erzherzog Friedrich, as well as artificial library, as well as with all the charts and maps necessary for the navigation of the Mediterranean. On passing the Straits of Gibraltar Lesbi was enlarged so as to hold a double quantity. It is worthy of record that, as far as the expedition was concerned, the quantity of spirits on board, but by no means seawater was distilled in sufficient quantity for drinking and culinary purposes by the crew, and it is stated that the health of the crew was excellent, and that not a case of scurvy measure attributed. The Novara, a fine vessel of her class, proved an excellent sea boat, and, as the author says, "the confidence which had been gained in speed by the use of a steam-vessel were found to be compensated by the greater space which was afforded by the sailing vessel." The Novara left Europe on the 30th of April, 1857, and was accompanied by the Imperial corvette Carolina as far as the coast of Brazil, when the latter proceeded, it is probable that the pleasant and intelligent and, indeed, skilful manner in which Dr. Scherzer has brought together the information which he has given to the world in this volume will be appreciated. There is something amusing in the naïveté with which the author speaks of the pleasure which he felt in the prospect of returning to his eye on at sight of strangeness, which brings out the admiration and even wonder of the islander, pure and simple, at the sight of the white man's ship, and the amusement which the voyage with the manners of those who go down to the sea in ships afforded him. The author's remarks of the Canary Islands, which are contained in this volume are connected with Madeira, the Brazils, the Cape, the volcanic islands of St. Paul, Amsterdam, and Java, and the Philippines. It is stated that Alexander Von Humboldt took much interest in this expedition, and he addressed a letter to the scientific corps, which is full of suggestions as to the geological and geognostic suggestions, which is prefixed to the work, which also contains a letter from Baron Von Bruck, the Minister of Commerce, to the Archduke Maximilian, which is also full of interesting matter. By him several special points of inquiry were indicated, and he urged the importance of careful observation of the ocean currents, which are not to be in the ordinary track of navigators; and he in a manner gives a classification of volcanic islands, which is worthy of consideration.

Altogether, I calculate the number of active volcanoes on the surface of the earth to be between 150 and 160, of which 70 are found in the Indian Archipelago, and the remainder upon the mother world. The western coast of South America has 30, Mexico 8, the S.W. coast of the United States, 3; Mexico, 4; Central America, 18; South America, about 28, of which 10 are in Chili, 3 in Peru, 3 in Bolivia, and 1 in New Zealand possesses 4, in which volcanoes meet almost, stretching from S.E. to S.W. in the more northern part of the Pacific, between 0 deg. W. and 10 deg. E. of Ferro, between 0 deg. S. and 65 deg. N. In this region the latest elements of the earth's crust are found, and the most violent convulsions of nature connected with the atmosphere.

If we were to select a chapter of this book which we think possesses the most interest for the English readers we should take that which tells of the islands of St. Paul and Amsterdam in the Indian Ocean, lying midway between the northernmost point of Africa and the Australian continent, from each of which they are about 3150 miles distant. Most of the islands in the Pacific, from Australia to New Zealand pass pretty close to these islands, especially during the winter season. Many captains trading in the Indian Ocean have thought St. Paul an advantageous haven for recruiting the strength of their scurvy-stricken crews; while the ships of others, shattered almost to the point of foundering in the throes of a tract of ocean when for thousands of miles there is no other land, can find here their only prospect of preservation. Wells at Cape Town Dr. Scherzer was informed, on authority, in reply to his inquiries, that the Island of St. Paul belonged to England, and was a dependency of the Mauritius; but at the island itself, to his astonishment, he learned from the inhabitants that St. Paul, at present, was under the protection of the French Government, and, in fact, was an appendage of the Island of Bourbon, the Governor of which, long previously, had ordered the French flag to be hoisted, with all the usual formalities, by a detachment of French soldiers who had been landed from a French ship of war. In this not a controversy worthy the attention of her Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs? Our author goes on to say that the island seems, in fact, to have been, some twenty years since, the property of a French merchant of St. Denis, named Gaillard, somewhat later entered into a partnership with a person named Adam, a Pole by birth, to whom he successively resigned the entire island. Adam was described to the author as a man of exceedingly fierce and determined character, but he did wonders for the cultivation of the island. He left there a number of Malagasy and Kaffirs, whom he enabled to work through the entire year, and employed in hewing stone from the rocks, with which huts were built, and in preparing a handkerchief on the north side of the basin, and in sowing a number of plots of ground along the lower margin of the crater of the volcano while studies in the island with European vegetables. About eight or ten years since Adam—who afterwards, in the course of a voyage from Bourbon to New Zealand, met a violent death—left, having been, however, reproved for his cruelty by the black crew of a small vessel whom he had driven to desperation—and the island to that remarkable man an indolent, a shipchandler, of St. Denis. The whole account of this group of islands, where, it seems, a tolerably extensive cherry carried on, is not only very interesting, but, in many respects, highly suggestive.

In his chapter which treats of our dependency of Ceylon Dr. Scherzer makes some very salient observations on the policy which England has pursued towards that "gem of the sea," in every sense of the term, and he does not hesitate to say that, considering the important geographical position of Ceylon, her commodious harbours, her productiveness, and her marvellous climate, the disinterested observer wonders at the stepmother's part which the British Government has chosen to inspect to this renowned land of palms and spices—the Malta of the Indian Ocean, and which, in the hands of a nation possessed of the spirit of the earth has, at least until very recently, received the least care and attention. He asserts without scruple that the administration of the affairs of Ceylon, for which the mother country is exclusively responsible, has been hitherto of complete drag upon her development. He admits, however, that the introduction of a better course of proceeding, and see signs of such a development of her agriculture and commerce as to lead to the belief that there are long that Ceylon, the incomparably beautiful island is destined to shine a star of the first magnitude in the azure of the Indian Ocean, one of the most prosperous and happy of the lesser lights of the earth. Notwithstanding this qualification, we in this country ought not to be unmindful of the jar to our memory in respect to this colony which we have received from an indulgent Government.

With one further remark we come to the subject-matter of this work we will conclude our specific remarks upon it. Dealing with the subject of the circular bar of storms, Dr. Scherzer records some observations on a storm which occurred on the 14th of July, as of options that came a cycle of regularly-recurring winds at such times as there is no positive storm in existence, and that the storm is not yet at its height. It only the usual condition of the currents of air intensified and heightened. He says:—

The importance of ascertaining the envrilhearty in the direction of the winds will be especially manifest at the limits within which the regular winds are found, whether they are more or become intermingled with the more irregular currents of the atmosphere. Accordingly, as we neared the limit of the south-east trade, which always commences with a calm, and as we left the southern declination increases, we had to traverse regions where we necessarily encountered the most variable winds, owing to the nature of the locality. There are also found occasional spots at which a more rarefied atmosphere seems to fill the surrounding space, where, with a clear sky and a perfect calm, in the case of hurricanes, first visible perhaps in the higher strata, but afterwards extending to the earth, the wind rises by its weak, then, united with a great regularity, and with them the atmospheric pressure, just as in the case of cyclones, except that neither the one nor the other are attended with the terrible violence of a tempest. The wind, which began to blow from the north-east, increased in force, and veered round to the south, and returned to south-east, by short intervals of calm. Then we could perceive, on referring to the ship's log, that the entire cycle was completed in the space of 24 hours, and that it was possible, by examining the central direction of the daily variation, to determine the point of the horizon at which the storm was raging, and, by taking into consideration the path described by each central direction from day to day, to ascertain that the storm was moving in a westerly direction. From the aspect of the heavens, and the state of the weather, were with the greatest certainty to be foretold more than the hour before the regular south-east wind the sky was bright, but as soon as it began to veer round to the eastward a few white clouds were seen to appear in the western heaven, constituting a well-defined line with the south and eastern one; and, as the wind veered still further round, and neared the line of centre, the weather grew stormy, and the sky became dark and overcast with clouds, which, when the storm was at its height, all the ship had reached, poured point to the storm centre, when the lower strata of clouds—more especially the cirrus—were driven with the greatest velocity in the direction of the vapour—drove before the wind, while the upper ones moved in a contrary direction, generally that of the forthcoming wind. The atmospheric pressure, which at first would be considerably above the mean, fell with the approach of the storm, and rose again very soon after the barometer rose again, and the weather improved, and the wind veered round to the south-east. In the centre of the storm it was not possible with a single ship to see more than a few miles, but the storm was so great that we could ascertain whether the centre of the storm was at the spot where the observation has been made, and it is impossible to determine whether it may be at other points. But it is all events certain that the calms of wind are assumable to the same general laws as hurricanes.

The author has already stated, keeping in view that this work is written for his own contemporaries its value and its interest will be perceptible even to those whom it is not specially addressed. The narrative of which it primarily consists a great deal that will be acceptable to every class of reader. We shall look directly for the publication of the English public in the following words of its writer:—

While preparing the details of our voyage for publication in my own language, the Most benevolently permitted that I should translate the narrative into English might prove not unacceptable to the British people, and, although fully aware that I should be unable to do justice to the genius of which the nation could not possibly be ignorant of the existence of the greatest of maritime nations, and, nevertheless, that it might interest a people in the nation, it seemed, nevertheless, that it might interest a people in the nation which has been pursuit of knowledge as the British, to learn the results of a voyage undertaken upon town frontiers of discussion by the colonies and countries of the British Empire.

The English language, moreover, from its being more or less over the greater part of the earth's surface, acquires, so to speak, a universality, and he will the readers in that tongue is calculated to be found in the most distant parts of the world, and even in the nations of the globe! For it is not alone with the educated classes of all countries that the English language is known, but also with the uneducated classes of all countries, and even with the uncivilised—Hottentots. The political and commercial relations which England has established with all parts of the world have created a universal development which Greek and Latin never attained, and which the German and French languages will never attain. The enormous colonies almost all seafaring nations have, at least of the language of a people whose interest to get a right knowledge of the world, and to be enabled to form a civilising and elevating influence upon foreign nations than with awe, while they are more closely attached by the ties of material advantage.

By order of the Trinity Board the lime light was substituted for the ordinary French oil light at the South Foreland Lighthouse on the 23rd inst.

The large barque the Prince of Wales, of Glasgow, with a general cargo, from the port of Adelaide, South Australia, has arrived in the Clyde. Many of Sir Grands, and all persons on board have perished. The ship had been long on the passage, having left Port Adelaide on February 6.

Dr. Livingstone's Expedition.—The following letter has been received from Dr. Livingstone:—"On board Pioneer, at sea, Feb. 18, 1861. My dear, Sir,—I am desired by Mr. Rae to forward an answer to his communication of the 15th inst. We have got up to the Zambesi and found our colonist brethren in their still in Africa. We found them on Kirsons creek, from West Coast, collected from 1 to 2 and a half miles from the river. A roadside on a healthy climate reminds them of Natal, Pretoria, Shupanga, and Tete, to be out of Europeans; a slight attack, and our remedy, and lately of Victoria Falls, but neither had so severe attacks as the natives possess the energy of Europeans, and must submit to their conditions. The need of most luxuries and impressions, and in this colonial country. The arrival of Bishop Mackenzie and his party of missionaries. They look a fine set of fellows, all of them, and the Bishop himself looks like A 1 of the party. They appear to have good practical views of the work before them, and with all my heart I wish them success. We have a real starving at last, and, with God's blessing, will now to some service. On Shirasmore have turned out for the best, but it is thanks to the spirits also endured us."

Digitized by Google

PARIS FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

We have still an entire month to wait for the return of the leaders of the Paris fashions, whose absence at the seaside, at the baths, or in their country retreats, will cease with the first cool breezes of autumn. The Emperor's fête the other day was propitious to the exhibition of toilet; but it was rather cosmopolitan than Parisian, and bore frequent traces of its foreign origin, although still claiming affinity with the French school, which continues to maintain its supremacy on affaires de chiffon all over the world, civilised or uncivilised.

From all we have been able to glean from our friends the modistes, grenadines, organdis, gaze de soie, and Chambery gauzes are to be allowed to triumph till the end of September, when they will have to make way on ordinary occasions for warmer and more solid materials. The thin tissues have no reason to complain, for it is long since we had a season so favourable to the wearing of light stuffs as the present summer, during which the ballrooms and concert-rooms of Wiesbaden, Baden-Baden, Homburg, and Vichy have constantly presented all the beauties of a living feminine parterre.

Serious bonnets have not yet recovered their vogue, nor will they till the end of the summer season. The chapeau de fantaisie, of every possible shape, still monopolises, to a great extent, the heads of the Parisiennes on voyage, from which they will, no doubt, be thrown off on their return to the capital.

In the way of novelty we may mention a charming new petticoat, distinguished by the name of the latter (milliner), and which can be more convenient for town or country neglige in summer or even in the wet-weather season. The petticoat, over crinoline, is sometimes much ornamented with a Zouave casaque, and may be worn in the morning without any other skirt. The jupon haltier is usually red or grey and white, with a wide band (or several narrow rows) of velvet placed above the hem.

The scene of our Fashions for September is laid in the gardens of the Musard Concert, executed every fine summer evening and occasionally during the daytime in the Champs Elysées, close to the building of the Palace of Industry. The choicest of music is played here to the most select audiences, although the price of admission is very moderate, being only 1 franc.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Walking Dress.—Robe of organdi, having twelve narrow tucks arranged above a rather wide hem at the bottom of the skirt. The dress is high-necked, the corsage descending to a point, and trimmed with graduating frill-pieces. Waistband of white watered silk ribbon, ornamented with wild flowers, of which the tour-de-tête of the white chip bonnet is also composed.

Fig. 2. Dress for a Little Girl.—Pink gaze de Chambery frock, the skirt finished off with a flounce composed of plaits surmounted by a silk ruching. The corsage is décolleté, and at the top of the chemisette is a narrow ruching. Pelerine to match the dress, and also trimmed with ruching. Black chenille net.

Fig. 3. Evening Dress.—This dress is of pale grey grenadine, with seven flounces, each flounce being edged with a roll of corn-coloured silk; the trimming on the sleeves corresponds with that on the skirt. Leghorn bonnet, with yellow roses in the cap, and black strings with yellow stripes. The bavolet is also of the last-named colour.

Fig 4. Toilette de Campagne for a Young Person.—Light blue silk gauze dress, the skirt ornamented at the bottom with a silk ruching surmounted by a Greek ruched trimming, likewise of silk. The corsage is flat, round-waisted, square-necked, and furnished at the top with a ruching. Pagkey sleeves, trimmed with a ruching to match. Organdi chemisette, plaited, and with narrow Parisian collar. Silk waistband, with long ends falling behind. Silk net. Leghorn hat, trimmed with a large flat feather and a bouquet of roses.

MANOR HOUSE, CAMBERWELL.

Besides the old mansions of London which have been swept away by fire, or have crumbled piecemeal under the tooth of Time, others are falling, and many more are doomed to fall, beneath a raw ravager as potent and ruthless as either of these. Urban railways have become the order of the day, and are cutting their way sheer through many parts of the metropolis, in some cases, no doubt, doing good service by letting light and air into "rookeries" swarming with human beings half stifled in these fever-beds; but frequently also demolishing some ancient edifice that we would fain have preserved as one of those relics whose associations pleasantly bind the past with the present. Such a mansion is the Manor House at Camberwell, which is in process of removal, its site being required for the extension line of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. This fine old building, situated in the Camberwell-road, at a short distance from the Green, is built entirely of brick, with red facings, being the work of Inigo Jones. The Bowyer family, lords of the manor of Camberwell, resided here; and it was also the abode of Sir Christopher Wren. On its walls are some fine carvings and oak and cedar panelling, and the chimneypieces are very elaborate. It contains a spacious picture-gallery.

MANOR HOUSE, CAMBERWELL.

THE FARM.

Scotland and Ireland have had an immense amount of wet, but England has seldom known such delicious harvest weather except quite in the southern counties. In one of them a large farmer writes us "We finished cutting a week ago, and have not secured a sheaf yet (Aug. 27)." The hindmen have thus been enabled to commence their cribbing early; and, thanks to reaping-machines, whose name is now "legion" in the land, the partridge-shooters will find the stubbles pretty well cleared by the 1st. The old couplet,

> Ere St. George's Day has come and gone
> There may be hops or there may be none, has been verified this August in a way most delightful to Mr. Gladstone, who looks on the Aphis Vastator as one of his direst foes; and already speculators are to be found who will back a £150,000 duty.

Lady Pigot has just published another very elegant edition of her catalogue. The herd is divided into two classes—the first containing the Booth Stock, with the Show Cows at the end; and the second, cows used for the dairy or whose calves are for sale, classified entirely according to their milking properties. The Bracelet, The Bonnet, and The Mountain tribes rank first in order among the Booths; and in the second class may be found some "animals for which no price would be taken, such as Lady Sarah, Ladye Jilrith, Rosamu, Cherry Queen, &c." The prize notes to Empress of Hindostan and 2nd Duchess of Gloster steadily increase with their years, and "Duke Humphrey" is the title conferred on the "red and a little white" calf of the latter. Stanley Rose's death also claims a footnote, written in a much more reverent tone than the elegy on her by an Irish agricultural bard:—

> Alas! alas! the fatal news—
> Poor Stanley Rose is dead,
> Woe! woe! betide that fatal wile
> She took the grim Boyhead.
> Those nasty flints they pinched thy toes,
> And shook thy frame, sweet Stanley Rose!

Honor, with her twenty-two quarts a day, and her Highflyer and Royal Buck pedigrees, seems to be at the head of the dairy queens, and defies challenge to the truth of the saying, "Booth for the butcher, Bates for the pail."

The Holker herd is all right again, and its most recent arrivals have been heifers from Nonnuch 2nd, Cleopatra 4th, and Countess of Errington (by Third Grand Duke from Laurel by Grand Turk), all by Barrington (by Third Grand Duke from Laurel by Grand Turk), all by Ninth Duke of Oxford. Dustie has a roan bull calf by the same sire, Ninth Duke of Oxford, and Duchess of Wetherby. A fall of 4 and Oxford 15th a roan heifer by Grand Duke—Duchess of Wetherby. A fall of four heifers out of five is a great change from the recent run of bull calves in this herd.

The trials of reaping-machines at Leeds were not finished, owing to the rain, until past mid-day on Friday. The money awarded for combined machines was withheld, as the work done still not justify any award, in consequence of their reaping power being so very meagre in comparison with their mowing, and only two went for trial through the self-deliverer, and five when the manual deliverer. In the former case, after a very careful trial and a close dynamometrical comparison, £14 out of the £20 was adjudged to Crosskill's tactics, and £6 to £14 out of the £20 was adjudged to Crosskill's tactics, and £6 to Messrs. Burgess and Key. The allotted space for each was 1 acre Messrs. Burgess and Key. The allotted space for each was 1 acre 3 roods 1 perch, and, although the cut of Burgess and Key is only 5 ft. 8 in., and that of Crosskill's tractors 8 ft. 3 in., they both finished their work in the same time, fifty-three minutes, owing to the loss of time which the latter incurred in turning the cumbrous and altering the turn-swathe. So far as the quality of the work goes, Burgess's made a shorter stubble than Crosskill's, but the plot was not left so neatly when the rake had passed over it. The five manual deliverers neatly when the rake had passed over it. The five manual deliverers were principally variations from Hussey's principle; and Picksley and Sims were the winners of the £6, and Cuthbert and Co. of the £4. The winning machine requires two horses, two men, and a boy; and there was nothing like that excessive strain on the horses which was visible in others. Whatever the mighty dons of the trade, who hate all this competition, may say to the contrary, the trials were most careful and ample, and no praise is too great for the stewards and judges, who cheerfully left their own harvest to perform a great public duty.

The sheep sales and lettings for next week comprise forty-nine and one hundred stock ewes principally of the Lord Salisbury and Potentes blood, at Hatfield Hall, on Tuesday; and on the following day Mr. James Walker's thirty Cotswold shearlings, at Northlench. Lincolnshire has three great lettings in succession—Mr. Chaplin's Blankney, at Tuxhwell, near Louth, on Tuesday; Mr. Torr's Leicesters, at Aylesby Manor, near Great Grimsby, on Wednesday; and Mr. Thomas Kirkham's Lincolns, at Rocathorpe, near Louth, on Thursday.

Farming has lost another of its old worthies in Mr. John Parkinson, of Leyfields, Nottinghamshire, who died last week, in his fifty-first year. Agent to the Dukes of Newcastle and St. Albans he effected great improvements, and especially in the way of drainage. He was, says the Mark Lane Express, "eminently successful in his deep drainage for springs, and was one of the first to try shallow drainage for surface water; while it was only in his instance that the Committee of Clipston Park was undertaken by the Duke of Portland." Out of Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire he was widely known as a judge of shorthorns. In partnership with Messrs. Wright and Clark, of Blinthorpe, of shorthorns. In partnership with Messrs. Wright and Clark, of Blinthorpe, he first held office at the Cambridge Royal, in 1840, and was also on the board on five different occasions. He was nominated among the trio for Canterbury; but, if we remember rightly, his son acted for him. He did not exhibit at Oxford in 1842; he won the hand some prize at The Royal with a bull, the joint property of himself and Mr. Booth of Cotham. In 1846 he won the same prize at Northampton with his own Captain Shasto, for whom he gave 525 gs. at the Tunstheres sale. This very clever, pay-looking bull was only second to Mr. Bates's Third Duke of Oxford at the Yorkshire Society's show the same summer, and was then sold for 140 gs. Mr. Richard Milward is well known as an active member of the council of the Royal Agricultural Society, and owner of the pony lot which form such a strong Tattersall's feature at the Epsom Monday; while Mr. Parkinson's other son has more especially inherited his father's shorthorn tastes, and is frequently seen with the judge's blank catalogue and pencil, both in England and Ireland.

ROYAL WESTERN YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

AT PLYMOUTH, on Wednesday week, the Royal Western Yacht Club Regatta was held, according to annual custom, in honour of the birthday of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in conjunction with the town of Plymouth aquatic amusements. This occasion is looked upon by the people of South Devon and Cornwall as one of the greatest holidays in the year, and each successive train brought hundreds of visitors from the neighbouring districts. As usual, the Hoe, overlooking the Sound, with the far-famed Breakwater in the distance, was the chief place of resort, as from its high position a good view could be obtained of what was going on, while almost innumerable booths and stalls ministered to the wants of the hungry and thirsty multitudes that were assembled. The lovely demesne of Mount Edgcumbe, the Catwater, Drake's Island, and the lofty eminence of Mount Wise all contributed here to fill up a picture of natural beauty which might be sought in vain elsewhere.

The first race of the day was for schooners belonging to any Royal yacht club bearing the Admiralty warrant, for a prize of £60. A time-race, on the scale of a half a minute a ton. The following yachts were entered :—

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Albertine	155 ..	R. Palmer, Esq.
Zenaire	126 ..	Richard Ashley, Esq.
Mistletoe	110 ..	J. Hewitt, Esq.
Undine	126 ..	J. W. Canton, Esq.

The course was from the starting-vessel to the Mew Stone and the Breakwater, three times round. The yachts got away well together, but Albertine soon got the lead, and maintained it throughout. In consequence of the allowance of time which she had to make to the Zenaire for difference of tonnage the latter was declared to be entitled to the prize.

The next race was for the Town Plate, value £80, given by the inhabitants of Plymouth, for cutters above 20 tons, belonging to any Royal yacht club; £60 to the first, and £20 to the second vessel. As only two were entered—the Annie Lorrens (J. H. Johnson, Esq.), and the Phantom, 27 tons (S. Lane, Esq.)—it resolved itself into a match between them. Mr. Johnson became entitled to the lion's share of the prize.

The third prize—a Plate of £25, given by the tradesmen of the Royal Western Yacht Club, open to yachts of from 10 to 20 tons, belonging to the members of any Royal yacht club, for which three yachts entered—was won by Mr. W. Parry's Folly.

A Cup, value ten guineas, was given by Mr. Pearse, the proprietor of the Royal Hotel, which was won by Mr. Hocking's Ida, 10 tons, beating Mr. Pope's Enigma, also of 10 tons, by 28 minutes.

There were a number of boat-races, which were well contested, besides other amusements, and the whole gave general satisfaction.

On Monday week the Hoe was again crowded with company.

The chief race of the day was for her Majesty's Cup, value £100, given to the Royal Western Yacht Club, open to all yachts of twenty tons and upwards belonging to a Royal yacht club, and bearing the Admiralty warrant. A time-race, half a minute a ton up to sixty tons, and a quarter of a minute above sixty tons. Half Ackers's scale between schooners and cutters. The race was, as before, three times round, making an entire distance of about forty-five miles. The following were the entries :—

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Albertine	155	Lord Londesborough.
Diadem	126	J. W. Carew, Esq.
Arrow	102	T. Chamberlayne, Esq.
Andiad	99	P. B. Johnson, Esq.
Thought	30	F. G. Marshall, Esq.
Phantom	27	S. Lane, Esq.
Mistletoe	119	F. P. Hewitt, Esq.
Annie (Lorrenian)	21	R. Triscott, Esq.

The above presented a goodly list entered for her Majesty's prize, but it was destined to be considerably reduced. The Diadem had carried away her foretopsail on the previous day, had not been able to get her defects made good in time, and she was unable to start. With respect to the Phantom, it was alleged that an illegal bargain had been made in a previous race, and therefore she was scratched from starting for the Queen's prize. The Thought was not up to the mark in time. The start took place at half-past twelve, with a gentle breeze from the W.S.W., the Albertine taking the lead, Annie second, the Arrow third, and the Mistletoe and Andiad close together. The Arrow had no sooner got well under way and set her immense mainsail than she took the first place, the Andiad becoming second, the Albertine third, and the others astern. In this order they proceeded to the east mark, which was passed, and then on to the westward. At the conclusion of the first round the following was the time taken :—

Arrow	2h.	24m. 16s.
Andiad	2	24 34
Albertine	2	28 23
Mistletoe	2	39 21

The Annie was not timed. A splendid race in the second round followed between the Arrow and the Andiad. The following was the time of arrival on the second round :—

Arrow's	4h.	12m.	16s.
Andiad	4	16	37
Albertine	4	23	33

The Mistletoe and Annie were not timed, as they gave up in this round. The trio, being left to themselves, now started for the third round, the Arrow still having the lead. She rounded the eastern mark about three minutes before the Andiad, and then stood across for the western mark; but the master of the Andiad, having a confidence in finding a stiff southerly breeze, went to sea and held his way, and off the western mark weathered the Arrow without tacking, passed her, and soon leaving her a long way to the leeward. With this mistake on the part of the Arrow really terminated the race; for, seeing now that all chance of winning was gone, having, even if first, to make an allowance of time to the Andiad, she struck her flag, and took no further part in the race. The time of arrival was as under :—

Andiad	6h.	42m.	12s.
Albertine	7	40	27

The prize thus fell to Mr. Johnson.

There were several boat-races in the course of the afternoon, the Sallash women, as usual, pulling away in real earnest, and eliciting roars of laughter. In the evening Earl Vane presented the prizes to the fortunate competitors, accompanying the presentations with appropriate remarks.

THE QUEEN'S CUP, WON BY MR. JOHNSON'S AUDAX AT THE ROYAL WESTERN YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

THE QUEEN'S CUP.

Her Majesty has presented to the Royal Western Yacht Club a cup, which, as before stated, was raced for on Thursday week, and won by Mr. Johnson's Audax. We give an Engraving of the Cup, which is massive and elegant, of artistic conception, and of perfect finish. It is supported by the tails of three dolphins whose bodies form the stem, while infant sons o Bodus, seated on their shoulders, urge them to race On the sides of the cup are three medallions—the Sea, represented by Amphitrite; the Earth, by Cybele; and science, by Minerva. The cover is surmounted by a young sophyr balanced on tiptoe, and spreading a light sail to the breeze. On one of the compartments of the base is engraved—"Presented by her Majesty Queen Victoria, 1861;" on another, "Royal Western Yacht Club;" and on a third is inscribed the name of the winner. The admirable design of this cup, which are executed in the completest detail, are due to the artistic genius of Monti, whilst the credit won by the goldsmith is the portion of Mr. Hancock.

REGATTA IN HALIFAX HARBOUR, NOVA SCOTIA.

ON the 1st inst. there was a regatta in the harbour of Halifax, Nova Scotia, the chief race of the day being a sailing match by the Royal Halifax Yacht Club for a cup given by the Prince of Wales, an incident of which forms the subject of our Engraving at page 214. The day," says a local journal, "was one of the warmest we have experienced this season, and the extreme heat in the city rendered a visit to our harbour and its surrounding shores, to enjoy the cool atmosphere from the water and escape the dust, very agreeable, while the aquatic sports formed an attraction which was taken advantage of by the citizens generally for a public holiday. The harbour itself presented on the occasion a most animated scene. Boats and vessels of all descriptions, gaily decorated with flags and filled with pleasure-seekers, dotted the water in every direction, while the Observatory Hill on the dockyard, the heights on the Dartmouth shore, and the wharves in the city, were occupied by countless spectators. These, together with the ships of war of British and France at anchor in the stream, formed a picture of great beauty. The volunteer band added to the attractions in the dockyard by their excellent performances during the day. A large party of the élite of the city partook of the hospitalities of the officers of the Club, and the regatta committee had their head-quarters on board the Pyranus. The steamers Mic Mac and Neptune, crowded with passengers, plied on the harbour during the day. Those in command of both vessels, by their endeavours to follow up the various races, and place their boats in positions where the best view of the sports could be obtained, as well as by often extending their routes below George's Island and far up the Basin, enabled many strangers who were on board to obtain views of the beautiful scenery that abounds on our shores."

The race of the Royal Halifax Yacht Club for the Prince of Wales' Cup being the most exciting contest of the day, we give it the preference. Nine yachts entered for this race, and the following is the result of the match, the vessels starting at 12h. 22m. 30s., returning as follows :—

	H.	M.	S.		H.	M.	S.
Wave	3	7	25	Foam	3	28	53
Petrel	3	20	0	Falcon	3	28	45
Kestrel	3	21	15	Thistle	3	37	34
Musquito ..	3	26	32	Midge	3	40	59

The winning yacht Wave was two hours and thirty-nine minutes in accomplishing the race, which was round Mars Rock Buoy, and beat her closest competitor by nine minutes and forty-seven seconds, after deducting the allowance of time for tonnage. The following schedule gives the time the Wave beat each yacht, after deducting the regulated allowance :—

	M.	S.		M.	S.
Petrel	5	47	Foam	6	8
Kestrel	9	9	Falcon	7	15
Musquito ..	6	17	Thistle	13	49

The yachts started, with a light wind from the S.W., and very little in way of a contest was in fact anticipated, but before the close of the race a breeze sprang up, which was calculated to give the less powerful of the various boats under full canvas. The Wave, entered by Mr. J. B. Crow, won the race in a style which established her beyond a dispute as the fastest boat in the harbour.

The contest next in interest was the rowing match for the championship of the harbour. Only four boats were entered, and this was easily won by the Tangier, owned by Mr. Andrew Barton, and pulled by Mr. Lovett, who formerly held the champion's belt.

Some other races between men-of-wars' gigs, cutters, and whalers, and between fishing-boats, were stoutly contested.

The arrangements for the regatta, and the complete manner in which they were carried out, reflect the highest credit on the members of the Royal Halifax Yacht Club, to whose exertions (says a local paper) the public are indebted for a day's amusement which has never been surpassed.

HEAD-DRESSES OF FRIESLAND WOMEN.

VISITORS to the Scheldt, especially at Ypres or Bruges, cannot fail being astonished at the very remarkable coiffures of the Friesland women, worn more particularly on festive occasions, and glittering in the sun like jewelled helmets, which they strongly resemble. Plates of gold or silver entirely covering the sides of the head are connected by a narrower piece at the back; over this is the cap, while on the forehead and suspended from the ears are rich jewels set with precious stones—frequently diamonds—the hair being worn entirely back from the face. It is not at all uncommon to find females who have little other wealth wearing headdresses worth from 1000 to 1200 florins, but they are heirlooms; each possessor adds what she can to its value, and no Friesland girl, gentle or simple, would consider herself presentable without one.

HEAD-DRESSES OF FRIESLAND WOMEN.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 31, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1107.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861. [TWO SHEETS, FIVEPENCE

CANADA REINFORCED.

OCCASIONALLY we find a politician of the advanced modern school raising the question how far the secrecy and mystery of diplomacy should be suffered to mingle in the administration of a popular Government. The argument that little good can arise from what may be called the secretiveness of a Ministry in England has been strenuously urged. Indeed, the assertion has often gone the length of assuming that in this country positive evil follows the tortuous and occult twistings of those administrators whose training or whose tastes are diplomatic. There can be little doubt, however, that the system thus denounced is inconsistent with the spirit of publicity and the reference to general opinion which prevails among us, and it is seldom applied to matters which concern our home administration; and, though it nominally clings to the conduct of our foreign relations, it is but sparingly applied there, and generally revelation even in this respect is a question of time more or less short. It would seem, nevertheless, that something of the genius of secret diplomacy is influencing her Majesty's Government just now in reference to their policy in North America. The unhappy condition of affairs in the United States would very naturally create in the minds of those responsible for the government of England and her dependencies an appreciation of the necessity of watchfulness over those fair regions of the great western continent which, in a limited and technical sense, owe allegiance to the Queen, but which, in all the qualities and essentials which make up a brotherhood of race and a community of interests, are linked firmly to the old country. It has become the fashion of late for some of the guides of public opinion to lay down very stringent reasons why all our colonies, and Canada especially, should be made to understand that they are to depend solely on themselves for military defence. This dogma has been carried out to the extent of maintaining that, in the event of any aggression on the Canadas on the part of the United States, no military aid or assistance ought to be expected by those colonies from England. The obvious fallacy in this line of argument is the assumption that American invasion of Canada can be a thing per se, and wholly disconnected with an Imperial war. An attempt at the annexation of Canada by the United States as an isolated act, uninvited by the condition and the public feeling of the colony itself, is almost a political impossibility. Such an event implies a predetermination on the part of our Canadian brethren to separate themselves from their mother country; and in such a case it is not likely that England would think it worth her while to enter into a war for the purpose of endeavouring to retain a disaffected and revolted dependency. Any military operations in Canada could only form part of a decided and complete contest between the two great Powers, and then, surely, England would be bound to send her armies in sufficient force into Canadian territory, just as she would send her fleets into those waters which would form the obvious arena of the naval part of the struggle. It is from this point of view, and not on any narrow or mere colonial principle, that the question of the defence of Canada is to be looked at. Hostilities there imply a general and regular war with America. Under these circumstances an army such as that which we sent to the Crimea would be indispensable, and would probably be transported to North America more easily, and certainly with greater speed, than characterised the conveyance of our troops to the Black Sea when we made an attack on the smallest end of the extremity of the Russian Empire.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND: HER MAJESTY EMBARKING AT ROSS CASTLE, LAKES OF KILLARNEY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 249.

It is, therefore, with some misgiving that we look at the course which her Majesty's Government are at this moment pursuing in reference to the movement of troops to Canada. Outside of the Cabinet, the best-informed among us know nothing to justify an expectation of any aggressive movement on our North American colonies by either of the parties that are now rending each other in the so-called United States. Plain people, who judge from facts and observation, imagine that a country engaged in a civil war of the last-named magnitude of which we have probably as yet formed no adequate idea has sufficient employment for its resources in men and money to render any hostile attempt on a neighbouring territory not merely inexpedient but impossible. We have long ere this learned to place at its true value the somewhat blustering assertion of American newspapers that the United States were ready to declare war, not only against England, but against any number of European Powers that dared to interfere in their quarrel even by the expression of an opinion. Unless, then, our Ministry has some secret information which has been wafted hither by the subterranean current of diplomacy, there seems to be no reason why we should again be sending troops to Canada. On a former occasion when a division was sent out, the answer to the inquiries which were made on the subject was that the military force which was then left there to garrison the fortresses which exist in that country, and that the body of troops then dispatched were only adequate for that purpose; and the reasonableness of this statement was to a certain extent acquiesced in. But that argument cannot apply to the future dispatch of those reinforcements of which, it is stated on authority leave this country in a few days. Something has been said about the probability that in the disturbed and disorganised condition of the United States aggression on the Canadian frontier may be attempted by some of those unattached soldiers of fortune who, over the seas, are designated filibusters. Even admitting the likelihood of such predatory incursions—although there is, we imagine, enough of fighting and opportunity for plunder within America itself to satisfy the utmost exigencies of the filibustering part of her population—that is precisely the sort of attack to resist which the colonists ought to rely on themselves. The line of frontier is far too extensive to be defended by any number of Imperial troops that could be sent from this country for such an object; and its defence can only be maintained by local military organisation, for which the Canadians have always shown a sufficient aptitude and an adequate readiness. In fact, ten thousand British troops in Canada would be useless for defence against filibustering; and if the transmission of a few regiments from this country to Canada-West is intended as a warlike measure—that intention it will appear only ridiculous at a moment when in the United States' armies are at least talked of and called out by hundreds of thousands. Perhaps, however, our Transatlantic cousins, who are at this moment not in the most placable or peaceable mood, may find to use the words of the song, that indicrous point of view, and may convert this puny proceeding into a cause of irritation, the tendency of which might be to bring about the very disagreement and ill feeling between England and the United States which Ministerial nervousness seeks to anticipate and to avert by the most premature and least effective of proceedings. Altogether, the line adopted by her Majesty's Government is at once feeble and impolitic, and smacks strongly of that littleness of idea and narrowness of conception which are inevitably generated by a system of secret policy and of personal intrigue.

But the dispatch of a small additional body of troops is not the only indication of some foregone conclusion in the minds of the Government which influences their policy in respect to Canada just now. At the moment when they are making a proposal for a military leader they appoint a new Governor-General of Canada. And who is he? Naturally, at a time when Ministers exhibit something like apprehension with regard to the safety of a great colonial dependency, one expects that, if it is thought necessary to remove a Pro-Consul who has at least had the advantage of a few years' local experience of the country which he is presumed to govern, the very best administrator that could be had would have been selected to succeed him. If the emergency be as serious as our rulers would apparently have us believe, it would not have been enough to say that reasons of family and what the antecedents of the statesman who has been chosen to fulfil eminent functions in a great colony at what we are bound to take on the implied evidence of the Government as acritical and important juncture. The noble Viscount is an Irish Peer, who was member of Parliament for the borough of Portarlington from 1832 to 1837, and a Lord of the Treasury in Lord Palmerston's Government from March, 1855, to March, 1858, since which time he has disappeared from the political world. But in justice it must be said that he was something more than what has been above stated. He was an admirable, a skilful, and an energetic member of the staff of the Parliamentary "whipper-in," and in that capacity was deemed to be a loss to his party when the fortune of a contested election went against him. We believe that he was esteemed as a man of capacity when he was in Parliament, and those it no doubt that he was regular, and displayed no little aptitude for the delicate and somewhat difficult task of "governing men," so far as the duties of "whipping-in" were concerned. Whether he possesses the qualifications for "guiding the State," and whether his previous political occupation was the best embryo out of which was to spring a full-blown Governor-General, remains to be seen. Lord Palmerston seems to be of that opinion, generally speaking; for he also removed the Earl of Mulgrave from the ranks of the Whippers-in to the Government of Nova Scotia.

On the whole we think, however reluctantly, that public opinion will dissent from the policy adopted by the Government in reference to Canada at this moment. If Ministers are in possession of information which leads them to believe that the safety or tranquility of Canada is menaced they are obviously doing too little in transmitting a few thousand men thither, and are pursuing at least a doubtful course in appointing an untried man to the governor-generalship. If they are acting merely on a vague idea they are running the risk of creating the very danger which at present they have only dreamed of.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor and Empress are still at Biarritz. A letter from that place, of the 2nd inst., says:—"Their Majesties, since their arrival here, take daily rides in the country, one unfailing feature of which is making way for them, happy in witnessing the excellent health of the Empress, the Empress, and the Prince Imperial. Every day the Band of the 2nd Regiment of the line executes symphonies before the palace. A charming hall in each day organised, of which the Prince Imperial appears to be the magnet and to which he and the children are at present, the Empress and Empress looking on with evident pleasure. Yesterday the Queen was visited by a host of aristocratic guests to ask a respite from the heat in the sea-breeze. In the evening a display of fireworks was let off at the foot of the Casino, in the presence of upwards of 2000 spectators."

The Moniteur announces the following changes in the diplomatic corps:—The Duke de Grammont, Ambassador at Madrid, will be replaced by the Duc de Grammont, who goes to Vienna. The Marquis de Banneville is appointed to replace the Marquis de Moustier at Constantinople.

Yesterday a telegraph appeared a pamphlet entitled "The Emperor, Rome, and Liberty," which is stated from the same office as the former celebrated pamphlet on Rome, and attributed by the Times correspondent to the pen of the Emperor. Whatever be its official or semi-official character may be, it has been the subject of conversation on all sides. The substance of the pamphlet is given thus:—It is impossible to see actually at Rome anything else but a "Cobden" directed against the King of Italy, the Emperor of the French, evidently hostile to liberty, country, and liberty. Such an invective could be tolerated under the French flag. France is about to withdraw her troops from Rome, but her independence of action will be maintained. There is not a single garrison, either moral or material, which has not been offered by the Italian Ministry to the Holy Father, preferred by the Sovereign Pontiff. If the Court of Rome obstinately persist in refusing an appeal will be made to the Roman people. The Emperor will not be the first to draw the sword against Italy. If Count Cavour will but agree to the proposal of a Congress which the Emperor Napoleon called upon to reign, on the following day the French troops will be withdrawn from Rome. The Congress will be called to publish the accordance agreed upon between him and the Catholic Powers with a view to the independence of the Holy See. The concordat will be revised. From the Papacy will not necessarily be its own inspiration. But it will have no cause of complaint, for who will see more clearly than the Pope that the Emperor has acted with the most delicate regard for the Church; if not, let destiny be accomplished. But Rome will not be less be the capital of Italy."

The Constitutionnel has an article commenting severely upon the recent speech of Lord Palmerston at Dover, on the ground that some of the remarks of the noble Lord were made in reference to the Emperor and France. M. Michel Chevalier follows suit. At the banquet given by the Paris Chamber of Commerce to the Minister of Commerce on the sitting of the Conseil-General, he declared that France is now united and distracted only by the men who are "animated by the purest of motives," and suggested to be complete "to merge on the side of the latter some Ministers of a great nation, renowned for its love of liberty and progress, which has given a whole host of noble advances benevolent to both parties, and which merited a better reference and a more flattering welcome."

The appeal of M. Mires to the Imperial Court, having occupied considerable time in discussion, was disposed of yesterday week by the Court confirming the decree of the Imperial Court of Aix, which judgment the charge of fraud, and also that of fraudulently appropriating the property of the Caisse des Chemins de Fer, because M. Mires restored them in time. As regards the other charges, the Court concurred in the view of the Court of Aix, and the case was on that account quashed. The speech pronounced by the counsel for M. Mirès, and had caused a great scandal and enormous loss to several individuals, affirmed the sentence of imprisonment. M. Mirès was, moreover, condemned in the costs of the appeal. He makes between 30 and 40 appeals in the Court of Cassation.

The produce from the new wheat now being thrashed unfortunately confirms the apprehensions entertained of a deficient harvest in the greater number of the agricultural districts in France. Such a scarcity as increased importation of foreign corn is observable at Marseilles, Bordeaux, Havre, Nantes, Dunkerque, and Strasbourg.

The Moniteur of yesterday week contained an Imperial decree permitting the temporary importation, free of duty, of foreign wheat and corn of any kind, imported into all places, for grinding, under the conditions of the law of July, 1836, and the recent modification of the duties on foreign corn, dated June in June last. The Moniteur of Saturday has published a decree extending the provisions of that of the 22nd of August, 1861, to certain piece-go ods and goods containing a mixture of cotton, silk, and hair.

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Council has received a note from the French Government stating that the scandalous affair which took place lately on the frontier of the canton of Geneva, on the 25th of August, as a violation of French territory. The note of the French Government demands satisfaction on this account, and indemnity to be paid to those wounded and arrested on that occasion.

SPAIN.

The Correspondencia Autografa of Monday says:—"The Cortes will open on the 25th of October. The Speech from the Throne will announce constitutional reforms in accordance with the political views of the Liberal union party."

General Narvaez has been sent to Biarritz to compliment the Emperor in the name of Queen Isabella.

President Geffrard, of Hayti, has paid the indemnity demanded by Spain.

The Epoca of Wednesday contains a remarkable article, in which it says:—"In view of the present state of Europe, the Spanish Cabinet has to consider its honourable conditions, in order to allow of the concentration of the Spanish forces." The Correspondencia Autografa, in alluding to the above article, says that no resolution has yet been taken on the question, but that it is not impossible that the Government entertain those views.

ITALY.

Baron Ricasoli has issued a circular to the Italian Envoys at foreign Courts respecting the state of affairs in Italy. He declares that the Neapolitan disorders are confined to five of the fifteen Neapolitan provinces, and that they are not caused by political discontent, but by a desire for pillage and murder. The brigands, he says, are paid and armed by the ex-King from his safe retreat in Rome, with the open connivance and aid of the Papal Government. Such facts, Baron Ricasoli maintains, furnish an irrefragable demonstration that "the temporal power is not only condemned by the irresistible logic of national unity, but is become incompatible with the civilisation of mankind, which cannot tolerate acts of brigandage to be prepared in the very centre of the Roman Catholic Church with the connivance an f encouragement of the ministers of him who represents God on earth." And therefore this present conduct of the Pope's advisers will aid the Italian Government in fulfilling its task of "rendering to Italy, and at the same time restoring to the Church, liberty and dignity."

The Official Gazette of Monday announces the appointment of Signor Minghetti's resignation, and the nomination of Baron Ricasoli as Minister of the Interior, with the charge, ad interim, of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. The nomination of General Della Rovere to the office of Minister of War appears to have been definitively determined on. Signor Borromeo, Secretary-General to the Ministry of the Interior, has resigned.

M. Bersezio, the new French Minister Plenipotentiary, has been formally received in audience by the King.

News has been received at Turin from Naples announcing that the brigands had been beaten and dispersed at several points, and that their numbers were steadily diminishing. There was every reason to hope that brigandage would be shortly repressed. The anniversary of Garibaldi's entry into Naples is to be celebrated by a fête, to which the Municipality of that city has invited the whole of the army of 20,000 deputies. Bread and flour are to be distributed to the poor on the occasion by the Municipality. The Opinione says:—"The squadron "The English fleet, consisting of nine vessels, which cast anchor at Castellamare, has taken its departure, leaving only the Monarch, the sailors from which landed on the 29th ult. to procure provisions. These disappear all the fears which the presence of the English fleet in the Bay of Naples occasioned."

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The Emperor left Vienna on Wednesday evening for Ischl, and is expected to return on Sunday next, in order to receive the Address of the Lower House of the Reichsrath.

Francis Joseph, in his reply to the Address of the Upper House of the Reichsrath, thanks that body for its confidence and approval, and expresses a hope that the Government will feel, that all the wishes of his people will not die wisdom of his policy.

The Council of Ministers at the Emperor was passed on Tuesday in the Lower House of the Reichsrath. The Polish members abstained from voting.

The Vienna Cabinet is following up the Emperor's dissolution of the Hungarian Diet by dissolving the local councils, which are as refractory as the Diet. On the 30th ult. the meeting of eight counties and the Municipal Corporation of Pesth, have already been dissolved; and the remaining elections in the kingdom will, no doubt, take place the same fate. In Croatia, too, work seems likely to be cut of for the Austrian Ministers; for the Croatian Diet is about to discuss, and will probably pass, a resolution regarding and disregarding the pragmatic sanction of the Magyar Legislature. The Municipality of Pesth has resolved that the municipal officers are not to perform their functions if Austrian civil service measures are employed against them.

The Comitat of Arad has passed a resolution concurring in the protest of the Comitat of Pesth against the dissolution of the Hungarian Diet. It is expected that similar resolutions will also be passed by the other Comitats of Hungary.

RUSSIA AND RUSSIAN POLAND.

Caligonani describes the recent movements of the Emperor and Empress of Russia:—The Emperor arrived at Schwoenley early on the morning of the 23rd inst. At eleven o'clock his Majesty received the 6th division of cavalry with its artillery, and on the following day, after witnessing the manœuvres of the troops, left for the camp. Advices from Odessa announce that great preparations were being made there to receive the Empress Dowager. On leaving Odessa, their Majesties will go to Nicolaiev, where they will be present at the launching of two steam corvettes, and will visit the works of construction now in progress on the Bug. From Nicolaiev they will go to Sakski-Seral, Simpheropol, Sebastopol, and will afterwards stay for some time at the Castle of Livadia, on the Black Sea, which stands on the south coast of the Crimea, built by the late Emperor for the Empress Alexandra, the mother of the present Emperor. Their Majesties will also visit Theodosia, a port on the Black Sea, which is the last possessions of the great southern trunk line of the Russian railways, the town of Kertch, and the Sea of Azoff, at the entrance of the Sea of Azoff.

The latest advices regarding the financial position of Russia continue bad. Silver is with difficulty to be obtained, and the present issue is in a depreciated currency of 72 paris fine to the 84 of the old currency. General business is very dull, and the chief subject of conversation is the probable effect of the emancipation of the serfs. The most gloomy spirit is manifested by the Russian merchants themselves, and those who look for much eventual good, speak of great intermediate difficulties. The harvest in Central Russia is poor. The Baltic has remained on the 12th of August, but the steamboat was not to sail and it was anticipated that it would pass off badly. After the 1st of January, 1862, the attention of the Czar has risen on ten. The present duties for of wood are 75 and 40 kopecks per hundred weight. These duties are to be reduced to 25 and 15 kopecks, while the duties for tea are raised by ten to 81. Petersburg are to be 60 and 30 kopecks per Russian lb. Notwithstanding the difference of duty, it is anticipated that tea from England via St. Petersburg will come cheaper than the overland tea, and this fear was the cause of the sale of the whole of the Mincing Lane 12,000,000lb. of tea are said to be sent via Kiachta annually, partly by caravan and partly by boat, and are usually six months on the road. The railway from Moscow to Vladimir, about half the distance, is now open. The remaining 220 verst, or 146 miles, are in course of construction, and if finished as expected, will be opened for the public next year. There is good steam communication on the Volga, as also on the Caspian Sea.

The Russian Government has just given strict orders to the superior administration of railways to finish and open for circulation, in the course of November next, the whole line from St. Petersburg to Warsaw.

Fresh anti-Russian demonstrations are stilly continued at Warsaw, in spite of the threats and persuasions of the Russian authorities. On Tuesday (in August) the mourning was general, the churches and funeral services were held in the churches and synagogues in memory of the persons who were recently slain by the Russian soldiery at Wilna during popular manifestations on the celebration of the anniversary of Poland's union with Lithuania.

TURKEY.

A grand review has been held at Constantinople in honour of General Colofagine. The soldiers of the forced loan has begun in the provinces. Strong reinforcements have been dispatched to the Herzegovina. A revolt has ratified to the Government. It has commenced operations on Sunday against the insurgents, in dealing with whom he promised that the greatest possible leniency would be used.

Accounts from Ostend state that the King of Prussia was enjoying great health, and that his Majesty was to leave on the 8th to join the Queen at Coblentz.

ALPINE CLIMBING.—A letter in the Times from Mr. W. Mathews, the successful ascender of Monte Viso, gives the following account of his ascent:—"Mr. F. W. Jacomb and myself, accompanied by Michel Croz, Christian Almer, and two guides engaged at Pierre Meyer, at the junction of the Val de Valloire and Porcellins, and left a little after 2 o'clock on Saturday last, passed the night at one of the intermediate peaks of the mountain. This, unfortunately, turned out to be not away from the top, as we found on the morrow that we could not reach it without a night's rest. We had unfortunately left my tent at Turin, in order to be as little encumbered as possible. To remove all excuse, I could not resist the temptation upon each, and placed one of Cassin's Alpine umbrellas therein. In the more elevated of the two. The upper day was perfectly cloudless, and it is now compelled the Pennine Alps from Monte Rosa to Monte Blanc, the whole of the Graians, the mountains of Dauphiné, and the Maritime Alps nearly as far as Genoa. The eastern portion of the panorama was marred by the unfortunate circumstance—the exceedingly hot weather which has prevailed here for many months has caused such a haze in the atmosphere that the plain of Piedmont was very indistinct, so much so that we could not see Turin. In addition to this, a provoking thunderbank hung over the edge of the Maritime Alps, and shut out the Mediterranean, which, under more favourable circumstances, would have been visible.

SEPT. 7, 1861.]

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

By the arrival of the Nova Scotian at Londonderry, from Quebec, we have intelligence from New York to the 23rd ult.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS.

There has been another panic, real or pretended, among the military authorities at Washington, caused by a rumoured intended crossing of the Potomac by the enemy below Washington, and an advance upon the Federal capital. It said that there was a fleet of launches and flat boats near Acquia Creek, which were to be used in transporting Confederate troops across the river. The Governors of ten States were ordered to send immediately whatever troops they had, whether telegraphed to and on transferred, or not, in squads or companies, as they occupied, armed, uniformed, or not, in squads or companies, as they could best be. These messages caused great alarm in the North, and created much confusion in the ordinary business. The apprehended attack speedily stimulated the recruiting business. The apprehended attack was, however, never made, and the transport fleet vanished into thin air.

There have been some more manifestations of an insubordinate spirit among the New York Regiments at Washington. The Irish Regiment among the New York Regiments at Washington. The Irish Regiment made manifestations which were suppressed with General M'Clellan's usual vigour.

In Missouri there have been two skirmishes favourable to the Federalists. The town of Commerce in the south-eastern portion of that State has been taken and retaken, and a Federal steamer plying on the Mississippi fired into and sunk. General M'Culloch was not killed in the engagement of Dug Springs, as had been reported.

In the territory of New Mexico the Confederates have been active; 1500 of these have compelled the surrender of Major Lynd and a regiment of Federal troops garrisoning Fort Fillmore.

The privateer Sumter, though often reported captured, was still at liberty off Lagunaya, Venezuela. The Venezuelan Government had offered her admittance into port, and had sent a vessel to retake two United States' ships which the Sumter had taken.

THE BLOCKADE.

Commander Hickey, of H.B.M. steamer Gladiator, has complained to Commodore Stringham that the blockade is left open at four points on the coast of North Carolina.

THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

The new cotton crop, about the destiny of which there is so much uneasiness in Europe, is now being picked.

A letter from a well-known South Carolinian in Virginia, dated the 12th ult., says of the condition of the army: "The supplies of clothing are not wanted, but the destitution of the soldiery in clothing and food is terrible; many applications are made to us by men in health, who wish to procure blankets, for the want of which, drawers, shoes, or undershirts. It will require every nerve to be strained by you and ourselves here to meet the exigencies of the fall and winter should the war last over so long."

The Governors of several States have issued proclamations, addressed to the female part of the community, begging them to employ their time in knitting socks for the army, and calling for a subsidy of blankets. The Charleston Courier says that the appeal is disapproved through the army, and that over 3000 are ill.

Half of the colleges in the South have suspended operations, the students having enlisted for the war.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

On the 20th ult. the Wheeling Convention passed an ordinance creating the new State of Kanawha, out of 26 counties. The boundary, as fixed, includes thirty-one counties of the Trans-Alleghany region of Virginia. A provisional government was appointed, and the people of those counties to come in, if they desire, by the vote of a majority polling ten counties to provide for the election of delegates to a convention to form a constitution. On the 21th proximo the question "For a new State" or "Against a new State" will be submitted to the people for their votes. Attorney-General Bates highly disapproves of the policy of dismembering the State of Virginia, because in counternances a policy of dismembering the State of Virginia, because in counteracting the ordinance of secession was contrary to the Constitution. The Administration desired that the birth of the new State should be consummated only by the assent of the loyal people of Western Virginia should continue to maintain the position they were the true Government of Virginia, so that the Federal Government might seem to be fighting under the additional sanction of the State Government.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Seward has issued an order establishing a passport system for foreign travel. No person will henceforth be allowed to go abroad from a port in the United States without a passport, and no one will be allowed to land in the United States without a passport from a Minister or Consul of the United States; or, if a foreigner, from his own Government, countersigned by some Minister or Consul. This regulation is not to take effect in regard to vessels now about to depart until a reasonable time shall have elapsed for it to become known in the country from which they proceed.

Numerous petitions from the Federal prisoners at Richmond have been received by the President praying for a recognition of the Confederate Government as belligerents so far as to allow of the exchange of prisoners. The President is, however, firmly opposed to doing any act which shall have the appearance of recognising the Confederates as either States or nations.

In order not to give ground for any retaliatory proceedings, no trial of privateers, nor any prisoner captured by the Government on a charge of treason, will take place until the conclusion of the contest.

THE NORTHERN STATES.

The Federal Government had arrested at Philadelphia Mr. Piere Butler (the husband of Fanny Kemble), William B. Reed, the late U. S. Postmaster-General in China, and several other prominent citizens, for holding treasonable intercourse with the enemy.

Mr. Russell's description of the flight from Bull Run had been republished in the principal Northern journals. The New York World calls it "graphic and truthful," and the organ of the Secretary sent him a letter of good fare, but editorial comments on the character of the affair are looked upon with less favour.

A persecution of the peace-party newspapers has suddenly sprung up. In Portland (Maine), Concord (New Hampshire), and Easton (Pennsylvania), the materiel of peace-party newspapers has been destroyed. The Harrisburg (Penn.) Patriot editor has had his office forcibly entered, ridden on a rail, and forced to take an oath that he would write no more articles opposed to the war. In New York the Day Book and Brooklyn the five journals in favour of peace have been persecuted by the grand jury of the district as guilty of treason. One of these journals is a Catholic organ, The Freeman's Journal, on one of the Presbyterians, has been seized in New York for a virulent article on the war, which means a "virulent" article in favour of peace. The office in Philadelphia of the New York Daily News has for similar reasons been suppressed, and the United States' Marshal for Connecticut on the arrival at the mail train from New York, seized every copy of this journal, including all its Southern and Western circulation. Similar proceedings have been taken against the Hartford Courant, Connecticut.

The Democratic party in the United States refuses all offers of union with the Republicans, but is hopelessly divided into a war and peace section. They seem generally to condemn the suspension by the President of the writ of habeas corpus.

Prince Napoleon and suite have passed through Cleveland and Detroit on their way to Lake Superior. At the latter city he was to be the guest of General Cass.

The Bank of England notes reported in our last to have been seized on the person of a Mr. Scrill, a passenger to New York by the Persia, and supposed to be an agent of the Confederate Government, turn out to have been Bank post bills, of no value without Mr. Scrill's endorsement.

COMMERCE AND FINANCE.

The export of breadstuffs from New York to France begins to be large.

The Boston banks will only take 10,000,000 dollars instead of 15,000,000 dollars of the new loan, as at first agreed upon by the Boston negotiation at New York. The New York banks immediately assumed the subscription for the extra sum.

In the year ending June 30, 1861, California exported—of wheat, 3,305,114 bushels, and of barley and oats, 694,000 bushels more.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received at Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

ITALY.—Turin, Sept. 5.—The Opinions of to-day says:—"The dispatch of fresh troops to Naples is solely caused by the fatigue which the troops there have to undergo, and not by the augmentation of brigandage, which is almost entirely at an end."

Naples, Sept. 5.—The Pungolo of to-day publishes news from the frontiers announcing that a band of 500 brigands had set out from Velletri in the direction of the province of Terra di Lavoro.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna, Sept. 5.—The Lower House of the Reichsrath has resolved that the Government fail for the reform of the administration of justice.

HUNGARY.—Pesth, Sept. 5.—The Royal Commissioner has been summoned by the Hungarian Chancellor to appoint and to dismiss municipal functionaries, to himself assume the administration of the Comitat and of the Royal Free Cities, and to proceed to the election of a Diet at Debreczin. The Hungarian Chancellor declares at the same time, however, that the Emperor has no intention of suspending the Hungarian Constitution.

Temesvar, Sept. 5.—An insurrectionary movement has broken out among the Roumains at Lugos. No details as yet known.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Convocation of Canterbury was yesterday week prorogued by the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Travers Twiss, to Wednesday, the 23rd proximo.

On Thursday week, being the twentieth anniversary of its consecration, the parish church of Leeds was reopened, having been thoroughly repaired.

The reopening of Fressenhall Church, Suffolk, after its rebuilding, took place on the 29th ult., the nave and porch, mainly at the cost of Mr. Brooke, of Ribbon Park, took place on the 23rd ult.

The foundation-stone of a new Presbytery church and schools was laid last week in the parish of St. Leonard, Bromley, Middlesex, of which Mr. John Walker, M.R.I.A., is the pastor.

The Archbishop of York has been presented to the Rev. E. T. Sylvester, from the parishioners of Huntingworth, on resigning the curacy, out to the Rev. Robert B. Rolfe, M.A., from the parishioners of Sutton, Yorkshire.

The Bishop of London held a confirmation at Lucerne on Sunday. His Lordship was met at the Mont Cenis. The Bishop's Confirmation tour will last about six more weeks.

On Thursday, Aug. 22, the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells consecrated the new church of St. Mary Magdalene, Bathwick, erected by special services, on the completion of the work of restoration commenced in the autumn of 1859.

The Ordination which had been intended by the late Lord Bishop of Durham to be held on the 22nd of September next, is postponed, in consequence of the lamented prelate having left his first Ordination at Chirstmas.

The Bishop of Lichfield will hold the quadrennial Visitation of his diocese according to the following arrangement:—Monday, Sept. 23, Lichfield Cathedral; Tuesday, Sept. 24, Mary Pillatres, Walsall; Thursday, Sept. 26 the Collegiate Church of Wolverhampton; Wednesday, Oct. 2, Stoke-upon-Trent.

UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—Two scholarships at Durham University, of the annual value of £50, are vacant, and will be open to competition to students in arts. The examination will begin Oct. 15.

The transcribing of the scholars at St. Paul's School is unavoidably postponed till the 10th of September.

The Rev. Dr. Jeune, Master of Pembroke, has been appointed to the Head Mastership of Repton Grammar School, Derbyshire, vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Wilson.

The Queen's Scholarship at the University of the Welsh Collegiate Institution at Llandovery.

There was a numerous meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in the Round-room of the Dublin Rotunda on Tuesday, which was attended by the Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Down, Dr. Whateley, M.P., and the Bishop of Oxford, who spoke at great length. In the course of his speech the latter said that Rev. Dr. Jeune, Master of Pembroke, at the meeting were offered to the Archbishop and the Bishop of Oxford for their acceptance, and the valuable request given to the society. The resolution was carried by acclamation.

PREFERENCES AND APPOINTMENTS.—Rectories: The Rev. J. Cole to St. Thomas Exeter; Rev. W. A. Cornewall to Macon, Hereford; Rev. W. De Quetteville to Brinkworth; Rev. W. J. Hall to Ashton Keynes; Rev. J. Hall to Ashton Keynes; Rev. J. Tilson to Bedford, Leicestershire; Rev. F. H. Jeune, Pembroke, Oxford, to Repton, Derbyshire; Rev. R. K. Cobbold to Bermer to Gorleston, Norfolk; Rev. H. Gilling to Pickhead, Somersetshire; Rev. R. Hall to Bishop's Cleeve, Gloucestershire; Rev. J. Hall to Christ's Hurst to Holy Trinity, Guildford; Rev. J. Hall to Newton Purcell, Oxfordshire; Rev. J. Hall to Shelton. Curacies: Rev. R. A. Cobbold to Long Melford, Suffolk; Rev. J. Dyer to Ashton Keynes; Rev. W. Hall to Bishop's Cleeve; Rev. J. Richardson to Saxmundham, Suffolk.—Deaneries, &c.

The Brazil mail announces several mercantile failures at Rio, one of which is said to be for £1,000,000.

THE FIRE IN THE BANK OF ROCKALL BANK.—The Irish Times supplies us with the following information respecting "The Fishermen's Friends," described in our last number as "a floating light-ship and watchment":—"The Rockall Bank was until known comparatively few years since both to the Dutch and to the Irish fishermen, who frequented the neighbourhood of the Dogger Bank which were called at Govan; the magazine's shop, near the Rockall Bank, which was called at Govan; the magazine's shop, near the Rockall Bank, which was called at Govan; the magazine's shop, near the Rockall Bank, which was

NEW FLOATING-DOCKS AT BRITANNIA, NEAR NEATH. GLAMORGANSHIRE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

OPENING OF NEW DOCKS IN GLAMORGANSHIRE.

THE new floating docks at Britonferry, two miles from Neath, and forming a portion of that port, were opened on Thursday afternoon, the 22nd ult. They were commenced eight years ago by the late Mr. Brassel, and have just been completed, at a cost of £160,000, in a most efficient manner, by the contractor, Mr. Ritson. There is a wharfage of twenty-three acres, and a frontage of some seventeen acres. The machinery was erected by the firm of which Sir William Armstrong is the head; and there are three hydraulic machines for the use of the dock, three hydraulic machines for the use of the dock, three hydraulic cranes in docks for supplying coal, and a ballast crane in the tidal basin.

Business was entirely suspended in the borough of Neath on the opening day, and a procession of the Corporation, harbour commissioners, directors of the South Wales and Vale of Neath Railway Company, Freemasons' Order, and trading inhabitants, the members' neighbourhood, formed rank of the town and neighbourhood, formed to Britonferry, at the mouth of Swansea Bay, where the new floating docks are erected. There were accompanied by the 2nd Glamorgan Artillery, the 15th and 17th Glamorgan Rifles, and the celebrated Cyfarthfa band. The first shipment of coal took place at two o'clock, when the artillery fired a Royal salute, and, singular to say, a Yankee built ship, the May Benson, 500 tons, received the first cargo for the Great Eastern, lying at Liverpool. A public breakfast took place at three o'clock, when two hundred sat down, under the presidency of Alexander Cubbleston, Esq., the Mayor of Neath; J. S. Cope, Esq., town clerk, officiating as vice. H. H. Vivian, Esq., M.P.; A. S. Ayrton, Esq., M.P.; Admiral Warde, and other influential local men, supported the chair. Although the weather was unfavourable, the attendance was great. The Annie Vernon, 800 tons, lay in dock, and, with the other vessels, was gaily decorated on the occasion.

THE BISHOP ELECT OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL.

THE Rev. William Thomson, D.D., Provost of Queens' College, Oxford, Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and preacher of Lincoln's Inn, has been appointed to the Bishopric of Gloucester and Bristol, rendered vacant by the translation of Dr. Baring to that of Durham. Dr. Thomson entered at Queens' College, Oxford, as a commoner, in 1826. In 1827 he gained a scholarship, and took his B.A. in 1830. In 1842 he published "An Outline of the Laws of Thought," which has gone through five editions, and has been reprinted in America, and which gave him a very high position among logicians. In 1843 he proceeded to the degree of M.A., and successively became Fellow, Tutor, Dean, and Bursar of the college. In 1849 and 1855 he was appointed select preacher, and in 1853 Bampton lecturer, and the crowded church at each of his sermons proved how much his lectures were appreciated by the University. The course was published in 1851, under the title of "The Atoning Work of Christ." Dr. Thomson, according to "Crockford's Clerical Directory," also published several pamphlets on "An Open Colloes Rest for All," "Scriptural Teaching the Safeguard against Crime," "The Law and the Gospel" (the two last assize sermons), "The Transfiguration." On the resignation of Dr. Baring, now Bishop of Durham, he was appointed Rector of All Souls', Langham-place, and shortly afterwards was elected provost of Queens' College. In 1856 he proceeded to the degree of B.D. and D.D. In 1858 he was elected preacher to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, an office of high distinction. He has also been for three years one of the chaplains in ordinary to the Queen, and has recently published a volume of "Lincoln's Inn Sermons." Dr. Thomson is a delegate of the University press and also of the Museum. In 1853 he married Zoë, daughter of Mr. J. H. Skene, British Consul at Aleppo.

Our Portrait of Dr. Thomson is taken from the "Church of England Photographic Portrait Gallery."

DR. THOMSON, BISHOP DESIGNATE OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL.

ANOTHER FEARFUL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

WHILST a Coroner's jury is inquiring into the causes of the recent fatal accident on the London and Brighton line a collision, nearly as terrible in its consequences, has occurred on the Hampstead Junction Railways—a line which, with the North and South Western branch, connects Kew with the North London Railway running into the City. This line, which has been opened within the last two years, joins the North London at Camden-road station, and passes thence through Camden-town and Kentish-town, by Hampstead, and so on to Kew, where it runs close to the South-Western line, over which passengers wishing to proceed to Richmond are conveyed without a change of carriages. The Hampstead Junction line is much used by goods' traffic from the City to Kew, Richmond, and Twickenham, and on Sundays and Mondays throughout the summer season not only do the ordinary trains ply well, but there are excursions constantly.

On Monday there were two or more special trains to Kew; and it was to one of these the dreadful accident occurred, the details of which we subjoin.

In its course from the Camden-road station of the North London Railway the junction line is curved in several places, and passes close to the rear of the houses till it crosses the Carlton-road, in Kentish-town. It then enters the fields, and for about a quarter of a mile runs at the back of the houses on the east side of Carlton-road, and between them and the main road through Kentish-town, which leads to Highgate rise. A few hundred yards further on in the Hampstead direction is the Kentish-town station, the first on the line after it leaves Camden-road. The Hampstead station is about half a mile beyond the Kentish-town. From Hampstead to the point at which the line crosses Carlton-road it forms an arc of considerable level. The collision took place at some dozen yards nearer to the Kentish-town station than a bridge over what is at present a path from Carlton-road to the Kentish-town road. Down to this bridge from the town and the rails are laid on a road supported by brickwork arches, which are about 35 ft. high. From the bridge to the Kentish-town station there is an embankment of about the same height, and from the Kentish-town station to Hampstead a deep cutting. The company is at present erecting an extensive coal depôt adjoining the Kentish-town station, and a train of trucks is engaged daily in bringing up ballast from Bushey for making the siding which is to lead from the main line into the coal-shed. When these trucks deliver their ballast they proceed up the line to the bridge over the pathway before referred to. At this point there is the usual apparatus for shunting them in on the down line, and they return to the Kentish-town station, and so on to Bushey.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT AT KENTISH-TOWN, ON THE HAMPSTEAD JUNCTION LINE—SCENE OF THE DISASTER ON MONDAY NIGHT.

On Monday evening, at about twenty minutes past seven o'clock, the men in charge of the ballast-train had delivered their loads, and proceeded on the bridge, on which they were busily engaged, when a passenger-train was seen to be coming up at a rapid pace along the line from which the ballast-train was moving slowly. The driver of the latter had lighted his lamps, and when he saw the other train approaching he waved a red light and shouted. The driver of the former in his turn blew his whistle, but the precaution was in vain. About half the trucks of the ballast-train had crossed to the down line, and about midway it was met by the passenger-train. The screams, as witnessed from the fields below, was terrific. Immediately the engine had struck the trucks, and shivered them into atoms, it leaped from the rails with a sort of half-pull, half-bound, and, with one hound to a distance of fully half a mile, and rolled down the embankment on its own side of the line with a hideous dull sound and one or two frightful screeches. The carriages which followed ran on a few feet, but just at the spring of the bridge the hinder part of the engine right over it was followed by four carriages in which were a number of passengers. The first two carriages jumped clean into the line of rails, they lay on their sides, one over the other. The next came with its end upon the second of the two carriages which had broken off from the train in this manner, and when the train came to a standstill this third carriage remained poised in the position in which it had fallen upon the others. Its coupling-irons not having broken, it dropped the fourth carriage half over the side of the bridge, in which position it remained half suspended, but with its hind wheels still on the rails.

The inhabitants of the neighbourhood instantly ran to the spot. The moans of the dying, the cries of the wounded, and the lamentations of those who missed their relatives, were to be heard on every side. The ends of the first two carriages had been broken by the fall, and several of the passengers were at once pulled out. They were in a state of bleeding to a frightful extent. In some instances it was impossible to recognise a face, feature, and the unfortunate sufferers could not utter a word. There were a great many young children and babies in the train, and the screams of several of them were to unrending in the extreme. "Mother!" "Mother!" "My child!" "My child, my infant!" were cries that assailed the ears from every direction. Many women, on being released from the carriages, fainted away, or fell into a perfectly listless swoon. At the time the passengers who had escaped with a whole limb, or had received only slight bruises, were running frantically down the embankment; and terrified women and men were throwing themselves over the fencing and into the fields, regardless of where they did come to them so that they got out of the line of the fated train. The engine by on its side, still puffing, and with steam rushing from its pipes. Near it was a second-class carriage, the inmates, who had fallen with it. He seemed much injured, and was carried off to an hospital.

By this time it was getting quite dusk, and necessarily there was the additional element of confusion added to those others that contributed to make the scene such as has been rarely witnessed on our railway collisions. The families residing in the neighbourhood sent for doctors and conveyances for the wounded. Many of the latter were taken to the cards of the residences of medical men, but others requested to be allowed to lie in the fields, if only a drop of water could be procured for them. In this dreary manner some of the dead and maimed lay. A strong body of men from the Kentish-town and Camden-town police stations arrived, but the number of cabs and waggons on the ground was but at eight o'clock it was dark and no gas near. Light was all important, and the results of the break which had fallen over were set to be. There was a cry that some of the passengers were missing. Search was immediately instituted. The line was gone on its side, pulling out its steam carriages were hanging in a position that made them appear as if they were just about to fall to the ground; and, most melancholy of all, from under the first carriage that had come over the bridge were seen visible the head of a man and the arms and arms of another. The police and others at once set about attempting to extricate them who remained inside; but a lifeless body was all that was taken out. They had already been half an hour in a carriage that had fallen some 35 or 40 feet, and over which lay another that had come down with the full weight from the same height. The roof and sides of the passenger-train were much scalded and battered. The engine of the ballast-train remained on the line unmoved by the collision, and none of the men in charge of it appear to have been injured.

The train the return journey of which has brought desolation and sorrow to so many homes consisted of nine carriages and a carriage beside the break-van which followed the engine. It is stated that the engine and seven officers and inspectors of the London and Brighton of the North London Company.

There were many thousands of people collected in the fields and up the embankment at each side of the bridge. Two or three of the smashed carriages formed one monster fire that shot up for it rose to an immense height. The wounded lay here and there awaiting assistance. Men were engaged in dragging corpses from under wheels and axles, and from out of carriages, and laying them on the grass embankment. Gentlemen and ladies carried water-cans, bottles, and other vessels, and were seen giving liquid drinks which the wounded eagerly drank and asked for. Many ladies ran about with linen for the doctors to bandage the wounded; and themselves assisted in the kind office. The police men with their batons kept a good look for fear there was anything the injured to the cabs, vans, and carts, which were now drawn up in a line to the bridge, according and to Kentish-town police-station. Here the women, and children were running with lamps and lighted candles to what, without the slightest exaggeration, may be termed a field of carnage.

At the time of our going to press the number of killed on the spot and during conveyance to hospitals was twelve, of whom three are joined injuries in every degree these are reckoned nearly a hundred.

The coroner's inquiry into the fatal accident on the London Chatham was formally opened on Wednesday. The jury, in the first instance, proceeded to the different hospitals to view the bodies of those who had perished, and they were then conducted to the scene of the catastrophe, which they carefully surveyed. Subsequently they received evidence as to the identity of the unfortunate sufferers, and the inquiry was then adjourned till Friday (yesterday).

We give an illustration of the scene of this disastrous event—upon very critical and public grounds. It is not our custom to minister to any morbid taste for the delineation of horrors; but in the instance we believe that no means should be left untried to open the minds of the people of this country the now obvious and absolute necessity of legislative and administrative interference in the conduct of railways. Fully admitting the principle of self-government in the conduct of our affairs, and deprecating, as a rule, an organised system of Government, interwoven in undertakings which are the result of private commercial genius and the natural issues of our national wealth, yet, when it has been clear that the management of railway companies is such that it is inadequate to the due safety of the lives of those who commit themselves to its care, the question arises whether it is high time for legislation to create responsibility somewhere. At present responsibility is as shifting as a quicksand, and it is impossible to fix it on any person or body upon whom pay huge of a heavy penalty for the awful fatal regularity at this period of the year accidents (as they are constantly designated) occur on railways, and more than one case of excursion-trains, accompanied by absolute slaughter of passengers, and we have lists of killed and wounded that read like bulletins of great battles. Coroners' inquests follow, in the course of which practised legal ingenuity is allowed to turn personal or corporate responsibility into a will-o'-the-wisp, which evades the most active pursuit, and in the end perhaps some wretched engine-driver—if one survives—or some miserable pointsman or signalman, has a verdict of manslaughter recorded against him; the money of the shareholders is appropriated to pay a certain amount of compensation—in the case of excursionists, probably computed at a minimum rate—and the matter passes out, the limbs of nine-days' wonders, leaving the system exactly where it stood. It is evident that the only part of the traffic of railways which is exceptional and requires the most accurate and careful supervision—viz., excursion trains—is the least attended to. These trains, with their almost countless passengers, are wedged into the ordinary traffic, and it is left to the discretion and the more or less skill and sensitivity of mechanical officials to guide them in and out of the way of the usual occupants of the lines; so that their safety often, if not always, depends on a single contingency which may be estimated by comparison with a hair's breadth. The matter has really come to this, that if private enterprise cannot provide, and cannot, in the strict sense of the term, be made responsible for the safety of persons for the convenience of whom tory have a practical monopoly, we must give up this branch of the theory of self-government and substitute for it the despotic authority of a Government department.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 8.—Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY.—Corporation Reform, 1839.
TUESDAY.—Battle of Assaye, Mahratta War, 1803.
WEDNESDAY, 11.—Siege of Delhi, 1857. Moon's first quarter, 1h. 19m., p.m.
THURSDAY, 12.—Fifty-four lost in the Central American steamer.
FRIDAY, 13.—Charles James Fox died, 1806.
SATURDAY, 14.—Duke of Wellington died, 1852.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 14, 1861.

Day of Week	Morning.							Evening.
	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
Monday	1	0	1	30	2	0	2	30	1	30	2	0	2	30
Tuesday	2	0	2	30	3	0	3	30	2	30	3	0	3	30
Wednesday	3	0	3	30	4	0	4	30	3	30	4	0	4	30
Thursday	4	0	4	30	5	0	5	30	4	30	5	0	5	30
Friday	5	0	5	30	6	0	6	30	5	30	6	0	6	30
Saturday	6	0	6	30	7	0	7	30	6	30	7	0	7	30

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

Speeches, &c. in the Debate on the Management of the Affairs of India, during the Recess. Edited by A. Hendriks. Smith, Elder, & Co.
Sermons. By D. H. Wheeler, D.D. Smith, Elder, & Co.
Handy Book of Parliamentary Library Lists. By Thomas Byerley. Smith, Elder, & Co.
Memory of Angus Reach, with Selections. By Dr. Hogg. Hamilton, Adams, & Co.
Lectures on Education. By H. G. Hodgson, Worksop.
Lectures on Mathematical Subjects. The Rt. Hon. Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart. Macmillan & Co.
Lectures on Physical Subjects. By Professor Tyndall. Longman & Co.
Memoir of the Chevaliers, Knights, and Knighthood. By W. Bullock. Kent & Co.
Memoir of the Chevaliers, Knights, and Knighthood. By W. Bullock. Kent & Co.
Memoirs of an Unknown Lady. Hamilton, Adams, & Co.
Military Memoirs of Wardlaw. By Gordon Rhoss. Two volumes. Smith and Elder.
Old Scottish Regiments. Published by the Scott Knickerbocker Museum. By E. Lockwater. Smith and Elder.
Poems. By Lord Lytton. Two volumes. Routledge and Elder.
Sermons in the Illustration of the Autumnal Months. By Rev. Thomas Dale. Bell & Daldy.
Sermons. By Rev. Charles Kingsley. New Edition. Revised by J. H. Parker. Longmans.
Sermons Preached in Lincoln's Inn. By C. L. Lewis. Saunders, Richardson.
Sermons. By Rev. J. Vaughan. Seeley & Co.
Sermons Preached in the Parish Church of Clayton Wilson." Rest and Co.
Sermons Preached by the late Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. Third Edition. Vol. II. H. Rest and Co.
The Life and Letters of Capt. the Hon. E. Herbert, Scots Fusilier Guards. By Alexander M. Kenneth. Smith and Elder.
The Life of Napoleon III. Smith and Elder.
The Life of Napoleon III. Smith and Elder.
Theories. By Martin F. Tupper. Routledge and Elder.
Travels.
Universal History of the Queen of Heaven. Under Tents. XV. Edited from Rare and Unpublished Manuscripts. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.
Wheeler's Narrative of War and Wonder in Jest. By L. Hendry. Butterworths.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861.

THE speech of Mr. Fairbairn, the new President of the British Association, if it could hardly lay claim to Cicero's definition of eloquence, "to speak appropriately to the point," is, at any rate, assert its right to be distinguished as a masterly resume of all the recent achievements of science, or of what has come to be technically called "applied science." It is singular that in an age of science and progress the blind superstition of the vulgar should receive such a remarkable check-dation; but so it is. Planetary influences are reckoned among the list of medieval superstitions; but here we are reminded of recent discoveries, in connection with the triple or quadruple atmosphere of the sun, which modern science has discovered to be the cause of the phenomena of this planet. We are told that We are glad that the interior of Africa has received prominent attention. Here—as we have ever held—is an unreaped field ripe for the sickle, and wanting nothing but husbandmen. The new era in naval warfare was not likely to escape such an eye as that which belongs to Mr. Fairbairn, but we have little or nothing more than what all candid scientists men have said these many months past—we are really only "feeling our way." Government took a quarter of a million at the close of the Session in behalf of fire new-breed frigates—of these, three have just been ordered from firms of recognised standing, and some concession has been made to the unquestionable results of the experiments on Mr. Jones's targets by an increased inclination in the sides of the ships in question; but it is remarkable that nothing is being, or even spoken of, as being done in the way of the orders in question, other orders have come out for experiments at Shoeburyness which will go to the very root of the question whether the sides of such vessels as that wonderful structure now lying at Greenhithe are really capable of resisting the impact of the heaviest shot. We shall soon be build our ships first and test their principles afterwards. We are not singular, however. Has the armour of the Glolre or the Normandie ever been subjected to the hammering of an Armstrong at six hundred yards? We venture to answer, very confidently, in the negative.

The proceedings of coroners' inquests, are necessarily slow, and in cases like those under investigation in connection with the frightful disasters at the Clayton Tunnel and on the Hampstead Junction Line unusually tedious, for obvious reasons. So many witnesses have to be summoned from every quarter, so many surveys and views have to be made, so many documents to be ferreted out and produced, so much questioning and cross-questioning is allowed—for a coroner's jury is not supposed to be bound by the same code of rules which controls its cognate body in a nisi prius case—that double or treble the time is required for arriving at a conclusion which would suffice an ordinary—and hungry—jury under any other circumstances, so that we may have yet to wait some time for a verdict even on the first of these two catastrophes. Enough, however, has been eliminated, so far, to hear out fully the remarks we ventured last week. The traffic on the Brighton line has increased from two millions and a half in 1846 to nine millions and a half in 1860, and the same single pair of lines does duty still for a full fourfold traffic!

The register of contagious cases was started. Two monstrous fires, in which commercial produce in the east of London suffered greatly, have been followed by one which for some hours threatened a heavy blow at all literary interests. That exceedingly narrow lane on both sides of which cluster numbers of our leading publishers, whose warehouses are stored with a very inflammable kind of material in the shape of books, bound and unbound, has been the scene of one of those sudden and mysterious outbursts which for the nonce appear to baffle all experience and all official vigilance. Happily, a calm night and unwearied exertions of the fire brigade succeeded in arresting the disaster in time; but the opinion of the most experienced officers of that brigade present is that, had there been a strong wind blowing from the prevailing quarter, no exertions in their power could have saved the Row. Why are the booksellers past up in such a dangerous trap as this?

Fas est et ab hoste doceri is a trite old saying, but the lovers of progress in the newly-constituted kingdom of Italy would do well to discard from their minds all thought of such a principle. Their cause, if it have any reality in it at all, means freedom from ancient trammels, and anticquated entrahments, and the inauguration of an era of light and liberty. The ruffianly hands who profess to promote the reactionary movement, and boast of support from the ancient centre of Christendom, have been held up to universal execration as the perpetrators of deeds at which humanity shudders. That there exist a powerful provocative to retaliation we do not deny; but the Piedmontese will do well to remember that their one is to distinguish the tactics of their movements in behalf of liberty from those of their opponents in favour of despotism. They must submit to the one bond rule of criticism, which judges all alike, and the massacre at Portelandolfo will not serve to advance their cause even with their truest well-wishers. True, the attempts to upset the recognised state of things are, happily, only be one sinking into nothingness; but the cause is the same, and unremitting to require the introduction of tactics worthy only of a desperate and unscrupulous enemy.

Had any one hinted some twelve months back at the possibility of the United States being the next arena for the display of the antiquated resources of martial law, suspension of habeas corpus, and the passport system, he would have been met with a shout of derisive laughter. We have lived, however, to see these things as living, tangible facts. They are excused and apologised for as politically necessary contingents to the exigencies of the occasion. It is amusing, however—rather sadly so—to look up the way—to see the New Country driven to avail itself of the long-despised weapons of the Old World. Meanwhile, every one is anxiously inquiring "What next?"

The great event of the week is becoming a singular aspect. Reports give a good crop to the Southern States; they are elevated with their military successes; and there is an idea abroad that they mean, to keep, instead of trying to find, a market. This view of the matter complicates the state of things explained by our last week's issue in a way which is disquieting to attempt to force the so-called blockade if the Southern men will not sell when they have done so? We venture, however, to think that the full facts are as yet but imperiectly understood in the South. They evidently rely on their superiority in quality. We have reason to think they are reckoning without their host.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Colonel Benjamin Riley, formerly of Cork, afterwards of Gibraltar, and late of Allahabad, East Indies—at which latter place he died on the 22nd of February last—bequeaths property in that country—was administered to the London Court on the 31st of last month by the surviving executor, the Hon. and Rev. George Denison, Archdeacon of Taunton. This gallant military officer, who was Colonel of the 6th Regiment of Foot, and Companion of the Bath, was married twice. His last wife survives him, and has left leaving some legacies to relatives and other persons—to the three daughters of her husband by his former wife, Mrs. Mary Whelan, Mrs. Riley appropriates residuary legatee of the Colonel's estate.

The will of Hans Caldwell Sloane (Mrs. Bathwell, widow, of Westhorma Park, Middlesex, who died at Sydenham on the 11th ult., was executed on the 8th of the same month. She nominated Captain George John Power and Henry Lee, Esq., executors, to whom probate was granted on the 20th ult., the personal estate being sworn under £140,000, and the real property at £16,000. The popular and brilliant vocalist, whose successful career so prematurely terminated by death, has left the bulk of her property to the following manner:—After making provision for her mother by a life interest in £10,000, she bequeaths £5,000 to her brother, Hans Sloane Caldwell, Mrs. Catherine Daly; and to Miss Agnes Rose, granddaughter of the late bishop of Limerick, £1,000. She has also remembered Captain George John Power and Henry Lee, Esq., executors, to whom probate was granted on the 20th ult., the personal estate being sworn under £140,000, and the real property at £16,000. The popular and brilliant vocalist, whose successful career so prematurely terminated by death, has left the bulk of her property to the following manner:—After making provision for her mother by a life interest in £10,000, she bequeaths £5,000 to her brother, Hans Sloane Caldwell, Mrs. Catherine Daly; and to Miss Agnes Rose, granddaughter of the late bishop of Limerick, £1,000. She has also remembered Captain George John Power and Henry Lee, Esq., executors, to whom probate was granted on the 20th ult., the personal estate being sworn under £140,000, and the real property at £16,000. The popular and brilliant vocalist, whose successful career so prematurely terminated by death, has left the bulk of her property to the following manner:—After making provision for her mother by a life interest in £10,000, she bequeaths £5,000 to her brother, Hans Sloane Caldwell, Mrs. Catherine Daly; and to Miss Agnes Rose, granddaughter of the late bishop of Limerick, £1,000. She has also remembered Captain George John Power and Henry Lee, Esq., executors, to whom probate was granted on the 20th ult., the personal estate being sworn under £140,000, and the real property at £16,000.

The Danish Diet is convoked for the 5th of October next.

An agitation has been recommenced in the West Indies for the abolition of the Danish Sound dues, and one or two vessels have sailed.

Several steam-boats are building at New York, to ply on the Mississippi.

The Vienna journals announce the arrival there of M. Richard Wagner, to direct the rehearsals of his new opera, "Tristan and Isolde."

The Minister of Commerce has ordered the lighthouse at the Landing in the Bois de Boulogne to obtain from Dieppe the quantity of seawater necessary for an experiment in connection with the electric light there.

The House of Assembly at Nassau have appropriated £1500 towards the carrying out of a contemplated steam packet communication between Nassau, Inagua, Turk's Island, Hayti, and Jamaica.

Mr. Paget's sheep Dorset, which has won every prize that could be awarded to it, has been again upheld and crowned at the Devon Cattle Show. The whole of the offices and crew are saved, and the Imperial Cattle Show and other public doings will be continued.

The fourth General Conference of Evangelical Christians was opened at Geneva on Monday. The first of these conferences was held in London twelve years ago, the second in Paris in 1855, and the third in Berlin in 1857. The present conference is numerously attended, and some distinguished Englishmen are present, as well as Christians in different countries.

An ingenious smuggling trick was practised a few days ago near Lille. Some boys were in a cherry orchard on the frontier line into Belgium. There a man attached to the douane stationed at the other side of the boundary line threw his cap quite round, and the boys quickly returned into France without paying duty on their cherry.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD IN THE VALLEY OF SASKATCHEWAN.—Letters from the Red River colony, in the Hudson's Bay territory, announce the discovery of a valuable goldfield, by a party of American miners from California, in the north branch of the Saskatchewan. Two Californian gentlemen have recently arrived at St. Paul's, Minnesota, with a considerable quantity of gold, collected by themselves, along the upper waters of the Saskatchewan, and they describe the yield and quality of the metal as promising to be quite equal to that of British Columbia, which supplies the opposite flank of the Rocky Mountains, and may therefore reasonably be inferred to be of a similar geological character, while it is known to be situated by streams which have a common origin in the same auriferous range with the northern tributaries of the Saskatchewan.

THE COURT.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY AT BALMORAL.

The Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princesses Alice and Helena and Prince Alfred, arrived at Balmoral at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Prince Alfred, left Montrose Abbey at noon on Tuesday for the Killarney Railway station. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert, the Misses Herbert, and Lord Castlerosse attended the Queen to the station, where a large party of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood were assembled to take leave of her Majesty. The Royal train left Killarney at a few minutes past one, amidst the cheers of the assembled crowd. At the Kingsbridge station, in Dublin, her Majesty was received by the Lord Lieutenant. The Queen entered one of the State carriages and proceeded through the principal streets of the city, which were densely crowded, to the Westland-row station. In the meantime the Prince Consort with the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, and the Lord Lieutenant. In the carriages that followed were the Prince of Wales, Princess Helena, Prince Alfred, and the ladies and gentlemen in attendance. Upon her arrival at Kingstown her Majesty was received by Sir Robert and Lady Emily Peel, General Sir George Brown, and the members of the household of the Lord Lieutenant. The Prince of Wales and his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant remained to dine with her Majesty, returning to Dublin at half-past ten o'clock. The Royal yacht got under way at a little after four o'clock, and arrived at Holyhead at half-past eight on Friday morning. Lieutenant-General Sir G. Wetherall, K.C.B., commanding the Northern District, and Rear-Admiral Erskine, paid their respects to her Majesty. The Hon. Owen Stanley went on board the Victoria and Albert to place his carriage and horses at her Majesty's disposal. The Prince Consort and Prince Alfred, with Earl Cowley and Colonel the Hon. Sir C. Phipps, K.C.B., went at eleven o'clock, by special train, to Carnarvon, and visited the ancient castle. Thence their Royal Highnesses went to Bedgelert, returning to the yacht by a quarter past six o'clock. In the afternoon the Queen, with Princesses Alice and Helena, drove to the summit of Holyhead Mountain, and returned thence to the Stack Lighthouse. In the evening, Earl Granville, Viscount Sydney, Lieutenant-General Rochfort, Lieutenant-Colonel Bruce, C.B., the Hon. C. Bingham, Captain the Hon. J. Denman, and Captain Christian, had the honour of joining the Queen's dinner party. At nine o'clock her Majesty and the Prince Consort, Princesses Alice and Helena, and Prince Alfred, attended by Lady Churchill, Mrs. Hodgson, Victoria Stuart Wortley, Miss Hildyard, Lieutenant-General the Hon. C. Grey, Colonel the Hon. Sir C. Phipps, and Dr. Jenner, landed at Holyhead and entered the railway carriages. A guard of honour of the 1st Royals was drawn up upon the pier at Holyhead, the train immediately started en route for Edinburgh, and the Royal party proceeded through the carriages to Balmoral, where, as already stated, her Majesty arrived at three o'clock, after realising the almost incredible feat of accomplishing within the cycle of a single day a visit to each of the four divisions of the United Kingdom, Wales, England, Ireland, and Scotland.

The Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood joined the Royal train at Forfar, and attended her Majesty, as Secretary of State, to Balmoral, in succession to Lord Elcho.

On Sunday the Queen and the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Prince Alfred attended Divine service at the parish church of Crathie. The Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting were in attendance. The Rev. A. Anderson officiated.

On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princesses Alice and Helena and Prince Arthur, drove out in the neighbourhood of Balmoral. The Prince Consort, accompanied by Lord Wallscourt and Captain Wood, went out grouse-shooting on the moors of Monaltrie.

On Tuesday the Grand Duchess Highness of Hesse-Darmstadt has hired of the Princess Alice) arrived on a visit to her Majesty. Her Serene Highness the Princess Hohenlohe has also arrived at Balmoral.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, having nearly completed his course of military instruction at the camp at the Curragh, will shortly proceed to the Continent, for the purpose of visiting the Court on the Rhine. After paying a short visit to the Crown Princess of Prussia, the Prince will join his Royal parents for a few days at Balmoral, previously to returning to Cambridge.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince de Joinville, the Comte de Paris, and the Duc de Chartres sailed for New Yorkon Saturday in the Canard steamer Africa.

The Duchess of Hamilton arrived at Hamilton House on Monday from Paris, and has since left town to join the Duke and the Marquis of Douglas in Scotland.

The Earl and Countess of Winchilsea have returned to Eastwell Park, near Ashford, from a short visit.

The marriage of Lady Julia Villiers and Sir George Woolhouse took place at St. Peter's Church on Tuesday morning, at a quarter before ten o'clock. The service was read by the Dean of Worcester.

Dr. Caryl, the Pope's special physician, died at Rome on the 22nd ult., at the age of eighty. He was born in 1792.

A communication from Biarritz states that the Empress and Imperial Princes are still there but are strenuously denying the report. It is impossible to get a bet at any price. Bathing in fancy costumes appears to be the main amusement of the visitors. The only other event of interest mentioned is the mode for the continuation of the bullfighting at Bayonne this year.

FIRES.—On Wednesday week a fire broke out in Turin which was not extinguished until after the destruction of a large amount of property and loss of fifteen lives. The source of the conflagration was a furniture warehouse at the corner of the Via Montebello.—A violent fire broke out, on the night of the 27th ult., at Ingouville, in the Rue Montmorency close to a powder-magazine. Several thousand sacks of corn were destroyed, and it was only owing to activity on the part of the firemen that there was no explosion of the powder-magazines.—Another fire broke out a few days ago at Beverley, destroying the dwelling-house of Mr. Cunningham, in which all the flames were mastered in time. For the last fortnight a vast forest, situated in the mountains of Monte Alto and Alva, has been burning, and the top of the fine existing until the whole forest is consumed.—The brush-wood covering one of the hills over the town of Lezay, in the south of France, had continued burning for sixty hours. It presented the appearance during the night of an ocean of fire. The inhabitants of the neighbouring villages hastened to the spot to prevent the fire from extending to a valuable wood. It was extinguished after very great labour.—A fire broke out on the 24th ult. in the cellars of a house in Bridge-street, Sunderland, which destroyed the property. The inmates had a narrow escape from suffocation.—Another fire broke out on the 25th ult. in the premises of Mr. Hall, ironmonger, Stockton-on-Tees, which destroyed the property. The inmates had a narrow escape from suffocation.—Another fire broke out a few days ago at Beverley, which destroyed the dwelling-house of Mr. Cunningham, in which all the flames were mastered in time. For the last fortnight a vast forest, situated in the mountains of Monte Alto and Alva, has been burning, and the top of the fire existing until the whole forest is consumed.—The brush-wood covering one of the hills over the town of Lezay, in the south of France, had continued burning for sixty hours. It presented the appearance during the night of an ocean of fire. The inhabitants of the neighbouring villages hastened to the spot to prevent the fire from extending to a valuable wood. It was extinguished after very great labour.—A fire broke out on the 24th ult. in the cellars of a house in Bridge-street, Sunderland, which destroyed the property. The inmates had a narrow escape from suffocation.—Another fire broke out on the 25th ult. in the premises of Mr. Hall, ironmonger, Stockton-on-Tees, which destroyed the property. The inmates had a narrow escape from suffocation.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The freedom of Forfar was on Thursday week presented to Lord Airlie and Colonel Kinloch.

A new and spacious building for the Glasgow Mechanics' Institution was formally opened yesterday week.

The Caledonian Railway branch to Granton was formally opened on Tuesday week, and is now ready for mineral traffic.

Two students, named Alexander Milne and Alexander Grant, were drowned while bathing, at Aberdeen, a few days ago.

A boy aged five years, son of a labourer at Hurcliffe named Page, was suffocated last week from a pea stacking in his windpipe.

Lord Hastings has given leave to his tenantry on the Melton Mowbray estate to kill hares and rabbits.

On Tuesday, Mr. Charles Merchant, one of the inspectors of the revenue police on the Midland Railway, was run over and killed, by a train at Melton.

Mr. Hugh Smith is appointed Consul-Agent for the United States of America for the Island of Cuba at Santiago de Cuba, in the room of Mr. Mason, deceased.

The Hereford Journal mentions the case of a man named Price, living at Bishopstone, who has attained the age of 107 years, and is still active, hearty, and capable of walking a distance of ten miles.

On Monday night, the steamer Prince Consort ran into the Annann, a well-known yacht, plying off Ryde. The yacht went down some 40 or 50 fathoms, but fortunately all on board succeeded in escaping in the boats.

The London Estates Court, Ireland, has dealt with a 3,200,000 acres of land—one-sixth of the area of Ireland—in which it has given a Parliamentary title; and the purchase-money distributed amounts to £20,000,000.

The strike in the iron trade in the north still continues, and 7000 men are reported to be off work in one concern alone, the Consett and Stanhope Company, in the Consett district, Durham, and in the case of puddlers, 6d. per ton, and in the case of rollers 10 per cent.

An excursion-steamer, the Lady Dufferin, of Tyndarmore, on the South Ferry, was returning on Thursday se'nnight, when, on the very mainsail of Skidmore, it ran off the rails and upset over an embankment. The vessel was completely capsized, but no lives were lost.

Lady Mildmay, whilst visiting the stables at Hackfield, Hoxton, on Tuesday week, with Mr. H. Mildmay, rode one of the horses to be broke her leg and otherwise injured her. Sir Henry and the groom were likewise kicked about the face and severely bruised.

Hallebury College, with its consecrated chapel and its estate of 85 acres, was sold yesterday week for £19,200; and Addiscombe, with its estate of 120 acres, and the mansion and chapel of Sir Robert Peel, for £27,000. The National Freehold Land Association is said to have bought both lots.

During the recent excursion of Mr. Cook's party to Paris, a large number of fresco paintings were discovered on the walls of the new and splendid Church of the Trinity, in the Rue de Clichy, and the talents of the architect, they were all obliterated before copies of them could be taken.

An Exhibition of Industrial and Decorative Art, under the auspices of the Manchester Athenæum, will be opened early in November next. Her Majesty contributes largely, sending shields, vases of Sèvres china (two vases, valued at 1000 guineas each), and a dessert service. Lord Ward and others have agreed to contribute. Mr. Marjoribanks, M.P., who possesses a most valuable collection of pictures, has promised to lend a number to constitute some of his rarest pieces.

During the past season, an immense number of Irish and others have proceeded from the metropolis into the hop-picking districts. In addition to the ordinary traffic, during the harvest and hop season, the Brighton railway on Sunday, the South-Eastern Company running four special trains in a force of the Sabbath, and the London, Chatham, and Dover, by the Sheerness bridge station at five o'clock on Monday morning, completely filled, and many long trains left the metropolis.

The new low-water landing-pier constructed by the South-Eastern Railway Company at Folkestone was cast for the first time on Sunday, in the presence of the directors, officers, and a large number of visitors. Hitherto the South-Eastern Railway Company have run their Boulogne boats to and from the old tidal pier, Folkestone Harbour, which is dry at low water, when the tide did not serve at convenient hours for landing or embarking at the new pier. Now the boats will be able to start and arrive at any hour at altogether from Folkestone.

THE HARVEST PROSPECTS.—The seventh annual harvest festival was held at Bessle, Norfolk, yesterday week. The weather was glorious, and the day was observed as a general holiday throughout the district. The town, as soon, presented by several visitors, attended Divine service, and afterwards adjourned to the pretty meadow in front of the mansion, where a substantial meal had been provided for them. In the course of the afternoon addresses were delivered by Mr. Hudson, the managing agent and principal promoter of the festival, and other gentlemen. After the visitors had been gathered together for tea a meeting of the whole was got up in the open, and during which the party returned to their homes, highly delighted with the day's proceedings.—A special service of thanksgiving for the harvest was held in Bellingham Church, Ocon, on Sunday evening, in addition to the usual morning and afternoon services. The church was crowded by a congregation of 1000 persons, decorated with sheaves of wheat and barley.

VISIT OF LORD PALMERSTON TO SHORNCLIFFE AND HYTHE.—On Tuesday Lord Palmerston paid a visit to Shorncliffe Camp (where he reviewed the troops), and to the practice-ground of the Hythe School of Musketry. His Lordship arrived at Folkestone from Walmer Castle, where he took horse, and, along with the Right Hon. W. Cowper, rode along the high road to Shorncliffe. Here he was met by Major-General Sir Colin Campbell, the General Officer commanding the Shorncliffe Camp, and by his staff. Lord Palmerston and Mr. Cowper, with Sir Colin Campbell, rode to the ground of the Hythe School of Musketry, and there the whole of the military road, seconded to the duties, where Lordship was received by Colonel Hamilton, the commandant of the school. He inspected marched past, and afterwards went through several evolutions. His Lordship expressed himself highly pleased with what he saw, and as soon as the review was over Lord Palmerston rode up to one of the Armstrong guns and, after examining the breech-action, loaded and discharged it at the gun and his shot and shot. After lunch his Lordship proceeded to Hythe, where he also inspected the Musketry Establishment, and the practice was fired and watched, with the same interest he had given to everything during the day, the shooting of pupils at the butts. Lord Palmerston also witnessed experiments with Captain Norton's rifle-balls for exploding sawdusts of gun-powder. His Lordship left Hythe for Folkestone at about half-past three.

THE CAMBRIAN ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.—Thisociety has just completed its fifteenth annual meeting, which was held last week at Haverfordwest, under the presidency of Mr. Owen Stanley, member for the borough. Excursions were made every day to the most remarkable and important remains, and on the last day the members visited Pembroke Castle, which was under the seals in the South of Gower, as the peninsula running west of Swansea is called, and the Great Cross Stone, Parkmill, Penmaen Burrows, castles and churches, and the great Celtic monument known as Arthur's Stone, and the ordinary business meeting was held in the afternoon. Letter by skimming and a large number of other gentlemen and ladies, were received with primary honours. His Excellency the Bishop of St. David's, Lord Dynevor, and other gentlemen had selected the ancient cemetery of North Abbey as the most appropriate place for the interment of the body of Mr. Owen, who, by the bounty of the society, and the number and interest of the various monuments in Archæological science, and the untiring energy with which he worked out the most agreeable meetings ever held by the society. Among those who took part in the ceremony were Lord Dynevor, Mr. Owen Stanley, Sir Thomas Phillipps, Sir John Harding, the Queen's Advocate; Mr. Octavius Morgan, M.P.; Mr. Wynne, of Peniarth; Mr. Bruce, the historian of the Roman Wall; Mr. Freeman, Rothwell, Clark, Franks, Margetts, and Stevens.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.—A correspondent of the Irish Times states that, some time ago Captain Sydney Smyth, who had been long in the Spanish service, and was the brother-in-law of Mr. Disraeli, and Robert Smyth, of Ferrihill Castle, Westmeath. The building was totally destroyed, and the whole of the valuable furniture and effects consumed. The correspondent adds:—"Immediately after the destruction of the building, Mr. Smyth and his family left the neighbourhood, and the place, by whose means actually remained since the 21st of July, successfully opposing all the attempts of the insurgents to take it. Captain Smyth is a native of Westmeath, and possesses himself, and furnished with a formidable supply of stones and missiles from the battlements, which they kept up for a long time. Finding that it succeeded for more than a month in defying the power of the civil authorities, they had recourse to stratagem. In their endeavours to take the castle, which it was found impossible to do without a certain loss of life. The only persons he allowed to go out were the servants who brought provisions, by whose means succeeded for more than a month in defying the power of the civil authorities, they had recourse to stratagem. In their endeavours to take the castle, which it was found impossible to do without a certain loss of life. The only persons he allowed to go out were the servants who brought provisions, by whose means food was conveyed to him. It was proposed to render him insensible by mixing opium with his drink, and then securing him; but the attempt was not more successful than several other stratagems which resulted also in failure. At one time he seems to have entertained the intention of escaping, and making his way to his former residence; but the consultatory took such effectual measures as to frustrate his object, withdrawing the boats from the neighbourhood and guarding the roads—in fact, subjecting him to a regular siege. The number of police engaged in watching him on one occasion amounted to thirty, accompanied by the county inspector, a sub-inspector, and sufficient magistrates; but all their efforts proved fruitless until one day last week, when only-inspector Kirkland and his party succeeded in capturing him. He is now in comfortable quarters, and remains in his keeping of further vengeance against his brothers."

BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

The appointed business of the thirty-first anniversary of this association commenced on Wednesday morning, when the members were summoned to meet the Mayor's parlour in the Townhall, Manchester—Lord Wrottesley presiding. The two Vice-Presidents are the Earl of Ellesmere, the Bishop of Manchester; Lord Stanley, M.P.; Sir Philip Egerton, Bart., M.P.; Sir Benjamin Heywood, Bart.; Thomas Tayleur, Esq., M.P.; J. A. Turner, Esq., M.P.; John Dugdale, Esq., and Joseph Whitworth, Esq. The local secretaries are—R. D. Darbishire, Esq., Alfred Neild, Esq., Arthur Ransome, Esq., and Professor H. E. Roscoe, of Manchester. John Phillips, Esq., Reader in Geology in the University of Oxford, General Secretary for the meeting.

The general committee held its first meeting in the Townhall, at one o'clock, for the election of retiring officers and the appointment of such as were to preside before that body. Lord Wrottesley presided. The meeting was very numerously attended.

The minutes of the last meeting having been confirmed,

Professor Phillips read a report from the Council, which was ordered to be entered on the minutes.

Professor Phillips also read a letter from Professor Walker resigning the office of secretary. On the motion of General Sabine, seconded by Dr. Robinson, of Armagh, a vote of thanks to Professor Walker was passed for his eminent services which he has rendered to the association. Mr. W. V. Harcourt then moved that the recommendation of the Council be adopted, and that Mr. Hopkins be appointed to the office of secretary. Sir R. Murchison seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. Kinnaird, the assistant treasurer, read the financial report, from which it appeared that the balance in the treasurer's hands was the Pitchford, which, referred, to the 3rd of September, 1861 (including a balance of £719 17s. 6d.), amounted to £2000, and the payments to £1280, leaving a balance of £719 17s. 6d. Mr. Kinnaird stated that the stock of the association was worth £3019; the books, valued, according to the estimate of Mr. Clowes, at £50, were also mentioned at £1000; making the total value of the assets of the association £4069 17s. 6d.

Mr. J. P. Gaskell moved the adoption of the report of the New committee, which was ordered to be printed.

The parliamentary report was also adopted.

The report of the Mathematical section, read by Dr. Brewster, Sir J. Paxton and Colonel Sykes were appointed members of the parliamentary committee.

On the motion of Professor Hodgkinson, seconded by Dr. Alexander, a section of physiology was constituted.

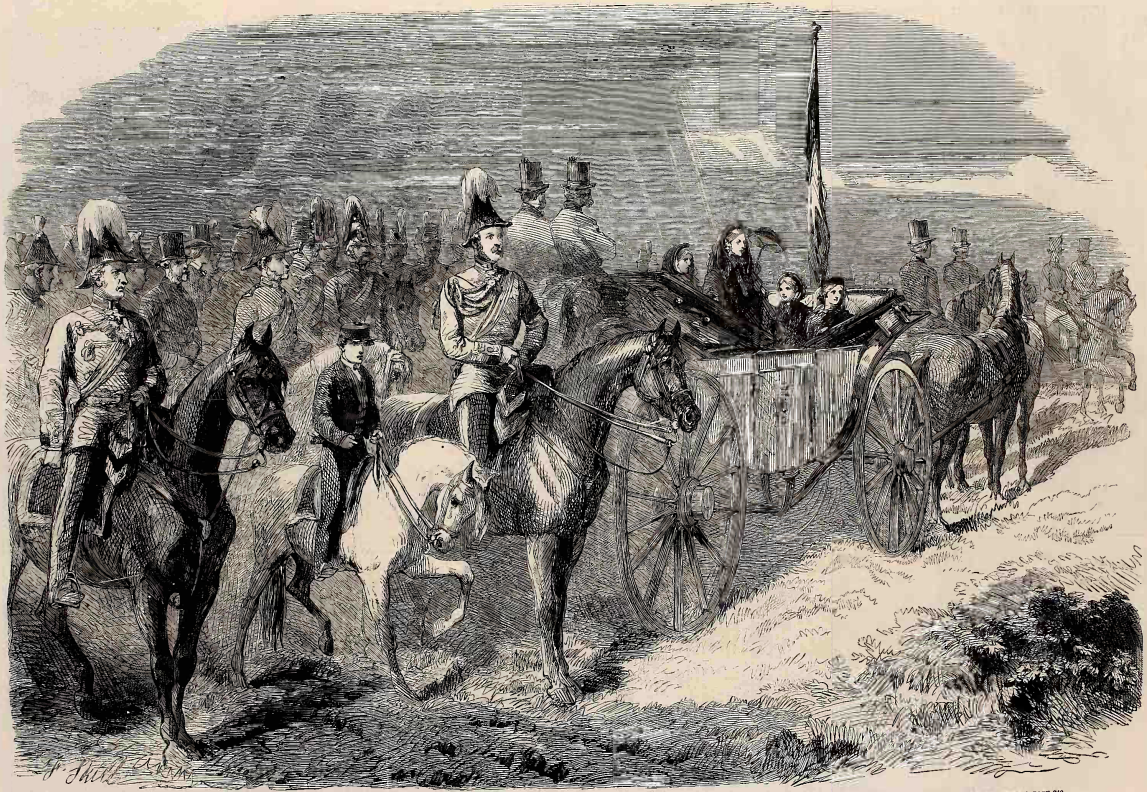
Lord Wrottesley then read the list of sectional officers and the names of the committee of examination, after which the meeting adjourned. Regulations have been issued for the admission of the public to the meetings.

The first general meeting of the association was held at eight o'clock in the evening in the Free-trade Hall, which has been tastefully prepared and decorated for the various meetings and soirées which will take place during the week. The chair was occupied by Lord Wrottesley, President, and Sir Roderick Murchison, F.R.S., who delivered an able address to a very large and enthusiastic assembly. The address was followed by a statement of the arrangements made by the local committee for the soirées, exhibitions, and evening lectures during the meeting of the association in Manchester.

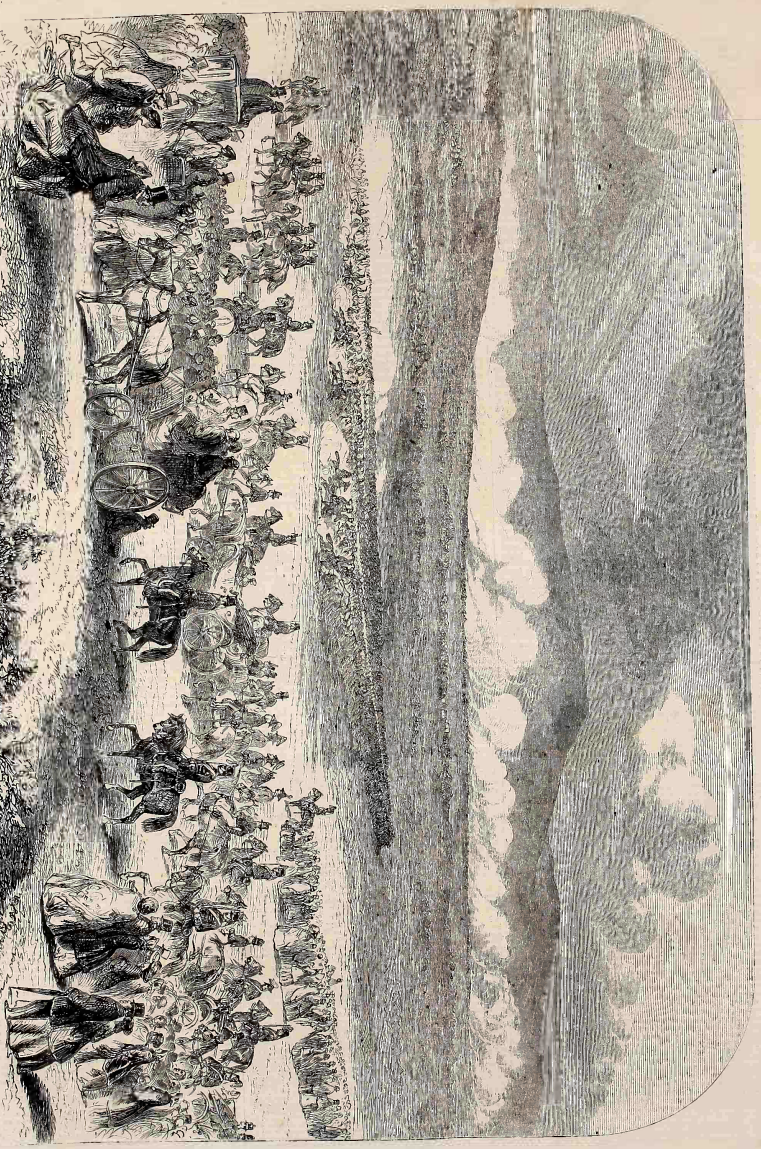
There will be an exhibition in the Royal Manchester Institution, open free-of-charge, of the various specimens of the photographic art, which will be organised by the Manchester Photographic Society.

At Owen's College there will be exhibitions most completely illustrating the history and progress of the cotton manufacture.

A collection of the room in which the chemical section will meet at Owen's College there will be exhibited a collection of the great colour and acid of the chief manufacturers of South Lancashire. It will include blocks of alum chemical manufacturers of South Lancashire. It will include blocks of alum chemical manufacturers of South Lancashire. It will include blocks of alum chemical



THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND: HER MAJESTY REVIEWING THE TROOPS ON THE CURRAGH OF KILDARE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 243.



THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.—REVIEW BY HER MAJESTY ON THE CURRAGH OF KILDARE—CHARGE OF CAVALRY—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT PAGE 245

ART IN GERMANY.

(From our own Correspondent.)

COLOGNE, Sept. 2.

In the tourist is astonished at the scale of art-production in Belgium, as displayed in the exhibition at Antwerp, of which I gave you a brief notice in my last letter, he will find the Germans well to the front in the same branch of intellectual culture. The new Museum, built on the expense (about £50,000) of the late M. Wallraf-Richartz, opened on the 1st of July in the present year, the generous donor was living died a few weeks previously. It is a spacious Gothic building, evening three sides of a square, and containing eighteen or nineteen apartments of various dimensions (according to the nature of the works to be exhibited), on the basement and first floors respectively. A noble corridor, sometimes connecting two, and sometimes all of these chambers, besides intermediate compartments of smaller dimensions, are now filled with the productions of modern German art, of different schools, in sculpture, oil-paintings, water-colour painting, cartoon drawings, engraving, &c.—full upwards of 1500 works—the remaining half dozen rooms being occupied by the noble collection of pictures of the early Cologne and other Rhenish schools, the magnificent gift to the city of the patriotic founder of the building. The result is a mass of art-treasure, which it would take a week's continuous inspection duly to appreciate. For my own part, I may say that, having devoted three entire days to the task, I find myself still at a loss to do justice to its varied constituent materials, though I have seen enough to impress me very strongly with the genius of the people that could produce such a display.

Unquestionably first in attractiveness, as it is in point of character, is the early Cologne school of painting, a school the existence of which until very recently was almost wholly unknown, even in Germany, and of which can form but a very inadequate idea from the few mediocre examples which a few years ago were the utmost efforts of the works which we see in the Cologne Museum, a proof of a revival of genius on the banks of the Rhine almost simultaneous with that accomplished in Italy by Raffaelle and Correggio and Michael Angelo. Examples of the school, which, though not aided by the promptings of classic art, evidenced a wide degree of power in the hallowed traditions of religious art, and a followship of nature as sagacious and truthful as that in Italy itself. In the use of colour, also, the artists of this school—few of whose names have yet come to light—display a knowledge and mastery of those which mark the best schools of Flanders and Italy, their works appearing lighter in tone, softer and luminous in light and shade, and richer in quality, after a lapse of four or five centuries since their production. "The Virgin and Child," seen, by Master Wilhelm, in the cathedral, is a pleasing devotional character in the heads. "The Last Judgment," by Meister Stephan (1190), is a marvellous combination of the wildest conceits—some of them loathsome. An elaborate picture of the freedom of thought and the innate love of satire of these mediæval times, we see the coarse-jokes of the monk and confessor and the cardinals in abject terror, meeting terrible retribution, in company with usurers, robbers, and other wrongdoers, at the hands of the Archangel and his myrmidons. Of a somewhat later date is a picture to be a matter of a female saint, in which we remark a fine character of dignity and reality, and in the face of the saint, and expression not unlike in the figure of the executioner, who is in the act of striking the fatal blow. "The Death of the Virgin," by Stephan, of the same date, and that of Early Dutch school (1400—1362), is a masterly work. The resigned expression of the Virgin, the anxious and admiring regards of the divines who surround her bed, are admirable studies from nature. There are groups of angels and knights kneeling in adoration. In the latter the armour and a cuirpet are treated with the effect of illusion. But we must not be beguiled longer by the pictures of extreme past, and must proceed to those of a more recently-departed age, when Cornelius, Hetsch, Schick, and others (two of whose works are exhibited) prepared the way for the new style of art, which has become modified, in many of its phases, as we shall see, we must look to German painting as it is, in the hands of living artists of different schools.

In the present exhibition the plan has been adopted of classifying the works of artists of various schools in separate compartments—a system which at once facilities reference and admits of the subject of inspection by affording the ready means of contrasting the peculiar characteristics of the native manner of each school. This part of Germany speaking generally, may be considered to be divided into two great schools—that of the Northern, and that of the South. The works of the former are the most numerous, and comprehend those of artists of Berlin and Düsseldorf (parent schools), of Dresden, Hanover, Frankfort, Hamburg, &c. The southern schools are that by Munich, comprise those of Vienna, Weimar, Stuttgardt, &c. The great centre between Munich and Düsseldorf is the champion of the southern and northern schools respectively. Contrasting the two in the most essential, we find the school of Munich aiming chiefly at the higher subjects of history, including sculpture and landscape, under an ideal mode of treatment, genre subjects being the exception. That school, on the other hand, devotes itself chiefly to Nature, under its various modes of presentment: landscape, domestic life, &c., with occasional excursions of historical, religious, mythical, and poetic art. In their mode of execution the artists of Düsseldorf are freer, and more correct than those of Munich, where a more severe and scholarly mode of treatment prevails. The latter is generally upon the other schools, which are of secondary importance, but start at the head of the works of the two great parent schools, giving afterwards some passing remarks upon the other schools.

Düsseldorf school comprises the works of a great many of another. The leading sculptural painter of Düsseldorf, if not of Germany is Carl Müller, whose drawing and modelling are of the most refined order, whilst his touch has all the delicacy and purity of the Italian school, when the mind was the vehicle of scriptural illustration. He exhibits a "Holy Family," a subject which he expresses and treats with great skill displayed in the grouping, which is upon the principle of a double inverted pyramid, the upper pyramid consisting of the seated figure of the lower of the Madonna and Child on the one side, and St. Elizabeth and the little St. John on the other. The colouring is most harmonious. In genre Knaus justly takes the leading position, and has a European reputation. "De Spieler" (The Gambler), painted in 1851, has nicely been sung-song, and surprising, for character and truth. It is a wed tower; sometimes it was a grip of the fingers' ends in a fissure and the lateral shifting of the whole body in a line parallel to the crack. Many times I found myself with my feet higher and my head lower. Always the exercise of the human arm is truly wonderful, and never before this day was I so deeply impressed with the marvellous combination of strength and flexibility in this member of our frame. The glimpses of the summit which we obtained, after three hours' climbing, inspired the whole party with renewed ardour to continue. But when, at the last, and our hopes seemed still towered close and distant in the end of six hours, the summit still towered close and distant in the heaven above us, our feelings became considerably damped. The constant and frequent expenditure of mechanical force began to tell upon us all. Wenger complained of his lungs, and Macdonald and Stapp were lame. Hadow had a bad heel, and I myself had swelled and stupid knees, which I somehow knocking about. I, however, kept close with Macdonald, who, finding that the exertion had produced on myself last the cellular tissue, and I felt along that, in case of should be compelled to call a halt, and I felt along that, in case of should be compelled to call a halt, and I felt along that, in case of sudden emergency, I had a fair notion of getting on myself. Macdonald spoke of Bennon's self-control, and once, on observing that I was suffering from the exertion, he had produced on myself last the cellular tissue

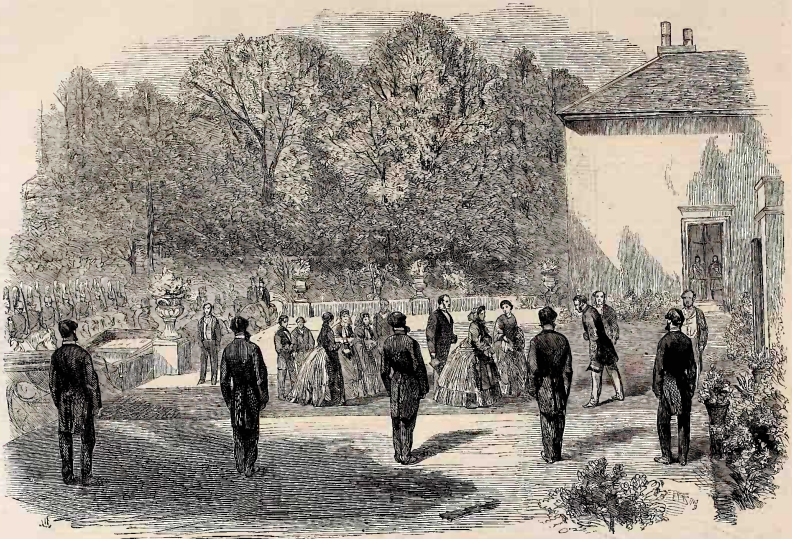
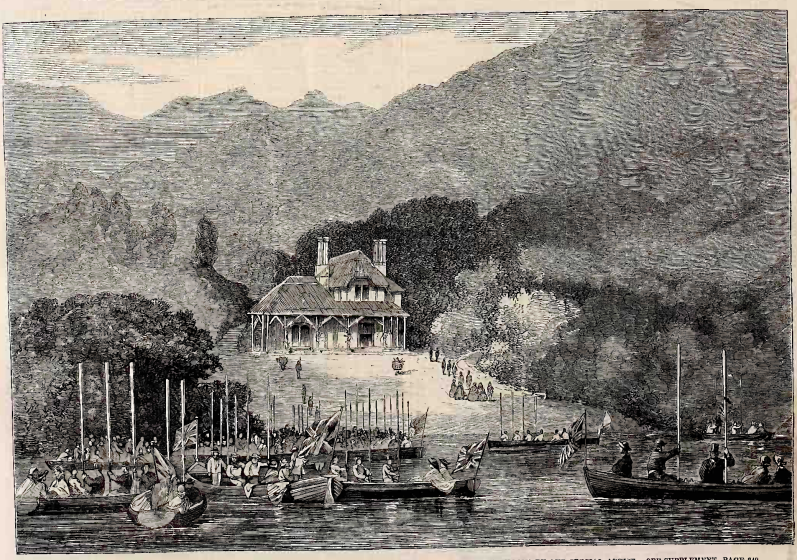
THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.—THE ROYAL BARGE PROCEEDING THROUGH THE UPPER LAKE OF KILLARNEY TO DERRICUNIHY CASCADE, SKETCHED FROM THE KENMARE ROAD, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 249.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.



RECEPTION OF HER MAJESTY AT KILLARNEY HOUSE BY VISCOUNT CASTLEROSSE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 245.



THE ROYAL PARTY VISITING LORD CASTLEROSSE'S COTTAGE AT GLENA, ON THE KILLARNEY LAKES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 240.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five shillings for each announcement.

MARRIAGES.

On Wednesday, the 21st ult., at Little Chart, Kent, by the Rev. John Hay Hamilton, Vic. Hastings Hamilton, the Rev. John Hay Hamilton, Vicar of Aldenham, Herts, to Miss Eliza Upsdale, of Aldenham, Hertfordshire.

On Sept. 3, at the Priory Church, by the Rev. Geo. Pitt, Vicar, Sir Edgar Lloyd, of Great Malvern, to Miss Lavinia Louise Stuart, of the same place.

DEATHS.

On the 7th of July, at Valparaiso, F. W. Schweger, Esq., aged 72 years.

On the 26th of August, at Vyner Cottage, Denbigh, Caption. Ann, widow of the late Alexander Geddes, Esq., in her 79th year.

At Rochester, on Sunday, Sept. 1, James Smith, Esq., in his 84th year, formerly the pensian active magistrate in the city of Rochester, and for nearly the same period in the county of Kent.

Suddenly, at Tunbridge, his wife, in her 75th year.

On Friday, Aug. 23, at 3, Marlborough-place, Brighton, William, infant son of Edward, the infant twin son of William M. F. Taylor, Esq.

On the 31st ult., after a short but painful illness, Mary Ashley, the daughter of the Earl and Countess of Shaftesbury.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

MONEY MARKET.—Until the autumnal drain of money business is transacted in the Stock Exchange, which has been as extensive as in the previous week, the market generally has been unusually quiet. What little, and, in fact, the only business has been of a speculative character. The abundance of money has kept the Bank of England rate of discount at 2 per cent. In Paris, whilst many Indian securities have realised some advance, the demand for the Bank of England stock has been very limited. The Bank of England is at present not required for money, owing to the falling off in our export trade; and good commercial bills are now in our export trade; and good commercial bills are now in readily discounted in the open market as follow:—

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Short Bills.....	2 to 2½	Four months' bills	4 to 4½
Three months' bills	2½ to 3	Six months' bills	4½ to 5

In the Stock Exchange business may be had for short periods at from 1 to 3 per cent. On Government securities. The discount establishments are now giving 3 per cent on deposits at call, and 1½ per cent with seven days' notice. Most of the joint-stock banks offer a uniform rate of 2 per cent.

On the Continent money is in moderate request, as follows:—

	Bank rate, per cent.	Open market, per cent.
Paris	3	2½
Vienna	5	4
Berlin	4	3½
Frankfort	4	3½
Hamburg	3	2½
Trieste	5	4
Brussels	3	2½
Madrid	5	4
St. Petersburg ..	5	4

The closeness of the pecuniary metals have been on a moderate scale; but it is only the whole of them continue to be employed by the Bank of England. Although, at the exchange at New York has advanced to 107½ for bankers' bills, quite a recovery has taken place in the value of the national stock of bullion held by the New York banks is now nearly 40,000,000 dollars. Most European countries are drawing.

The amount of bullion shipped to India by the present packet is £50,000, principally in sovereigns.

The returns of the Board of Trade, embracing the first seven months of the year, exhibit a decrease in our shipments, when compared with 1860, of upwards of £4,000,000.

The dealings in Home Stocks on Monday were by no means extensive, the transactions for the numbers were only 1,000 Consols reached 92½; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92⅞ ⅞; Long Annuities, 4 3-16ths; India Stock, 220 to 222; Bills, March, 4s. dis. to par.; Ditto, June, 2½ to 2s. dis. The Five per cents, being done at 103½ to 103¾; and Exchequer Bonds, 101½ to 101¾. Monday's dealings generally did not exhibit any material change, and the quotations were nearly the same as on Saturday. Reduced and New Three per Cents, Consols, 92⅞ ⅞; Exchequer Bills, March, 2s. dis.; Ditto, June, 2½ to 2s. dis. par.; Bank Stock was 219 to 221; India Stock, 220 to 222. Securities were unsettled on Tuesday. Three per Cent Consols were 92⅞ ⅞; the Rupee Paper, 71½ to 72; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cents, 102½ to 102⅝. The scrip of the new loan was 104½ pm. On Wednesday the markets were fluctuating. Consols declined at 92⅞ to ⅝; for Oct. 92, 92½ to ⅝; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents, 92⅞ to ⅝; and Exchequer Bills, 4s. dis. to par. India Five per Cents realised 103½ to ¾; and India Bonds, 99 ½. Thursday's price underwent no change, nor was there somewhat restricted. Reduced and New Three per Cents for money and the Present Account, 92⅞ to ⅝; for the Account and the New Three per Cents, 92⅞ to ⅝; and Exchequer Bills, 1s. to 3s. dis. Indian securities were unchanged. Friday's dealings were quiet.

The market for Foreign Bonds has been rather retrive, and prices, almost generally, have been well supported. Italian Five per Cents, which were realised 100½; Ditto, Definitive Bonds, 100½; Ditto, Five per Cents, 1861, 99½; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 85½; Ditto, Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1886, 75½; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 88; Ecuador New Consolidated, 14½ ex div.; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Peruvian Deferred Certificates, 21½; Ditto, Four per Cents, 1853, 78½; Ditto Unfunded, 94; Peruvian Three per Cents, 1849, 58½; Portuguese Four per Cents, 45½; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 99½; Spanish Three per Cents, 40½; Ditto, New Deferred, 20½; Ditto, Passive, 14½; Ditto, Certificates, 32; Turkish Six per Cents, 79½; Ditto, New, 78½; Ditto, Four per Cents, 1862, 70½; Peruvian Four-and-a-Half per Cent Dollar Bonds, 87.

A fair percentage business has been transacted in Bank Shares, and the quotations have ruled firm:—Agra and United have been marked 87; Australia, 98; Bank of London, 54½; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 32½; Colonial, 87½; Commercial of London, 90; Imperial of Australia, New, 103½; London Joint Stock, 22; London and South Western, 61½; London and Westminster, 60½; Oriental, 36½; South Australia, 46; and Union of Australia, 53.

The leading quotations for shares in new undertakings are as follow:—Bahia and San Francisco, 6½ to 7 pm.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 4 to 4 pm.; Provincial of Ireland, 1½ to 1½ dis.; Australian and Provincial Union, par; General and General Mutual, 1½ pm.; Hercules, 1½ to 1½ dis.; Indian and Commercial Union Fire, 1½ to 1½ dis.

Railway debenture securities have been firm in request. Caledonian Five per Cents, 1856, have realised 103½; Ditto, 1858-9, 103½; Ditto, 1860-4, 103½; Ditto, Five per Cents, 1865, 103½; Ditto, 1862, 103½; Ditto, Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1856, 102; Ditto, 1858, 101½; Ditto, 1859, 101½; Ditto, 1860, 101½; Ditto, 1862, 101½; Ditto, 1863, 101½; Ditto, 1864, 101½; Ditto, 1865, 101½; Ditto, 1866-8, 101½; Ditto, Five per Cents, 1856, 103½; Ditto, 1857, 103½; Ditto, 1858, 103½; Ditto, 1859, 103½; Ditto, 1860, 103½; Ditto, 1862, 103½.

The Miscellaneous Market has ruled inactive:—Australian Agricultural have sold at 30; Crystal Palace, 24½; Electric Telegraph, England, Scotland, and Hall put par; Exchange, 1½; Ibrit India Irrigation and Canal, 1½; Imperial Ottoman Bank, 1½; Imperial Land, Egypt, par; Inverness, 1; London General Omnibus, 1; Madras Irrigation, 5½; Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation, 1; London Waterworks, 120; Kent, 101; London Docks, 61; Victoria, 62.

The Railway Share Market has continued in an unsatisfactory condition. In some instances prices have been a little lower tendency, and the transactions for money have been limited. English for the seven-month ended the 31st ult. are £652,064. The following are Thursday's closing quotations:—

GREAT SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 102½; Chester and Crewe, 93 ex div.; Great Northern, 101½ ex div.; A Stock, 102½ ex div.; Ditto B Stock, 120 ex div.; Western, 96½ ex div.; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 120; London and Brighton, 117; London and North-Western, 98 ex div.; London and South-Western, 86 ex div.; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 48½; Midland, 102½ ex div.; Ditto, New, 84 pm., ex div.; Ditto Bonds, 101 ex div.; Norfolk, 57 ex div.; North British, 65; North-Eastern—Berwick, 104½; Ditto York, 104½; Nottingham and Grantham Bonds, 101½; South-Eastern, 92½ ex div.

LINE LEASED AT A FIXED RENTAL.—Preston and Wyre, Half-shares, 22 ex div.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Eastern Counties Five per Cent, No. 2, 104½ ex div.; Great Western Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 99½; London, Chatham, and Dover, 5½; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 5½ ex div.; Midland—Birmingham and Derby, 5½; Shrewsbury and Hereford, 5½; Shrewsbury and Birkenhead, 7½ ex div.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 98½; Buffalo and Lake Huron, 41½; Grand Trunk of Canada, 11½; Ditto Certificates, 10½; Ditto Debentures, 98½ ex Cent Preference, 63½; Ditto Debentures, 98½; Great Indian Peninsula, 99½; Great Southern of India, 103½; Great Western of Canada, 49½; Madras Five per Cents, 102½; Scinde, 101½.

FOREIGN.—Antwerp and Rotterdam, 13½; Dutch Rhenish, 16 ex div.; Luxembourg, 8½; San Paulo, 2½; South Austrian and Italian, 13½.

The Bank of England for the week ending Sept. 4 shows the following results when compared with the previous week:—

An increase of circulation of	£29,776
An increase of deposits (public)	1,000,000
An increase of deposits (private)	1,000,000
An increase of Government Securities of	2,000,000
An increase of other securities of	1,000,000
An increase of bullion of	29,776
An increase of reserve of	1,000,000
An increase of rest of	29,776

The total circulation is now £21,012,927; public deposits amount to £6,284,483; and private deposits to £12,016,521; securities are £21,149,980; and the stock of bullion is £15,178,101.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Sept. 2.—The supply of English wheat on offer to-day-to-day moderate, and, generally speaking, has been sold at last week's prices. Foreign wheat, arriving from the continent of Europe, has moved off slowly, at a decline of 1s. per quarter. Floating cargoes remain dull. Barley has sold slowly, at last week's currency. Malt is quiet, and is now 1s. to 2s. lower. Beans and peas are unaltered in value. The supply of wheat was fair; that of barley, oats, beans, and peas, moderate. Flour is dull, and is now 1s. per sack lower.

Sept. 4.—Both wheat and flour have proceeded Sunday's currency. The holidays may be expected to affect the demand for grain during the week.

English—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s. to 39s.; ditto white, 39s. to 40s.; Norfolk and Suffolk red, 38s. to 39s.; ditto white, 39s. to 40s.; grinding spring, 32s. to 34s.; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire red, 38s. to 39s.; ditto white, 39s. to 40s.; Scotch and Suffolk malt, 34s. to 72s.; brown, 32s. to 34s.; Chevalier, 36s. to 38s.; Ware, 40s. to 42s.; Hertfordshire, 38s. to 39s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, fine old, 37s. to 39s.; ditto new, 36s. to 38s.; Northumberland, fine old, 37s. to 39s.; ditto new, 36s. to 38s.; Scotch, fine old, 37s. to 39s.; ditto new, 36s. to 38s.; Irish, fine old, 37s. to 39s.; ditto new, 36s. to 38s.; rye, 30s. to 32s.; grinding barley, 24s. to 26s.; distilling, 26s. to 28s.; malting, 30s. to 32s.; fine ditto, 34s. to 36s.; country oats, 16s. to 20s.; Berwick, Aberdeen, 17s. to 18s.; Scotch, Dundee, 17s. to 18s.; Irish, 16s. to 18s.

Foreign—Wheat, Dantzic, Konigsberg, and Pomeranian, 42s. to 44s.; Marianopoli, 42s. to 44s.; Odessa and Taganrog, 38s. to 40s.; Egyptian, 36s. to 38s.; Salonica and Smyrna, 38s. to 40s.; Baltic, 38s. to 40s.; Galatz and Reni, 38s. to 40s.; Danubian, 38s. to 40s.; Polish Odessa, 38s. to 40s.; Taganrog, 38s. to 40s.; Azimo, 38s. to 40s.; Black Sea and Azof, 38s. to 40s.; Marianopoli, 42s. to 44

NEW BOOKS,

NOW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
Price Five Shillings, elegantly bound as a Gift-book,
HOME INFLUENCE: a Tale for Mothers and Daughters. By GRACE AGUILAR.
Groombridge and Sons, 5, Paternoster-row.

With a Frontispiece by John Gilbert, and 13 Illustrations, fcap. 8vo, 5s. 6d. cloth, SCHOOL-DAYS OF EMINENT MEN; or, Sketches of Boy Life and Character. By the Rev. J. TROTTER, M.A., Author of "Walks in Rome," "Memoir of Bishop Heber," "Life, Times, and Correspondence of Archbishop Leighton," &c. "The idea is a happy one. 'Things Not Generally Known' will be found to interest all boys, but especially those at Westminster, Eton, Harrow, Rugby, and Winchester."—Notes and Queries.
London: Longman and Co., 39, Paternoster-Row, E.C.

THE NEW LAW OF BANKRUPTCY.
Now ready, crown 8vo, price 1s. 6d. post 1s. 7d.
THE BANKRUPTCY MANUAL, being a plain Exposition of the whole of the existing Statute Law relating to Bankruptcy, Compositions, and Arrangements with Creditors, with Practical Directions and Observations and a Popular Guide for Proceeding, for the Parties and Bankers. By CHARLES EDWARD JONES, Barrister-at-Law.
Butterworths, 7, Fleet-street, Law Publishers and Booksellers to the Queen, London.

Now ready, in 1 vol. 8vo, 5s. 6d. cloth, illustrated,
THE AMATEUR ILLUMINATORS MAGAZINE.
Day and Son, Gate-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION. — Just published, PORTION of the CATALOGUE of the BUILDINGS Intended for the INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION for 1862, and Plans of the Buildings, with Descriptions and a Map. Crosby Lockwood and Co., 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

NOTICE.—This day, copiously illustrated, price 7s. 6d. cloth gilt,
ALL ROUND THE WORLD, in the Illustrated Record of Voyages, Travels, and Adventure in all Parts of the Globe. Edited by CHARLES DICKENS.
BRADBURY, EVANS, and Co., 11, Bouverie-street, E.C.

This day, price 2s. 6d. cloth extra, or 3s. 6d. cloth gilt,
SUMMER ON THE LAKES. By MARGARET FULLER OSSOLI, with her Autobiography. Longman, Paternoster-row.

This day, price 3s., ornamental cover,
THE WHITE SCARF. By GUSTAVE AIMARD, Author of "Prairie Flower," &c.
London: WARD and LOCK, 158, Fleet-street.

Just published, price 6d. sewed, with ornamental Illustrations,
THE SIXPENNY MAGAZINE.
CONTENTS.—Chat Round.—The King of the Mountains.—Sketches of Character.—Chat with the Captain.—Sketches of Wales.—Chat and Chaff.—Curious Anecdotes.—Poor Jack.—Sketches of the Picturesque, No. III.—Buchanan Castle.—The Round of Wrong.—Chat with the Doctor.—Chat on Dress and Important Events.—Dolly Pentreath.—My Poll and the Mysterious Box.—Sketches of Character.—Chat with the Cook.—Chat with the Gardener.—Answers to Correspondents.—Enigmas and Charades.—Answers to Enigmas.—Arrangement of the Month.
London: WARD and LOCK, 158, Fleet-street.

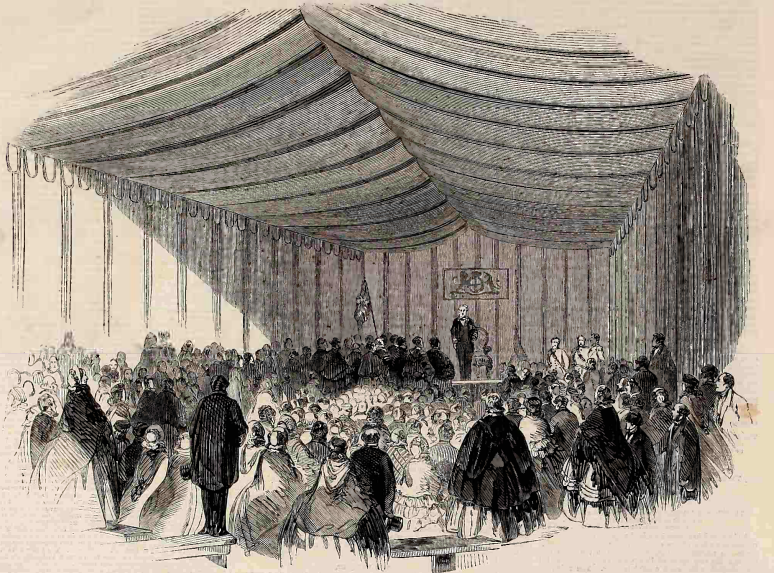
THE QUEEN, an Illustrated Journal and Review.—Most of all classes in Dorland-villa—the Surgeon, the student, the schoolmaster, the man of letters, the artist, the merchant, the officer—will find something in the Queen to interest them. Indeed, the Queen is a journal for everybody, and we could not have the vain ambition of supposing that we could better it."—Bell's Life. "The Queen" is simply remarkable to us for absolute merit in all we read in it, and for the variety of its contents. Whatever interests or amuses the public, whatever is new or old, whatever is true or false, will be found worthy of critical notice, or the daily life of society, in the columns of this newspaper, both home and foreign. Country gentlemen need not be shocked to the unconscious which follows the perusal of the Queen, for it is a journal for the drawing-room, and will be found in the hands of every member of all the classes. The engravings in the "Queen" will really illustrate the events of the day, and will be found to whatever topics they refer, carefully picked out. No expense and no trouble will be spared in their production.
Newsvendors should apply at once for copies. The Second Number will be given a PLAN OF THE FASHIONS (Public and Private) during the season. Published by the Proprietors, at the Office, 2, Catherine-street, Strand. Price Photograph and Engraving from Raphael's Cartoon, "Paul Preaching at Athens," in the Queen on the first of every month. Published by Mr. Mitchell, Bond-street, Publisher to the Queen, and sold by all Booksellers, Newsvendors, and Railway Stations. Price 6d., stamped 7d. Part I. (Vol. I.), containing the first Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part II. (Vol. II.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part III. (Vol. III.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part IV. (Vol. IV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part V. (Vol. V.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part VI. (Vol. VI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part VII. (Vol. VII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part VIII. (Vol. VIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part IX. (Vol. IX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part X. (Vol. X.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XI. (Vol. XI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XII. (Vol. XII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XIII. (Vol. XIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XIV. (Vol. XIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XV. (Vol. XV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XVI. (Vol. XVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XVII. (Vol. XVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XVIII. (Vol. XVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XIX. (Vol. XIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XX. (Vol. XX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXI. (Vol. XXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXII. (Vol. XXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXIII. (Vol. XXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXIV. (Vol. XXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXV. (Vol. XXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXVI. (Vol. XXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXVII. (Vol. XXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXVIII. (Vol. XXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXIX. (Vol. XXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXX. (Vol. XXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXI. (Vol. XXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXII. (Vol. XXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXIII. (Vol. XXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXIV. (Vol. XXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXV. (Vol. XXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXVI. (Vol. XXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXVII. (Vol. XXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXVIII. (Vol. XXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XXXIX. (Vol. XXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XL. (Vol. XL.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLI. (Vol. XLI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLII. (Vol. XLII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLIII. (Vol. XLIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLIV. (Vol. XLIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLV. (Vol. XLV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLVI. (Vol. XLVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLVII. (Vol. XLVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLVIII. (Vol. XLVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XLIX. (Vol. XLIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part L. (Vol. L.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LI. (Vol. LI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LII. (Vol. LII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LIII. (Vol. LIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LIV. (Vol. LIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LV. (Vol. LV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LVI. (Vol. LVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LVII. (Vol. LVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LVIII. (Vol. LVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LIX. (Vol. LIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LX. (Vol. LX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXI. (Vol. LXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXII. (Vol. LXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXIII. (Vol. LXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXIV. (Vol. LXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXV. (Vol. LXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXVI. (Vol. LXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXVII. (Vol. LXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXVIII. (Vol. LXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXIX. (Vol. LXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXX. (Vol. LXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXI. (Vol. LXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXII. (Vol. LXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXIII. (Vol. LXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXIV. (Vol. LXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXV. (Vol. LXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXVI. (Vol. LXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXVII. (Vol. LXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXVIII. (Vol. LXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXIX. (Vol. LXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXX. (Vol. LXXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXI. (Vol. LXXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXII. (Vol. LXXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXIII. (Vol. LXXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXIV. (Vol. LXXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXV. (Vol. LXXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXVI. (Vol. LXXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXVII. (Vol. LXXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXVIII. (Vol. LXXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part LXXXIX. (Vol. LXXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XC. (Vol. XC.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCI. (Vol. XCI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCII. (Vol. XCII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCIII. (Vol. XCIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCIV. (Vol. XCIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCV. (Vol. XCV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCVI. (Vol. XCVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCVII. (Vol. XCVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCVIII. (Vol. XCVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part XCIX. (Vol. XCIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part C. (Vol. C.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CI. (Vol. CI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CII. (Vol. CII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CIII. (Vol. CIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CIV. (Vol. CIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CV. (Vol. CV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CVI. (Vol. CVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CVII. (Vol. CVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CVIII. (Vol. CVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CIX. (Vol. CIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CX. (Vol. CX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXI. (Vol. CXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXII. (Vol. CXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXIII. (Vol. CXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXIV. (Vol. CXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXV. (Vol. CXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXVI. (Vol. CXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXVII. (Vol. CXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXVIII. (Vol. CXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXIX. (Vol. CXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXX. (Vol. CXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXI. (Vol. CXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXII. (Vol. CXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXIII. (Vol. CXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXIV. (Vol. CXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXV. (Vol. CXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXVI. (Vol. CXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXVII. (Vol. CXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXVIII. (Vol. CXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXIX. (Vol. CXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXX. (Vol. CXXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXI. (Vol. CXXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXII. (Vol. CXXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXIII. (Vol. CXXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXIV. (Vol. CXXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXV. (Vol. CXXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXVI. (Vol. CXXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXVII. (Vol. CXXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXVIII. (Vol. CXXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXXXIX. (Vol. CXXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXL. (Vol. CXL.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLI. (Vol. CXLI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLII. (Vol. CXLII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLIII. (Vol. CXLIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLIV. (Vol. CXLIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLV. (Vol. CXLV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLVI. (Vol. CXLVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLVII. (Vol. CXLVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLVIII. (Vol. CXLVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXLIX. (Vol. CXLIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CL. (Vol. CL.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLI. (Vol. CLI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLII. (Vol. CLII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLIII. (Vol. CLIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLIV. (Vol. CLIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLV. (Vol. CLV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLVI. (Vol. CLVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLVII. (Vol. CLVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLVIII. (Vol. CLVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLIX. (Vol. CLIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLX. (Vol. CLX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXI. (Vol. CLXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXII. (Vol. CLXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXIII. (Vol. CLXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXIV. (Vol. CLXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXV. (Vol. CLXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXVI. (Vol. CLXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXVII. (Vol. CLXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXVIII. (Vol. CLXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXIX. (Vol. CLXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXX. (Vol. CLXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXI. (Vol. CLXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXII. (Vol. CLXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXIII. (Vol. CLXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXIV. (Vol. CLXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXV. (Vol. CLXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXVI. (Vol. CLXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXVII. (Vol. CLXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXVIII. (Vol. CLXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXIX. (Vol. CLXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXX. (Vol. CLXXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXI. (Vol. CLXXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXII. (Vol. CLXXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXIII. (Vol. CLXXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXIV. (Vol. CLXXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXV. (Vol. CLXXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXVI. (Vol. CLXXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXVII. (Vol. CLXXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXVIII. (Vol. CLXXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CLXXXIX. (Vol. CLXXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXC. (Vol. CXC.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCI. (Vol. CXCI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCII. (Vol. CXCII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCIII. (Vol. CXCIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCIV. (Vol. CXCIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCV. (Vol. CXCV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCVI. (Vol. CXCVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCVII. (Vol. CXCVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCVIII. (Vol. CXCVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CXCIX. (Vol. CXCIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CC. (Vol. CC.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCI. (Vol. CCI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCII. (Vol. CCII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCIII. (Vol. CCIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCIV. (Vol. CCIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCV. (Vol. CCV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCVI. (Vol. CCVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCVII. (Vol. CCVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCVIII. (Vol. CCVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCIX. (Vol. CCIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCX. (Vol. CCX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXI. (Vol. CCXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXII. (Vol. CCXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXIII. (Vol. CCXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXIV. (Vol. CCXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXV. (Vol. CCXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXVI. (Vol. CCXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXVII. (Vol. CCXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXVIII. (Vol. CCXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXIX. (Vol. CCXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXX. (Vol. CCXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXI. (Vol. CCXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXII. (Vol. CCXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXIII. (Vol. CCXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXIV. (Vol. CCXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXV. (Vol. CCXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXVI. (Vol. CCXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXVII. (Vol. CCXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXVIII. (Vol. CCXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXIX. (Vol. CCXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXX. (Vol. CCXXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXI. (Vol. CCXXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXII. (Vol. CCXXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXIII. (Vol. CCXXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXIV. (Vol. CCXXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXV. (Vol. CCXXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXVI. (Vol. CCXXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXVII. (Vol. CCXXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXVIII. (Vol. CCXXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXXXIX. (Vol. CCXXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXL. (Vol. CCXL.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLI. (Vol. CCXLI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLII. (Vol. CCXLII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLIII. (Vol. CCXLIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLIV. (Vol. CCXLIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLV. (Vol. CCXLV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLVI. (Vol. CCXLVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLVII. (Vol. CCXLVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLVIII. (Vol. CCXLVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCXLIX. (Vol. CCXLIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCL. (Vol. CCL.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLI. (Vol. CCLI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLII. (Vol. CCLII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLIII. (Vol. CCLIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLIV. (Vol. CCLIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLV. (Vol. CCLV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLVI. (Vol. CCLVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLVII. (Vol. CCLVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLVIII. (Vol. CCLVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLIX. (Vol. CCLIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLX. (Vol. CCLX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXI. (Vol. CCLXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXII. (Vol. CCLXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXIII. (Vol. CCLXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXIV. (Vol. CCLXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXV. (Vol. CCLXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXVI. (Vol. CCLXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXVII. (Vol. CCLXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXVIII. (Vol. CCLXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXIX. (Vol. CCLXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXX. (Vol. CCLXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXI. (Vol. CCLXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXII. (Vol. CCLXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXIII. (Vol. CCLXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXIV. (Vol. CCLXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXV. (Vol. CCLXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXVI. (Vol. CCLXXVI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXVII. (Vol. CCLXXVII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXVIII. (Vol. CCLXXVIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXIX. (Vol. CCLXXIX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXX. (Vol. CCLXXX.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXXI. (Vol. CCLXXXI.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXXII. (Vol. CCLXXXII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXXIII. (Vol. CCLXXXIII.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXXIV. (Vol. CCLXXXIV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6d., stamped 4s. 6d. Part CCLXXXV. (Vol. CCLXXXV.), containing the next Six Numbers, 3s. 6

NEW BOOKS.

Just published, price 3s. ; by post, 3s. 3d.,

THE ART OF SINGING. By the Rev. W. W. CAZALET, A.M. "As a boy, in the right direction it is worthy of high praise."—Morning Post. In the right direction it is worthy of high praise."—Morning Post. In the right direction it is worthy of high praise."—Morning Post. In

THE INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS.



THE INSTALLATION CEREMONY AT THE COURT OF SHEPWAY, DOVER.

THE ceremony of the installation of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, which took place at Dover on Wednesday, August 28th, derives much additional interest from the circumstance of the great antiquity of the office. Its origin must be ascribed to the Roman age; for that people felt the same necessity for guarding the seaboard of the island as did the peoples who succeeded them, and accordingly we find that they had twelve ports along the coast, over whom was placed an officer answering to the Warden of after days. Of those ports Dover was one, and we give below a representation of that Roman town, then known by the name of Dubris. The port was the estuary of the River Dour, which washed the town walls; and here it was that the first cohort was stationed, being the principal landing-place and port of communication with Gaul.

The office appears to have been continued by the Saxons, as it is recorded that Bengist appointed his brother Horsa to the command of Dover Castle and constituted him "Warden" of the ports; and it is certain that the office was in existence at the time of Edward the Confessor, when both Earl Godwyne and his son Harold are said to have held it. And the charters of Edward are referred to in those of succeeding Sovereigns, and particularly of Edward I.

The Doomsday Book mentions these ports, "Dover, Sandwich, and Romney," and refers to the privileges and immunities they enjoyed in consideration of the service to be done by them upon the sea. The Conqueror, however, gave a fixed character to the institution; for in the early part of this reign he granted a charter which erected the five ports of Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Hythe, and Hastings, called the Cinque Ports, into a sort of palatinate jurisdiction, and appointed one of his Norman Barons "Constable of Dover Castle, Warden, Chancellor, and Admiral of the Cinque Ports." The jurisdiction was extended in succeeding reigns by the addition of two ancient towns, Rye and Winchelsea, and of members to all the ports and the ancient town of Rye.

In this state the jurisdiction continued for many generations. The ports possessed very extensive privileges, and the service to be rendered by them to the Crown and their country were defined. Each port had to find a certain number of ships and men, making a total of fifty-seven ships and 1167 men for fifteen days in the year. This was the infant Navy of the kingdom. The Barons of the ports were bound to attend the King in his wars. But they did not limit themselves to this service. For they frequently acted independently, and sallied out to meet and chastise the enemy when he dared to appear in the Channel. The installation of their Warden into his office used to be held at a place called Shepway-cross, near Lyanc Church. And here it is recorded that Prince Edward, afterwards Edward I., took the serment or oath of office, seizing the opportunity for meeting of the Barons of the ports an oath of fidelity to his father King Henry III.

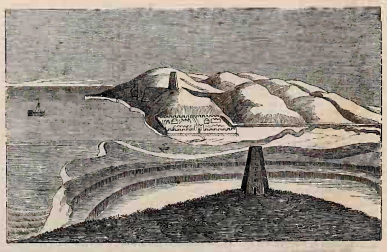
In the time of the Commonwealth the place of installation appears to have been changed to the Bredenstone Hill at Dover, where once stood a Roman pharos, the remains of which have only lately disappeared. Here it was that Lord Viscount Sidney was sworn into office in 1659, and here also Lionel, Duke of Dorset, was installed in 1765.

It does not appear that the ancient custom was followed on the succeeding appointments; and it has been reserved to this day to revive the interesting ceremonial in the person of Lord Viscount Palmerston. That noble Lord, it is said, is the one hundred and eighteenth Warden in succession from Earl Godwyne—a list embracing many Princes of Royal blood and noble Knights and Lords, whose names are famous in their country's history.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE CEREMONY.

The Prime Minister was inaugurated on Wednesday week at Dover as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. Much interest was excited, and several of the old ceremonies were maintained, but the great event of the day was, of course, the appearance of Lord Palmerston himself. The installation took place at what is termed a Grand Court of Shepway, which is never held but for this particular ceremony, and was preceded by a review of the Cinque Port Volunteers by Colonel M'Murdo, and succeeded by a grand banquet in the Townhall. Formerly the office of Lord Warden was one of considerable emolument, but it is now shorn of its pecuniary advantages, the office only having attached to it fess to the extent of £300 or £100 a year. The magnificent residence of Wolmer Castle is, however, an appanage, while the office itself is considered one of high honour and dignity, being only given to noblemen after a long career of service to the State, either in the senate or the camp, and its recipients being invariably Knights of the Garter.

THE TOWNHALL, DOVER, ANCIENTLY THE MAISON DIEU.



THE ROMAN DUBRIS (DOVER), WITH ITS TWO LIGHTHOUSES.—FROM AN OLD PRINT.

The town was decorated throughout. The square in which the old Townhall used to stand presented a very gay appearance, being filled by a vast crowd of people waiting for the appearance of the noble Lord. On the hill were encamped some thousands of spectators, who had a most magnificent view of the procession as it passed from the castle to the Drop Redoubt, upon the opposite hill, and also far away from Shakspeare's cliff, where the Court of Shepway was held. This was probably two miles and a half from the military parade, and from the hilly character of the ground the view of the procession could see the procession almost from the time it left the castle to the time of entering the redoubt. About seven o'clock the shops began to close and the military to line the streets through which the procession passed, and long before that hour appeared the enclosures in the castle were filled by thousands of people awaiting in excited expectation the crash of the cannon which was to announce the entrance of Lord Folmerston into the castle.

THE MUSTER OF THE VOLUNTEERS AND THE REVIEW.

The volunteers present numbered between 500 and 600, no other than Cinque Port Volunteers being allowed to take part in the procession; and they comprised the following corps:—The Hastings, the Ramsgate, the Rye, the Hythe, the Folkestone, the Deal, and the Dover. So few were also present the following artillery corps:—The Dover, Folkestone, Ramsgate, Sandwich, Walmer, Hastings, Hythe, and Margate. The review was under the general command of Colonel J. Marsh. The men, who presented a very fine and soldier-like appearance, were drawn up on the ground lately laid out for the purpose, to receive Lord Palmerston, who was accompanied by Lord Elcho, the Hon. Mr. Waldegrave, and Mr. Cowper, M.P., and who was received by a hearty cheer. He was greeted by loud cheers from the assembled thousands, to which he replied by courteously bowing all around. His Lordship, who appeared to be in excellent health, wore the uniform of Lord Warden. The review was covered by the star, badge, and broad blue ribbon of the Garter. As soon as the cheering had subsided, the volunteers marched past, and at the 10th regiment began to play, and the noble Lord and his Staff proceeded slowly down the front of the line, and back again, after which the whole corps organized and marched past his Lordship and his friends, and afterwards at the double. Some evolutions were then made upon the ground to arrange places for the 10th regiment to take the review one general and hearty cheer was given by the assembled volunteers, and the gentlemen then took their way to the Castle there to form

THE PROCESSION TO THE COURT OF SURVEY.

The Cinque Ports procession was then admired by the firing of a salute of nineteen of the great guns, the effect of which was wonderfully heightened by the echoes from the cliffs which also prevented the dissipation of the sound. After a good deal of marshalling and arranging by the energetic town clerk and his assistants, whose special duty it was to arrange the procession on its march, and especially the ancient mace, the procession emerged from the castle yard in the following order :—

The Cinque Ports Volunteer Artillery Corps.

Governor and Deputy Governor of Dover Castle and castles within the Cinque Ports, two by two.

The Mayor of the Cinque Ports, accompanied by the Recorders, Town-clerks, and Coroners, with their Barons, and returned men in their gowns, two by two, preceded by their respective sergeants-at-mace.

The Attendants of the Corporation of Dover, in livery, rebel.

Registrar of the Ports, rebel.

The Judge of the Chancery and Admiralty Court, in his robes.

The Surrogate of the Cinque Ports Court of Admiralty, in his robes.

The Lord Warden's Secretary.

The Lieutenant of Dover Castle.

Trumpets, &c.

The Lord Warden.

The Officers and Gentlemen attending upon the Lord Warden, riding.

Bearer of the Cinque Ports, two by two.

Cinque Ports Volunteer Rifle Corps.

A clear road had been kept in the middle of the streets for the procession, the whole of the cavalry force being suspended. The procession in passing from the castle gate to the Drop Redoubt went through the whole heart of Dover, and everywhere Lord Palmerston was cheered in the most cordial manner. The noble Lord seemed highly pleased with his warm reception, and constantly bowed his acknowledgments.

THE INSTALLATION.

The ceremony of installing Lord Palmerston took place in the Court of Shepway in a tent improvised for the occasion in the Drop Redoubt upon the Western Heights. Long before the commencement of the ceremony the heights were crowded with spectators, by whom the noble Premier was greeted with deafening cheers as his carriage drove slowly past. Upon arriving at the foot of the redoubt, which is one part of the new fortifications now constructed, Lord Palmerston alighted from the carriage and proceeded on foot, a salute from a battery beneath announcing his arrival at the court.

Upon entering the court his Lordship took his seat upon a dais prepared for the occasion, and the mayors, bailiffs, and jurats of the Cinque Ports, according to their seniority, took up their places around. Mr. George Rae, Esq., Registrar, Mayor Elect (Hythe), and the visitors were provided with seats in a tent to the left of the Lord Warden.

The Court having been formally opened by the crier, the seneschal (Mr. E. Knocker, Town Clerk of Dover) called over the roll of mayors and bailiffs, as the following answered to their names:—The Mayors of Hastings, Dover, Sandwich, Hythe, New Romney, Winchelsea, Tenterden, Rye, Romney, Deal, Faversham, Margate, and Rye; and the Bailiffs of Lydd, Feversham, and Seaford. The Mayor of Rochester was the only absentee. Each in his name was called declared to be a freeholder purchaser and took upon which, in accordance with ancient custom, the names of the delegates were engrossed.

The writ was then read. This was a voluminous document, to which the Great Seal was appended, and it set forth that the office of Constable of the Castle of Dover, the Guardianship of the Ports, and Chancellor of the Cinque Ports, had been granted to "our right trusty and well-beloved cousin and counsellor" Lord Palmerston, and then to him was granted the "issues and fortuns and liberties and all profitables and emoluments of all kinds whatsoever enjoyed by his predecessors, with all the customary accustomed exemptions to the annual payment of £1500 a year.

Lord Palmerston I have great pleasure in accepting the office conferred upon me by the Queen and ratified by this Court, and I shall deem it my duty to perform all the duties that belong to that ancient and honourable office (Loud cheers).

By the command of the seneschal a flag was then waved by the crier, and at this signal a salute was fired from the battery beneath the Drop Redoubt, followed by deafening cheers from the spectators who crowded the heights.

The seneschal then explained that it was the custom, immediately after the Lord Warden had accepted the office, for the mayors, bailiffs, and barons to kiss his hand as a token of fealty.

Upon this information, the whole of the members of the Court rose and bowed to his Lordship, amid great cheering.

Dr. Phillimore, Q.C., as Judge of the Court of Admiralty, then addressed the Lord Warden as follows :—

My Lord Warden, Colonels of Dover, Lord Warden of Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Hastings, and Hythe, of the number towns Winchelsea and Rye, and other tributaries, having a certain jurisdiction over the holder of my office the duty—I should, perhaps, more correctly say invoke him with the privilege of addressing a few remarks to you, the mayors, bailiffs, barons, and other inhabitants of the Cinque Ports, to the Lord Warden, to the Court, and to the inhabitants at the full face of the Court of Shepway. I may, my Lord Warden, that, according to ancient precedent, the speaker on the occasion ought to exercise himself to two topics: he ought to congratulate the Lord Warden upon the high dignity and enchantments of his office, and he ought also, after the fashion of free subjects, addressing a constitutional Sovereign, really to remind the Lord Warden that his subjects have rights which he is bound to protect, privileges which he is bound to maintain. To former speakers, my Lord Warden, topics were somewhat more freely open, unfortunately, may one be allowed to say, many of us especially Englishmen, are extremely much borne with the unbounded encomiums upon a Lord Warden's office, and with the rights and privileges of those over whom he is appointed to rule. Strongly, however, of this latter institution happily remains to preserve the relation between the Lord Warden and the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports, and to justify the present solemnity. Those rights and privileges, the rights of the Cinque Ports, their franchises, and bayne still remain intact, and the Admiralty Court, over which I have the honour to preside, and from which there is but one appeal—to the Crown—still retains its jurisdiction from the shore beacon on the coast of Essex to the red cliffs by Sandgate on the coast of Sussex. Time, indeed, a great destroyer and a great innovator: he lays his withering hand upon the noblest institutions. In the fable of many a good institution, as in the fable of many a good man, there is a fatal moment when the grave of destruction, who is the enemy of all, arrives, it is not extinguished. Let me apply this observation to the present Court of Shepway. On the opposite hill, and not many miles distant, I seven ships at the command of Guilty Sovereign? What church no more—as in the time of the Plantagenets—to anticipate the wishes of the Lord Warden, make war to avenge an insult offered to the national flag? What Court of Admiralty, in the time of Edward the Third, the Cinque Ports could enable the Sovereign to check foul scorn that a foreign force should invade the realm of England? What Court, I say, could those men and their perilous subjects have passed away, and the burden of maintaining the maritime defences of Dover and the Cinque Ports has devolved upon the country. Let me then speak of loyalty to the Throne and of love to the country which once animated the Barons of the Cinque Ports, and which, I trust, still animates the magnificent spectacle of this day—of that gallant force of volunteers which has come up from the Cinque Ports to salute at a distance the Lord Warden and our fellowsubject—of that force whose remarkable characteristic it is that the same valour is there, in enthusiasm, in patriotism, in the ranks which are not inferior to the officer who commands him. After some further remarks, Dr. Phillimore concluded by presenting to the Lord Warden a brief that the privileges of the ports were safe in the hands of his Lordship.

Lord Palmerston, who was received with loud cheers, said:—

Gentlemen,—I need not say that I have heard with the greatest delight, with feelings of gratitude as well as of pride, the eloquent address which we have just heard from the learned Judge; a gratitude which I feel to be fully distinguished by his professional attainments, and, as I well remember, greatly increased by the eloquence which he displayed when at the bar. It is peculiarly gratifying to me that that well-known voice should upon this occasion have addressed me, because I remember when I was a young man how much I admired the honourable office. I quite concur with my learned friend—I am sure he will excuse me for calling him so, for I am a barrister of the Middle Temple—that a long acquaintance with the merits and deserts—I quite concur with him that he ought to say—of ancient institutions is apt to make us look upon them, in a superficial observer, may not be apparent at first sight; but if any man will look into the matter he will find that the volunteers of the Cinque Ports and that the knowledge that the town, or the county, or the corporation, or the institution to which he belongs, has rendered long and valuable and good service to the country, has been loyal to his Sovereign, and has done honour to the country in which he lives, gives an additional spur to his ambition for good conduct in whatever circumstances he may be placed, because, feeling that he belongs to an ancient and honourable body, he feels it wrong, he would feel ashamed of lowering the character of that institution. I am sure that the volunteers of the Cinque Ports and Dover castle have done honour to their country and rendered themselves worthy of the confidence which the Crown has reposed in them. Well, gentlemen, I regret that my occupation of the office of Lord Warden will be but a short one, and that I shall not have the opportunity of doing much for you; but I trust that the office will not be abolished during my time, or at least that the knowledge that the knowledge that the town, or the county, or the corporation, or the institution to which he belongs, has rendered long and valuable and good service to the country, has been loyal to his Sovereign, and has done honour to the country in which he lives, gives an additional spur to his ambition for good conduct in whatever circumstances he may be placed, because, feeling that he belongs to an ancient and honourable body, he feels it wrong, he would feel ashamed of lowering the character of that institution. I quite concur with my learned friend—I am sure he will excuse me for calling him so, for I am a barrister of the Middle Temple—that a long acquaintance with the merits and deserts—I quite concur with him that he ought to say—of ancient institutions is apt to make us look upon them, in a superficial observer, may not be apparent at first sight; but if any man will look into the matter he will find that the volunteers of the Cinque Ports and 1050, cased it with flint, and altered it from a hexagonal to an octagonal form. The phrase is used as a Government synchronism with regard to the ancient nave of Dover, we find it called in the Liturgy of Antonimus, Ad Portum Dubris. Lambard supposes its name to have been derived from the British Dwfyrras, signifying a name to have been derived from the British Dwfyrras, signifying a steep place; and Camden agrees with him in the Domesday Book it becomes called in Brevy and Dofris, which in the Saxon is softened into Dovere. "It is probable," says Brayley, "that the Roman town was on the south side of the river which flows down the valley into Dover Harbour, and that the Via Iter-strata came through the town Canterbury over Barham Downs, entered it where Biggin Gate formerly stood."

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

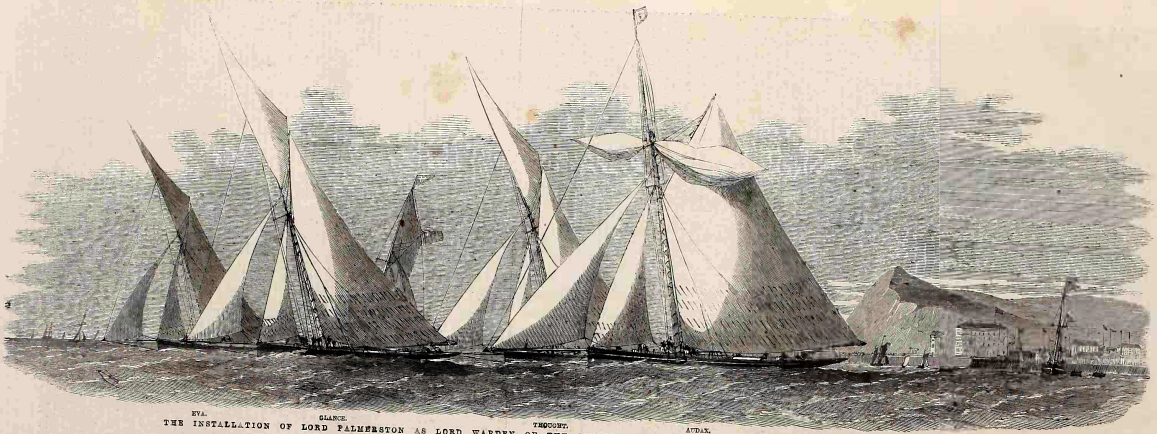
We mentioned last week the commencement of this great music meeting, and have now to give, briefly, a connected notice of the various performances. As we have already mentioned, the festival began on Tuesday, the 27th of August, with the performance of "Elijah," by upwards of 300 of the place for which this great work was composed, and where it was first brought before the public. The principal vocal parts were assigned to a greater number of singers than ever took part in the performance of this oratorio, or indeed any other, annual. The part of "Elijah," being dramatical and individual, was entirely, and most ably, sustained by Mr. Sunley. The soprano music was divided between Mdlle. Tietjens and Madame Sherrington. As the former lady was allotted, among other things, the duet and quartet before Horeb, and "Hear ye, Israel"—perfectly suited to the grandeur of her style; Madme. Sherrington drew a most pathetic effect from the air, "Oh rest in the Lord," and the following, whose son he restores to life. The recitative Prophet and the widow, whose son he restores to life. The recitative part was divided between Mdme. Dolby and Miss Palmer, and the former singer the famous "O rest in the Lord," and the latter the deeply-impressive "Woe unto them." The principal portions of the tenor part were given to Mr. Sims Reeves, who is remarkable in Mr. Mostson Smith, a sterling singer, whose style is peculiarly his own, and who has become a favourite with the Birmingham audience. The bass music was allotted to Mr. Lewis, who is a native of the town and neighbourhood.

The most completely played by Arabella Goddard.

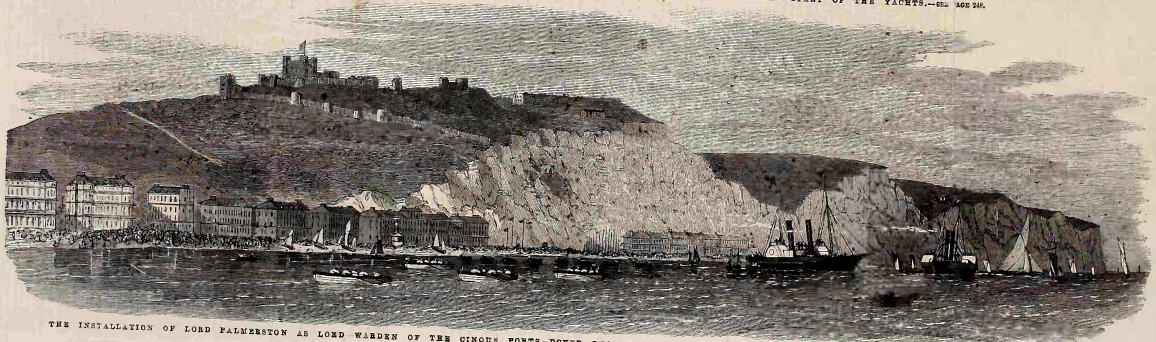
The performance of Wednesday morning was Handel's "Samson," with Costa's additional accompaniments, in the same manner as at the Handel Festival in 1859. These accompaniments, to which Mr. Costa has lately added a new overture to the "Messiah" for his Canon, has taken Mozart's accompaniments to the "Messiah" for his model, are very masterly, and enrich Handel's score without in any degree burdening or perverting it. The performance was in every respect admirable. Mr. Sims Reeves sang "Total eclipse" as no one has sung it since Braham's days. Mdlle. Patti sang in the evening of the Handel Festival in 1857 "Let the bright seraphim," with Harper's brilliant execution of the trumpet accompaniment. Mdme. Rudersdorff sang the grand recitative of the famous music, including the dialogue between Samson and Delilah. The rest of the solos were sung by Mdme. Dolby, Miss Palmer, Mr. Sunley, and Signor Belletti.

In point of miscellaneous concert on Wednesday evening, Haydn's oratorio "The Creation" was given—as was also the case at the Handel Festival—as the second one, for the band was by no means well filled. The performance, however, was excellent. The solo singers were Mdme. Tietjens, Mdme. Rudersdorff, Miss Palmer, Mr. Sunley, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Thomas Aldridge, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Sunley, and Signor Belletti; and the Palmer, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Sunley, and Signor Belletti; and the delightful choruses were sung, we may say almost as well as possible.

The performance of "The Messiah" on Thursday was (as it always was) the great event of the festival. The influx of visitors was enormous, and the hall was crowded to excess by a delighted audience. In the performance there was no novelty saving the divine beauty which Mozart's additions threw into the air of Handel's immortal work. Mdlle. Tietjens threw into the air of Handel's immortal work. Mdlle. Tietjens threw into the air of Handel's immortal work. Mdlle. Tietjens



THE INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS.—DOVER REGATTA: START OF THE YACHTS.—SEE PAGE 249.



THE INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS.—DOVER REGATTA: THE BOAT RACES FOR THE LORD WARDEN'S AND OTHER PRIZES.—SEE PAGE 249.

THE INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS: ARRIVAL OF HIS LORDSHIP AT DOVER CASTLE.—SEE PAGE 256.

LITERATURE AND ART.

Under a heading "Death of an English Traveller in Russia," somewhat calculated to mislead the public, our contemporaries have recorded the death of a very remarkable man. Mr. Thomas Witham Atkinson, the traveller who has just passed to that bourne whence none return, did not die in Russia, but in a quiet English village. Thomas Atkinson was originally an ornamental mason, then an architect; but it is to his researches as a traveller in Oriental and Western Siberia, and in the Amoor, and to the wonderful picturesque in water colours he made of the strange aspects of Nature which had come within his ken, that his fame was chiefly due. For years he wandered, with a wife as devoted to him as Anita was to Garibaldi, in desolate fastnesses and among savage tribes, depending for worldly support on his pencil for the means of subsistence. A child was born to him in his strange pilgrimages—born to him, we believe, in the Altai mountains; part barrington, of his existence, he had daily, perhaps, to be content to see the havoc made by the ruthless cannon and the inexorable manipulator on his beloved "stone-pictures." The case of this moribund art is very analogous to that of the art of wood-cutting. Once the wood-cut mills had attained perfection, just as the speed of the vehicles, the "spanking" of the steam, the drivers and guards of railways, had all but modelled him and the succulence of the coach dinner left nothing to be de-fired, there came, roaring and rallying along, those "stifling iron horses," as Theodore Hook called railway trains, to put an end to all the coaches of the road. So has it been with lithography. Just as lithographic portraiture was assuming a high rank in the world, just as engraving on stone was beginning to rival the finest etchings—just as Mr. D. Hanhart, in working on lithographic stone, was solving the problem of reproducing Indian-ink drawings on stone, came the sweeping discoveries of Daguerre and Fox Talbot—came the marvellous multiplications of Claudet, and Ayrton, and Wharley, and the whole race for lithography? Is it to die and have no sign? Is it to fall into desuetude even as aquatint engraving, mezzotinto, and stipple have done? Is it to have fallen? Is it to succumb to the degradation of being used for bal-bead and nurse-pages? Even as engraving on copper and wood-engraving can no longer hold its ground, and has been vanquished by wood blocks.

The Baron Day, of Gate-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields, seem to be making a gallant stand to resuscitate the failing prestige of lithography, and, in addition to the management of his extensive works in small and colours, to which they owe so much of their reputation, they now announce the illustrated Illuminator's Magazine. There is at present quite a pleasant little mania among the ladies for illuminating; we are sure there could not be a prettier one; and, thanks to Mr. M. Darby Wyatt, and the restoration of ancient missals and books of "hours" has been going on at a grand rate. How the delightful "little Cranes" do vary the "Sleeping Beauty" and "Cinderella" now-a-days! but let us see how many "ladies' cranes" we can remember: silk, purple-cutting, sand and shell picture-painting, bird and flower painting, pressed grass and calico, leather and wax-flowers, painting on velvet, Berlin-wool work, crochet, "application," embroidery (eyelet holes, tambour, slippers, footstool and worsted-work), glass-painting, tatting in thread, in clay, and in wax, and now "illumination" rethigh is one of arts. We have left out ornamental gardening, and limning, engravings; and, then, to think of the old samplers of our grandmammas, and the silk and worsted work imitations of the cartoons of the reverend Miss Linwood!

There is no tangible reason why an ambassador should not be an historian, but the annals of British Embassies present very few instances of a historian being made an ambassador, not omitting but peerages. Our American cousins are not so scrupulous. Many years since a worthy precedent in the reward of literary merit was set by the appointment of the illustrious Washington Irving to the post of United States' Minister at Madrid, as a mode of honour that President Lincoln has had the good taste to give the Viennese Embassy to Mr. John Lothrop Motley, the eminent narrator of the rise of the Dutch Republic and the more recent writer of "An Inquiry into the Causes of the Civil War in America." To be, however, an American diplomatist at the present conjecture is by no means to be a man to envy.

Is there not one Mr. Faulkner, quondam Minister to France, who is incarcerated in one of the United States' fortresses on a suspicion of treason?

Rumour—where does Rumour live when she sat home, and how came she to have a hundred tongues?—talks of yet another new shilling monthly magazine to be started at no very distant period, and which may be relied upon to be a formidable rival to Bentley and Colburn's. Mr. Charles Reade, "The Mill on the Floss," and "Silas Marner," are understood by George Eliot "will not on a shilling magazine." This same incorrigible Rumour likewise whispers that negotiations are pending for a new series of Lives of science and martial interest for Tonight Sir from the pen of Charles Lever, the illustrious successor of "Harry Lorrequer;" and, finally, as Rumour, but a matter-of-fact advertisement tells us that in the October Number of Colburn's will be commenced a new fiction called "The Shadow of Ashlydyat," by the author of "Red Ignax."

Of novels already commenced in serial form we have Sir Bulwer Lytton's "Strange Story" in All the Year Round, which grows stranger every week, and is to be harmoniously followed up by a new "romance" tale by Mr. Wilkie Collins; and in Fraser a romance entitled "Barrie Hosmer," by Lawrence, of "Guy Livingstone," and of "Sword and Gown" celebrity. Who shall say that works of imagination are at a discount?

In France the pamphlet form of publication continues to reign supreme. Of theatre brochures, "The Emperor, the Pope, and the King of Italy," we have (it being printed behind the back of M. Dentu, of the Palais Royal, contrives to issue these opuscules by the score, and it would seem as though the pen-and-ink mind of France had caught formal fix desired vent. At the Libraries Nouvelle, too, Father Prout, in the Galerie, sells us at pamphlet on the affairs of Hayti signed by the black ex-Emperor, Faustin Soulouque, which is the saddest potentiate so summarily dethroned by President Geffrard? Has he found a Thomas in Paris? or is he left comforting himself with the lushes full of sawn rum and "abundant pumpkin" in the congenial isle of Jamaica?

The once-notorious Thomas Francis Meagher "of the sword" has added his pen to his arsenal of weapons. The fiery Thomas Francis volunteered, it will be remembered, to fight the Southerners, and, with his comrades, duly came to grief at the Bull Run "stampede." We find that he has been contributing to the columns of a contemporary an account, in three parts, of "The Last Days of the 69th Regiment in Virginia." The narrative is graphic enough; but the manner in which the ex-Paladin of Young Ireland accounts for his men casting away their provisions and accoutrements is amusingly characteristic. "It is not," writes Mr. Meagher, "in the nature of an Irishman to fight with four or five pounds of boiled pork and biscuit hanging at his hip." Bravo, we suppose, the sauve qui peut and the "stampede."

Relics of the Past.

THE VEHME-GERICHTE, OR SECRET TRIBUNALS, OF WESTPHALIA.

THE SEAL OF THE SECRET TRIBUNALS.

THE romantic and mysterious interest with which Sir Walter Scott has contrived to invest the Vehmic Tribunals in "Anne of Geierstein" is not apt to mislead an inquirer into the origin and constitution of these remarkable associations. He has himself admitted, indeed, in a subsequent edition of that captivating novel that his view of the "Holy Volume" was considerably modified when he became acquainted with the laborious and profound researches of Mr., afterwards Sir, Francis Palgrave on the subject. That these courts assumed a formidable and comprehensive jurisdiction, that they retained many of the mystical ceremonials derivable from their Teutonic originators, and that there was much to the invisible head and solemn oath by which the fraternity were united, to inspire awe and apprehension, no one can deny; but that their meetings were held in the recesses of impenetrable forests, that their victims were strangled from the ranks in subterranean vaults, and that everything known of their proceedings was arbitrary, bloody, and terrible, are the more liberal assumptions.

With the assistance of the chief authorities who have written on these dread tribunals* we shall endeavour to prove that, so far from being held at night in woods and dungeons, the court was convoked with ostentatious publicity, in the eye of day, and that the sentences, though speedy and severe, were founded upon a system of long-established jurisprudence.

As an indispensable preliminary to our observations on the Vehmic Courts it is necessary, however, to say something on another tribunal of kindred character, perhaps of earlier date—"The Field Court of Corbey." This singular jurisdiction, which claimed a direct descent from the Pagan policy of the earliest Teutones, was originally under the supremacy of the priests of Eresburgh. It was composed of sixteen persons, who held their offices for life. The senior member presided as the Count of Graff; the junior performed the duties of "Frohner," or summoner; and the remaining fourteen acted as Echevins, who made known the judgments of the tribunal. When any one of these died a successor was elected by the priests from the twenty-two septs or families of the "Gau" or district, who had the right to nominate candidates for election.

The seat of judgment, "Konig-stuhl," or King's-chair, was invariably established in the open sward, and the assemblies were always held by the light of the moon, as indicative, probably, of solar worship, and betraying a remarkable affinity to the British barbaric institutions. The sun was proclaimed "in the open air, in the eye of the light, and in the face of the sun."

When a criminal was to be judged, or a cause to be decided, the Graff and the Echevins assembled round the "Konig-stuhl," and the Frohner, first proclaiming silence, began the proceedings thus :—

> Sir Graff, with permission,
> I beg you to say,
> According to law, and without delay,
> If I, your humble,
> Who judgment crave,
> With your good grace,
> May the Red Court hold this seat may place.

To this address the Graff replied :—

> While the sun shines with even light
> Upon Heaven and earth, I, your lord declare
> The law strength, according to right.
> Place the King's seat true and square,
> Let even measure, for justice stab,
> Be given to the poor and rich,
> That the plaintiff his complaint may make,
> And the defendant answer—if he can.

In conformity to this permission, the summoner placed the seat of judgment in the centre of the plot of ground, and then spoke for the second time:—

> Sir Graff, master brave,
> I render you my honour, here,
> And, moreover, that I am your Knave!
> Tell me, therefore, for law sincere,
> If these men-wards are seen and sure—
> Fit for the Red Court to be given,
> Both to measure land and condition;
> Also, to be adjudged by your petition.

So reciting, he laid the note-wand on the ground. The Graff then tested the measure by placing his right foot against the wand, and was followed by the Echevins according to seniority. This done, the Frohner broke silence for the third time:—

> Sir Graff, I pray you,
> If it, with your meto-wand may mete
> Quite, and without question,
> How long stand judgments set?

To this the Graff answered :—

> I permit right,
> And I deal out wrong,
> Under the pains and penalties
> That to the Red Court have long belong.

The mystic plot was then measured, the note-wand being laid along and noted, and the Frohner solemnly proceeded to declare that the Graff placed himself on the seat of judgment and admonished the assembled Echevins to decide only according to right and justice :—

> On this day which now appears
> And under the clear firmament,
> A free field court is established here
> In the open eye of day!
> Father above, I pray, to me say,
> The judgment seat in its place is right,
> The measuring-wand is found to be right;
> Declare your judgments without delay,
> That I may betray none!
> Whilst yet the sun shines bright in heaven.

When the charge had been given, and evidence heard, the Echevins pronounced judgment according to plurality of voices.

The jurisdiction of this court, it should be mentioned, extended only to crimes committed in the open air, for, though the Echevins might pass sentence of death upon an offender, the execution of the sentence was transferred to the feudal superior.

(To be continued.)

* More particularly of Schottelius, "Freien-in de Secretis Judicis," Rotthon, 1767; Koop, "Uber die Verfassung der Heimlichen Gerichte," Gottingen, 1794; Beck, "Geschichte der Westphalischen Feim Gerichte," Bremen, 1815; Fulgerus, "Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth," London, 1832.

LITERATURE.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A.N. WELBY PUGIN AND HIS FATHER, AUGUSTUS PUGIN; WITH NOTICES OF THEIR WORKS. By BENJAMIN FERREY, Architect. Stanford.

If eccentricity is to be taken as a mark of genius, the revelations of the character and doings of Welby Pugin which this book contains certainly entitle him to the benefit of that supposition. It is, however, unquestionable that as man of the present time few has distinguished himself more in his own peculiar line, and therefore anything relating to his history and career is likely to prove interesting to those whose attention has been turned to the revival of medieval architecture. There can be little doubt that the originality of idea and the varied acquirements of this heart-and-soul architect; while his publications, by their peculiar but forcible style and their fearlessness of what he believed to be and which look very like stubborn truths, made as deep an impression as books could, and are constantly quoted as affording the best axioms in the branch of art to which he devoted himself. A comparatively early death has thrown an additional interest around the career of Pugin; and those who believe him to have been as an architect the first of his age will gladly accept this record of his life, which, though far from perfect, is the first survey, and the career which he pursued, is set without incident apart from its professional course. The elder Pugin was born in France, in 1792, and, though his birthplace is unknown, he himself, with the usual mystery of distinction, one of his ancestors being a nobleman who raised a hundred soldiers for the service of Prince Charles Edward, and was imprisoned for his valour in having defeated a body of cavalry at Monti, when that city was besieged by the Duke of Burgundy, in 1477. Augustus Pugin witnessed many of the scenes of the first Revolution; and it is said that, after a narrow escape of his life in a skirmish in the Place de la Bastile, he fled to Caen, in Calvados, and fled to Rouen and thence made his way to England. He here became acquainted with Nash, the fashionable architect of the early years of George IV., who obtained for him employment for his talent as an architectural draughtsman, and subsequently became proficient as a drawing-master. It was on the relation of a circumstance that happened to him that the elder Mathews founded his pathetic little dramatic scene of "Married Life." It was the custom of the master to obtain the letters he expected at the post-office because the English postmen could not read them. Mr. Mathews, Mr. Pugin's reputed inquiries for letters he constantly received the answer that there were no letters for Mr. Pugin, but plenty for Mr. Pugeen. He married Miss Catherine Welby, the daughter of a eminent banker of the time of Sir William Welby, Bart., of Denton, Lincolnshire, a lady of remarkable personal beauty and talent, and the author of the "Poetry of the "Isle of Islington." Of this marriage was born Augustus Welby Northmore Pugin, the subject of this memoir, on the 1st of March, 1812, in the pseudo locality of Store-street, Bedford-square. He received his early education at the Blomont School, and, having exhibited an almost intuitive talent for drawing he was placed in his father's office. The bent of himself was towards fun, and his pencilled heads coloured with a broad humour soon became the delight of persons which never forsook him—namely, an entire disregard of the conventionalities of dress. "If," said the teacher of him, "he understood how to dress himself I should consider him a perfect character." But in life he was in the habit of wearing a sailor's jacket, pilot trousers, jackboots, and a wide-awake hat, which, in connection with his mission from the Calais boat, he entered a first-class carriage, and was accepted only by the guard because he knew, from experience, your carriage." To which he replied, "I think you are right; I thought I was the company of gentlemen."

Referring to the early days of Welby Pugin we find that, having gone through a series of architectural tours in England and France, and exhibitions, which, however, were not so much in demand as to lead to the construction of ecclesiastical buildings, were first brought into play in the revival of taste in this country to decorate burial-grounds from churches. In 1837 the elder Pugin was one of the chief projectors of that which afterwards became the Kensal-green Cemetery, and, with the assistance of his son, he prepared the first preliminary drawings and plans, which were, we are told, much more extensive than those which the Association somehow thus the curious collection of monuments now crowded together in the cemetery. The earliest employment, however independently of his father, was given him by the celebrated Mr. Rundell and Mr. Bridge, in 1837. Out of this firm, while engaged in the Print Room of the British Museum in an examination of the plates of silversmith's work for the purpose of revival, Pugin employed in copying some prints of Albert Durer and Israel Silvester, from which the firm of Rundell and Bridge selected an accepted him, and soon found that he possessed just the faculties which the firm required. His accurate knowledge of medieval art fitted him admirably for designing plate in that style. His services were immediately secured, and much beautiful plate was executed by Rundell and Bridge from his designs. His introduction soon led to the Royal commissions of a still more important character, so far as the notability of the work was concerned. He was engaged to design furniture in the medieval style for Windsor Castle on the occasion of the queen's coronation, and he produced designs which were remarkable for great variety of form and detail. A commission of a similar nature next led to employment in designing scenery for the then King's Theatre, his "pupnics band being tried on the stage, and appearing to us open called "Kenilworth," and which therefore afforded scope for the mechanical taste and skill, and for a time he entered with great enthusiasm into the theatrical representations. These pupnics which were apparently as strong as they were various, next led him to the stage. There, in the latter life he also made one or two voyages in boats and a schooner, and having been once wrecked on the Scotch coast, he returned to his first love, and established an art-manufactory, the object of which was not only to undertake working drawings, but the superintendence of the execution of the works, for which purpose he proposed to send out his own skilled workmen. This speculation involved him in difficulties, from which he was extricated by the kindness of his uncle Scott. Soon after, while a minor, he married his first wife, who died within a year in giving birth to a daughter. And here it may be as well to mention that he was married three times; to his second wife, Miss Gothic, only capable to have been, or might have been, the husband of a fourth lady, to whom he was married, and who survives him. This lady, indeed, broke off the match somewhat suddenly; and Pugin took the course what eccentricity, by publishing a pamphlet in vindication of his own conduct in the matter. After this unfortunate affair he resided for some time at Salisbury, and from that period may be dated his entrance into the career of an ecclesiastical architect, during what his education was not of a description to give him a bias towards the Roman Catholic religion, he nevertheless became a convert to that faith. Many persons both in and out of the pale of the Roman Catholic Church did not scruple to attribute his conversion solely to the love he had for the ornate ceremonies of the middle ages. However that may have been—and it is probable that his faith in the Catholic Church was a more palpable proof—his conversion could be more sweeping than his strictures on the architecture, the mode of combining the ecclesiastical, and the style of decoration of modern Catholicism. Of all that related to the belongings of that Church in these respects in Rome itself he always spoke in terms of unmitigated condemnation. He considered the circumstance, as the fact that the Roman Catholic priesthood disregarded the principles of Christian art in their churches, and of constructing their edifices with the earnestness of many of the clergy and laity of the Anglican Church, who readily adopted the Gothic principles of true principles." There can be no doubt that he was influenced by the idea which has been often mooted in reference to the old masters in painting, who are said to have delineated saints and martyrs with earnestness and fervour of design, and expression mainly because they believed in them, as adventures which a so-called cold modern Protestant cannot be supposed to be possessed of when he is engaged on a religious subject, and who has received as an ecclesiastical architect that he was as he believe, admitted, Mr. Ruskin's criticisms on him notwithstanding) because he was in earnest, and fully imbued with that elegant materialism which so much pervades the practice of the Roman Catholic faith. The same spirit which influenced him in his architectural conceptions was carried into the several works which he published; and his enthusiasm is as marked in the argument and the language of his "True Principles of Gothic Architecture" and his "Glossary of Ecclesiastical Ornament and Costume," as it is in all the activity of his life. All who know him declare that his chief characteristic was thoroughness, and that his genuineness was the source and the secret of any powers which he displayed, while his outspoken boldness was accompanied by an utter absence of all mere personal pretension.

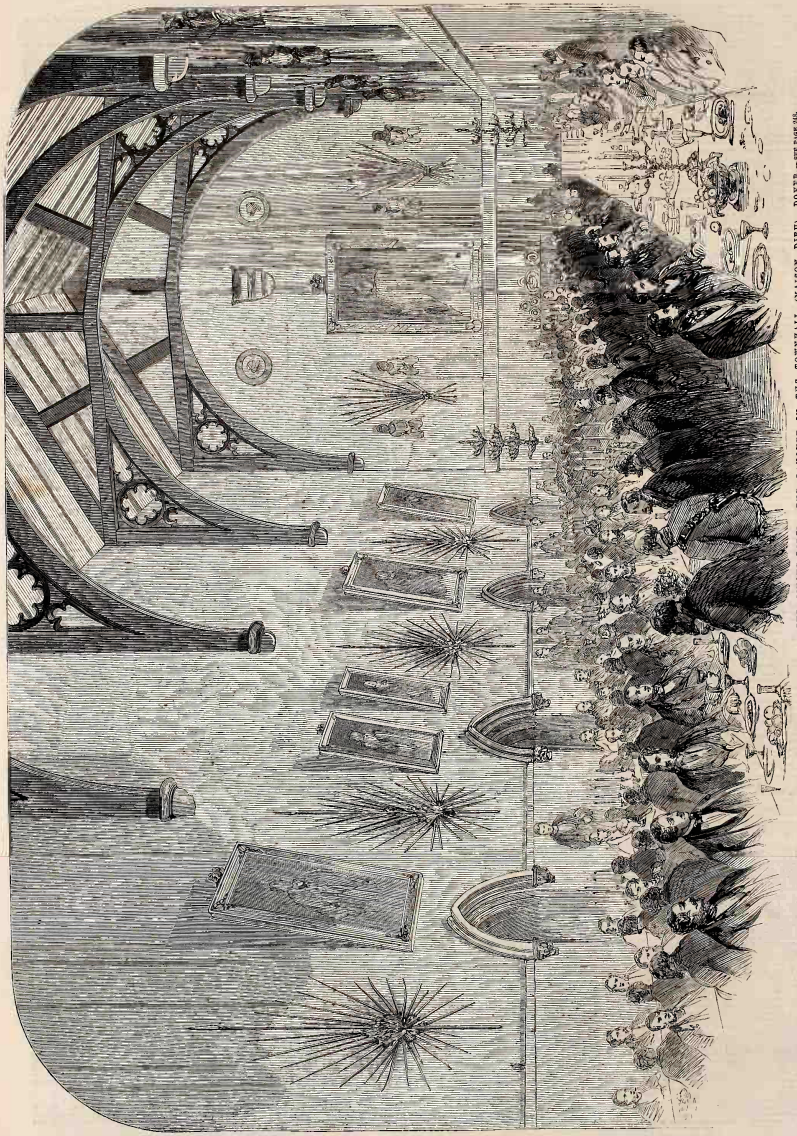
As is well known, the Roman Catholic cathedral of St. George was the work of Pugin; but the building as it now stands was not that which he originally designed. He furnished designs in the first instance for a cathedral, chapter-house, charters, and conventual buildings on a grand scale, such as, to use his own language, could not have been completed in the life of one man. His plan being thus no one ever heard of a complete cathedral which was not the gradual work of years hardening upon centuries. The church as now built was a mere factory to him; it was entirely against his nature to design anything but the first one which he produced. Of course, in this as in other cases, the sacrifice of time and talent had to be considered. The annoyance to which Pugin was subjected by applicators for designs to be executed from most insufficient funds is illustrated by the following anecdote. A case received a letter from a Roman Catholic Prelate requesting designs for a new church of the following description:—It was to be very large, the neighbourhood being very poor, the site very handsome, and very cheap, the founders being very poor; in fact, had only £2000. When might the designs be expected? Pugin wrote in reply:—"My dear Lord—Say thirty shillings more, and have a tower and spire at once." We have unconsciously exercised our fancy in noticing this case, for there is a rough interest about it, to which we have yielded. As a book, in the strictest sense of the term, it does not abound in novelty; but it is not put together in a workmanlike manner, built it contains a vast fund of information with regard to the career of a man who, by the force of his genius, has produced a powerful and strong but suppressed agitation which has led to the destruction of tyranny and the establishment of constitutional freedom in the fairest regions of that illustrious land. The most pathetic scenes of her tale are pictures of the judicial cruelties of Lord Castlereagh's rule in Ireland's and the present work, which is an account of the author's residence in Milan, Genoa, Florence, Bologna, and other parts of Northern Italy, derives a vast and peculiar interest from those stirring events which the agitated and critical state of the country immediately preceding the great revolution now consummated presented to a pen of such a gifted mind. But, independently of this, the book will recommend itself to every reader by its elegant, unrestricted style, by its lively pictures of character and manners, and its tasteful and sound remarks on the beauties of nature and art abounding in the beautiful land which the accomplished author has observed so well.

By the New Cordage Act, which will come into operation on the 1st of November, it is unlawfully to dress any stay-cordage, worn thereon—penalty, hard labour for one year; and on refusal to rent a legal tender, and a penalty of 40s. can be recovered, as on every other person uttering the same.

LITERAL WASTE OF MONEY.—Our House of Commons votes the sum of £10,000 annually for the purchase and re-coinage of worn silver coin, and there is always a considerable loss to the nation in the process. It is of course well suited to the speculative genius of the coinage, and it is not fair that we should share the expense of removing it. Before we can make a law to punish a crime, we must have evidence of punishment upon record. Now, if punishment are not to be awarded for the light and inefficient or intelligible fits of coins it seems shorter than it was prior to the introduction of the coinage system and the establishment of the mint—and much more frequently than they need, and so does money. Whether the former were not more likely than our activity is to be awarded for the latter seems not that the latter does be certain. Towards the close of the last century the currency was debased to the point of the silver coin of the realm, and coin of the various denominations were as follows:—Crowns, 4½ per cent; half-crowns, 10 per cent; shillings, 40 per cent; and sixpences 32 3-5ths per cent. Now the loss is nearly as follows as coins of the same value:—Crowns, 5 per cent; half-crowns, 12½ per cent; shillings, 25 per cent; sixpences, 45 per cent; and threepences over 50 per cent! This increase is evidently due to "fast living," so to speak, of the various individuals, or at any rate the smallest, suffer most from its consequences. The shillings are not destroyed at a greater rate than the half-crowns, relatively speaking, but are subjected to anything like the same course of treatment. It moves in higher and more circumscribed circles, it must be borne in mind, of legal wealth, and is, therefore, nursed with more care under the pecuniary pressure. Of copper and bronze currency it need scarcely be said the most rapid deterioration, farthings being the longest lived of the three denominations. The gain to the amount of value must, of course, in coinage are less noticed, and, indeed, of far less consequence to the public. A sufficient loss of weight is alleged to enable us to judge of the deterioration of the human exchange, but from the hardness of the metal of which it is composed, comparatively small change of copper is proportionately of less consequence. Once application has done its work of decapping the colour and burnishing the surface of the bronze, it will undoubtedly continue to circulate for a long subject to loss by abrasion or "waste" than it is in its present transition state.—Mechanics' Magazine.

THE FISHERMAN'S DORADO.—Our readers may remember the case of Mr. Peter Buchan, of the North Pier, Peterhead, who captured a two fishing-smacks had discovered a rich bank of cod near a solitary rock, called Rockall, away in the North Atlantic. Dr. Barry says of this rock in the Times:—"Captains Rhodes and Gardner have again made a most successful fishing, having brought between thirteen and fourteen hundred cod to market last days' fishing; while the account they give of the vast numbers of great fish that were around their boats almost justified the belief in the more wonderful than before. They have no doubt millions of money will be realised by the fishing bank spoken of in the course of the next few years. Two other fishing-smacks returned from Iceland about three weeks ago very instantly deserted Reykjavik, and turned their heads to the north with but an extraordinary success. The names of the two vessels are the Howard, Captain Gardner, and the Victoria, Captain Rhodes. The captains of the stalements they give of the great fish they saw and the wealth to be gathered in them were more like the marvellous tales of the Sailor than proved facts by successful fishermen. They tell of encounters with great sea-fish, long, wide, monstrous fellows, whose appearance at bodies as large and round as tubs; of their forks and surprises from the monsters' backs whales spouting and diving on every side of them, ing having graced the boom of the Victoria with its huge fibre. They also saw numbers of strange fish which they had never before seen, and which fish larger than porpoises, with flat round heads, and which seemed very numerous. And they also assert that they have seen the great sea-snake, the thing, which they sought in five days, about £100 in value, and no bad wages for a fishing-boat's crew. Captain Rhodes is reported to have shark. Captain Gardner was ill, long, and grew three buckets of oil. They intend on their return to Peterhead to take out extra tackle to get more of this shark, their tackle spoiled since having been snapped by these monsters like pipe-shanks. So numerous are the fish that on the return of the two boats, after a few hours' work, up to the time of a great shark, turns on his back, seizes the fish, giving it two or three shakes with his tail, and then swallows it at one gulp. The fishermen are certainly reluctant to believe that the shark it was swallowed another shark appeared to dispute the prey. So determined were sharks to get at the fish that in the interval of the fishing-lines were hauled in faster



THE INSTALLATION OF LORD PALMERSTON AS LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS: THE BANQUET IN THE TOWNHALL (MAISON DIEU) DOVER.—SEE PAGE 265.

THE CINQUE PORTS

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

There was a grand rifle contest, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, at the Curragh, on Friday and Saturday last week.

Captain Henry Boteler, R.N., died at his residence at Lyme, Dorsetshire, a few days since, in his sixty-sixth year.

The United Service Gazette informs us that the Sanatorium at the Cape is now broken up, and the staff have embarked for Graham's Town, to be employed on the General Hall of the Army at the Cape of Good Hope.

The depôt of the 1st battalion of the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, which has been encamped at Chatham since the return of that battalion from the Crimea, will break up on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, and proceed to Dublin, Cork, and Limerick.

There has been a meeting between Duncannon Fort, which commands the mouth of the Suir. The Waterford Mail states that, on Tuesday week, a party of the Royal Artillery, under the command of Major Duncannon Seaton, with fifteen of the matrimonies—fourteen privates and one bombardier—left Cork Barracks by the 8.30 train for Waterford, and with fifteen others of the same battery who had been previously sent thither under an escort of fifty men.

It is announced that an important addition is about to be made to the military force in Canada. It is intended it would be made to the military force in Canada. It is intended it would be made to the military force in Canada. It is intended it would

THE PRESENT POSITION OF THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE.

No. II.—LITERATURE AND THE PRESS.

It will seem strange, perhaps, to some of our readers that we should speak of "literature" and the (periodical) "press" as of two distinct things; but books and newspapers only resemble one another in so far that both convey printed information. They are instruments made of the same material, but serving very different purposes. The former, the majority of books that have been written to the world have been produced without any reference to political objects, whereas only a very small minority of all the newspapers that have been published since the invention of journalism have been of an unpolitical character. As a rule, those who discuss politics, at least those who conduct the discussion, attack existing political institutions (they would not otherwise them at all if they fully approved of them); and a difficulty easily be shown in a class, authors of books have had comparatively few revolutionists. Naturally, then, books have more frequently than newspapers been under a despotism. Mr. De Tocqueville, in his admirable work on "Democracy in America," has contrasted the obligation imposed on every writer in the United States to submit the opinion of Lamoignon inhabiting the palace of Louis XIV., majority of Labruyere inhabiting the palace of Louis XIV., whilst he wrote his chapter on Christ Mess, and Molière, whilst he wrote his chapter on Christ Mess, and Molière, whilst he wrote his chapter on Christ Mess, and Molière,

ST. MARY REDCLIFF, BRISTOL, IN PROCESS OF RESTORATION UNDER THE DIRECTION OF MR. G. GODWIN, ARCHITECT.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARY REDCLIFF, BRISTOL.

ON Whit Sunday the screen which for some time past has shut from view the Lady Chapel of Redcliff Church was taken down, and the parishioners were able to see the restored interior and three new stained-glass windows which have been set up as memorials. The eastern window of the Lady Chapel, seen in the View which we give in our present Number, is in memory of the late Alderman Thomas Lucas, of Bristol, and is one of the best works of Mr. Wailes of Newcastle. That on the north side, by the same artist, commemorates a lady of the same family, having for subject the raising of Jairus's daughter. The south window, illustrating the command, "Suffer little children to come unto me" (by Messrs. O'Connor of London), is in memory of the late Mr. W. Hall, for forty-five years the devoted superintendent of the Sunday-school. The cost of the stonework of this part of the church has been defrayed partly by a committee of ladies and partly by the Freemasons of Bristol and its neighbourhood.

The effect of the interior of this noble church, as may be judged from our View, is now becoming superb. For many years past our readers are aware the work of restoration has been going on here gradually under the direction of Mr. George Godwin, architect. Funds came in but slowly, and the work has been done bit by bit, mainly on the outside, where actual danger threatened. Recently, however, donations have been made specially for the interior, where a greater show could be made with smaller expenditure. The fine clustered columns of the nave and transept, seen in the View, have been restored, and their bases and capitals perfected; elaborately-carved oak bench-ends, a pulpit, reading-desk, and font, have been set up: the latter, of Caen stone and alabaster, was carved by Mr. Rice, by whom all the stone carving has been beautifully executed. We should especially point to that about the exterior of the north porch, which portion of the church has been restored under peculiar circumstances, not generally known beyond the locality. This porch, which is one of the finest examples of the Decorated style in the kingdom, has long been connected with poetry and mystery. It was in the upper chamber of it that the ill-fated Chatterton, accoiding to his own assertion, found the Rowley poems. This character the porch was not to lose.

A fewyears ago a benefactor, known as "Nil Desperandum," the signature he assumed, placed himself in communication with the chairman of the Restoration Committee, Mr. Alderman Proctor, stating that he was desirous of contributing to the restoration of the north porch, and asking whether the committee, with a view to that object, would procure drawings and specifications from Mr. Godwin, and estimates from three different masons of well-known talent, and forward them for inspection. In making this request the writer imposed the following conditions—viz., that no endeavour should be made to break through his incognito until he thought fit to communicate his name to the committee; and that, in order to maintain the desired secrecy on this point, the chairman should pledge himself not to allow the letters received from his unknown correspondent to be seen or read by any one but himself. As a guarantee of good faith the halves of certain bank notes were inclosed to meet expenses. A reply to the re-quisition was requested to be inserted in one of the Bristol papers. In answer to this communication it was at once resolved by the committee that the chairman should be authorised to insert in the Bristol papers a letter giving the required pledge regarding the conditions of secrecy which the writer imposed, and promising that plans, specifications, and estimates for the restoration of the north porch should forthwith be obtained.

Without going into a long story, suffice it to say the funds were regularly forwarded, to the extent of £2120, by the generous donor, who, though his secret provoked frequent comment, and was the theme of some clever "conjectures" in one of the local papers, continued to preserve his incognito; nor at the present time are we able to designate the unobtrusive restorer of the north porch by any other name than the vague appellation by which alone he has chosen to be known.

The iron hinges here are a very elaborate piece of work, and were executed by Messrs. Hart, of London. The cost of the restoration of the south porch was afterwards undertaken by the Commercial Society, mainly through the exertions of Mr. George Hatherly. The south transept and the greater part of the south side of nave and chancel have been restored by the Restoration Committee, aided by the Canynges Society. Much of the exterior, however, remains in a ruinous and some of it in a dangerous, condition; but this, it may be hoped, will now soon be remedied. The present churchwardens, Mr. W. Powell and Mr. W. Proctor, are earnest in their desire to carry on the good work, and the prospects of aid are encouraging. They may be justified in looking beyond their own city for subscriptions; for, using the words of the architect on the occasion of laying the first stone, "St. Mary Redcliff, belongs not simply to Bristol, but to Europe."

MASONIC CEREMONY AT ST. MARY REDCLIFF CHURCH.

On Wednesday week there was a Masonic ceremony in connection with the restoration of this time-honoured structure. The Masonic body have, it is stated, contributed a sum of £600 towards the restoration, and it was resolved to celebrate the work by an appropriate ceremonial, in which the brethren in the adjacent provinces were invited to co-operate. A grand lodge was opened at the Masonic Hall, Bridge-street, and a procession of the various lodges was organised at the Exchange, the Mayor and Corporation being also present. The pro-cession on leaving the Exchange proceeded to St. Mary Redcliff Church, attended by a vast concourse of spectators. The scene in the church-yard of St. Mary Redcliff was, perhaps, among the most striking and characteristic observed on the whole line of march. The head of the cortege arriving at the door of the venerable structure, halted and rites, on reaching the door of the venerable structure, halted and commenced playing the National Anthem. Simultaneously the brethren fell back hatchanded and formed a passage, up which the Grand Lodge, in their purple and gold collars, stars, diamonds and glittering insignia, jewels, and tokens of their high and sublime branch of the mysterious order. Divine service was impressively performed in the sacred edifice, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Watson, Curate of St. Andrew's Undershaft, in the city of London, and Chaplain to the Grand Lodge. After the service the ceremony of placing a stone at the north-east corner of the Lady Chapel took place with all the im-posing Masonic accompaniments incident to such special occasions. The Rev. Chaplain offered up another prayer and the Grand Master pronounced the benediction. The procession then returned to the Exchange, where some appropriate speeches were made by members of the order, the Mayor and the High Sheriff, after which the members dined together at the White Lion Hotel, when Mr. Godwin, the architect, congratulated them on the success of their endeavours as regards the restoration of the church. The number of Masons present at the ceremony was above 500, and the arrangements of the day were of a very satisfactory description.

RESTORATION OF ST. MARY REDCLIFFE CHURCH, BRISTOL: PLACING THE LAST STONE AT THE NORTH EAST CORNER OF THE LADY CHAPEL WITH MASONIC RITES.

MASONIC DEMONSTRATION AT BRISTOL IN CONNECTION WITH THE RESTORATION OF ST. MARY REDCLIFFE CHURCH.—ARRIVAL OF THE PROCESSION AT THE CHURCH.

The ceremony of placing the stone on the north-east corner of the sacred edifice, of which we give an illustration on the preceding page, is thus described by the local journals :—At the conclusion of the service, the Hallelujah Anthem having been sung by the choir and a liberal collection made on behalf of the restoration fund, the procession was once more formed and the long line of brethren marched round the church to the north-east corner, where the stone was in readiness to be adjusted. On the stone lay an ornamic plate, bearing among other matters the following inscription :—

Saint Mary Redcliffe
North-east Corner of Lady Chapel
Restored by the Freemasons of Bristol.
This Stone laid August 31, 1861.

The procession having reached the small platform on which the stone rested, was opened and allowed the Mayor, Grand Master, and such other chief officers of the craft to pass through its ranks on to the platform. When they had reached it, the organ pealed forth a most picturesque air. There stood the scarlet-robed Mayor, the sun shining on his uncovered head, the majestic-looking Grand Master with his broad crescent with the glittering insignia of his office, our venerably looking colleague Deputy Grand Master, and the blackrobed Chaplain, while round them thronged the subordinate officers, one bearing the horn of plenty filled with ripe corn-ears, another the chalice containing wine, another that with the oil, another with a vessel of salt, others with the trowel, square, and other carpentering tools emptied, whilst others, to the great mystification and delight of the populace, bore huge, unlighted wax candles, almost as large as themselves. The official ceremonies having taken up their position, the rifle band again played the National Anthem, after which the Rev. Brother Vowler offered up an appropriate prayer. The director of the ceremonies, Brother C. H. Lowe, then read the inscription on the plate aloud, when it was planted in its place on the stone by the R. W. Brother Vernon, and then deposited in a properly fitting cavity. Another prayer was offered up and the hundredth psalm sung, the rifle band accompanying. A brief address from the Grand Master closed the ceremony.

THE INCOME TAX.

AN interesting blue book relating to this subject has just been issued to the public. It contains the report of, and the voluminous evidence taken before, the Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the present mode of assessing and collecting the income and property tax, and to report what (if any) alterations can be made therein with advantage, and into the mode of levying the duty.

The report is as follows :—

Your Committee have proceeded in this inquiry, and, having examined witnesses thereon, have agreed to report the following resolutions to the House :—

The question submitted to your Committee was very fully investigated by a Select Committee appointed in the year 1851, and reappointed in 1852, on the occasion of the Mr. Hume, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Baines motions for the exemption of the present income and property tax from a tax to be adjusted in accordance with the value of the property by the Property Tax Commissioners, and the age of the owner.

The chief witness of the Inland Revenue Department, to whom this scheme was at that time communicated, expressed a strong opinion that its administration would be attended with insurmountable practical difficulties. Your Committee see no reason for questioning the correctness of this opinion.

The question of your Committee, as the present occasion, has been mainly directed to another scheme, proposed by their chairman, and explained by him to the Committee in connexion with an amendment to the present mode of grass income.

Sch. A proposal to divide all incomes into two classes, of which the one should comprise incomes called contrectum, and the lesser income called individual; and to tax the former upon the principle of the net income, and the latter upon two-thirds of that amount.

Sch. A proposal to distinguish in certain cases between the interest of invested capital and the repayment by instalments of the invested capital itself, and to levy the tax upon the interest only, and not upon the entire portion of capital.

These three proposals are addressed to three complaints which are popularly made against the income tax in its present form—viz., that it taxes the amount of property in respect of income which they do not get; that it presses very heavily upon old and industry as compared with property, and that it deals with capital in the same manner as it deals with income and annual profits.

The proposals which your Committee have had under consideration are framed with the object of meeting these complaints. Your Committee have adverted are well founded, and they are contrived with much ingenuity with a view to remedy them.

Your Committee, however, after full consideration, have arrived at the conclusion that the plan proposed by their chairman does not afford a basis for a practicable and equitable readjustment of the income tax; and they feel so strongly the difficulty and if this occasion to be unprepared with any attempt to unsettle the present basis of the tax, without a clear perception of the mode in which it is to be reconstructed, that they do not think it right to offer your Honourable House any suggestion for its amendment.

This has been the opinion of the majority of your Committee before two Committees and on two occasions, and the additional grass income which your Committee have proposed to be brought to the assessment, that the objections which are urged against any objections to it, rather with a view to secure rather than to the particular charge which has been given to it.

Your Committee also feel that it would be unjust to the public creditor that the present incidence of the income tax without at the same time taking into consideration the present incidence of other taxes which press upon the country, some of it imposed by recent legislation, and in one case especially, that of the successive duty, to some extent by way of compensation.

Mr. G. B. Mathews, now Consul-general to Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, and Salvador, is appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republics.

ADULTERATION OF ARTICLES LIABLE TO DUTY.—The report of Mr. Hubert Edward of the Inland Revenue department of Somerset House, has just been published for the year ending the 31st of March. He states that the samples taken during the year have been procured with the greatest care. With regard to tobacco, it is stated that an inspection of most of the tobacco manufacturers' premises, and many of those in England, and the samples which had been taken without the discovery of a single practice that could be deemed illicit. The manufactured samples generally, and the cut tobacco in retail dealers, the illicit materials consisted of burnock, catechou, and cabbage leaves, sugar, treacle, salt, and oil. Of snuff it is also stated that there was a great diminution which has taken place during the last four or five years in the adulteration of this article. Your Committee have examined a number of ten samples. Of these, three, which all came from Ireland, proved to have been saturated with pearlash and ground glass, and were unfit for use. It is believed, is still extensively sold in an adulterated state, and Mr. Phillips considers that the knowledge of the fraud is confined to the wholesale and retail wholesale dealers in and grinders of the commodity. "The skilled and almost educated class of snuff takers," says Mr. Phillips, "will not touch the core which is taken to render detection difficult and conviction doubtful are entirely confined to grinders and retail dealers." In the course of my analysis to distinguish between the highly-doubted article of the wholesale adulterated in the solid materials of the manufacturers, and the illicit materials detected in the samples examined during the past year were of a more decided character than those of previous years. Of the 1,000 samples of coffee also contained no adulteration, and it is to this that the best of the coffee sold at duty, is owing to the high character which the face of a single sample of duty, is owing to the unobtainable. Chicory is the substance most universally employed, and although it has been considered in some cases to which had been purchased as coffee, it has been found in the laboratory and found to contain from 30 to 80 per cent of chicory, whether ingredients. From thirty-six and some other cases in localities chiefly inhabited by the very poor where the samples proved to be composed of it entirely. Out of many thousand samples it has been found that, on an average, more than 70 per cent of samples sold as pure coffee were adulterated with chicory, while of those sold as "mixtures of coffee and chicory" the proportion of chicory was more than 33 per cent. This is greater than in previous years, and Mr. Phillips remarks that it "is more given the case to the causes which are in operation in keeping down the importation of coffee.

THE TRAVELLING CHAMPION OF THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

In the dawnings of civilization, when judicial duels and trial by battle were considered as the arbiters of right, champions were the persons who fought publicly (as substitutes where substitutes were permitted) for the accused, who agreed to undergo the result of the combat as the judgment of God. With various modifications in their functions and challenges, champions, in the original sense of the term, were known down to an advanced period of the fifteenth century, when they disappeared before the practice of a more enlightened system of justice.

Doange says that the word "champion" was derived from the Latin campus, a field, because combats were fought in the open field. In the ancient law of the Franks condemned to prove his innocence by a duel, or that the same law authorised to resort—as need, was permitted, to certain cases, to find a substitute, who should fight for the accused his champion. Those who were allowed the privilege of fighting by deputy were, such as could prove, without fraud, 1, the loss of a limb; 2, that he was upwards of sixty years of age; or, 3, that he was suffering from any infirmity. Women, as good, feeble, cripples, &c. Women also were entitled to a champion, for, said the old French law, "Femme ne se combat pas." Monks, canons, and clerks, after having duly informed their Bishop, could likewise depute a champion; and, according to the statutes of David II. of Scotland, the knights and nobles of that kingdom enjoyed the same privilege in case of robbery or assault. Finally, on every occasion that the reason for fighting did not subject the originator to the punishment of death or loss of a limb, each of the parties interested was allowed to present a champion to defend his cause. But a peculiar, or a person accused of high crimes (atrocioral crimina) could not be replaced. With the Saxons, when thieves desired use trial by battle, they were obliged to fight in proprid persond; and by David of Scotland's statutes the King adjudged his serfs, and such of his subjects as were not noble, when their liberties or their rights were in question, to do battle for themselves, and not by means of champions.

Some examples are on record of seigneurs having had in their employment fighters for hire, and not unfrequently, when at war, if the occasion for a duel were not forthcoming; and, what is more singular, these same champions often had pupils in their pay who became famous fought in their stead. Les pucelages, may not the use of the term "champion," as applied to the comparatively modern prize-ring, be traced to this circumstance? The arms of the champions were the stick and the sword, more frequently the former than the latter. They fought on foot—never on horseback; hence the expression frequently met with in the conditions of ordinary duels, à pie ou armes de champion. In many cases, when the question was of a fief, the second champion was provided with a horse.

The subject of our little Engraving is one of the latest specimens of the champion in France. Chenaye en l'Eaupre of the fifteenth century. Till within a short time of their discontinuance each important French district had its champion, who travelled from place to place according as his services were required. Latterly they came to enjoy the exercise of a wide discretion in accepting the challenges to be combated for or by, and not unfrequently settled a dispute by a sage counsel to the party claiming intervention, although such a decision was attended by the loss of the money for or by which, and, as a goose, a fat capon, or other very good cheer. They only espoused the cause of the weaker party. The righteous cause, believing—even before Shakspeare—that he was thrice armed who had his quarrel just. Du vieil lobardan, and with them also many occupations, respectable in their day, but which, with the progress of civilization, have fallen into disrepute, accepted the place of bailiffage and bailiff-keeper to that fine old city, in which position he ended his days.

We refer each of our readers as may wish to learn more on the subject of champions to "Dictionnaire de la Conversation," or to the "Musée des Familles," in which we are indebted for some of our materials. In the latter work, moreover (vol. xxviii. p. 52), there is an interesting story concerning one of the champions in vitiligo.

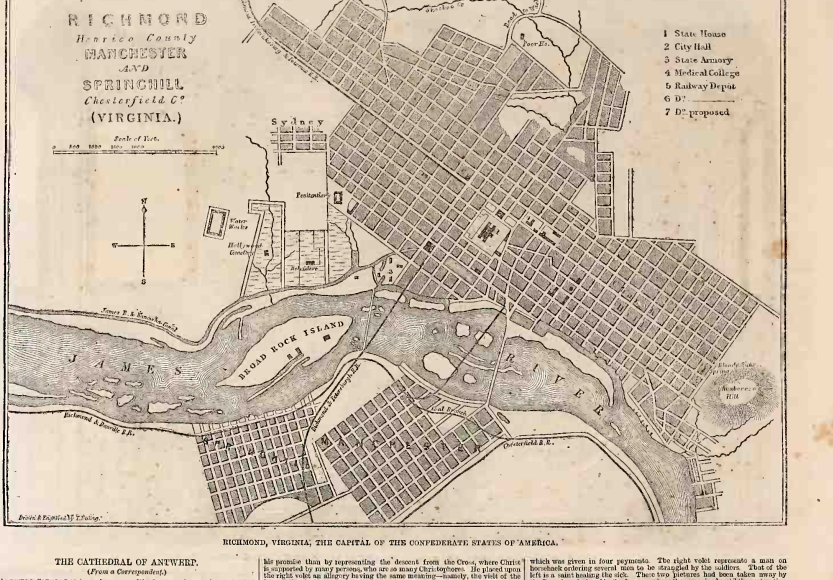
A CHINESE LUNCHEON.—This lunch was composed of fruits and tea. Apples, pears, peaches, Japanese nuts, a kind of yellow tomato, and grapes were the fruits. Of these fruits, apples, pears, grapes and tomatoes, and raisins, formed the bill of fare. The other fruits and the confectionary were placed on the table merely for show. The tea, which was of the finest quality, appeared also on occasion of ceremony. The service for each guest consisted of a saucer-cup, a tea-spoon, and a pair of chopsticks, the latter peculiar to the countries; a teacup, with its silver saucer and porcelain cover; and a tea-pot, which was placed before the host, and also the fruit which was served in the compotiers. Each dish, or compotier, was supported by a carved stand and four perforated-screens, in raised enamel, which throw around the odour of the viands. The servants, whose duty it was to change each guest's cup of tea as often as he had finished it to his fate, waited in full costume, and wore their queues coiled round the crowns of their heads, and not left to hang carelessly down their backs. The tea-cups were made with both lids, which still formed part of their golden fruits. We noted among these indescribable cakes, which excited our interest, some puddings and cakes which were more suitable to our European palates. The fruits were crowned by the unexpected arrival of a number of sealed luncheons, which the worthy interpreter, wishing to save Europeans with hopes to their taste, had procured from some European merchant, who had persuaded him that that beverage was the nectar of the Barbarians.—Arnold's Chinese Expedition.

OUT-DOOR AMUSEMENTS.

SEPTEMBER.

THERE are few periods in the year looked forward to with more delight by the sportsman than the 1st of September, on which day English shooting, with the exception of the grouse season on the northern moors, commences. The rapid strides of the modern march of intellect have produced less effect upon partridge-shooting than any other out-door amusement, and a gunner of the old school can enjoy a morning in the stubbles with as much satisfaction in 1861 as he did at the time the fourth George came to the throne. It is true that "flint," "pan," and "hammer" have given way to the detonator, a system condemned by Colonel Hawker as being destructive to length, closeness, and regularity of shooting, to the now obsolete fowling-piece, and wire, after sundry statistical details and trials, in which the superiority of the latter has been apparent to the ordinary witness, they conclude the subject in the following pithy words :—"Can you shoot well with a flint gun?" "Yes, sir." "Then leave well alone." "No. Then by all means go and get a detonator." It is true, also, that modern lovers of the trigger are allowed two guns, a man to assist them in loading, or a weapon that saves much trouble by being loaded at the breech, and yet in other respects very little change has occurred; and the very dress that was worn in 1800 is also the dress at the present time, as may be seen by the following advice published during the former year :—"We all know that a jean, tarnbeen, or any kind of thin jacket, is the pleasantest wear in September, one of flannel for October, and one of velveteen for the winter. After having tried almost everything that is constantly used, and some of the stretched articles that are puffed by advertisement, I have found nothing so good for a light serviceable jacket for wet days as that is made at Manchester by the name of sateen, jeanet, or florentine, which is printed on each side, in imitation of cloth. This stuff far surpasses the others for lightness, comfort, durability, and appearance, and as much can be required for warm weather. With regard to the other part of the dress, but few persons appear to think that anything is comfortable, and yet I must therefore appear singular for considering as most uncomfortable that which is commonly, and was for a long time universally worn—I mean shoes and gaiters. To say nothing of being tormented with two or three dozen of buttons every morning, and having your ankles and knees in a state of continual irritation from the buckle's exercise, it could only be observed that, if you step in the least puddle, you are wet; if you tread in stubble, your feet are cut; if you look down at the land you are often liable to be annoyed by your shoes untying, and thorns and bits of stick, &c., getting into them, or between the buttons of your gaiters. How much more comfortable, then, is the dress that has been mended with lambswool stockings and flannel drawers, put on a pair of boots and thick socks, and then a pair of trousers, which may be made of fustian, and strongly defended inside the knees that no thorn can penetrate, or, if you are so-engaged without them, for a time, you have your muscles at liberty for hard exercise, and are free from every annoyance.

I esteem we to partridge-shooting; and, with a view of offering counsel and aid to the sportsman who designs conducting his campaign after an approved plan, I will suppose that he is of the sensible fashion of "hiring a valley" with the midst of a covey, we append sundry old aphorisms, which are to be found in every sporting publication, and are true to the past:—To be in good nerve for shooting, have all your arrangements made and your apparatus prepared over night; and then you have only to take your breakfast early, to be off in the morning without hurrying, and to flurry you by which you may become irritated and unsteady in the field. This is often the case with inexperienced shots, who, besides, who are sometimes so interrupted that they lose half the morning before they can get away from home; some but work needs therefore, every the proprietor, who has all the trouble and vexation generally from landed property and manors. The happy man is the flying visitor, who comes down for a few days from London does not trouble himself with the management, and with no earthly care beyond the scent for his sporting, the sportsman is the most welcome guest that keeps the wind for his fishing, and the resources and amusements afforded by his country friends. For a person who has much business to attend to, and therefore can only get a few hours in the day to shoot, a shoot in September, always recommend him to shoot in the afternoon, the round time for filling a bag. Those who have no time to lose in the morning are usually advise later hours than those which are ordinarily adopted, especially on the opening days. Besides, in September, it breaks the scent of the dew, and will not always be well. By your springing them from the sun the covey are pretty sure to take wing altogether; and, having been disturbed in their early quarters afterwards much more difficult to disperse them than if they had been put up in the dew before the sun had got to its meridian. Secondly, on commence with long shots, which, however favourable in finished rifles and Armstrong cannon, are not so satisfactory as shots on a walk in Westley's, Beckwith, Egg's, Manton's, or any other first-class gun. Thirdly, for those who have no relay of pointers or setters, it must be borne in mind how much better locations are found for the dogs in the middle of the day, and often while staying to little purpose in the dew of the morning, if not actually to the detriment of the sportsman happens that a change of birds is always to be found but never to be got at, and are always seen going over one hedge as soon as you arrive at the other. In this case let the master place himself with his dog, and they by crop, and not a person round to drive the birds to him. He will then, probably, get a double shot, and very likely discover the covey. When birds are so wild that they will not lie, you often see them running across a barren field, under which circumstances keep out of sight of your gun, and make a little noise, in order to induce them to the opposite hedge. When birds on hill are not visible on the ground, and the dogs keep drawing across a field, and will not stop, the chances happens that a covey



RICHMOND, VIRGINIA; THE CAPITAL OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA.

THE CATHEDRAL OF ANTWERP.

(From a Correspondent.)

ANTWERP CATHEDRAL is, perhaps, one of the finest specimens of ecclesiastical architecture to be seen in this or any other part of the Continent. The precise date of its foundation is involved in some doubt. The great steeple, to which nothing of the comparable for its boldness and lightness, was commenced in 1422, under the direction of the architect Amelius, and was finished in 1518. It is 466 ft. in height (including the cross, which is 19 ft.), and has 617 steps to the last gallery. From the top of this gallery can be distinctly seen Brussels, Malines, Louvain, Termonde, Ghent, Alost, and Flushing, as well as the smoke of the steamers on the mouth of the Scheldt. The chime is composed of 99 bells, the smallest of which is 15 inches in diameter. They were founded in 1548. The two clubs, which are each 16 ft. in diameter, were erected in 1699. The great bell was raised in 1840, and baptized with the Emperor Charles Quint being the godfather: its weight is about three tons, and it requires the assistance of sixteen men to sound it. The steeple of Notre Dame has resisted many fires (which from time to time visited it and more or less damaged it) owing to the existence of enormous load reservoirs always kept filled with water.

In 1820 was begun the complete restoration of the building, which has been scarcely finished up to the present time. In 1836, on the 25th of September, the new cross was erected, after having been solemnly blessed. At the foot of the steeple we read the epitaph of the celebrated Quentin Metsys, who, it appears, from being a blacksmith, turned painter in order to obtain the woman he loved. Such was the condition which the father of the lady had laid down before he would give his assent to the marriage. At a few steps distance from this spot is a well, the iron ornaments of which are the work of Quentin Metsys, and made exclusively by the aid of a hammer. The choir of the cathedral was built in 1521, the first stone of which was deposited by Charles the Fifth. In 1533 this choir and the steeple alone resisted a fire which destroyed all the remainder of the building. The height of the whole edifice from the ground is 489ft: its width is 240ft.

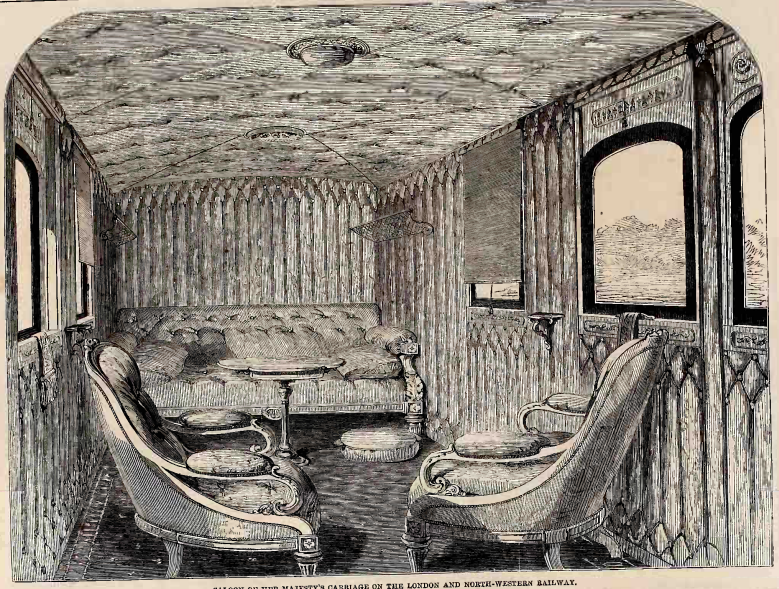
The principal nave is one of the largest and finest which is known. The lateral naves are double, and composed of 220 vaulted arcades, supported by 126 columns. Before the French Revolution the interior also comprised 32 marble altars filled with pictures and ornaments of great value, of which the fury of the Revolution spared them. There remained 100 massive silver chandeliers, and four before the altars of the same metal; a massive gold cruse, which cost 800 florins, and which was enriched with diamonds given by Francis I. and other Sovereigns. Philip II., King of Spain, presided in the church of Notre Dame on the 21st of January, 1555, at a chapter of the Order of the Golden Fleece, at which nineteen Knights assisted. Their coats of arms remained for a long time suspended in the centre of the choir. It was on the solicitation of the same Prince that the church of Notre Dame was erected into a cathedral by Pope Paul IV., in 1559. In 1092 the bull of Pius VII., of the 3rd of December, suppressed this bishopric and made it a sure of the 1st class, dependant upon the archiepiscopric of Malines. It, however, continued to bear the name of "the cathedral." In entering by the great marble portal, and commencing the inspection at the church by the right, we see, first, the mausoleum of Ambrose Capello, Bishop of Ptolemais, who died at Antwerp, in 1675. The pulpit which is placed a little further, by its fine sculpture: it is ornamented with allegorical figures under the form of statues. On the first window we remark the portraits of four ecclesiastics reading on the knees, painted by Diepenbeck, in 1635. The altar of the Holy Sacrament was completed by Van der Nere. The painting of "The Disciples of Emaus" is one of the finest productions of Herreyns. The tabernacle, which represents Jesus in the tomb, was executed after the designs of Verbruggen. The communion-table, in white marble, is the work of A. Quellyn. "The Last Supper," painted on glass, is by Diepenbeck. On leaving this chapel we find ourselves opposite the celebrated painting of Rubens, "The Descent from the Cross," a picture for which in the great object of interest to all, and which has attracted the visits of artists from all parts of the world, in the chief doorway of that number, and deserves to be placed, as unlivers ally admitted, upon the throne of art. It is related that Rubens, dismissed from a second journey to Italy by the Archduke Albert and Isabella, appeared to set him out of Antwerp, and build a house there for the purpose of dedicating all his attention to painting and literature. He cast the foundations of the house between his own garden and that of the Société du Serment des Arquebusiers. The latter, perceiving that the foundations encroached upon their ground, complained to Rubens, who on his side, being unwilling to change his plans, endeavoured to support his right. The difference became so serious that a process of litigation was begun, when the Burgomaster Rockox, chief of the Serment and friend of Rubens, prevailed on him to give up his pretensions, and the painter, ultimately admitting he was wrong, consented to an accommodation. The result of the negotiations was that the land of which Rubens became master was ceded to him on condition that he would give to the Serment an altar picture, with votive, from his own hand, for their chapel in the Cathedral of Antwerp, and representing some passage in the life of St. Christopher, the patron of the Serment. Rubens, considering the Greek etymology of the word Christopher, which signifies to bear Christ, did not think he could better satisfy his promise than by representing the descent from the Cross, where Christ is supported by many persons, who are in many Christophores. He placed upon the right side an allegory having the same meaning—namely, the visit of the Blessed Virgin Mary, when with child of the Saviour, to her cousin Elizabeth; and upon the left of the left Saviour, the priest, holding the infant Christ in his arms when his mother and St. Joseph came to present him in the Temple. The painter thought that this mysterious idea would satisfy the Arquebusiers: but the latter were dissatisfied at not finding such a representation of St. Christopher as they expected, and persisted in demanding the image of their own patron saint. Rubens, with his accustomed complaisance, consented to paint upon the closed voets a St. Christopher of colossal dimensions. The sugry figure in this last picture is a kind of epigram directed against the ignorance of the Arquebusiers. Leaving "The Descent from the Cross," we cross the church in order to admire the painting of Rubens that is most worthy to serve as a pendant to that—namely, "The Elevation of the Cross," painted for the chapel of St. Walburge, the altar piece of which it ornaments. This work was undertaking, with three other little pictures, in the month of June, 1610, for the sum of 2600 florins of Brabant, which was given in four payments. The right voet represents a man on horseback ordering several men to be strangled by the soldiers. That of the left is a saint healing the sick. These two pictures had been carried away by the French and placed in the Louvre, where they remained until the restoration of Louis XVIII., who caused them to be restored. During the siege of Antwerp in 1832 the greatest precautions were taken to preserve them from the effects of the bombardment. The first chapel on entering the cruciform church surrounds the choir on the side of "The Descent from the Cross," has a painting of Martin de Vos, representing the "Baptism of Christ," in Greek, and a picture of the portrait of our Lord leading to hear the Sermon on the Mount. In the second chapel is found a monument erected to the memory of Moretus, a famous typographer, whose posterity exists still at Antwerp. It is ornamented with a fine picture of Jean Baptiste Gaspars.

In the Chapel of St. Catherine are painted on the walls and angles symbols. The portraits of Moretus, which is placed at an inconvenient height for inspection, is also by Rubens. The sculpture is by Van Ghel, of Malines. Upon this is a picture of Martin Pepyn, bearing the date of 1627, which formed part of the monument of the opera Rostiers. It represents St. Norbert adoring the blessed sacrament. In the third chapel, beyond the door of the sacristy, is seated a little statue of the Blessed Virgin with the Infant Jesus, in white marble, sculptured by Duquesnoy, which was amongst the precious remains that escaped the devastations of the Vandals. Saint Francis on his knees is by P. Morillo. The two voets underneath are by Van Baleu, in the Italian taste. In the next chapel we observe upon the monument of Plantyn, another celebrated typographer of Antwerp, a painting of De Backer, representing the last judgment: it is much admired. The portrait of Plantyn is by G. Herreyns. The altar of this chapel, which is situated at the back of the choir, and which is but one of thirty-two which the church includes is of the same model as all the others that have escaped the fury of the Revolutionist. There are to be seen two excellent pictures by Martyn Pepyn. The painting at the back of the choir is by A. Matthysseus. In the next chapel the picture representing "St. Norbert," by Diepenbeck, is one of the finest in point of colouring, particularly the angels. Further over the monument of Baron Dubrel, in Sapolean marble, is a good Christ, painted by Verlinde. There is here, also, a splendid copy of Christ à la Paille of Rubens, to be found at the museum. We come next to the splendid mausoleum, in marble, of Ambrose Capella, the seventh Bishop of Antwerp, sculptured by Verbruggen, and above it the "Last Supper," the magnificent picture of Otho Venius. Against a pillar is the figure of Christ, in Parian marble of the greatest beauty, on a cross of black marble. The last is a splendid work of art, sculptured by Van der Nere, and was a present of a member of the family of Moretus to the Church of Notre Dame. In the last chapel is seen a picture of the other Frank, representing "Jesus Amongst the Doctors." The painter has given to the several personages depicted the portraits of Lesbey, Calvin, Erasmus, and other contemporaries. The altar of the Chapel of St. Anthony has no painting: it is in white marble, and sculptured by Verbruggen. The two voets of paintings near the altar are by Frank the elder. Opposite is a picture, representing St. Peter, the head of which is said to be worthy of Vandyke. In the same chapel, against a pillar, is a fine bust, painted upon wood, in the style of Leonardo da Vinci. The altar of the Virgin, on the other side of the transversal nave, is one of the richest in the cathedral: it is in white marble, and has basso-relievi were sculptured by Verbruggen. The Annunciation, also of white marble, is the production of Jean Baptiste Capronnier, Antwerp. The statues of the saints, and the adoration of the shepherds, are specimens of special excellence. On leaving the choir we stand under a magnificent organ, the ceiling of which was painted by C. Schut, and represents the Assumption of the Virgin. Above the altar, which is in the great aisle—a chef d'œuvre of Rubens. The Virgin is represented borne up to heaven by a multitude of angels, some of which are seen around her head and presenting her with crowns, whilst others form a circle beneath her, and are raising her through a heavenly cloud. The picture was placed there in 1612, and was painted in sixteen days. It has been taken from Antwerp, and carried to Paris; but it was replaced in that chapel on the 27th of May, 1816.

MEDAL STRUCK BY THE CITY OF ANTWERP IN COMMEMORATION OF THE ART JETES, AUGUST, 1861.

The Echo of Bologna says:—" Luigi Ricci, aged eight, son of the well-known professor of that name, lately performed at the church of San Giorgio at Trieste, who executed a mass of his composition. The sacred edifice was crowded."

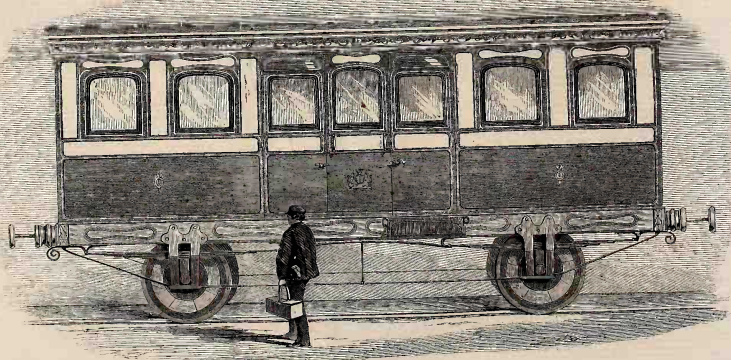
Experiments with incendiary cannon-balls invented by M. Pontalec, manufacturer of chemical ingredients, residing in Paris, and Lieutenant Marchand, of the imperial navy, were recently tried at Toulon. The result was not perfectly satisfactory. The ball deviated from their course, and rendered the effect uncertain. It was proved, however, that the inflammatory composition inclosed within the balls is of a most dangerous and destructive nature, and costs very little. During the experiments a hall struck the Diamentaire, a hulk which served as a target, on her quarter, which was not cased with iron, and, bursting, caused an opening as large as a coach-house gate. The water rushed in so violently that there was only time to slip the cable and beach the vessel, otherwise she would have sunk in deep water.



SALOON OF HER MAJESTY'S CARRIAGE ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

THE QUEEN'S RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

THE directors of the London and North-Western Company, who had the honour not only of conveying the Royal party to Ireland, but also throughout the subsequent journey to Scotland, caused a State carriage to be constructed expressly for the use of her Majesty, the Prince Consort, and suite, the cost of which, it is stated, exceeded £2000. The design of this magnificent specimen of railway carriage architecture was in the main prepared by and carried out under the direction of Mr. Caswell, the general manager, and Mr. H. P. Brayne, the general superintendent of the London and North-Western Railway. The framework upon which the body of the carriage rests is constructed of solid oak, handsomely carved and highly polished, resting upon wheels of Mansell's patent; the centres are also composed of the strongest solid oak, the tires of which have been put on cold and hammered, as affording a greater amount of security than those manufactured under the ordinary process. The carriage body has three floors—first, that of the usual material; secondly a flooring of oak; and, thirdly, a flooring of cork, which has the effect of reducing vibration, and of destroying or deadening to a great extent the noise of the wheels whilst travelling. The panels in the body of the carriage are of a beautiful dark or Royal chest colour, bearing in the centre the Royal arms, and on the side panels are the orders of the Garter, the Bath, and the Thistle, exquisitely painted. The roofs, for there are two, are divided by a cornice composed of festoons of flowers carved and picked out upon a white ground, the projections of the roof, the upper one of which is circular, having their sides elaborately rib. The interior of the Royal saloon presents a coup d'œil combining the most refined taste and elegance. The lining is of silver grey moire antique of the richest description, festooned and fluted, the same material covering the roof, divided into panels marked out by a rich cord of the same colour. From the apex of the roof descends a lamp of elegant design, encircled by a carving of satin-wood, in which material the whole of the carvings are executed. At one end of the saloon is a sofa, covered with the same material as the lining of the carriage, and two easy-chairs are fixed on a revolving axis, so whilst they cannot be upset, they can be moved in any direction at the will of the party occupying them with the greatest ease. At the other end is the retiring-room, fitted with a cabinet, washhand stand, and all the appliances of a boudoir. An elegant fixed table stands in the centre of the saloon. There are appliances for converting this magnificent sitting-room into a sleeping apartment.



HER MAJESTY'S CARRIAGE ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1108.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT MANCHESTER.

SCIENCE, like Wisdom, is justified of her children. Time was when the annual sessions of the British Association were held to be a capital theme for ridicule, and when journalists who cater for the instruction and amusement of men of business thought it became them to raise an uproarious laugh at what they described as talking, peripatetic, and wool-gathering philosophy. It is not the first time by a good many that the shadows which herald the approach of a majestic success, misinterpreted by men who believe that "there is nothing like leather," have excited wondrous ebullitions of noisy merriment, of which subsequent events have made the said men sheepishly ashamed. The British Association has not merely outlived the jeers of its early assailants—it has seen them converted into acclamations of praise.

THE WAR IN AMERICA: TEXAN RANGERS (FEDERALISTS) RECONNOITRING BETWEEN ALEXANDRIA AND FAIRFAX, VIRGINIA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST

SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 257.

It had ever troubled itself to note the world's opinion, when intermitting for a brief space its laborious researches into the inexhaustible volume of Nature, it must have smiled at the new unwritten volume of "the deformed transformed," and have felt more than ever convinced that the voice of God through his "manifold works" is better worth listening to, and heeding, and comforting from, than the shrill utterances of the wittiest parsing notes upon, than the shrill utterances of the wittiest paring notes upon, than the shrill utterances of the wittiest nitely more satisfying than the loudest and most brilliant "crackling of thorns under a pot."

In our view, there is a special element of gratification in the meetings of the British Association. They partake almost equally of the character of a Parliament and a Commemoration. They are deliberative, but not exclusively so. They serve also for celebration. They record the results of patient observation in what are called "physical laws." But they also admit of, and what are called "physical laws." But they also admit of, and invite, those interchanges of elevated and joyous sentiment which usually characterise a festivity or a triumph. They have like chambers of legislation, weighty business to transact and grave discussions to carry on; but they may also be regarded as anniversaries of the marriage of Science to Art, upon which a consideration of the fruits of that union is expected and indulged in. They furnish one of the very few occasions on which the jubilant spirit may find full and fitting scope for exercise—for the exaltation which springs out of a growing mastery over the forces of Nature, and a subjugation of them to the purposes of life, is in loving harmony with the highest reason and the purest piety. There cannot but be pleasure of the most abiding kind—character—there cannot but be pride of the most exhilarating kind—in thus bringing, as it were, into one periodical and intellectual exhibition all the treasures which Science has discovered during the preceding year in the various spheres of human knowledge, and in conferring together (both theorists and practical men) on the common uses to which they may be applied. It is a sort of "worship fair" for the display and exchange of scientific wares, and, like most other fairs, it interblends with business a goodly portion of the festive element.

This year the British Association held its annual meeting at Manchester, with Mr. Fairbairn as its President for the coming year, the place and the man are alike suggestive of the intimate relation in which, in the present day especially, practice stands to theory, art to science. As Lord Stanley of Alderley pertinently observed, "Lancashire has contained her full pertinently observed, "Lancashire has contained her full share to the long list of English cultivators of science;" but, share to the long list of English cultivators of science;" but, in addition to this, "there is no city and no district in this country which has profited more by the practical application of scientific discovery than the city of Manchester." Mr. Fairbairn, whose name as an engineer is honorably and not unequally yoked together with those of Stephenson, Brunel, Whitworth, and Armstrong, and who has won distinction also as a successful votary of science, is a Manchester man; and the history of his studies and achievements presents a fresh and one of the most vivid illustrations of the fact that theory and practice, when fully allied, give to the world the noblest offspring. From the lips of such a man the following declaration is no mean tribute of praise :—"If the British Association had effected nothing more than the removal of the ignorant separation of theory and practice it would have gained imperishable renown in the benefit thus conferred." The meeting at Manchester, therefore, bringing together "for a common object," as Mr. Fairbairn remarked, "the learned professors of our Universities and the workers in practical science," was naturally suggestive of the main topic upon which the President so eloquently discoursed—namely, the "relation of the achievements of science to the comforts and enjoyments of man."

And what a discourse! Astronomy, magnetism, chemistry, geology, botany, zoology, geography, ethnology, and the mechanical sciences, were led forward successively as rich contributors to the wellbeing of society. Mr. Fairbairn introduced each of them with a modest disclaimer on his own part of perfect acquaintanceship; but, in pointing out the benefits rendered by each to man in ordinary life, he eclexed phenomena and described their applications and uses so aptly, so lucidly, and with such a charm of self-possession, that no one could doubt of his intimate familiarity with every one of the sciences from which he borrowed his facts and illustrations. Like a well-qualified host who studies the special characteristics of each of his guests, and draws out of them what they know best and can speak of with most profit to the company, so the President of the Association elicited from each of the sciences information peculiarly appropriate to his general purpose; and the testimony of each was so harmonious, so perfectly in keeping with another, as to produce a general result of conviction differing only from the separate lines of illustration leading up to it, as light differs from the prismatic rays of which it is composed. Mr. Fairbairn, however, dwelt most lingeringly, as was natural, upon the feats of engineering science in relation to the economy of modern life, and by the skilful grouping of his facts and the masterly order in which he made them march past his audience, he kept attention enchained to the subject so long as he saw fit, and when at last he dismissed it he dismissed it laden with matter for grateful reflection and future study.

The session having been grandly inaugurated by the speech from the presidential chair, the various sections retired to their several rooms, and heard and discussed papers on matters of special interest falling within their respective departments. It does not come within the scope of these observations to give a summary, however condensed, of the business thus seriously transacted—indeed, the space at our disposal would scarcely admit of even a bare catalogue of the topics brought under notice and debate. We must be content, therefore, with recording our impression that the proceedings of the association have never, as far as our recollection serves, been in such close and uniform accordance with its professed object, nor that, whether in respect of the subjects brought forward, the men who handled them, or the value of the discussions which they evoked, has the advancement of science on any former occasion been more steadily kept in view or more largely promoted. At the outset of its career there can be no doubt that the association attracted not a few men whose personal vanity and dilettante philosophy detracted considerably from the practical worth of its meetings. Most of these it has had the opportunity of eliminating or suppressing. Every year it becomes more rigidly and predominantly scientific in its operations, accomplishes its ends with less waste, prosecutes its beneficent mission with increased simplicity of motive and greater intentness of purpose. In these respects the meeting of the present year appear to us to be pre-eminently distinguished.

It has been well remarked by a daily contemporary that Science "now walks with head erect, smiling blandly, and bowing to all the world; she has her gala days and her fashionable gatherings, her aristocratic patrons, and her following of plebeian admirers, her hierarchy, and her lay associates." Let it never be forgotten, however, that she has won this happy and honourable freedom simply by her loyal obedience in correctly interpreting and usefully applying the "open secrets" of her mistress, Nature, and as an unerring transcript of the Divine will, are full of blessings to mankind. Partially as we have as yet made acquaintance with them, and little as we have turned them to practical account, we have seen enough to convince us that they contain in richest abundance most of what may be called the raw materials of human progress. Physical Science has probably done far more for the elevation of the broad masses of our countrymen than any political constitution, however perfect, and more much to be valued, could have effected. Its triumph she achieves by the removal of those limitations within which ignorance shatters some of these powers. Every had previously restricted the exercise of our powers. Every discovery she makes opens fresh sources of enjoyment to the millions. Many a Monarch might have desired in vain, three centuries ago, mechanical contrivances which are now within easy reach of every working man, and, in point of daily means of enjoyment, Science has already placed most of us in a position to which in olden times the foremost potentates of our country would have looked up with envy. In regard to food, clothing, locomotion, books, recreation, and most of the other staple ingredients of a comfortable life, we moderns are favoured beyond the wildest imagination of our ancestors, and of many of the terrible calamities to which they were periodically subject we know nothing or next to nothing. What a change has the difference of science! Simply from our closer observation of, and the application of our daily proceedings with, the laws of matter harmony of our daily proceedings with, the laws of matter harmony of our daily proceedings with, the laws of matter harmony

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

By the North-Carolina Liberty steam-ship Benson we have received New York journals to the 31st ult.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS.

The most important movement of which we have received intelligence since our last is the departure of a naval expedition from Fortress Monroe, commanded by Commodore Stringham. The squadron numbers 100 guns, and about 4000 men, commanded by General Butler. Too 100 guns, and about 4000 men, commanded by General Butler. The only avowed object of the expedition is to block up the inlets to the outer line of the coast of North Carolina, and thus deprive privateers of their favourite places of refuge. But it is presumed that the ungarded Southern coast will be attacked at some point. We shall soon hear where the blow has fallen.

In Western Virginia a slight encounter has taken place, near Princeton, in Nicholas county. The 7th Ohio Regiment was surprised by a body of Confederates, and we get their report with the loss of fifteen killed and fourteen wounded. A large number were scattered during the flight, and are missing.

In Missouri General Fremont has proclaimed martial law and emancipation to the slaves of Secessionist slaveholders. The State rights men have captured 100,000 dollars at Lafayette, in this State.

Advices from Texas state that Fort Staunton has been abandoned and fired by the Union forces.

There is nothing new from the armies commanded by Generals M'Clellan and Banks respectively.

The Federal loss at Dug Spring, where General Lyon was killed, is officially announced as having been—killed, 225; wounded, 721; missing, 291. This out of a total of 5000 men engaged.

THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

Two vessels had arrived at Matanzas, Cuba, from Charleston, having succeeded in running the blockade.

The Richmond papers complain that an opposition to Mr. Davis's Administration has been formed in the Confederate Congress; but, on behalf of the proceedings of this body as far as we have seen, we do not find the slightest trace of the Opposition in.

Governor Brown, of Georgia, has issued an address to the Georgians denouncing Mr. Davis's Administration as centralising monarchical tendencies, and warning them to cherish the main principle of the Revolution of 1861—that of State rights as the weak central authority.

The Vicksburg Whig advertises the manufacture of cotton-seed oil for burning, the blockade having deprived the Mississippians of material for light.

KENTUCKY.

President Lincoln has determined not to recognise the neutrality of Kentucky, but is willing to await the action of the State Legislature before forcing the State to declare its position.

The express companies are forbidden to carry letters to the Southern States through Kentucky. Thus these States are now completely cut off from regular communication with the outer world.

ARMY NEWS.

Two hundred and sixty-one volunteer officers have resigned since the defeat at Bull Run.

Several soldiers claimed by Lord Lyons had been discharged from the army.

Not over half of the 25,000 additional volunteers called for by the President's proclamation of the 4th inst. have as yet enlisted.

The Philadelphia Press advertises a list of 400 names, signed by the Governor of the State, who had registered themselves as volunteers. Governor of the State, who had registered themselves as volunteers. Governor Curtin refused to take the oath for three years' service.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The Union Defence Committee of New York have published a statement of the disbursements of the 2,000,000 dols. placed at their disposal by the Legislature. 521,709 dols. were expended in "aid to regiments" 226,389 dols. in arms and ammunition, 233,500 dols. to 16 regiments" 226,389 dols. in arms and ammunition, 233,500 dols. to 16 regiments of soldiers, leaving a small balance in their hands.

The revenue to be raised in the city of New York for municipal purposes during the present year is 11,300,640 dols.

The mobbing of obnoxious peace papers continues. The office of the New York Journal of Commerce is guarded by police. But the Government refuses to allow it or any other journal of similar politics to be suppressed. The United States marshals are the officers which to go by post, while United States troops do the mobbing. Peace meetings are sent by express companies.

The Philadelphia Press advertises a list of 400 names, signed by the man who trusts back by the policians of Boston. The peace flag is a white one, and the war journals dub the movement "the showing of the white feather."

Captain T. F. Meagher has addressed a large meeting of Irishmen in New York, exhorting them to support the war and crush the revolution, because it was favoured by the English aristocracy.

GARIBALDI ON THE WAR.

A report having got abroad in both worlds that the Italian liberator was about to offer his service in the Federal army, the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press contradicts it as follows:—

There is truth in the reports that Garibaldi proposes to come to America on a visit. A gentleman here, personally acquainted with Garibaldi and his views, informs me that he has written a few days ago to a friend in this city, signed himself to come out and take part in the struggle now going on here for liberty, and that his father-in-law, on the ground that he was a family general, and could be settled more easily without foreign interference than with it, agreed to it. It was then a political question with the natives were not interested, and in the settlement of which they could not reasonably quarrel. These are now the views and sentiments of Garibaldi as expressed by his son in private correspondence of very late date.

FINANCE.

The subscriptions for the new National Loan at the Sub-Treasury in New York amount to 1,350,000 dollars, in amounts varying from 50 dollars to 100,000 dollars each. It was not included the large negotiations that have been going on between the banks and parties in negotiations that have been going on between the banks and parties in various parts of the country. The notes are not yet out for issue.

The New York Tribune is of opinion that Englishmen will not be able to resist the temptation of 7.30 per cent interest.

The United States' Government have discontinued the subsidy to the Vanderbilt steamers with the Pacific, and this interest have established a pony express to California, across the Rocky Mountains.

The railway from St. Gildard's to Rouen, in Belgium, which has been constructed by the Rainault and Flandres Company, was opened a few days back. It passes through the richest coal-field in the country.

A monument, in bronze, has been erected at St. Petersburg to the memory of Meyer, Beeby, by her husband, M. Nindenbeeby. Its inauguration was attended by great pomp.

The French Cabinet, in consequence of the rupture of diplomatic relations between the Italian Government and the French Envoy, has taken steps to enforce the French squadron off Vera Cruz.

The Queen has approved of Mr. James Edwin Graham as Consul at Sligo, for the King of Italy; and of Mr. Edward Hamilton as Consul at Nassau, New Providence, for the United States of America.

According to official returns there were published 3546 Bibles and 4,000 Testaments in the year 1858. They increased to 3717 in 1856. The following year there were 3962 issued, and 1860 saw 4000 and 5000 they used to 4250. The official returns for the year 1859 and 1860 have not yet been received.

One of the seven gun-boats ordered by the United States' Congress for the war has just been launched at Philadelphia. She is 200 feet long, and she is built of iron. Seven more are to be built, each 230 feet long, 32 pounders and two 11-inch guns. She will be fit for sea about the 1st of October.

The last advices from San Francisco reported that the ships Euxine, Pacific, Ocean, and Hydaspes, were all then hooked at that port with heavy cargoes for Australia. The Euxine had 13,200 bags of wheat and 13,000 bags of flour; the Sovereign Court had 1000 tons of wheat; and the ship Hydaspes 20,000 sacks of wheat.

It is reported, says the Toronto Globe of Aug. 20, that the proposed changes in the Upper Canada judiciary will take place this week. Chief Justice Robinson retires on a pension of two-thirds of his salary, and Chief Justice Robinson retires on a pension of two-thirds of his salary, and it is reported that he will be appointed to the post of President of the Court of Appeal, with £800 a year additional. The other changes are not yet announced, but it is nearly certain that Mr. Draper becomes Chief of the Queen's Bench, and Mr. M'Lean Chief of the Common Pleas. It is said that Mr. Vankoughnet does not go on the bench as present.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

FRANCE.—Paris, Sept. 12.—The election at Avignon has resulted in the return of the Government candidate, who obtained 19,653 votes against 16,618 votes polled for the candidate of the Catholic party.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.—Melbourne, July 21.—Victoria is progressing in a fatal collision with the police, have taken place at Lambing Flat diggings. Most of Burke's exploring party have returned, but Burke himself and three companions are missing. A steamer will leave for New Zealand in a fortnight. Peace with the natives is considered hopeless. General Cameron will await reinforcements before taking the field. All the troops are now ordered to assemble at Auckland.

INDIA.—Calcutta, August 8.—The cholera is committing dreadful ravages in the North-West. Very bad accounts of the Indian crops are received from Turkey and Bengal.

CHINA AND JAPAN.—Shanghai, July 27.—The Prussian Minister, Count Eulenburg, is making ineffectual efforts to negotiate a treaty with the Chinese Government. Sankokusha has been victorious over the Japanese rebels. Affairs in Japan are stationary. Mr. Alcock has not been molested on his overland journey.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

On Saturday, the last day of August, the foundation-stone of a school church was laid at Haverstock-hill.

The London Gazette announces that her Majesty had "commanded" the Dean and Chapter of Durham to elect Dr. Baring Bishop of that diocese.

Most of the provincial newspapers give accounts of "harvest-home" festivals of a new and much improved kind. Clergymen take the lead in them, and the labourers are the principal guests.

The Clergy Orphan Corporation, by which the children of destitute deceased clergymen are gratuitously educated, maintained, and clothed, has received a donation of 1000 guineas from Mr. Gibbs, and legacies to the amount of £1100 from the Goldsmiths' £20 16s. from the Fishmongers', £45 from the Merchant Taylors', £71 from the Ironmongers', and £100 from the Salters'. In a former year the Grocers' presented £50 to the society.

The Eagle Church Choral Association, which was lately by the Colonial Church and School Society, is placed in an excellent position, just in the very heart of the new public part of the Metropolis, and in the district which over the mountain of the same name is known in the background). The price of the site was £1000, and for the erection, and endowment, there is a good view of it and the valley. It is built of granite.—Bubbing News.

The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of an Episcopalian church at Wimbledon was performed by the Rev. J. Davies Bishop of Dublin in the presence of a large number of ladies and gentlemen who reside in the neighbourhood of Wimbledon and Merton and who reside in the neighbourhood of Wimbledon and Merton and Wimbledon-hill Mr. Grane the Architect. The proceedings were commenced by the Rev. Mr. Bishop of Dublin, who delivered an address, which, to be called Christ Church; and, we hold by Mr. C. Scott Dobbin, Esq., Lord of the Manor.

The foundation-stone of a new church was on Thursday week:—The parish church of St. Briavel, Dean Forest. The parish church of Briavel, Cockwall, of the hardy mountaineers of West Gloucestershire, with the exception of the tower, mainly at the expense of the Rev. Thomas Bowen, a native of the parish, who contributed £1000 to the work. Morrison Church, by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, after having been closed for the purposes of restoration and enlargement, was reopened for divine service. The Rev. St. Andrew's Church, Chiswick, built some twenty five years ago by the Bishop of Salisbury, after having undergone internal improvements, including the Queen some reredos, and three stained windows, the gift of Mrs. Sewell.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. J. Davies Bishop of Rochester, and Canon of Sheton and South Hetton, Durham. The appointment of the Rev. P. L. Shadwell, Rector of Ecton, Northampton, to be Chaplain to the Queen. The Rev. R. Heinze to be Incumbent of Leverstock Green, St. Albans. The Rev. A. G. Lee to be Domestic Chaplain to the Earl of Glasgow, Somerset. The Rev. P. N. Deane to be Perpetual Curate of Bassaw, Gloucestershire. The Rev. C. Hall to be Rector of Ecton, Northampton. The Rev. W. Hardolfine to be Vicar of Kingston, Somerset. The Rev. W. Hardolfine to be Vicar of Kingston, Somerset. The Rev. L. P. Mercier to be Chaplain of the Foreilling Hospital, Guernsey.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

Lat. 51° 28′ N.; Long. 0° 15′ 45″ W.; Height above sea 44 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF				THERMOMETER.			WIND.		Rain in 24 hours.
	Barometer reduced to 32°.	Temperature of Air.	Temperature of Evaporation.	Humidity.	Solar.	On Grass.	General Minimum.	Greatest Pressure.	Direction and Force.
	Inches.	Deg.	Deg.	Grs.	Deg.	Deg.	Deg.	Lbs.		Inch.
Sept. 4	29·908	58·5	53·6	82	82·0	68·2	50·7	3·19	S10	·010
5	30·018	62·3	57·1	71	91·0	71·2	47·1	3·37	W. by W.	·000
6	30·061	63·2	57·1	71	91·2	69·6	W.W.W.	3·50	W.W.W.	·000
7	29·973	57·8	52·7	78	81·3	48·6	W.W.W.	3·37	W.W.W.	·000
8	29·935	57·0	52·7	82	84·0	44·7	W.	3·47	W.	·000
9	29·955	58·0	53·5	82	84·0	46·2	W.	3·47	W.	·000
10	29·945	57·5	53·3	85	87·0	47·6	N.W.	1·36	N.W.	·000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, taken at Greenwich at 9 a.m.:—

Barometer (in inches) corrected	29·996	29·938	29·787	29·913	29·921	29·987	29·934
Temperature of Air	59·0	60·0	61·0	57·0	57·0	57·0	57·0
Temperature of Evaporation	55·0	56·0	49·0	W.	W.	W.	W.
Direction of Wind	W.	W.	W.

EARLY RISING.—I was always an early riser. Happy the man who is. Every morning day comes to him with a virgin's love, full of sweetness, and leaves him with a matron's calm, full of serenity. Early risers are the aristocracy of time; they are the true nobility, the princes and princesses of the world. I could fill any one can be called so, long as he has the early privilege. Ah, my youths and maidens, I envy you. The youth in dressing gown and slippers, dawdling over breakfast at noon, is a very pitiful object. The man of business at his office at ten knows that he is perspiring, and the cross sparkling upon blossoming hedgerows.—Blackwood.

THE Toward and the Resolute, two of the self-developing screw steam-ships, mail-steamers of the Canadian, which were lost in the Straits of Belle Isle. After distinguishing themselves in the Crimea they were sold, and are now employed in the trade of the Isle-ben and giving it to a lady, who was loved, which he himself purchased.

THE STEAM-SHIP BLOCKADE AND LONDON BLOCKADES.—(To the Editor.)—A correspondent of the Times recently called attention to the poverty of the Metropolis in the matter of steam-ship communication, and the comparison is really very startling. We take to ourselves the credit of being a steam-ship power, and we have a fleet of steam-ships (three of which are at present employed in the Baltic) of upwards of three millions, as compared with the twenty-four steam-ships of the Metropolis. Without some immediate relief from the overcrowded state of our thoroughfares on the north side of the Thames, and especially diagonally from the mouth of the river Thames, the public will increase the annoyance to the extent of at least one-fourth. Every policeman knows that the principal traffic of London is between the City and the Surrey termini, and the other side vehicles, and it is well known that the time to get from the City to the Surrey termini is about one hour and a half by going a mile out of their way they can avoid it they will cheerfully do so. But with a little trouble and expense this is about to be avoided. Steamers would otherwise afford the greatest relief to the Strand, Fleet-street, and Westminster-bridge-road. Perhaps, by-and-by, the overcrowded state of the thoroughfares, or they could have upon some plan of steam-ferry, like the present steamers, open the bridges for a month or two. As, however, the Lord Mayor has not, I take the liberty of suggesting that, if they can really see any way how easy to ascertain the amount of the toll taken in one month (which would only be a mere trifle), from the fullness of the purse, and throw them open to the public. This would save those enough particularly what the effect would be, and might be made the basis of negotiations for purchasing from the several companies their interests in those steamers, which, however extraordinary, have at present proved quite to be considered useful purposes to the metropolis.—A. B.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

A sermon will be preached on Sunday evening next at the parish church of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, by the Rev. Robert Maguire, M.A., in aid of the funds of the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, Charing-cross.

A gift of £100, the eighth of that amount from the same benefactor, has been received from Mr. John Hibbert for the University College Hospital.

The half-yearly meeting of the governors of the Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear was lately held at the Dispensary, Dean-street, Soho-square. During the last six months 873 patients have been admitted, of whom 340 had been entirely cured.

In consequence of the great increase of students at King's College Hospital, and in accordance with the plans for the purchase of the building that abuts on Strand-lane, and workmen are engaged in altering the upper story-half by increasing its height.

Notice has been issued that the museum and library of the Royal College of Surgeons will be closed until the last day of next month, for the purpose of having the rooms thoroughly cleansed and the books and cases dusted.

The first case of several of the cadet companies attached to the metropolitan volunteer corps took place at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday. The lists contained considerable numbers of competitors, and therefore the details until next week, when we shall give an illustration of the ceremony.

Mr. Benjamin Cumin, the landlord of the Bell Inn, Bell-yard, Temple Bar, Middlesex, was found dead in his bed on Tuesday morning. The deceased, facetiously known as "the Duke of Cumin," had been a leading member of our prize ring, and held for some years the championship.

On Saturday last the foundation-stone of the new barracks of the 1st Royal East Middlesex Militia was laid in the parade-ground of the head-quarters of the regiment at New-road, Hampstead. The ceremony was performed by Miss Formula Wood, the sister of the late Col. T. Wood, of Little, who commanded the regiment for more than half a century.

The Hon. W. Cowper, at the last meeting of the committee of direction, has just presented a clock in the Palace of Westminster for the exhibition at the 82 Charles Barry. The statue, which is of marble, is by Foley, R.A., will be placed in the niche on the left hand side of the entrance to the "Witness" Lobby.

The National Gallery of pictures and sculptures in Trafalgar-square is closed to the public till Wednesday, Oct. 30, for the autumnal vacation. During the seven weeks the National Gallery will be under the management of the works of art in the national collection, and a different classification will be adopted for the purpose of rendering the choicest works of the gallery more easily accessible to students and the public.

An alarming collision took place yesterday week between a passenger steamer and a barge in the river, near Rotin. The steamer Metis, on her way to Hartwich with about a hundred passengers on board, and towed carried on board, came into collision with the barge Hercules, laden with timber. Several persons on board were injured, and a number of the company's steamers. all the passengers were transferred from the one to another at the time of the accident. The brig, which was heavily laden, was towed on to the shore.

To the Tom Sayers Memorial the public have for several years been indebted for a very successful annual fete, the juvenile concert, and those very clever and amusing performances of those jovial gentlemen the members of an Australian contest between choirs which have been instituted on Mr. Curwen's new system of musical instruction. The annual series of musical competitions took place at the Crystal Palace in the presence of several thousand spectators, and it appeared that there were a great many of the pupils amongst the friends of the respective champions, but in the end the world at large.

The births of 1871 boys and 1671 girls, in all 3542 children, were registered last week in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1851-60 the average number was 3,268. The deaths registered in London last week were 1721, showing a slight decrease on the number in the previous week, which was 1,800. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1851-60 the average number of deaths in the weeks corresponding to the last week was 1,493. The increase of population, which is 2,800,000, it appears that the deaths of last week are less by it than the estimated number.

A most extraordinary accident occurred last Saturday at the works in connection with the Metropolitan Underground Railway. On the occasion of the men leaving off work at their usual hour, they found that the order remained that work at the bottom of the shaft, about twenty-five feet in depth, was to be continued during the night, and that the men were required for the purpose of continuing the tunnel which forms the underground railway. About forty feet of the railway at the bottom of the shaft, on the north side, had been already excavated, and was ready for the bricklayers, which work was being proceeded with at the time of the accident. The men were engaged at the same moment near the top of the shaft, removing a length of the New River Company's main pipe, to enable the surface work to be carried with greater convenience to the men employed, when suddenly the middle portion of the tunnel sank with a tremendous crash, and precipitated the shaft into the tunnel where the men were at work. The shaft down which the men had descended with great expedition was filled with earth and rubbish, and a square iron bucket and windlass was the only appliance at hand for the rescue of the men. It was lowered down, and the men were drawn up filled with mud, water, and rubbish, and exhausted, and again down into the shaft and who had fled to the bottom of the shaft. Altogether the most extremely excited scene, sometimes in the shaft, while others were standing on the surface close to the men themselves. The four men were all more or less exhausted, the water by that time having reached to the crown of the arch.

Letters from Naples state that the old crater situated on the east of Mount Vesuvius is in a state of eruption.

The Act for the abolition of compulsory oaths in criminal cases will come into force on the 1st proximo.

The Directors of the Bank of England, representative of Baltic, and Mr. Lumley, representative of Belgium, which has been constructed by the Rainault and Flandres Company, was opened a few days back. It passes through the richest coal-field in the country.

The Queen has approved of Mr. James Edwin Graham as Consul at Sligo, for the King of Italy; and of Mr. Edward Hamilton as Consul at Nassau, New Providence, for the United States of America.

According to official returns there were published 3546 Bibles and 4,000 Testaments in the year 1858. They increased to 3717 in 1856. The following year there were 3962 issued, and 1860 saw 4000 and 5000 they used to 4250. The official returns for the year 1859 and 1860 have not yet been received.

The Queen Eastern sailed from Liverpool on Tuesday afternoon for New York, with upwards of 400 passengers and a general cargo. The chairman and directors of the Great Ship Company, with a number of the leading gentlemen of the port, including the Mayor, Mr. S. R. Graves, accompanied the ship as far as the Bell Buoy. The day was in excellent order, and her departure was witnessed by many thousands who lined the banks of the Mersey.

"Our noble Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports," says the Daily Chronicle, "entered upon the active duties of his office on Thursday last, and we are informed, presided over the councils of the new Harbour Board as its president and arbiter. He then surveyed the engineer and his subordinates around the harbour, and closely questioned the engineer on each point of the works which are going on, the progress, and &c. He declared his determination to watch over the interests of the port, and to do whatever is in his power to help the promotion of its trade and commerce."

THE REV. JOHN RATTENBURY, PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN-METHODIST SOCIETY.

MR. RATTENBURY was born at Newport, Monmouthshire, June 26, 1806. After receiving several years' schooling at Newport, he went to reside in Manchester, where he joined the Wesleyan-Methodists. His first religious experiences were very remarkable, extreme religious distress being suddenly and permanently transformed into great religious joy and Christian zeal. He often, when a youth, wandered about the streets of Manchester at four o'clock in the morning, waiting for the commencement of the very early religious services which were holden by the Methodists nearly half a century ago. Young Rattenbury gave considerable proof of religious zeal, pulpit capacity, and consistency of character, and, after spending some time in Manchester as a lay preacher, he was fully set apart to the work of the ministry. Stonebridge was his first circuit, from which he removed to Sheffield; and he has travelled in first-class circuits ever since. Macclesfield, Leeds, York, Manchester, London, and Bristol have each shared the benefits of his ministerial efficiency. Three years is the utmost time at present allowed by the Conference for a minister's return in any one and the same circuit. It is therefore no mean criterion of Mr. Rattenbury's acceptability as a minister to know that he has remained three years in every circuit to which he has been appointed. In the pulpit Mr. Rattenbury's chief characteristics are spiritual-ism, fidelity, earnestness, forcible application of Methodist doctrine, and great sweetness of tone. His plaintive tones of voice, frequently thrown into the minor key, give to his pathetic passages a peculiar expression which is fascinating and sometimes thrilling to the hearer, though these powerful strokes and appeals of his cannot well be described on paper. Few men in Methodism—in fact not one of his standing—have laboured so hard by occasional and extra pulpit services for the prosperity of his own Church. In all parts of the Connection and in all seasons of the year he has been in "labours more abundant," and so he will continue to the end. The circuits in which the reverend gentleman has travelled owe much to him in a business point of view. The prosperity of ecclesiastical finances and the erection of new chapels has nearly always followed in his steps. The great chapel-building movement now going on among the London Methodists may be said to have sprung from Mr. Rattenbury's previous labours as from its germ. As chairman of different districts and as secretary for various connectional funds, the President has long been known as possessing more than the average amount of ecclesiastical business talent. In presiding over the deliberations of the Conference he gave great satisfaction, not only by his suavity and judiciousness, but by his inviting the young ministers to take part in the debates and by the unusual amount of freedom in discussion which he allowed. We regret that Mr. Rattenbury has made no contributions to literature, but he has had other work to do. It has been the ambition of his life to be a religiously-successful minister, and with the results of his life's ambition he has, indeed, good cause to be satisfied—satisfied with the position he will occupy in the archives of Methodism.

THE REV. JOHN RATTENBURY, PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST SOCIETY FOR 1861-62.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY AT DERRICUNIHY, LAKES OF KILLARNEY.

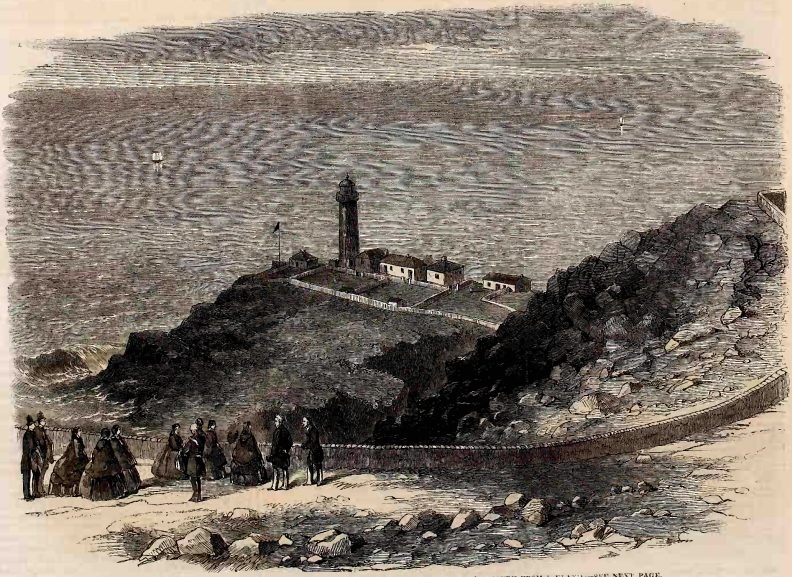
At Derricunihy Lord Castlerosse had erected a very beautiful marquee in the glen. Here the Royal party disembarked and went rambling among the valleys, visiting the waterfall, and sketching until nearly five o'clock, when all returned to the marquee to tea. The magnificent Cascade of Derrycunihy bursts from between some rocks at a great height up the mountain, and, after falling a distance of over thirty feet, breaks into innumerable falls, as though every rock and tree had its own jet, d'eau, and poured forth a separate cascade. These beautiful falls, split into a thousand rills, again unite, and, after concentrating their forces in a deep basin excavated in the rock below, once more leap forth down a narrow channel in a mass of foam into a dense wood, from which they find their way to the river and lake. The mountain slopes on both sides of the waterfall are covered with exquisite glades and parklike scenery; and her Majesty, we are told, was enthusiastic in her admiration of the magnificent scenery. In returning from this spot, to which none but the privileged hosts of the authorities and the press were permitted to follow the Royal barge, the boats were hurried by the current through the "long range" amidst stately trees, through the openings of which glimpses were caught of the distant mountains.

NEW CLUBHOUSE, KILDARE-STREET, DUBLIN.

Among the edifices visited by the Prince Consort on the day of the arrival of the Royal party at Dublin was the Kildare-street new Clubhouse, with which his Royal Highness expressed himself much pleased. The resolution to build a new clubhouse was taken in 1859, and the firm of Deane and Woodward received the requisite instructions to prepare the plans. Messrs. Cockburn and Sons were the contractors for the building, and have performed their duty in the most satisfactory manner. The cost of the building, including fittings, has been about £25,000. We give some of the interior arrangements of this stately edifice:—On entering the hall in Kildare-street, the visitor has on right and left the porters' and waiting rooms. Ascending three steps, he arrives at the great central hall, opening off which on the right, with window facing Kildare-street, is the coffee-room, 60 by 30, and 22 feet high. On the left, facing Leinster-street, and looking into the College Park, is the morning-room, of the same dimensions. Behind the coffee-room, and entered from a passage (intersecting its whole length, and communicating at one end with the main hall, and at the other with the members' private entrance and staircase to their bedrooms on the top story), are the bar servants' waiting-rooms, clerks' rooms, and servants' staircase. The principal hall and staircase are lighted from the top, and on the ground and upper story an arcade with Portland and limestone columns runs round its four sides. The stairs commence in the arcade on the left as one enters from the principal entrance, pass under the floor of the upper corridor, opposite entrances, and turn again to the left by a flying flight withinside the arcade. By this means a complete corridor all round the four sides of the hall is maintained on the upper story. The balustrade is formed of perforated slabs of stone. The capitals, bases of columns, the arch of flying flights, are carved with flowers, birds, and animals. The upper corridor is tiled in an elaborate pattern, and the floor of the hall is paved with Portland, Forest of Dean, and Cumberland stone, with slate in encaustic tiles. A skirting of tile runs round the upper corridors, the hall, and down the wall flights of steps. The second stairs, forming throughout, in ends of steps, and

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND: THE ROYAL TENT AT DERRICUNIHY, KILLARNEY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND: NEW CLUBHOUSE, KILDARE-STREET, DUBLIN.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.



THE QUEEN VISITING SOUTH STACK LIGHTHOUSE, HOLYHEAD, ON HER MAJESTY'S RETURN FROM I ELAND.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

for the domestics; it is of brick and granite, and runs from cellar to basement. The third is of timber, and is the members' private stairs, communicating, as before, with the members' bedrooms and the passage to the private entrance in Kildare-street. In the rear of the main building, on the ground floor, communicating with the corridor on three sides of a court-yard, are six dressing-rooms, private dining-room, two suites of bed-room, 32 by 20 ft., lavatory, bathroom, and at the back of billiard-room, a racket-court, with its necessary dressing-rooms, &c. The racket-court is covered with a light iron roof, with central skylight, and a gallery above the whole length of the court. The second floor of the principal building contains the drawing-room, 44 ft. by 20 ft., with open timber roof, with water-colour decorations, and 60 by 20 by 21. The new window in this room commands a view of the Lakes of Killarney on all sides. Over the coffee-room are a writing-room, 40 by 20 by 21; and a room unappropriated at present, 30 by 20 by 21, and over the entrance-hall principal staircase, a room 40 by 20 by 21, and over the billiard-room, 30 by 30 by 21. Off a corresponding passage to that described as that leads to the coffee-room are a card-room, 30 by 20, and a library, 32 by 20 ft. of height in the front rooms is and a coffee-room. The 21 ft. of height in the front rooms is divided in the rooms off the corridors, overlooking the court-yard, into four stories, which afford apartments for female upper servants. Over the private dining-room, and going to the courtyard, is a smoking-room, 32 by 20 ft., with open timber roof, with water-colour decorations, and a private retiring-room, 20 by 20 ft. The basement is entirely of the rustic character, and contains all the culinary requirements, and bedrooms for servants, with spacious wine and beer cellars.

THE EMBARKATION OF HER MAJESTY AT ROSS CASTLE.

One has November continued a View, from Sketch by one of our Special Artists, of the Queen Embarking on the Lakes of Killarney, including the remarkable ruins of Ross Castle, formerly the property of Arthur, who for warded to on a drawing of the same incident in the Royal progress in Ireland, taken from a different point of view, embracing a view of some of the mountain scenery for which Killarney is so famous, and of this we give an Engraving at page 270 The shores of the Lakes of Killarney are at present the scene of the Queen's visit. The nature has constructed beautiful landing-places, and made ledges of rock into natural stairs. At Ross Castle the picturesque beneath the ruins slopes down to the water's edge, where it meets shelves of rock, alongside which the two Seats barges took their places. From the water's edge up to the castle walls a carpet was laid down. Ross Island were congregated thousands of Irish ladies, dressed for the most part in white, with veils and hats, and many children, giving their appearance, at a distance (like the orchestra at the Handel Festival), of a bank of flowers. Behind them rose the grey limestone rock, with its walls and castle towers, while the massive keep high over all, the ivy in thick folds climbing upward to its head, and the effect of colour being greatly heightened by a file of soldiers in their scarlet uniforms, relieved by the occasional jackets stood out against the clear sky, and contrasted beautifully with the rich green of the ivy-tapery. When the barges approached the pier it was as perfect an arrival as could desire. Her Majesty and Lady Caroline rode in one of the Royal pony carriages, drawn by a pair of grey Arabs. Lord Castlerosse and the Hon. Percy Wyndham were on horseback. Then followed other pony carriages, conveying the Princesses and the party staying at Killarney House. In order that the Queen's carriage, Lord Castlerosse handed her Majesty at once from the pony carriage, The Queen took her seat in the centre bench in the Royal barge. On the right-hand side, the Queen occupying the front of the cabin on the left. In the boat with her Majesty were the Princess of Wales, Princess Alice and Helena, Prince Alfred, Lady Caroline, and Lord Granville. Lord Castlerosse himself got into the starnsheets and stood behind the Queen, with Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Spring Rice. Immediately behind the Queen, with Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Spring Rice. Immediately behind the Royal barge the whole day. As the Queen approached a most joyous sight presented itself. The lake all around Ross Castle was covered with boats many of them evidently built expressly for the occasion filled with ladies, and manned by gentlemen who, in several cases, were dressed uniformly in boating costume, which added considerably to the gay and effect of the moment. As the oars of the Royal barge splashed into the water, and the stroke-oar pulled the first stroke, the boats on the Lake threw their oars simultaneously into the air, having formed an aisle of oars down which the Queen passed. Until this pathway upon the water was terminated, the barge could not proceed, in order that the fleet of tiny vessels might have an ample opportunity of doing honour to the Queen. As she came abreast of each boat, one after another they took up the cheers, and the different crews, in their uniforms of red, and white, and blue, standing in their oars (which looked like a forest of slender masts "in order"), raised their boating hats in the air, while the gaily-clothed ladies waved their handkerchiefs, and seemed in an instant to cover the whole lake with fluttering sails. The Queen's face was radiant with pleasure. Her Majesty bowed right and left to the floating multitude of them, as the cheers sank among the ruins and the rocks, the Royal barge shot ahead towards Innisfallen; and for the first time in History a Monarch of England was afloat upon the Lakes of Killarney.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO SOUTH WALES.

LIGHTHOUSE, HOLYHEAD ISLAND.

On Friday morning, the 30th ult., her Majesty left Kingstown and arrived at Holyhead, whence on the following morning the Royal party started for Balmoral. From Holyhead the Prince Consort and Prince Alfred made a flying visit to Beddegelert. The Queen also made an excursion during Friday afternoon. Her Majesty was accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, and attended by the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, landed at three o'clock, and proceeded on foot to the lighthouse, which had been placed at her Majesty's disposal by the Hon. W. O. Stanley, M.P., to the South Stack Lighthouse on Holyhead Mountain. Her Majesty arrived at that part of the road where the carriage road ceases, and walked down the steep staircase to the lighthouse, crossing the chain bridge connecting the rock with the mainland, which appears to benefit by the astonished keeper as an ordinary stranger. The poor man, however, remembered her Majesty's previous visit, five years ago when she landed, and, calling his "gudewife" to his aid, chairs and a seat were hastily brought out for the Queen, who sat down on the pavement and enjoyed the magnificent scene before her. The Queen crossed to the summit of the tower and derived from the keeper an explanation of the machinery employed in the light which is seen from a distance of 24 miles. The old man also explained the use of the great bell, which is rung in foggy weather to keep ships out of danger, and for better realisation of its uses the bell was sounded to send forth a deep, sepulchral tone across the sea. The Princess signed their names in the visitors' book, and left the old man in high glee at the honour of their visit. Her Majesty was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Stanley only. There was no intention on the Royal party, but the Queen got back to her yacht at six o'clock, in time to meet the Prince Consort and Prince Alfred on their return from Beddegelert.

The South Stack is famous for its magnificent rock-scenery and the lighthouse with which the island is crowned. In the precipitous face of the cliff of the mainland 380 steps, known as the Grand Stairs, lead, at the end of which the path is carried across a fearful chasm by means of a chain suspension-bridge, which, from the wind, has a full one every two minutes. The sea is awful here in south-west gales, frequently dashing over the whole rock and the dwellings of the keepers. There is a passage between the rock and the main, but so narrow that unless the water is perfectly smooth an experienced navigator might hesitate to attempt it, even in a boat; and yet through this channel, dashed and fringed as it is with bristling rocks, starting like sharks' teeth from its yawning sides, a large cutter, one of the post-office packets conveying the mail from Dublin to the Head, passed in a heavy sea some sixty years ago. The South Stack, like the North, is perforated by vast caverns which the sea has worn out of the rocks.

MM. Sirtori, Bixio, Medici, Türr, and Cosenz, are named Commanders of the Military Order of Savoy.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 15.—Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 16.—Shakespeare's House sold, 1847.
TUESDAY, 17.—Lambeth.
WEDNESDAY, 18.—Regency of the Chinese War, 1360.
THURSDAY, 19.—Battle of Poictiers, 1356.
FRIDAY, 20.—Battle of the Alma, 1854.
SATURDAY, 21.—St. Matthew.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 21, 1861.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday
M. 1	A. 1	M. 2	A. 2	M. 3	A. 3	M. 4
4	4	5	5	6	6	7
28	28	58	58	28	28	58
A. 4	M. 5	A. 5	M. 6	A. 6	M. 7	A. 7
30	0	30	0	30	0	30

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS AND THEIR REMEDIES.

SURELY the time has come for something like a definite national policy with regard to railway accidents. Two collisions within a few days, the death of nearly forty persons, and the serious injury of a still larger number; the shock to public confidence, the decline in value of railway property, the condemnation by a Government Inspector of one of our most popular lines as wanting in efficiency of system; and, lastly, the verdict of "Manslaughter" against the station-master in the one case and against the signalman in the other—surely these are facts to weigh in the days of more honest and anger and vague discussion are passed, and that we must now substitute earnest inquiry, determined purpose, and, if practicable, certain and speedy cure.

It would be idle to dwell on the urgency of the need for some relief to the public mind, or on the grateful welcome that would be accorded to any new measures calculated to that end. But there is one remark we may make—Is it not now the obvious interest (to say nothing of higher duty) of the whole railway interest, of the Board of Trade in particular, of persons responsible directorate of Great Britain in particular, of persons responsible and expense with a view to increased safety, not only for the safety's sake, but in order to check the ab surd universal panic that has set in, and to give the public mind something pleasanter and more hopeful to reflect on than the "perilous stuff" that now weighs it down? We were in clearer than now that the interest of the public and of the companies are identical—if only fully understood.

It may look like a cruel mockery, under existing circumstances, to talk of the inherent safety of railway travelling. Yet, if we could but know the number of accidents—collisions—and the sum total of deaths in a half year (the last of 1860) would drop from twenty-five to one, and of persons injured from three hundred and seventy-three to thirty-six. And this fearsome eighty million of travellers! We know, then, but too well where the stress of danger and responsibility lies. These late cases have taught us whatever else we might have needed to know. Scarcely a single fruit of the defective parts of the system but has here come to the surface. Are we now so to use them that they appear for the last time? Can there be any difficulty in securing this? We want to think not;—that something like a clear and satisfactory answer will rise almost spontaneously from the juxtaposition of certain facts, and a review of the more obvious causes, of what we call accidents, but which it would be more correct to speak of as the contingent figures for which no calculation has been made. By the same process it will, we think, become plain that the railway disease admits of no quack cure, no single specific. Let us enumerate its chief causes:—

1. Unpunctuality of start.—One of the three Brighton trains is disputed just twenty-three minutes after its time; but then, by way of compensation, the Kew train starts a whole hour before. It might be supposed that such practices would, at all events, be checked by accurate record of the facts; but no: the Brighton swagger knows of no such thing. Nor should desirable to do anything of the kind. We cannot agree with him. And why, we may ask, should not the inevitable decay in filling the excursion-train after the closing of the doors be formally acknowledged in every time-table by dotted lines of type for the two hours, and the daily provided for in all calculations?

2. The too rapid succession of trains.—Three were started from Brighton within seven minutes; hence the appalling scene in Clayton tunnel, and the consequent verdict of manslaughter against the station-master. Is it not high time to consider the telegraph has signified "Line clear"? That rule established, the trains might safely follow each other as fast as it was possible to send there.

3. Neglect of specially dangerous places, such as curves, where the engine-driver cannot see far enough ahead to be able to stop in time to avoid a collision—that is, within some 600 yards. Yet all these places are easily reckoned up, and as easily to be provided for. So with tunnels. What traveller has not while passing through there foreseen to his own great discomfort the probability of a collision there? Yet railway managers, good, easy, credulous souls! have rested content to send us through that awful darkness in reliance upon such a rule as this—that two trains shall not be in the tunnel at the same time on the same line. We will speak presently of how they secure that rule; but look at the rule itself, even if secured. Suppose when two trains on different lines are passing one should slip off the rail, as a very slight obstruction might cause it to do, and dash upon the other? What, then—even according to rule? Common sense, we presume, would dictate that under no possible circumstances, humanly speaking, should any two trains be in a tunnel at the same time. And then as to embankments. Would it have been conceivable in the days of coaching that wherever there was a dangerous place there the wall would assuredly—not be? The accident in the Hampstead fields might not have cost a single life if there had been a strong low wall to receive the first shock and turn aside or partially arrest the train.

4. Irregular trains, which of course, being irregular, are still more irregularly treated. It seems to be thought that, comet-like, they can be left to make themselves known in their own fashion. Excursion-trains are frequently omitted from the time-tables; and Richard on a regular Kew train that should have announced to people on or about the line that an excursion was coming was omitted; and when the latter did appear it was an hour earlier than it had been ordered—because the people were so numerous, and because the managers and the conscientious had not even thought it worth while to agree exactly about the hour of return, and so fixed different periods.

5. The uncertainty of the outlook, through the engine-driver's other duties, and through the cruel and altogether monstrous disregard of his eyes, or his comfort, on many lines, by leaving him without any shelter from prevailing winds or blinding storms. Why should there not be a man specially assigned to this duty at each end of the train? The compensation payable for a single injured person would defray the salaries of both men for a twelvemonth.

6. The imperfection of the signals.—It was a "self-acting" signal on the Brighton line, which could not even be made to act, that precipitated the catastrophe. But has not Mr. Wrigley again and again shown that railway managers should reverse the principle of signalling, and stick to the fact that there is danger at all dangerous points unless and until you have express assurance that the line is clear? We believe this to be a vital and indispensable improvement. And as to the objection that it would be always crying "Wolf!" whether the wolf were visible or no, and therefore be unattended to, it need only be replied that the danger signal should always be removed for the coming train in time to prevent it stopping if all were right. But what if the driver should treat the danger signal with contempt? What proof can he given against him if he says he had permission to pass? We answer, why should he be made to obey it? Let the authority to pass be dropped in a suitable material form to the tender. There could be no mechanical difficulty. There was a method adopted some years ago, and which may still be in use, for raising and lowering the mailbags at certain places without stopping the train. The same measure that secures the attention of the driver secures the attention of the signalman, and records his proceedings—the transfer of the pass. If that be given it will be useless afterwards to says danger signal was lying. Yet the Hampstead charge of remaining under the train just this question, whether or not such a signal was displayed.

7. The deficiency of telegraphic apparatus.—One needle is made to do the work of three. We have it on the best evidence that there should be one to be blocked over, as significant of the blockage of the line, and down and down and one to be used for any other necessary communication while the two are thus occupied. Each needle should have its own box, and the use be inscribed on it legibly, to prevent mistake during the hurry and agitation of an alarm.

8. The over-worked duty of the signalmen.—It seems scarcely credible that the lives of hundreds of persons are constantly dependent on the conscientious care, the self-possession, and the health of men who receive 20s. a week to keep themselves and families, and who are required to work long hours. Payment was accordingly proposed to give for his 14s. weekly fifteen hours and a half one day and ten the next, to add the duty of porter to that of occasional signalman, and was all the while so dear that he could not even be sure of hearing the whistle of a passing train! No wonder he cannot answer the most important questions relating to his doings on the eventful day.

9. The smallness of the train for self-preservation.—It has, as we have seen, no sufficient out-look. There is frequently a deficiency of break-power, and that applied only to one end; so that, if a train separates in the same way, and the train divides on an incline, the break-less and engine-less half may rush away to its own and others' destruction. The guard on the endangered train in the Clayton tunnel had no sand with him to drop on the line to give it increased hold. The Portsmouth train had no light. If the guard communicate with the driver, no ready mode offers; and passengers, if they perceive danger, are carefully shut off from the possibility of informing the guard. We know of an instance, the other day, of a fire in a train only through smoking, when a most appalling danger was only through smoking, when a most appalling danger was only narrowly escaped. If a collision does take place, instead of there being at each end some gigantic lurcher in the form of a highly-elastic, large, and heavy structure, as suggested by the Examiner, to receive the blow, there is, at the best, nothing more than a luggage-van, and at the worst the bodies of idle hapless passengers; for the thin, crumpery sides of the carriages are about as useful for defence as the handbones to which the Hampstead vehicles were compared by a bystander as he heard them suddenly crashed.

It is only, perhaps, a part of the fitness of things that when so little is done to prevent accident still less should be permitted in the way of comfort or satisfaction afterwards to those who have escaped. Doors are locked upon men, women, and children. Let any one guess what must be the feelings of people at this treatment, just after an accident, and while in mortal apprehension that the accident may be only beginning. If you are delayed hours behind time through some casualty, and want to guard from alarm those who expect you by sending a message of safety, the telegraph is refused, even when doing nothing. In a case of this kind the other day a gentleman, our informant, broke through the obstruction by sheer audacity, but he was alone in his success. How simple a regulation would remedy this.

10. The absence of a distinct and recognised personal responsibility.—It appears to us that an officer should be specially appointed to study and secure the entire safety of the line. Not a thing should be able to move on it, except in accordance with his general and printed rules, or his special and written ones. He should see to the fitness of all signalmen, and be habitually occupied in verifying by personal examination the exact state of every portion of the complex machinery, on which so much depends. He would not then have to say, as the Brighton depends. He would not then have to say, as the Brighton depends. He would not then have to say, as the Brighton

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND: HER MAJESTY BREAKFASTING AT ROSS CASTLE, LAKES OF KILLARNEY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 295.

THE WAR IN AMERICA.—DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC.—SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE DESCRIPTION, PAGE 270.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science assembled for its thirty-first annual meeting on Wednesday week at Manchester, and commenced its proceedings progressively, the sale of tickets being 2383—greater than on any previous opening day. The morning was spent in preliminary business by the council, when Mr. William Hopkins, F.R.S., was elected joint general secretary, in succession to Professor Walker, deceased, and Professor Inglis, barrister-at-law, was elected in the evening as the Vice-Chancellor's successor to the office of general treasurer. There was a large attendance, including the Earl of Ellesmere, Lord Lovaine, the Bishop of Manchester; Professors Owen, Faraday, Whewell, Chevalier, Kapfer; Sir P. Egerton, and Sir J. Ibbetson.

The retiring president, Lord Wrottesley, having introduced Mr. Fairbairn as his successor, the latter, who is well known in this country as a practical engineer, addressed the meeting in a speaking manner by his scientific experiments in iron construction, both the close and the tubular bond system, and advanced the science at considerable length. He pointed out how all sciences had progressed with the advance of civilization, and how, in the same way that science had risen, the degradation of science was accompanied with a degradation in civilization. He dwelt upon the astronomy, and referred to the names of Ptolemy, Copernicus, Kepler, Galileo to those of Lord Rosse, Sir W. Herschel, and Mr. Alexander. He then referred to the science of optics and spoke with the highest encomium of inventive science, and that of Dr. Dollond, a Manchester man, with whom, he said, he had the honour of being intimately acquainted. In mechanics, he was the founder. Mr. Fairbairn then enlarged on the benefits which science had bestowed upon country gentlemen in diet, water, &c.; agriculture, in manures; trade, in dyes; discovery of new and improvement in the mode of working old metals; geology, in road making, &c., and advanced to the fruits of the labours of Parry, Franklin, Humboldt, Murchison, Livingstone, and others in the course of geography and discovery, and dwelt upon the rapid progress of engineering science from the days of Smeaton and Brindley to those of the speaker, in the course of which he gave an account of the origin and the general development of the steam-engine and steam navigation, from the days of Blasco de Garay in the Mariner's Museum at Greenwich to the experiments by Savery and Newcomen in the south-west mining districts of England, which were succeeded by Watt. In connexion with steam navigation, he spoke of the important fact that the consumption of cotton had increased three hundred fold in a century, from 4,000,000 lbs. weight to the astonishing quantity of three thousand, to 1,200,000,000 in the present day, equal in value to £70,000,000, or five pounds per head of the country. Then the subject of bridge construction was enlarged, including a process from the elder erection of the regulated and suggested bridge of the late Mr. Brunel, and that of Mr. Rowe, and the speaker's own system in the Conway tubular bridge, impossible from ships, declaring himself fully persuaded that the whole of the Menai Straits could be spanned by iron, and which will be more permanent and at least one-third cheaper than the heaviest description at high elevation. Upon the necessity of iron bridges the President drew a striking picture by their application to the Forth and Tay in their present span, but beyond 1850 or 2000 feet they would be destroyed by their own weight. He then treated the subject of the tubular bridge over a large town, electric telegraph, submarine cables, and the patent law. Mr. Fairbairn concluded his address by an allusion to the future meeting to the exhibition of 1851 and 1862.

Thanks for the address of the president were proposed by Lord Stanley and seconded by Mr. A. Turner, M.P., and carried unanimously.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The sectional meetings of the association opened on Thursday, and in every case there was a large attendance.

Section A.—Mathematical and Physical Science.—assembled in the Gallery of Ancient Sculpture at the Royal Institution. Professor Airy, the President, gave his address. Many valuable and papers were read in this section. On the progress of historical photography since the meeting at Aberdeen: J. H. Gladstone, Esq. On illustrations of the action of the electric fluid in the Siemens, On an electric resistance thermometer, with balancing coil: Sir David Brewster. On the knowledge lately obtained respecting comets, on the structure of copper, as seen with a microscope; Thomas Sutton, On a pneumatic level, by Mr. Saxton. On the measure of the velocity of projectiles, and of the sun or moon upon instruments on the earth's surface: Daniel Vaughan, Esqs. of gravitation, daily influence of the moon on the magnetic needle: Professor Charles Tomlinson, On lightning-guards.

In section B—Chemical Science—where the opening address by the President, Dr. Miller, papers were read by—Professor H. E. Roscoe, On the manufactures of the Swiss Jura mountain districts; Dr. Angus Smith, On the air and water in connexion with coal on the six non-combustible gases; Dr. Joule and Professor W. Thomson, On the thermal effects of fluids in fluids.

In section C—Geology—Sir R. I. Murchison, the President, delivered the opening address, and papers were read by—Professor Phillips, On the coal of Manchester; W. Pengelly, On the recent encroachment of the sea on the shores of Torbay; Professor Ramsay, On the course of rivers in Wales; Professor Owen, On the extinct New Zealand: its cause and effects; Charles Moore, Notes on two Madagascan fossils, now exhibited to the meeting; Mr. Binney, On the fossils of the Rochdale granite at Black Comb to the sefidone rocks.

Section D—Zoology and Botany—commenced its sittings under the presidency of Professor Babington, in one of the largest rooms of the Royal Institution, which was crowded by members. The President gave an address On the vertebrae of the male. Ateles Beelzebub, &c.; and On some objects of natural history in the collection of J. Du Chaillu; Dr. Edward Forbes, On the developing causalities on the north and east coasts of Scotland; Dr. Thomas Lee, On the peculiar characters of Ophrys, Dr. Joseph Hooker, On the flora of the Himalayas; and Professor Balfour, On the flora of the north of Ireland.

In section F—Statistics—the opening address by the President, Mr. Miller, papers were read by—Professor H. E. Roscoe, On the manufactures of the district; Mr. Heywood, On education in Manchester; and Professor Hancock, On the influence of a tax on the consumption of tea on the consumption of coffee; Mr. Joseph Mullinger, On the recent effects of the Irish Bills.

In section G—Geology—Sir R. I. Murchison, the President, delivered the opening address, and papers were read by—Professor Phillips, On the coal of Manchester; W. Pengelly, On the recent encroachment of the sea on the shores of Torbay; Professor Ramsay, On the course of rivers in Wales; Professor Owen, On the extinct New Zealand: its cause and effects; Charles Moore, Notes on two Madagascan fossils, now exhibited to the meeting; Mr. Binney, On the fossils of the Rochdale granite at Black Comb to the sefidone rocks.

Section A—Mathematical and Physical Science—met in the Gallery of Antique Sculpture at the Royal Institution. Professor Airy, the President, gave his address. Many valuable papers were read in this section. On the progress of historical photography since the meeting at Aberdeen: J. H. Gladstone, Esq. On illustrations of the action of the electric fluid in the Siemens, On an electric resistance thermometer, with balancing coil: Sir David Brewster. On the knowledge lately obtained respecting comets, on the structure of copper, as seen with a microscope; Thomas Sutton, On a pneumatic level, by Mr. Saxton. On the measure of the velocity of projectiles, and of the sun or moon upon instruments on the earth's surface: Daniel Vaughan, Esqs. of gravitation, daily influence of the moon on the magnetic needle: Professor Charles Tomlinson, On lightning-guards.

In section B—Chemical Science—where the opening address by the President, Dr. Miller, papers were read by—Professor H. E. Roscoe, On the manufactures of the Swiss Jura mountain districts; Dr. Angus Smith, On the air and water in connexion with coal on the six non-combustible gases; Dr. Joule and Professor W. Thomson, On the thermal effects of fluids in fluids.

In section C—Geology—Sir R. I. Murchison, the President, delivered the opening address, and papers were read by—Professor Phillips, On the coal of Manchester; W. Pengelly, On the recent encroachment of the sea on the shores of Torbay; Professor Ramsay, On the course of rivers in Wales; Professor Owen, On the extinct New Zealand: its cause and effects; Charles Moore, Notes on two Madagascan fossils, now exhibited to the meeting; Mr. Binney, On the fossils of the Rochdale granite at Black Comb to the sefidone rocks.

Section D—Zoology and Botany—commenced its sittings under the presidency of Professor Babington, in one of the largest rooms of the Royal Institution, which was crowded by members. The President gave an address On the vertebrae of the male. Ateles Beelzebub, &c.; and On some objects of natural history in the collection of J. Du Chaillu; Dr. Edward Forbes, On the developing causalities on the north and east coasts of Scotland; Dr. Thomas Lee, On the peculiar characters of Ophrys, Dr. Joseph Hooker, On the flora of the Himalayas; and Professor Balfour, On the flora of the north of Ireland.

In section F—Statistics—the opening address by the President, M to the model exhibited in the Free-trade Hall in exposition. The meeting was also referred to the model at Mr. Peter Ellett's hat-making machine, also exhibited in the Free-trade Hall, and the principles of which had been approved by the Residential Section. A paper was contributed by Mr. Malin, superintendent of the Museum of Gottenburg.

In the evening a soirée and fine exhibition of botanical and zoological specimens, contributed by members of the Manchester Field Naturalists' Association, took place at the Free-trade Hall.

SEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The meetings were conducted as on Saturday. Two additional meetings were held this day, the other sections having closed on the previous evening.

In section A, Mr. C. J. Brooker read a report On British Earthquakes; and Mr. Glaisher, On Recent Thunder-storms; Professor Thomson, On physical conditions; and Dr. Joule, On the mean heat of the sun's rays, communicated by Professor Stevelly. Professor Bowen Hamilton, On geometrical laws in space.

In section C Mr. J. E. Marclare communicated some information from Dr. Hastings respecting the present state of the Imperial Geological Institution of Vienna; the railway cutting and tunnel near Ahrendorf, north of Halle; and Mr. Hull, On Professor Ramsay's communication delivered from the chair at Bristol; Mr. Hull, On Professor Varrentrapp, of Cincinnati; Professor Rogers, On recent movements, by Professor Varrentrapp; Mr. Pumpelly, On the Russian Government Survey; a report by Professor Whitney, of the Geological Survey of the State of Missouri, and an examination of some points in the structure of the region; a letter from Professor Agassiz; and Mr. James Bowick's letter from Professor Agassiz, on the Glacial Epoch; and Mr. James Bowick's letter from Professor Whitney, on Western Volcanos.

The concluding general meeting of members was held in the Free-trade Hall at three o'clock, the great room being well filled, and a large number of ladies present. Mr. Fairbairn, the President, took the chair; and on the platform were most of the leading members who have been the active secretaries and officers during the past week. Professor Phillips read the annual report of the general secretary, stating that there has been a total of 1,350 members and associates enrolled, and that the sum of twenty-five pounds was voted by the Council to each of the five local secretaries, making £125 in all. The receipts from the sale of tickets, and the subscriptions and grants for the meeting, have been about £3920. This is in each case almost double the amount of the Aberdeen meeting. Professor Phillips read over the names and purposes for which the committee had determined this year to grant the several sums of money.

The President congratulated the assembly on the great success of the meeting this year, and after a cursory review of its intellectual features, and of the hospitality of the local gentlemen and others who had taken so active an interest in, and had the management of, the meeting, he adjourned the meeting to the next year.

The Mayor of Manchester (Mr. M. Curtis) also congratulated the meeting on his hoped the association would again soon visit Manchester.

Professor Owen, Professor Rolleston, Dr. Joule, and Professor Stevelly also addressed the meeting, the latter proposing a vote of thanks to the President, Mr. Fairbairn—a vote which was responded to by that gentleman in a brief acclamation.

The President, having returned thanks, declared the meeting was adjourned, and would meet at Cambridge next year.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

"THE Doncaster Cornucopia," who were afflicted with the most painful forebodings of empty pouches when the burning of Rhuddel followed hard on the heels of the down of Dundee, have derived a little consolation latterly from Lady Pippin, and go so far as to predict a very full meeting. The added money amounts to £2975, about double the amount given at the corresponding week of the new stand platform will furnish accommodation to at least five hundred more spectators. Messrs. Tattersall's station to at least five hundred more spectators. Messrs. Tattersall's station to at least five hundred more spectators. Messrs. Tattersall's stable arrangements are extensive, and twenty-five more yearlings, and five brood mares, on Tuesday; the ten Boythorpe, the eight Skipworth (five of them by the probably dead Lord Clifden), the six signed for Mr. Vickers; the railway cutting and tunnel near Ahrendorf, north of Halle; Mr. Hull, On Professor Varrentrapp, of Cincinnati; Professor Rogers, On recent movements, by Professor Varrentrapp; Mr. Pumpelly, On the Russian Government Survey; a report by Professor Whitney, of the Geological Survey of the State of Missouri, and an examination of some points in the structure of the region; a letter from Professor Agassiz; and Mr. James Bowick's letter from Professor Agassiz, on the Glacial Epoch; and Mr. James Bowick's letter from Professor Whitney, on Western Volcanos.

The concluding general meeting of members was held in the Free-trade Hall at three o'clock, the great room being well filled, and a large number of ladies present. Mr. Fairbairn, the President, took the chair; and on the platform were most of the leading members who have been the active secretaries and officers during the past week. Professor Phillips read the annual report of the general secretary, stating that there has been a total of 1,350 members and associates enrolled, and that the sum of twenty-five pounds was voted by the Council to each of the five local secretaries, making £125 in all. The receipts from the sale of tickets, and the subscriptions and grants for the meeting, have been about £3920. This is in each case almost double the amount given at the Aberdeen meeting. Professor Phillips read over the names and purposes for which the committee had determined this year to grant the several sums of money.

The President congratulated the assembly on the great success of the meeting this year, and, after a cursory review of its intellectual features, and of the hospitality of the local gentlemen and others who had taken so active an interest in, and had the management of, the meeting, he adjourned the meeting to the next year.

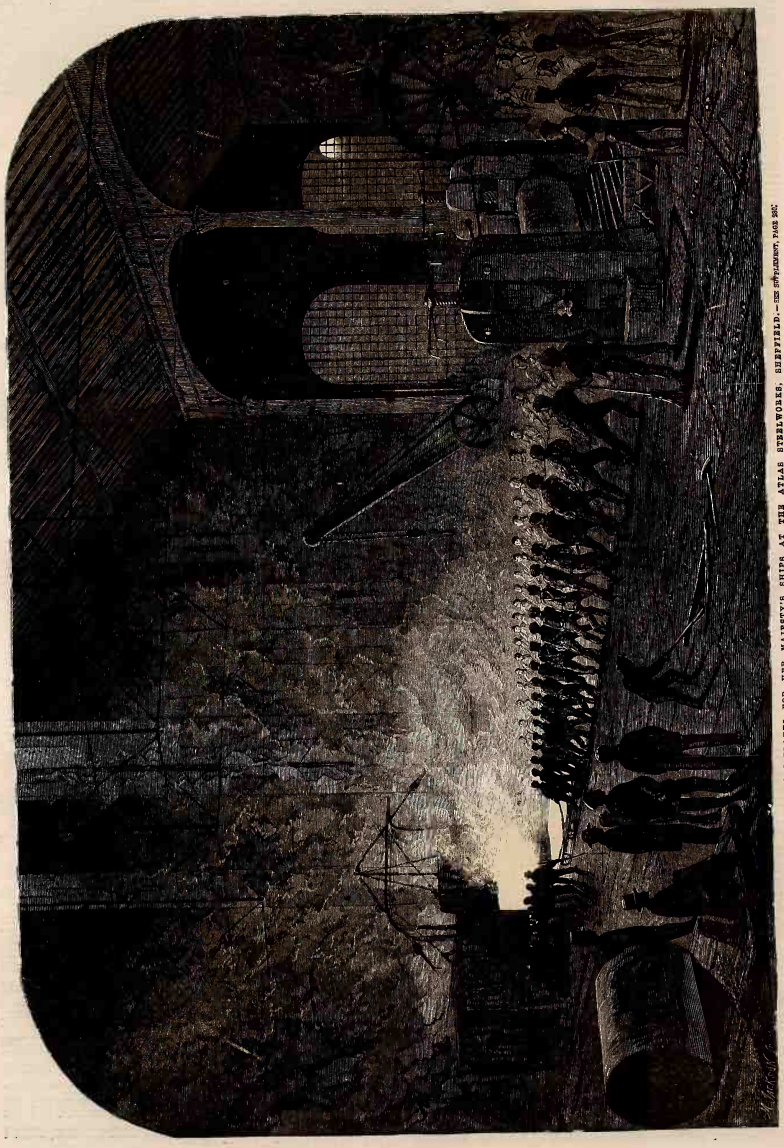
The Mayor of Manchester (Mr. M. Curtis) also congratulated the meeting on his hoped the association would again soon visit Manchester.

Professor Owen, Professor Rolleston, Dr. Joule, and Professor Stevelly also addressed the meeting, the latter proposing a vote of thanks to the President, Mr. Fairbairn—a vote which was responded to by that gentleman in a brief acclamation.

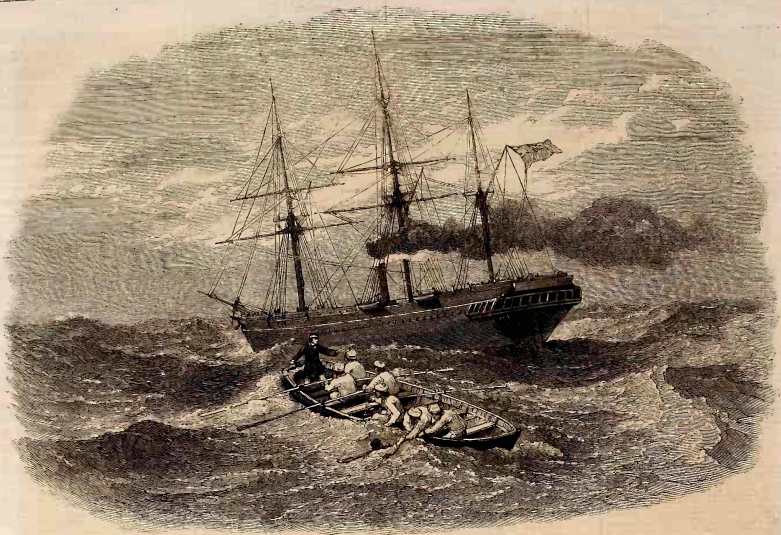
The President, having returned thanks, declared the meeting was adjourned, and would meet at Cambridge next year.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

"THE Doncaster Cornucopia," who were afflicted with the most painful forebodings of empty pouches when the burning of Rhuddel followed hard on the heels of the down of Dundee, have derived a little consolation latterly from Lady Pippin, and go so far as to predict a very full meeting. The added money amounts to £2975, about double the amount given at the corresponding week of the new stand platform will furnish accommodation to at least five hundred more spectators. Messrs. Tattersall's station to at least five hundred more spectators. Messrs. Tattersall's stable arrangements are extensive, and twenty-five more yearlings, and five brood mares, on Tuesday; the ten Boythorpe, the eight Skipworth (five of them by the probably dead Lord Clifden), the six signed for Mr. Vickers; the chestnut colt by Newminster, and the bay colt by Stockwell, among many others, and the sale-ground is a splendid one. The Prince of Wales's



PROCESS OF ROLLING ARMOUR-PLATES FOR HER MAJESTY'S SHIPS AT THE ATLAS STEELWORKS, SHEFFIELD.—SEE DESCRIPTION, PAGE 305.



PICKING UP A MAN OVERBOARD FROM THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY'S SHIP CANDIA IN THE RED SEA.

"A MAN OVERBOARD!"

THIS cry, so exciting to the mariner, was heard on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's ship Candia whilst on her passage recently from Calcutta across the Red Sea. One of the sailors at work aloft fell overboard. The engines were immediately stopped, and the port after-boat lowered, in charge of Mr. Duncan, one of the officers. It succeeded in reaching in time the unfortunate man, who was much exhausted. Great credit is due to Captain Stewart and the officers of the ship for the rapidity with which the boat was cleared and the man picked up. Although the vessel was going about nine knots an hour, and there was a heavy sea on, scarcely half an hour elapsed from the time of the alarm till the vessel was again steaming full speed on her course to Suez, with the rescued man on board. The young officer in charge of the boat, Mr. Duncan, has distinguished himself on several occasions. In November last he exerted himself greatly in saving La Plata, which was on fire in Southampton Docks, when he ran considerable risk in finding out where the fire was, and then directed the hose until he was almost smothered.

NEW GOLD-DIGGINGS IN NOVA SCOTIA: GOLD-STREET, TANGIER.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 289.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each announcement.

BIRTHS.

On the 3rd inst., at the Beacon, Exmouth, the wife of Major Musgrave, R.A., of Shillingston Manor, Bedfordshire, of a son and heir.

On the 9th inst., at Santo Domingo Mine, Merioth, Portugal, the wife of James Mason, Esq., of a son.

On the 7th inst., at Park Place Villas, Maida-hill West, the wife of Henry W. P. Pennington, Esq., of a daughter.

On the 9th inst., at Westbury House, Lansdowne, the wife of Captain Meadows, Rifle Brigade, of a daughter.

On the 6th inst., at 24, Belgrave-square, Lady Isabella Stuart, of a son.

On the 6th inst., in Gloucester-square, Lady Poltimore, of a daughter.

On the 8th inst., at 13, Lower Grosvenor-street, the Hon. Mrs. Hussey, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On the 12th inst., at St. Luke's, Chamber-road, by the Rev. W. W. Mills, M.A., brother of the bride, assisted by the Rev. A. F. Kelly, M.A., Incumbent of St. Mary's, Hendon, William, third son of John Metcalfe, Esq., of Spennithorne Hall, in the county of Norfolk, to Irene Mary, younger daughter of Henry James Mills, Esq., Port of Spain, Trinidad, West Indies.

On the 12th inst., at Hampton, by the Venerable the R. B. Rone, Archdeacon of Blackheath Park Church, Rev. Jesse Penn, Minister of Christ Church, Hampton, Sarah Anne, youngest daughter of the late David Martin, Esq., of Gay-street, Bath, formerly of Cheltenham, Herts, to John Joseph Travis, of Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, and Abbey Wood.

On Thursday next, at All Saints' Church, Knighton-road, Leicester, the Rev. Henry Worsley Fitz-Maurice, second son of the Earl and Countess of Orkney, to Isabella Frances, only child of the late William Rooke, Esq., of Stanhope, Bath Wells.

On Thursday week, the Earl of Carnarvon to Lady Evelyn Stanhope, only daughter of the Earl and Countess of Chesterfield.

DEATHS.

On Friday, the 6th inst., at South Grove, Highgate, in the 67th year of her age, Sarah, widow of the late Mr. William Lucas, of the Highgate Nurseries.

On the 12th inst., at Nether-Arthuret, Renfrewshire, the residence of her son, Henry Dunlop, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Charles Arthur Spalding, Esq., aged 36, Commissioner of Stamps for the Island of Jamaica, and fourth son of the late Hinton Spalding, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S., Bath, and Custom-house, and St. Andrew's, Jamaica.

On Wednesday, at St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Mrs. Peel, wife of the Very Rev. Dean of Worcester.

On the 9th inst., at Ibbleston, Suffolk, of decline, aged 24, Jane Caroline, the beloved wife of the Rev. Acland James, M.A., Curate of Wattisham, near Ibbleston, and eldest daughter of the late Baron de H. Largent, of Holmwood House, Dorking.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Sept. 9.—There was only a moderate supply of English wheat on sale to-day's market, and the demand for any description moderately, at an advance on the quotations of from 1s. to 2s. per quarter. Barley was taken in some instances 1s. per quarter dearer. Prices of malting were scarcely. There was only a moderate supply of foreign wheat on sale, and the trade ruled steady at full prices. The arrivals of foreign oats were moderate. Good corn only commanded extreme rates; but dung parcels were much neglected. Prices were ruled about 1s. per quarter lower. Beans were steady, and American beans advanced 1s.

MARK LANE, Monday.—The supply of inferior qualities of flour were in large supply, and the trade ruled heavy. Fine flour was steady, at Monday's currency.

The arrivals of wheat from Kent, not new, 70s. to 72s.; ditto, white, 70s. to 74s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, new, 68s. to 70s.; ditto, white, 70s. to 72s.; Essex and Scotch, new, 68s. to 70s.; ditto, white, 70s. to 72s.; Foreign, 60s. to 70s.; ditto, fine, 70s. to 72s.; Kingston and Ware, 70s. to 72s.; Chevalier, 68s. to 70s.; Talavera, 68s. to 70s.; Egyptian, 60s. to 62s.; Barley, 36s. to 38s.; Malting, 38s. to 40s.; Grinding, 34s. to 36s.; Malt, 70s. to 72s.; Peas, 38s. to 40s.; Maple, 38s. to 40s.; Boilers, 40s. to 42s.; Beans, 38s. to 40s.; Tick, 36s. to 38s.; Oats, 24s. to 26s.; Potato, 26s. to 28s.; Foreign, 24s. to 26s.; Linseed, 56s. to 58s.; Coleseed, 52s. to 54s.; Rapeseed, 52s. to 54s.; Cakes, 5l. 10s. to 5l. 15s.; Flour, 50s. to 52s.

LIVERPOOL, Monday.—There was a fair demand for wheat, and prices are well supported. Other articles are held at extreme rates.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, 10s. to 60s.; Calcutta, 32s. to 36s.; Surat, 32s. to 36s.; Egyptian, 32s. to 36s.; Pulse, 32s. to 36s.; Peas, 32s. to 36s.; Beans, 32s. to 36s.; white, 36s. to 38s.; Oats, 16s. to 18s.; Barley, 32s. to 34s.; Scotch, 34s. to 36s.; Malt, 36s. to 38s.; Scotch, 38s. to 40s.; Flour, 40s. to 42s.; Scotch, 42s. to 44s.; Linseed cakes, 5l. 5s. to 5l. 10s.; ditto, foreign, 5l. 5s. to 5l. 10s.; Rapeseed, 42s. to 44s.; Linseed, 52s. to 54s.; Rapeseed, 52s. to 54s.; Coleseed, 52s. to 54s.; Tares, 32s. to 34s.; Hay, 70s. to 80s.; Straw, 20s. to 24s.; Clover, 80s. to 90s.; Potatoes, 80s. to 90s.; Onions, 6s. to 8s.; Wool, 8d. to 10d.; Tallow, 40s. to 42s.; Lard, 40s. to 42s.; Butter, 80s. to 90s.; Cheese, 40s. to 50s.; Pork, 60s. to 70s.; Bacon, 40s. to 42s.; Hams, 50s. to 60s.; Beef, 60s. to 70s.; Lard, 40s. to 42s.; Tallow-candles, 40s. to 42s.; town tallow, 38s. to 40s.; rosin, 20s. to 22s.; Petroleum, 1s. 6d. to 1s. 8d.; Linseed oil, 30s. to 32s.; Rapeseed, 40s. to 42s.; French, 42s. to 44s.; Spirits of turpentine, 30s. to 32s.

Liverpool, Tuesday.—Generally speaking, the previous quotations of yesterday are held at extreme rates.

Liverpool, Tuesday, evening.—Wheat, Calcutta, 32s. to 36s.; Surat, 32s. to 36s.; Egyptian, 32s. to 36s.; Pulse, 32s. to 36s.; Peas, 32s. to 36s.; Beans, 32s. to 36s.; white, 36s. to 38s.; Oats, 16s. to 18s.; Barley, 32s. to 34s.; Scotch, 34s. to 36s.; Malt, 36s. to 38s.; Scotch, 38s. to 40s.; Flour, 40s. to 42s.; Scotch, 42s. to 44s.; Linseed cakes, 5l. 5s. to 5l. 10s.; ditto, foreign, 5l. 5s. to 5l. 10s.; Rapeseed, 42s. to 44s.; Linseed, 52s. to 54s.; Rapeseed, 52s. to 54s.; Coleseed, 52s. to 54s.; Tares, 32s. to 34s.; Hay, 70s. to 80s.; Straw, 20s. to 24s.; Clover, 80s. to 90s.; Potatoes, 80s. to 90s.; Onions, 6s. to 8s.; Wool, 8d. to 10d.; Tallow, 40s. to 42s.; Lard, 40s. to 42s.; Butter, 80s. to 90s.; Cheese, 40s. to 50s.; Pork, 60s. to 70s.; Bacon, 40s. to 42s.; Hams, 50s. to 60s.; Beef, 60s. to 70s.; Lard, 40s. to 42s.; Tallow-candles, 40s. to 42s.; town tallow, 38s. to 40s.; rosin, 20s. to 22s.; Petroleum, 1s. 6d. to 1s. 8d.; Linseed oil, 30s. to 32s.; Rapeseed, 40s. to 42s.; French, 42s. to 44s.; Spirits of turpentine, 30s. to 32s.

English Grain Sold Last Week.—Wheat, 30,920 ; barley, 6 qrs.; oats, 870 ; beans, 1,000 ; peas, 1,000 ; flour, 1,000 sacks.

Imports.—Secured for next week's supply: wheat and peas are well supplied; barley, oats, beans, and flour, moderately. Cargoes on passage: wheat, 1,000 qrs.; no corresponding period last year.

Beans.—Good and fine new condition heavymeet of quality, at full prices; but other kinds have been in dull inquiry, at barely late rates to shipperstone. Boiled peas maintain currency, at last week's quotations.

Linseed.—Cargoes of new arrivals still command a steady sale, and late rates are well supported.

Flour.—The trade is decidedly firm, and, in some instances, prices are a shade higher.

Oats.—Though there is only a moderate inquiry for home, at late quotations, the foreign market is steady, at full prices. In no other kind of provisions the transaction are comparatively limited.

Tallow.—The demand is fair, both for forward, at 42s. 6d. per cwt., on the spot. Rough tallow is moderately but easy inquiry.

Oils.—Linseed is in request, at late rates. Rapeseed, 42s. to 44s. per tun. Other oils are steady, at previous rates. Spanish linseed cake, 5l. 5s. to 5l. 10s. per ton.

Coals.—Newcastle, 12s. 6d. to 13s. 6d.; Hetton, 13s. 6d.; Lambton, 13s. 3d.; and good East Hetton, 14s. to 14s. 6d. per ton; Sunderland, 12s. 6d. to 13s. 6d.; Stewart's, 13s. 6d.; Hartley, 12s. 6d. to 13s. 6d.; Eastfield gas, for export, 12s. 6d. to 13s. 6d.; Wallsend, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d.; Hetton, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d.; Lambton, 13s. 3d. to 14

NEW MUSIC.

MESSRS. CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.

ANGEL MOTHER (Ma). S. J. ST. LEGER. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

BIRD OF THE TWILIGHT. M. W. BALFE. Price 2s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

BONNIE SCOTLAND. W. BRIDGER. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

COME TO THY LATTICE. J. BENEDICT. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

FAR, FAR AWAY. MY LOVE, CATHERINE. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

I DREAM OF THEE AT MORN, H. SMART. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

I MOURN THINE ABSENCE (in C and E flat). GLOVER. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

O SEND ME BACK TO DREAMLAND. W. H. BALFE. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

ONLY FOR THEE. G. LINDLEY. Sung by Miss Poole. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

REST, WHERE SHALL WE REST? E. REAH. Price 2s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

SOMEBODY IS WAITING. S. J. ST. LEGER Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

TO DREAM OF THEE. G. CROAL. Price 2s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

MESSRS. CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S NEW AND POPULAR PIANOFORTE PIECES.

J. BLUMENTHAL.—LA PENSEE. Souvenir. No. 3 of Three Impromptus. Price 3s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

J. BLUMENTHAL.—LA LUVISELLA. Chanson Napolitaine. Price 3s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

J. BLUMENTHAL.—UNE FLEUR DES ALPES. Price 3s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

RENE FAVARGER.—UN BALLO IN MASCHERA. Mazurka. Price 4s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

RENE FAVARGER.—PROPHETE. Fantasia. Price 4s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

RENE FAVARGER.—GUILLAUME TELL. Fantasia. Price 4s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

RENE FAVARGER.—RIGOLETTO. Fantasia. Price 4s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

RENE FAVARGER.—AMBER WITCH. Fantasia. Price 4s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

P. DE VOS.—BALLADE ORIENTALE. Price 3s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

P. DE VOS.—REVERIE DU COEUR. Price 3s.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

HAROLD THOMAS.—SANTA LUCIA. Fantasia. Price 3s. 6d.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

G. A. MACFARREN'S RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY. Price 2s. 6d.
London: CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S MUSICAL REPOSITORY, One Shilling. All new works of interest, as by eminent composers, supplied on application.
201, Regent-street, W.

THE BLACKSMITH'S SON. New Song. Composed by J. L. HATTON, and sung with immense success by Mr. Sidney and Mr. Lyall. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN, BALLIEU, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

NEW COMIC SONGS, composed by CHAS. BERNARD (Author of the celebrated Christmas Ballad by PHIL HERNARD (Author of the celebrated Christmas Ballad by PHIL MEDLEY), "I'LL BE TRUE TILL NEVER." A new air waltzed from Bernard's NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

ASHDOWN, BALLIEU, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

LA CIRCASSIENNE.—Auber's new and successful Opera, now nightly, complete and in separate numbers, with English and French words. Price 2s. each.
ASHDOWN, BALLIEU, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

LA CIRCASSIENNE.—Auber's New Opera, complete (the favourite airs), as two books, by W. H. HOLMES, Violinist to the Queen, each book. Also a Pianoforte Duet by ASCHER, price 3s.
ASHDOWN, BALLIEU, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

RUMMEL'S SELECTIONS from the following OPERAS for Young Pianists.—La Dame Blanche, Masaniello, Il Barbiere, Lucia, Lucrezia Borgia, Don Pasquale, Puritani, Sonnambula, and Norma. Each book contains twenty-four airs, price 2s. 6d. each, or the whole, handsomely bound and gilt, as a present, 7s. 6d.
ASHDOWN, BALLIEU, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

THE COLDSTREAM BAND MARCH. Composed by SYDNEY GLOVER. With Portrait of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by BARABBI. Price 3s.
London: ENOCH and Co., 22, Holywell-street Strand.

WESTROP'S DOMESTIC PSALMODY, Words and Music. The Seventh Edition of the 24 Chorales, with accompanying many Original Tunes, not to be found in any other collection. Price 2s. 6d.
ENOCH and Co., 22, Holywell-street Strand.

HOME LOVE. New Ballad. By CHARLES W. GLOVER. Price 2s. The Words are of a superior character, by S. CARPENTER. The melody expressive and original.—ENOCH and Co., 22, Holywell-street Strand.

ELEMENTARY INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. By J. G. STONE. Price 6s. In this publication the author has first principles of music are clearly explained. It contains a selection of popular Dances characterised by simplicity of arrangement and facility of execution.
ENOCH and Co., 22, Holywell-street Strand.

THEORETICAL and PRACTICAL INSTRUCTIONS IN THE ART OF SINGING. By J. T. STONE. Price 6s., containing a short treatise on the Voice, Breathing, Scales, Intervals, Solfeggi, Exercises, and Songs.—ENOCH and Co., 22, Holywell-street Strand.

NEW MUSIC.

NEW VOCAL DUETS, "HOPEFUL SPRING," "Joyous Summer," "Fruitful Autumn," "Frosty Winter," each, post free, 18 stamps. Three Charming Duets, for Soprano and Tenor, by PETER GLOVER, the composer of "What are the Wild Waves Saying?" "Sweet Spring," "Autumn Leaves," "Bird's Nest," &c. Each post free, 18 stamps. Hutchings's favourite Duet, "Rosa and Medora," 24 stamps. Hutchings's favourite Duet, "Rosa and Medora," 24 stamps.
HUTCHINGS and ROMER, 9, Conduit-street.

NEW SONG, by the Composer of "Will you love me then as now?" "Will, I love thee." This is the most beautiful ballad that has appeared since its renowned predecessor. The melody is of the most thrilling kind. Post free for 24 stamps.
HUTCHINGS and ROMER, 9, Conduit-street.

OSBORNE'S "LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM." A most successful and happy arrangement of the beautiful melody as a Pianoforte Duet. Post free for 24 stamps.
HUTCHINGS and ROMER, 9, Conduit-street.

SCHLOESSER'S LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche Militaire. A spirited and fashionable composition. Post free for 24 stamps.
HUTCHINGS and ROMER, 9, Conduit-street.

THE PERFECT CURE'S COMIC SONG-BOOK, with Pianoforte Accompaniments, and Portrait of Mr. Sidney. Price 1s., post-free 14 stamps. 24 other Nigger Melodies, with Banjo Accompaniments, 1s., post-free 14 stamps. Also, by Sidney, Mr. Sam Cowell's Comic Songs, 1s., post-free 14 stamps. Mr. Sidney's Comic Songs, beautifully illustrated in Oil-colours. Under-mantel size, 10s. 6d. each; post-free 11s. 6d. Mr. Sidney's Banjo, with instructions, and the melody of each favourite piece. 7s. 6d., post-free 8s. Mr. Sidney's Comic Songs, 1s., post-free 14 stamps. Facsimile Portrait, 2s. 6d., post-free 3s. Mr. Sidney's Banjo, 7s. 6d., post-free 8s.
HUTCHINGS and Co., 9, Conduit-street, Portman-square, W.

PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS. OETZMANN and FLUTES, 27s. Regent-street, and Tenant-street, Hampstead-road. Illustrated Lists free by post for Eight Stamps.

PIANOS and HARMONIUMS. OETZMANN and PLUMB'S, 27s. Regent-street, are now selling off the Hire Stock at greatly-reduced prices—from £16 and upwards.

OETZMANN and PLUMB'S Grand and Second-grand PIANOFORTES, of the first class, for hire from 2s. per month. Also the very small Semi-Cottage Pianoforte for School Purposes.

PIANOFORTES for HIRE, 14s. per Month; if Octave, warranted. No hire charged if purchased. Lists free. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street. Chappell's Model Pianoforte is a really good pianoforte in solid mahogany case, 7 octaves, for 25 guineas. Chappell's Model Harmonium, OETZMANN and COMPANY, 27, Regent-street, and 77, Tenant-street.

HARMONIUMS of EVERY DESCRIPTION, from 5 guineas upwards.
CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, Secondhand, by Broadwood and Collard; Chipps Grands by Erard; other Pianos by Kirkman, Pether, Allison, &c. CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, W.

AEOLIAN HARPS will produce Without Any Attendance a most delightful Harmony, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, on the Window-sills, or in the Conservatories and Rooms, on the Windows being open. Of the Inventor, CHARLES WHEATSTONE, F.R.S., 20, Conduit-street, W.C.

BRASS BANDS.—DRUM-AND-FIFE BANDS.—Cornets, Saxhorns, Bugles, Drums, Clarionets, Flutes, Fifes, and every requisite for Brass musicians or amateurs. Lists free. Prize Medal Instruments. Illustrated Price-list free. BOOSEY and CO., 24, Holles-street, London.

MUSICAL-BOX DEPOTS, 56, Cheapside, and 21, Leicester-street, NICOLE'S celebrated Large MUSICAL BOXES, 8 Airs, £5 5s.; 12 Airs, £7 7s.; 16 Airs, £10 10s. Lists and Prices (with and post-free on application.

TO BE SOLD for £18 18s. (cost £35) a Gentleman's SILVER GOLD HUNTING WATCH, by Frodsham, with chronometer movements. Warranted perfect.—Apply to WALES and MCCULLOCH, 22, Ludgate-hill.

WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 11 and 13, Cornhill, London (opens to the Bank), have always on SALE a large Assortment of Watches of the latest improvements and surpassing performance, including every description of Gold and Silver Watch, Chronometer, Duplex, Lever, Horizontal, and Repeating.

Patent Lever Watch, jewelled, second dial and seconds ... £4 4 0
Patent Lever Watch, jewelled in 8 holes 5 5 0
Ditto, the finest quality, jewelled in 10 holes 6 6 0
Ditto, with Chronometer Detaching Cross, 12s. 6d. extra.
Gold Watches—FOR LADIES.
Patent Lever Watch, with gold dial, 3in. wide 11 11 0
Ditto, with richly-chased gold dial 12 12 0
Ditto, with Chronometer Detaching Cross 14 14 0
Gold Watches—FOR GENTLEMEN.
Patent Lever Watch, jewelled in 8 holes 10 10 0
Ditto, in stronger case, and capped 12 12 0
Ditto, jewelled in 10 holes, with Chronometer Balance ... 13 13 0
Gold Watches, with Chronometer Escapements.
List of Prices with remarks on watches, gratis and post-free.

VOLUNTEER and ARCHERY PRIZES.—SILVER WATCHES, jewelled in 4 holes, strong and accurate, with Volunteer Arms and Archery Devices, by Dent, Barraud, Benson, Lewis and Son, Chas. Frodsham, Parkinson, and Frodsham, Vulliamy, Jones, and others.

OPERA, RACE, FIELD, and general out-door OPERA GLASSES, each containing 4 lenses, have increased and extended a power of 12, and seeing nearly every object at a distance of 12 miles. Sold by all Opticians, and at 63, Fleet-street, London. They have been pronounced by the Queen's Astronomer and a celebrated practical optician to be the only glass which possesses the above qualifications. Price 2 guineas, in shagreen case, 30s. Sent free by post for 32s. Messrs. Dollond, 63, Fleet-street, London, E.C. Every glass is stamped with the name of the inventor, "Thomas Harris, Optician, 63, Fleet-street, London, E.C." Without this none are genuine. Also, Harris's Field Glasses, 3 guineas, 4 guineas, and 5 guineas, in shagreen case, 30s. extra

NEW BOOKS.

On October 1, price 2s. 6d., richly illuminated,

THE AMATEUR ILLUMINATORS' MAGAZINE.

DAY and SON, Gate-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

THE NEW LAW OF BANKRUPTCY.
Now ready, crown 8vo, price 1s., by post 1s. 1d.

THE BANKRUPTCY MANUAL, being a plain Summary of the Bankruptcy Law and Forms, Law relative to Bankruptcy, Composition, and Deeds of Arrangement, Forms of Proceedings, Scales of Costs, and the modes of obtaining Protection from Arrest and Imprisonment. By CHARLES EDWARD DOVE, Solicitor.
EDWARD LAW, Solicitor, 2, Cornhill, London.

Post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.,

MENTONE and the RIVIERA as a WINTER RESIDENCE. By HENRY BENNET, M.D. JOHN CHURCHILL, New Burlington-street.

Third Edition, considerably altered, post 8vo, cloth, 7s.,

THE CLIMATE OF PAU; with a Notice of the Principal Health Resorts of the Pyrenees.
By ALEXANDER TAYLOR, M.D.
JOHN CHURCHILL, New Burlington-street.

Second Edition, Revised, with 23 Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 14s.,

SURGICAL DISEASES OF THE EYE.
By HAYNES WALTON, Surgeon to the Central London Ophthalmic Infirmary, Soho-square.
JOHN CHURCHILL, New Burlington-street.

An Common Book, price 1s. 6d., post-free 18 stamps,

THE WILL OF GOD TO THE INVALID as Revealed in the Scriptures, God's Way of Healing, and Rejoicing in when Low.
HODDER and STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster-row; and all Booksellers.

Fourteenth Edition, price 1s. 6d., or in cheaper post-free—A pure mind in a pure body, the Author's Guide to Health and Long Life.
ONE HUNDRED CONSUMPTION, Nervousness, Low Spirits, Illustration and Refutation of the Morisons Monstrous, Quackery exposed, Address, &c.
H. BALLARD, 352, Regent-street, London; and of all Booksellers.

Now ready, price One Penny,

THE GUILLE-JOHN CASSELL'S NEW WEEKLY JOURNAL. Designed for the Promotion and Defence of Social Truth, and the Advancement of Social Science in the Homes of the People.
CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C. Casselle, Lyon, Courpentière-sur-Mer, Aberdeen, Melbourne, and Hamburg.

THREE HUNDRED BIBLE STORIES, with 300 Pictures. A Pictorial Reading-Book for the Young, handsomely bound, price 4s. 6d.; published at 7s. Sent post-free from CHARLES EDWARD BANKS, Bible Warehouse, Bishopsgate-street.

FIELD'S NEW GUINEA FAMILY BIBLE.
A large handsome volume, bound in best morocco, with 40 Maps, Illustrations, Concordance, Dictionary, Apocrypha, &c. Only to be had at JOHN FIELD'S Great Bible Warehouse, 65, Newgate-street. Established upwards of Forty Years.

50,000 BIBLES, Prayer-books, and Church Services, Communion Services Alms-dishes, Flagons, and Standard Authors in every variety of binding, at very reduced prices, at JOHN FIELD'S Great Bible Warehouse, 65, Newgate-street.

WEDDING CARDS and ENVELOPES Printed and Scented in Silver, with Arms or Crest, in the Highest Fashion. Steel Plate Engraved and 100 Copperplate Cards Printed for 4s. 6d.—At HENRY RODRIGUEZ'S, 47, Piccadilly.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS and PORTRAITS of the Royal Family, the General Staff of Europe, and Distinguished Personages of all nations. Steels Portraits, 1s. 6d. Illustrated Catalogues, 1s. each.—HENRY RODRIGUEZ, 47, Piccadilly.

NO CHARGE MADE FOR STAMPING in PAPER and ENVELOPES with ARMS, CREST, or INITIALS. Wedding and Dinner Cards Engraved and Printed. Fifty Cards Printed and Plate Engraved, 4s. 6d. Sermon-laid Note, full size, five quires for 1s.; Cream Note, five quires for 1s.; Black-bordered Note, five quires for 1s.; Envelopes, 6d. per hundred. Price-list free.—T. CULLETON, 25, Long-acre.

WEDDING and BIRTHDAY PRESENTS. Dressing-cases, Travelling Bags, Writing-desks, Work-boxes, Envelope-cases, Tea-trays, Ladies' Reticule and Carriage Bags, Writing-cases, Despatch-boxes, Blotting-books and Albums, Cabas, Tea-caddies, Cutlery, Razors, Scissors, Pocket-books, Purses, Pocket-knives, &c., a choice variety of Ornamental and Useful Articles suitable for presents, to be had of E. MORTIMER, 81, Fleet-street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS at PARKINS and GOTTO'S. A very handsome one, bound in rich morocco, with gilt edges, for 5s.; or polished, 7s. 6d.; or with clasp, 10s. 6d. Sent carriage paid, receipt of a post-office order. Catalogues free.—Parkins and Gotto, 24, Oxford-street.
Manufacturers of the largest set of cut-part stock. Trade supplied.

WEDDING STATIONERY.—Pattern free by post. At Home, Programmes, &c.
The Newest and Best Shapes and Fashionable Devices.
PARKINS and GOTTO, 24 and 25, Oxford-street.

EVERY COUNTRY RESIDENT should send for Parkins & Gotto's Catalogue, 24, Oxford-street, for their Sample Packet of STATIONERY, post-free. Carriage paid on orders over 20s. to any part of England.

NO CHARGE at PARKINS and GOTTO'S for Plain Stamping Wedding-cards and Envelopes. Specimens and Prices Current can be had on application. The public supplied with every kind of stationery at trade prices.
24 and 25, Oxford-street, London.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT.
Established upwards of 100 years.

LADIES' WEDDING OUTFITS in every variety of marriage.
Descriptive List, with prices, sent free by post.
CAPPER, SON, and CO., 65, Cheapside (corner of Bread-street).

Sent post-free, Descriptive Lists of
COMPLETE SETS OF BABY LINEN, which are sent home
Carefully packed in a portable box, at one cost.
UNDERCLOTHING FOR HOME, INDIA, and the COLONIES, for Ladies and Children of all ages.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT.
Established in 1778.

BABIES' BASSINETS,
Trimmed and Furnished
ready for use, and sent home free of carriage.
BASSINETTES,
Trimmed and Furnished in corresponding style.
CAPPER, SON, and CO., 65, Cheapside (corner of Bread-street), London, E.C.
Descriptive Lists, with Prices, sent free by post.

MOIRÉS ANTIQUES.
Magnificent quality.
Patterns free.
SEWELL and CO., Compton House, Soho.

HOUSEHOLD LINEN DEPARTMENT.—JOHN BARRY, 261, 262, and 263, Oxford-street, London, invites attention to his Stock of good cotton and linen goods, for exportation or home use. DOUBLE DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS, with Napkins and Slip-cloths to match, drapery and damask, by the yard. Also, Sheets, Pillow-cases, Counterpanes, Blankets, Quilts, Towels, cotton shirting and long cloth, and every article connected with the Linen Trade. Patterns and prices free. Goods packed for exportation, glass and linen cloths, festoon, &c., made to and marked with any initials or monogram required. Carriage paid upon amounts above £5. Families visited upon at home in London.

SILKS, Rich, Plain, Striped, and Checked 25s. 6d. per Dress of 12 yards, wide width, in every variety of fashion. Patterns sent free by post. Also patterns and prices of their rich stock of velvet, velveteens, and cords, at 2s. 6d. per yard. Bonnet-silk, Brocaded upwards of forty pieces, carriage paid upon amounts above £5.
JOHN BARRY, 261, 262, and 263, Oxford-street, London.

LADIES' WATERPROOF TWEED CLOAKS and RIDING JACKETS, Gentlemen's Waterproof Inverness and Riding Capes, Shooting Coats, and prizes sent post-free.
Capes, £1 and W. FAILLIE, 97, High-street, Shrewsbury.

THE NEW COVERTLY CAMBBIO PAILLING (Patent)
Is sold by all Drapers in the United Kingdom.

LADIES' UNDER-CLOTHING.—A large Stock of Chemises, Night-dresses, Pressers, Vests, Nursing Robes, &c., in the Ladies' Department, WHITELOCK and SON, Outfitters, 166, Strand. N.B. Opposite the Church near Somerset House. Books of prices free by post on application.

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ITALIAN CAMPAIGN QUADRILLE on French Airs, beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." Beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S ERIN GO BRAGH QUADRILLE. Just Published. Founded on the most favourite of Irish Melodies. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. "Morris' National Airs" Waltz. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S FLORIMELLE. New Waltz. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. With Grace Accompaniments. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S PRINCE OF WALES or HRH. ALBERT EDWARD. Just published, Beautifully Illustrated with a Portrait of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by Brandard. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S CHEAP WORKS FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS. Price in all Books, 1s. each.

PIANOFORTE.
Chappell's Popular Violin Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Violin Duets.
Chappell's Popular Violin Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Bazilian Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Concertina Duets.
Chappell's Popular Guitar Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Guitar Duets.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Duets.
Chappell's Popular Flageolet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Flageolet Duets.
Chappell's 24 Dance Lessons for the Violin, by D'Albert.
Chappell's Violin Duet Part to ditto.
Chappell's 24 Dance Lessons for the Flute.
Second Violin and Bass Part to ditto.
Chappell's 24 Flageolet Duets.
Chappell's 100 Flageolet Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Di Ballo in Maschera."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Il Trovatore."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castille."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Les Vêpres Siciliennes."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia Borgia."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline and Victorina."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Bohemian Girl."
Chappell's 24 Airs, with any Variations.
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments, Psalm Tunes, &c.

FLUTE.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Dances (Second Series).
Chappell's 100 Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Archer Witch."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Les Vêpres Siciliennes."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia Borgia."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline and Victorina."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Bohemian Girl."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Clarionet Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments, Psalm Tunes, &c.

CORNET-A-PISTON.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Archer Witch."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Rose of Castille."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Les Vêpres Siciliennes."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Robin Hood."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline and Victorina."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments.

Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.

CLARIONET.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lurline and Victorina."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Robin Hood."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments.

Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.

CONCERTINA.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Airs.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniments.

Chappell's 100 Psalm Tunes.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Guitar Accompaniment, in two books. Price 1s. each.

HARMONIUM.
Chappell's 50 Sacred Melodies.
Chappell's 50 Secular Melodies.
Can be had of all Music-sellers. CHAPPELL'S Cheap Works, as they are uniform with D'Albert's and other popular Copyright Works.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, complete for a Band of Eight, Twelve, Sixteen, or more Performers, in the following Keys:—No. 1 in E flat; 2 Treble Cornets in E flat, and 1st, 2nd Tenor Cornets in B flat; 3 Bass Cornets in E flat; 4 Bass Cornets in B flat; 5 Bass Trombones in B flat; 6 Bass Trombones in F; 7 Bass Trombones in B flat; 8 Ophicleides in B flat; 9 Drums in E flat; 10 Side Drum; 11 Cymbals in E flat; 12 Triangle. No. 13 Treble Clarionets in E flat; 14 Treble Clarionets in B flat; 15 Alto Horns in E flat; 16 Tenor Horns in B flat; 17 Bass Horns in B flat; 18 Drum; 19 Side Drum; 20 Cymbals in E flat; 21 Triangle. No. 22 Treble Flutes in E flat; 23 Treble Flutes in B flat; 24 Alto Flutes in E flat; 25 Bass Flutes in B flat; 26 Drum; 27 Side Drum; 28 Cymbals in E flat; 29 Triangle. Price 1s. each Book. Arranged by Mr. Distin, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Hall, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Godfrey, Bandmaster of the Royal Horse Guards, Blue.

N.B.—The Selections from Operas have a Conductor's Part in addition to the Parts for the Band. Also, Selections, commencing in the January of each year, from the Monthly Publication of the Musical Times, and Singing Circular, to any part of the United Kingdom for 24 stamps. Specimen Number, containing the Programme for the Jubilee of any of the British Colonies.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street (by Non-Subscribers), 7s. 6d. Price of Single Numbers, 6d. each. Post-free, 7 stamps.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest of all Instruction Books. Contains elementary instruction, exercises, practice, and a great variety of the most popular airs, arranged progressively. Price 4s., or in paper cover, price 2s., post-free.
N.B. A List of Brinley Richard's Popular Pieces will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF PRICE.—All Music, and the best Editions, at half the published prices, sent post-free for postage. Country Orders promptly attended to.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street, W.

Enamel Nightly.
COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES, played with immense success at Cremorne. Price 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Full Band, 5s.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S LEOTARD VALSES, price 4s., also, THE LEOTARD POLKA, by COOTE, 3s.; both illustrated with portraits of Leotard in character.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

The Latest Excitement.
COOTE'S DRURY LANE GALOP on the celebrated American Waltz Record. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Full Band, 5s.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S "I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY" VALSE, introducing the favourite Song as sung nightly at Her Majesty's Theatre. Price 4s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S CORNFLOWER VALSE, price 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s. Considered to be the gem of the season.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

OH, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME! Song. Price 2s. 6d. "Once where the moonbeam flowed." Ballad, by FRED. BUCKLEY. Price 2s. 6d. Encored nightly.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET. A most pleasing Song. The melody is simply beautiful. By FRED. BUCKLEY. Price 2s. 6d. Encored nightly.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

CRAMER and CO.'S MUSIC LIBRARY. Single Subscription, 2s. All New Music of interest or by eminent Composers is added to the collection.
201, Regent-street.

NEW MUSIC.

THE CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Thirty-two Pieces, composed for the Pianoforte by Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, Hummel, Clementi, Dussek, and Steibelt, all fingered and suitable for the use of Students.
ROBERT COCKS, New Burlington-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM, Second Edition, much enlarged, published this day, price One Shilling, containing Eighteen Pieces, by Kücken, arranged for the Pianoforte, in addition to a Set of Quadrilles, Valse, Polka, Galop, and Mazurka, all fingered and suitable for young performers.
ROBERT and BOOSEY, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL FOR BRASS BANDS, printed on parade-paper. Now ready, 19 Sets, each containing two Numbers, arranged for 16 performers, price 2s. 6d. each Set, and sequentially, price 2d. each; the Trombone Part, 1d. extra. Also the smallest and handiest Band-Journal. Boosey "Quick-step Journal" comprises the most popular tunes, arranged for Brass Bands, by Distin, Godfrey, Hall, Harrison, Hughes, and post-free for 2s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S 20 ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTCH AIRS, arranged and fingered for VIOLIN and PIANO, 2s. by W. WATSON, in one book (with separate Violin part), price 2s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S 12 OPERATIC AIRS arranged as DUETS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, in one book (with separate Violin part), price 2s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

RODE, BAILLOT, AND KREUTZER'S 24 METHOD FOR THE VIOLIN—BOOKS 1 and 2, NOW NOW Edition (music size) published this day, price 1s. each. Complete, 2s. 6d.; Books 3s. 6d. each. Also, the 12 Studies, revised by W. WATSON.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS by CLARIBEL.—Extract from "The Era" of Sept. 5:—"Claribel has given to the public a number of very pleasant airs all marked by honest merit in the choice of the poetry. The gift of melody is indeed not small with this lady composer."
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, No. 7, for September, price 1s., contains a Portrait of the celebrated Czarka's Mazurka Melodies, by Ernst; Fantasia on Airs from Rossini's "Semiramide," by Prospere Schattenhofer, Quintet from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," arranged for Violin and Pianoforte, and "Il Chiosco to be a Dainty" arranged as a Duet with Variations. The first of a series of Duets by Ernst.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S LIST of NEW SONGS.

Miss M. LINDSAY'S Two Ists, two Ists, Sacred Song, 2s. 6d.
"Miss Lindsay's music is full of feeling."—Vide "Era."
BARNEY BRALLAGHAN Wait on me till you're ready! for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.
"Mr. Brinley Richards' Fantasia on this popular Irish Air, for Pianoforte, is a most effective arrangement."—Vide "Era."
J. LINDSAY Wears the best coats, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
"Mr. Lindsay's song is full of humour."—Vide "Era."
F. WESTE Angels ever bright and fair, for Piano, 2s.
"Mr. F. Weste's Fantasia on this charming air is very effective."—Vide "Era."
W. H. WILLIAMS'S Bowers are so brilliant, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
ADAM WRIGHT'S Bowers are so brilliant, Sacred Song, 2s. 6d.
"Mr. Adam Wright's song is full of melody."—Vide "Era."
Ditto, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
Miss M. LINDSAY'S Peace, be still! Sacred Song, 2s. 6d.
H. F. WHITE'S Dark March in Saul, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
"Mr. White's March is full of spirit."—Vide "Era."
The Old Church Clock, for Pianoforte, by C. Lindsay, 2s.
CARL FAUSTS Royal Bridal Quadrille, for Piano, 2s.
C. H. RIDLEY'S Bridal Waltz, Bridal Quadrille, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
ADAM WRIGHT'S Bowers are the Ists Quadrille, for Piano, 2s. 6d.
"Mr. Adam Wright's Quadrille is full of spirit."—Vide "Era."
London Music Publishers' Association, 9, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W.; and 192, Regent-street, W.; and 192, Regent-street, W.; and all Music-sellers.

MDME. OURY'S BARBIERE DI SEVIGLIA, Grand Fantasia, played by Mdme. Oury at her last concert, with extraordinary success; decidedly the best and most popular Fantasia on the favourite Opera. Price 4s. Just published.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, 18, Hanover-square.

SIMS REEVES' Great Song, FRESH AS A ROSE (Herbert), and Mdme. Sainton-Dolby's popular Song, "The days that are no more" (Himmel), sung by Mdme. Sainton-Dolby, at the Ballad Concerts, both published by Messrs. DAVISON and Co., 244, Regent-street.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS, 25 guineas and upwards, manufactured in England, fitted with the Percussive Tone, and in every possible variety, by the very best workmen that can be procured. Also, Evans's Portable Harmoniums, specially required from persons of delicate constitution, and Harmoniums for Schools, on application to the manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Holles-street.

NEW FIVE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, the best of all makers. In oak case, with a Prayer-book desk, 5 stops, viz., Diapason, Dulciana, Principal, Flute, and Vox Humana. Price Five Guineas.—At CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with the Percussive Tone, the handsomest, and, in fact, the only handsome, instrument at the price; and superior to all other instruments of the same price in tone and quality. Price Six Guineas.—At CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of KEYBOARDS—Compass, CC to F in alt, 56 double keys; Swell, 4 stops, and 10 varieties of Tone; Great, 4 stops, and 10 varieties of Tone; Pedals, CCC to F, 30 notes, and 2 stops of Thirteen, in Mahogany Case, with Carved Front, Handsome Pillars, and Elaborately Panelled Sides and Side Doors; Compass, three Octaves and a half, CC to A in alt, 44 notes; Price 50 guineas. This instrument has been specially designed by Messrs. ALEXANDRE and CHAPPELL, with the view of producing a Harmonium which shall be complete in itself, and which shall be equal to a small Church Organ, and which shall be suitable for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room.
Illustrated Lists of Harmoniums, with Prices, sent free by post.
CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street.

A GENUINE Full-compass ENGLISH HARMONIUM, 25 guinea. Lowest possible price. Testimonials and other particulars, from £3 to 5 guineas. Lists post-free, or to be seen at the Manufactory, 2, Argyll-street, Only 1-in-road, W.C.

EBODSHAM and BAKER, Chronometer Makers by the Admiralty, Clockmakers to the Queen, Perfect Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks for Home and Foreign consumption, at moderate prices. Astronomical and other Clocks, Compensation Balances, Repeating Watches, Chronometers, &c.
2, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, S.W.

DENT'S CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, and CLOCKS.—E. DENT, 33, Cockspur-street, and 34, Royal Exchange, Clockmaker by special appointment to the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.
Illustrated Pamphlet on Choice of Watches, free.

DENT, Chronometer Watch, and Clock Maker by appointment to the Queen and Royal Family, Gold Chronometer, Duplex, Lever, and Repeating Watches, Astronomical, Turret, and Railway Clocks, Church Clocks, Church Plate, &c. Illustrated Price-list free.—DENT, 61, Strand, and 34, Royal Exchange.

TRAVELLING BAGS.—A choice of 300, from 10s. to 20 guineas, fitted in the most complete manner with every requisite for the toilet, and for use on the journey. Dressing-cases from 1 guinea to 50 guineas. Writing-cases, Envelope-cases, Despatch-boxes, Work-boxes, Tea-trays, Tea-caddies, Cutlery of every description, Razors, Scissors, Pocket-books, Purses, Pocket-knives, &c.—PARKINSON and GOTTO, Writing and Dressing-case Makers, 24 and 25, Oxford-street.

28 PRIZE WRITING-CASE, fitted with ivory Paper, Envelopes, Blotting-book, Pen-case, &c., and in neat pocket-size, 10s. 6d. Sent free by post on receipt of 12 stamps or by PARKINS and GOTTO, 24 and 25, Oxford-street, London.

MR. J. D. HARDING'S Patent LEAD PENCILS (with fine, fine leads), and strange qualities. Sketches can with them be obtained which are not within the compass of the ordinary lead pencil. Sole manufacturers, WINSOR and NEWTON, 38, Rathbone-place, London.

NATAL.—The LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK, for AGENCY to the COMMERCIAL and AGRICULTURAL TRADE BANK of NATAL at DURBAN, HARRY GUY BOWKER that they are prepared to receive Money on account of that Bank, for which they will issue Letters of Credit free of charge.
6, Princes-street, E.C. P. HEWETT, Manager.

SOUTHSEA is the most attractive Watering Place in England: two hours from London, and by the New Direct Railway from Portsmouth, Havant, and Hayling. The best Railway to the South Coast. Grand Esplanade, with splendid view of the Isle of Wight, Spithead, and the Solent: Pavilion, Band and Military Promenade Every Afternoon. Good Hotels, Assembly Rooms, Libraries, Furnished Lodgings and Villas.

LONDON HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL, Great Ormond-street, W.C.
TWO HOUSE-SURGEONSHIPS ADDITIONAL VACANCIES are still urgently REQUIRED for the only Homœopathic Hospital in the metropolis.
Gentlemen—Dr. HARE, Sackville-street, Piccadilly.
By order, RALPH RUSSELL, Hon. Sec.

NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS, Printers, and Publishers.—Secured that all INFRINGEMENTS of my PATENTED RAILWAY PRINTING-MACHINES, and other articles connected therewith, will be promptly and effectually restrained by the COURT OF CHANCERY.—Mr. Edward Lloyd, 12, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street.

W. F. THOMAS and CO.'S PATENT the most SEWING-MACHINES, as shown by fourteen years' extensive sales, the numerous additions and improvements in quality of execution, accuracy of finish, beauty and strength of work, they have attained, and the universal satisfaction they have given to their customers, there is no need to criticise, and they would request the public to compare their machines with any of the work can be had at 56, Regent-street, City; and 101, Cheapside, Manchester.

FIRE-ANNIHILATOR, or Vapour Fire-engine. In practical value proved beyond question by upwards of 1,000 cases in which it has been used. Prospectus free by post. Price £2 and upwards. Office of the Fire-Annihilator Company, 20, Leadenhall-street, London.

MAPPIN BROTHERS' TABLE KNIVES, KING WILLIAM-STREET, LONDON-BRIDGE.
MANUFACTORY, QUEEN'S CUTLERY WORKS, SHEFFIELD.
Messrs. MAPPINS' TABLE KNIVES still maintain their unrivalled superiority. Their Ivory Handles are the best that skill, machinery, and the very best quality, will secure every durability. Their Electro-plated Forks and Spoons are Fiddle Pattern.	Thread.	King's.

Table Knives	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Per dozen	1 4 0	2 0 0	4 10 0
Carvers, pair	0 4 6	0 6 6	0 9 0
Cheese-slice	0 2 6	0 3 6	0 5 0
Dessert-knife, Not Carvers	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 16 0
Dessert-spoons	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 16 0
Dessert-forks	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 16 0
Cruet-frame	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 16 0
Complete Service	£1 14 6	£2 16 6	£3 19 0

A Costly Assortment of Plated Dessert-knives, with silver blades, by the gross or separately, at Mappin Brothers, London-bridge, or the Manufactory, Queen's Cutlery Works, Sheffield.

GARDNER'S £2 2s. DINNER SERVICES.—
A large Assortment of Patterns of the very choicest Description, Ornamental and Useful, for Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, Desert, Tea, and Toilet Services, in opal variety, at the lowest possible prices. Illustrated Catalogues sent free by post.
GARDNER, Glass, Chandelier, and Lustre Manufacturer, Queen's Bank. Established 100 years.
49, OXFORD-STREET, W.

OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS, Wall Lights and Mantelpiece Lustres for Gas and Candles. Glass Dessert Services for 12 persons, from £3.
Glass Table-ware for Home and Export.
Ornamental Glass, Rich and Plain, suitable for presents.
Glass Globes, Shades, Reflectors, Lamps, Table Glass, &c.
OSLER, 45, Oxford-street, W.
Birmingham—Manufactory and Show-rooms, Broad-street.

J. MAPLE and CO.'S NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing the prices of every article required in Furnishing a House, sent free by post on application. This is the largest and most exceptional Furnishing establishment in the world. MAPLE and CO., 145, Tottenham-court-road.

BEDSTEADS in Wood, Iron, and Brass, fitted with Furniture and Bedding complete. The largest assortment in London.
J. MAPLE and CO., 145, 146, Tottenham-court-road.

FURNITURE
Carefully packed for any part of the Kingdom.
J. MAPLE and CO.,
145, 146, Tottenham-court-road.
Illustrated and priced Catalogue free by post and post-free.

FURNISHING WAREHOUSES, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, Wentworth-street-rise, Leeds.
The Proprietors of the above Warehouses always have in stock a choice stock of every requisite for furnishing a House.
Bedsteads in Iron and Brass, with Bedding or Sitting Rooms, Drawing-rooms, Dining-rooms, Bed-rooms, Kitchens, &c., from £12 18s. Drawing-rooms, 10 guineas. Bedsteads, 30s. Bedding, 30s. Carpets, 1s. 6d. per yard. Linoleum, 2s. per yard. Oilcloth, 1s. 6d. per yard. Kitchen Furniture, Crockery, Glass, Cutlery, Fenders, Fire-irons, Kitchen Requisites, Ironmongery, Turnery, Rugs, Mats, and Matting, Blankets, Sheetings, and every other description of domestic property.

CAUTION.—SMEE'S SPRING MATTRESS, the most elastic, durable, and economical. Prevents heat, readily taught, portable, and inexpensive. Purchasers are respectfully cautioned against spurious imitations, and should see that each Mattress bears the name of SMEE'S SPRING MATTRESS. Sold by all the principal upholsterers throughout the kingdom. Sole Manufactory, 3, Bunhill-row, City. Smee's Patent elastic Spring Mattress is the only one that will not get out of shape, and are able to accommodate the following measurements:

	Length.	Width.
Size No. 1	6 feet 6 inches.	3 feet.
2	6 feet 6 inches.	3 feet 6 inches.
3	6 feet 6 inches.	4 feet.
4	6 feet 6 inches.	4 feet 6 inches.

Other sizes in proportion. To be obtained of all respectable Upholsterers throughout the kingdom.
Wholesale Warehouse, 3, Bunhill-row, City. Smee's Spring Mattress bears upon the side the name "Tucker's Patent."

ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE, in Bottle, Hogsheads, Barrels, and Half-barrels, may be had of any Bottler, and may be put in the finest condition of Wines. MARRINGTON PARKER and CO., 2, Crutched-friars, E.C.

THE CITY OF LONDON TEA COMPANY, 26, Bucklersbury-chambers, City, supply the public with their Teas at Wholesale Prices. Strong Congou, 2s. 8d.; Rich Congou, 3s.; Choice Congou, 3s. 4d.; Finest Congou, 3s. 8d.; Strong Gunpowder, 3s. 4d.; Rich Gunpowder, 3s. 8d.; Finest Gunpowder, 4s. Coffee, 1s. 4d., 1s. 8d., 2s., 2s. 4d., 2s. 8d. Delivery to the country free by parcels post, from 2s. 6d., and £5 from 3s.
Genuine delivered carriage-free to any part of England.

A MOST DESIRABLE BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.

EPPS'S COCOA
(commonly called Epps's Homœopathic Cocoa).

The judicious and careful consideration, and invigorating power of this preparation have procured for it general adoption as a most valuable article of diet for breakfast and supper. Each packet or tin is labelled—James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 170, Piccadilly, and 112, Strand, and 1, 2, and 3, Camden-villas, Camden-road, London.

PATENT COIN FLOUR,
The "Lancet" states
"This is superior to anything of the kind known."
Many Grocers, Chemists, &c., who supply the best quality, in 2lb. packets, with their names printed thereon. Wholesale, 1, Bishopsgate-street Without, London, E.C. Opposite the Bethlem Hospital.

ILOUB Warranted, free to Families, in and London, per bushel.—WHITE, Hill Roundels, Bishopsgate-street Without, London, E.C. Opposite the Bethlem Hospital.

EXTRAORDINARY MERIT must belong to that which EVERY ONE,
And such is the case with the
SILVERING PATENT STARCH.

STOURPORT MALT VINEGAR for PICKLING. The best known. Pale "Lancet," Oct. 9; and Brown, 2s. 6d. per Gal.—WHITBOURN and CHADWICK, 1, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C. Opposite the Bethlem Hospital. Samples and the Trade supplied on best terms.

THE ITALIAN INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

THE first national Italian Exposition of Industry, Agriculture, and the Fine Art, is definitively to be opened on the 15th inst.

Notwithstanding that a visit to the building in course of preparation for it would seem to show only too plainly—at the date of this present writing, Sept. 4—that it is impossible to be ready by that day, the assurances that the opening will infallibly then take place are of the most positive description. "I do not say that it is possible; I only say that the thing is so," was the often-quoted reply of one who did not care to enter into argument in support of his assertion. And the answer of Signor Correa, the Secretary-General to the Royal Commission for the Exposition, and the chief manager of all the preparations and details connected with it, to all who still urge the impossibility of being punctual to the time appointed, is of the same nature. He does not say it is possible; he only says that it assuredly will be. And, in truth, if having already done "Impossible," as the French say, in bringing the work to its present state of forwardness be any justification for scouting the vulgar impediments of matter and time, Signor Correa is justified in his confidence.

The first thing to be done, as soon as the Parliament at Turin had, in June, 1860, decided that the scheme of the previously-proposed Tuscan Exposition should be enlarged into that of a national exposition for all Italy, was to select a locality adapted for the purpose. And this was no easy matter. "It was easy," as a writer in the official journal of the Exposition remarks, "for an enormously wealthy country like England, in which the spirit of speculation gets together readily any sum of money required to set to work and raise an immense building such as the Crystal Palace; but the Government of Italy, possessing no such resources, and in the very short time prescribed, could not most assuredly have built an edifice such as would be required for the purpose." Nor among all the singularly remarkable wealth of noble public buildings possessed by Florence could any one be found that would have answered the object. There are few cities in Europe—perhaps it might be said the others—that are so rich as Florence in palaces; but that there is no one—which could offer so many vast and magnificent edifices entirely at once available for any such public purpose. And perhaps all that was needed might have been found ready to hand had it not been at the same time that the whole of the Exposition should be united in one locality. But this was very essential for many obvious reasons, and, even as it is, the additions which have been made to the building selected are so extensive as to go far towards accomplishing the assertion that it was beyond the power of Italy to raise an entirely new building for the purpose. But all the vice-regal and municipal palaces to which allusion has been made are situate in the centre of the city, in positions which made it impossible to supplement them by temporary enlargement. Under these circumstances advantage was taken of the fortunate chance that the Leghorn to Florence Railroad Company, having become amalgamated with that from Florence to Pistoia, and having thus acquired a far more desirable situation for their terminus within the gates of the city, were about to abandon their original station situated outside the Porta a Prato, and just at the entrances of the Cascine, the beautiful meadows, woods, walks, rides, and drives of which are the favourite resort of the Florentines. The building in question was a handsome and very extensive one; its position was exactly what was most desirable in point of situation, and there was abundant space around it for whatever additions might be found necessary.

It was decided, therefore, to turn the old railway station into a palace for the Exposition, and, in truth, the metamorphosis has answered, as far as can be judged from the state in which the building now is, far better than some persons might have supposed possible. The original main building of the station is the only permanent part of the entire edifice; but the supplementary buildings around it are so extensive that this main building has become little more than the meteors or kernel, as it were, of the whole. No very great amount of alteration was needed to adapt this edifice to its new purpose. A gable wall has been erected at each end, with a handsome portico supported by stone columns in front of each of them. Inside, as may be readily conceived from the nature of the original destination of the structure, the building is divided into two vast galleries, parallel to each other, and communicating throughout their entire length with each other by lofty open arches. The whole is brilliantly lighted from above. Fortunately, the old railway station, like most buildings in this country, was erected with very ample height, and this has been taken advantage of by the construction of a large but light and very elegant gallery, supported wholly on ornamented brackets projecting from the wall throughout the entire length of each side of both the naves, so to speak, of the building. By this means the exhibiting capacities of the edifice are nearly doubled.

This main building is 145 metres in length by 50 in width. At the present time the flooring is not completed, the gallery is not quite finished, and the decorative work is hardly begun; or rather, to be accurate, such was the case two days ago—on the 2nd of September. But crowds of bricklayers, carpenters, whitewashers, glaziers, painters, and decorators were at work with a heterogeneous activity that reminded one of the picture of the building of Carthage.

Immediately outside the city gate, and extending along the outside of the city wall as far as the commencement of the Cascine, is a vast stable, constructed of wood, shelves, against the wall, for the reception of the horned cattle; for the Italian Exposition, unlike its elder brothers of London and Paris, is to comprise a cattle show. This range of stabling is 250 metres in length, and is appropriated to horned cattle only. An Essex breeder would doubtless find this department, at least, lamentably far from being what he would consider up to the mark. But it must be remembered that his judgment and that of the Italian agriculturist would be based in this matter on very different considerations. The Anglisman would confine his inquiries to views of beef; whereas the Italian would be thinking of beef only as a secondary object, principally for the capacity of the animals for labour.

This part of the Exposition—the cattle show—has been wisely limited to the eight first days of the time. The expense and difficulty of keeping together so large a mass of cattle in September is by no means a various respects greater than those would imagine who do not take the nature of the climate into consideration.

On the left-hand side of the main building, as it is faced in coming out of the city gate, galleries of wood and glass has been erected, 250 metres in length, detached in part for horses, but chiefly for machinery, the exhibition of which—in many important cases in action—will be one of the most useful and interesting features of the whole show.

At the further end of the main building, and jutting out in a projection of considerable extent beyond its sides, as we have already mentioned, is a large octagonal space, surrounded by six chapels, in a large octagonal space, surrounded by six chapels, in a large octagonal space, surrounded by six chapels, in of classification which may be adopted to the end in view are various. It will not be without interest or utility, therefore, to state as concisely as possible the classification which has been adopted by the Italians on this occasion.

The whole exposition is divided into two great sections—

I. Agricultural and Industrial products.

II. Works of the Fine Arts.

The first section comprises twenty-one classes.

1. Horticulture and viticulture, flowers, fruits, living plants.

2. Useful animals.

3. Agricultural and forest products, fisheries, pastoral produce.

4. Agricultural machines, implements, and materials, as for irrigation, draining, &c.

5. Alimentation and hygiene, food, and methods and appliances for the preparation of it. Substances, instruments, and preparations for the preservation of it. Veterinary use. Anatomical and taxidermal preparations.

6. Mineralogy and metallurgy. Mining. Combustibles. Arms.

7. Jewellery, and works in gold and silver, and their imitations. Fine work in iron, copper, and other metals.

8. Machinery, and instruments of general application. Carriages.

Machinery connected with railroads and ships.

9. Instruments of precision: Clockwork; weights and measures; philosophical instruments, maps, models, magnetic and electric instruments; telegraphs.

10. Chemical products. Production of light and heat; photography; galvanoplastic processes, &c.

11. Glass, porcelain, earthenware, terra-cotta.

12. Building materials, ornamental compositions, models, plans.

13. The silk manufacture: its products, machines, appliances, dyes.

14. The wool manufacture: machines appertaining, materials.

15. The cotton manufacture: machines, materials, methods.

16. The linen, hemp, and straw manufactures, and other textile fabrics.

17. Furs and leather in its various applications. Hairs, bristles, caoul cloths.

18. Clothing, laces, millinery, false hair, &c.

19. Furniture and upholstery.

20. Printing, and printing machines; lithography.

21. An economic gallery. Articles specially destined for the poorer classes, distinguished for cheapness and convenience.

The second great division consists, of course, the three classes of—

1. Architecture; 2. Painting, engraving, and drawing; and 3. Sculpture.

It will be observed that practical convenience rather than scientific accuracy has been heeded in the preparation of this list, perhaps wisely, considering the objects in view.

With regard to the materials of the articles exhibited in other ships, the rule adopted is that they must be the production of either Italians or foreigners in Italy, or of Italians out of Italy, within the period of the last three years, or the last twenty years. But the works of deceased artists will not be admitted as candidates for prizes.

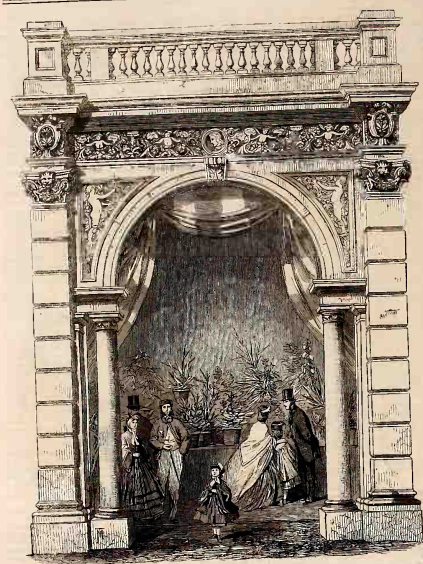
ROLLED ARMOUR-PLATES FOR VESSELS OF WAR.

The revolution in gunnery which the last few years have witnessed, and the application of steam to vessels of war, have created many new questions that the great maritime States are now upon anxious study. One of the most important questions of the day is whether vessels can be built capable of resisting shot, of carrying a heavy armament, can be built capable of resisting shot, of carrying a heavy armament, can be built capable of resisting shot, of carrying a heavy armament,

LITERATURE.

THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE COURT OF FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XV. By Dr. CHALLICE. Hurst and Blackett.

The title of this work is somewhat comprehensive, and it is to be doubted whether its promise is adequately fulfilled. A great deal that is related is not secret history at all, and anything to which that designation applies is mainly to be found in the apocryphal, which contains some of the rare and unpublished documents—but which the title-name of "Dr." Challice has in the principal object, an apology book is stated to be edited. It is, in its principal object, an apology for and a eulogy upon a very remarkable woman, who occupied a remarkable position, and not the less so from its equivocal character. In his preface the author justly remarks that the memoirs of women in his preface the author justly remarks that the memoirs of women have existed, and do exist, between France and England; and he rather more than hints that a good deal of the prejudice and injustice of the latter has been due to the influence of the conventionality and self-complacency of the former. He found, in them to handle such papers, discrepancies of every sort, he found in them the disregardence of human sympathies, even in the heart of kings, princes, and courtiers, a despotic idea do something to the prejudice of the truth. Louis XV. in England, as a country frequently at war with France, has made Louis England, as a country frequently at war with France, has made Louis in succeeding generations unconsciously, and often designedly, subject as the bridge of her neighbour and her foe. For many reasons, which he states, he asserts that calumny has usurped the place of history in English writers have adopted, and do still adopt, such calumny, and so have helped, and do help, to keep alive a feeling of irritation amongst traditional foes. Such injustice, he declares, is unworthy of a time like that of progress and of England, which proclaims universal freedom of thought, and of the publication of that thought, toleration and free inquiry. But the prejudices of the country and conquest are not all there. The internal evidence of the country and century attacked, and from intrinsic study of characters, customs, and events. As far as we can make out, it is to the latter that Dr. Challice will have at least one sympathetic reader from a particular point of view. Before proceeding further with the consideration of this work it is necessary to say that it is founded on a fact which all readers of history, and French history especially, are thoroughly aware of. It is to be blinked that in France (we say nothing about England or any other country as present) the mistress of the King was at times as much an institution as the Queen. The "Secret History," if not always holding alone about the person of, the wife of the Sovereign, these women have become prominent characters. Thus, in the 14th century, Agnes Sorel, Diana of Poictiers, Gabrielle d'Estrées, Louise de Lavallière, Montespan, De Maintenon, and Pompadour, Du Barry, and Marie Antoinette; though it is to be remembered that the latter became a mistress only after the birth of this latter to have witnessed the passing away of that sad eminence which had culminated in the person of Du Barry. It is to be hinted, in France (we say nothing about England or any other country as present) the mistress of the King was at times as much an institution as the Queen. We say nothing of



ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, SOUTH KENSINGTON: ONE OF THE ARCHES OF THE NORTHERN ARCADE, FINISHED TO SHOW THE PROPOSED STYLE OF DECORATION.—SEE PAGE 293.

THE TASMANIAN DEVIL.

THE Zoological Society of London has been enabled from time to time, through the activity of its correspondents in the Australian colonies, to exhibit alive many rare animals belonging to the peculiar zoology of the antipodes, which are almost unknown, even as stuffed specimens in museums, in other countries of Europe. Amongst these may be particularly noticed the thylacine (Thylacinus cynocephalus) of Tasmania, hitherto the largest carnivorous marsupial now known to exist; the great red kangaroo (Sogdianker rufus), the most beautifully-coloured animal of the whole series of marsupials; and the spiny anteater (Echidna hystrix) of South Australia. Individuals of both the two former of these scarce Australian forms are living at the present time in the society's gardens.

The native dasyure, of which a fine example has been recently added to the society's collection through the liberality of F. J. C. Wilfred, Esq., although not so rare as the two last-mentioned animals, having been more than once previously exhibited in the gardens, is yet of considerable interest, and is probably the only individual of this species living in Europe. It belongs to the group of carnivorous marsupials or pouched animals, and is remarkable for its savage and untamable disposition, whence it has acquired from the settlers in Tasmania the name of the "devil," or "native Devil." Its somewhat ugly shape, and black, unattractive appearance, may, perhaps, have contributed to cause this superstition to be bestowed upon it.

"These animals," says Mr. Harris, in his "Notes on the Mammals of Tasmania," published in the Linnean Society's Transactions, "were very common on our first settling at Hobart Town, and were particular destructive to poultry. They, however, furnished the convicts with a fresh meat, and the flesh was said to be not unlike veal. As the settlement increased, and the ground became cleared, they were driven from their haunts to the bush to the more to the deeper recesses of the forests yet unexplored. They are, however, easily procured by setting a trap in the most unfrequented parts of the woods, baited with raw flesh, all kinds of which they eat indiscriminately and voraciously; they also, it is probable, prey on dead fish and blubber, as fish-tracks are frequently found on the sands of the seashore. In a state of confinement they appear to be untamably savage, biting severely, and uttering at the same time a low, yelling growl. A male and a female, which I kept for a couple of months chained together in an empty cask, were continually fighting; their quarrels began as soon as it was dark (as they slept all day), and continued throughout the night almost without intermission, accompanied by a kind of hollow barking, not unlike that of a dog, and sometimes a sudden kind of snorting, as if the breath was retained a considerable time and then suddenly expelled. They frequently sat on their hind parts and used their fore paws to convey food to their mouths. The muscles of the jaws were very strong, as they cracked the largest bones asunder with ease.

chosen, and one advances, takes deliberate aim at the forehead, and, if wound it, those who have hold of the ropes have a rough time of it being dragged about the field until the animal is secured, when another marksman steps forward, and generally finishes the work.

UNION TROOPS ATTACKING CONFEDERATE PRISONERS AT WASHINGTON.

There was a general impression among the disorganised Federalist soldiers after the battle of Bull Run that their wounded had been inhumanly treated by the Confederates. Many cases of cruelty were narrated, with much circumstantiality, in the Unionist journals. Some of them, it is to be feared, were but too true. Among the first to feel the consequences of the anger aroused by the recital of these deeds of cold-blooded cruelty were some wretched prisoners paraded through

THE URSINE DASYURE, OR TASMANIAN DEVIL (DASYURUS URSINUS).

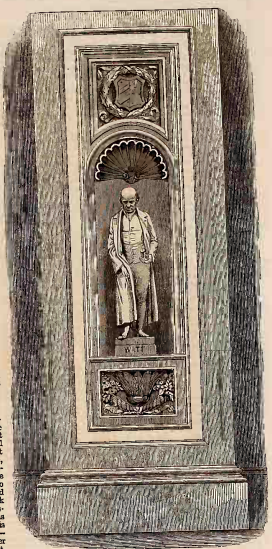
ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR IN AMERICA

SECESSION RANGERS (FEDERALISTS) RECONNOITRING.

SCARCELY anything more picturesque can be conceived than a troop of these rangers (as depicted on our first page) galloping wildly through the woody ravines of Virginia, between Alexandria and Fairfax, their carbines held ready for action at a moment's notice. To see them rattling along, draped in their loose ponchos, their stern, bearded faces shadowed by the overlapping brims of their sombreros, one might almost fancy them a troop of Cromwellian cavalry in grim pursuit of Cavaliers.

KILLING BULLOCKS IN CAMP, VIRGINIA.

The regiments encamped at a distance from the Commissariat Storehouse in the Federal camp get their fresh meat distributed to them alive, a bullock being unceremoniously tarried into the canvas streets for them to slaughter, cut up, and prepare as they may think fit. The fashion of dispatching the beast (as shown at page 271) is usually as follows:—Lassos are thrown over its horns and made fast, when three or four men on each side hang on with all their strength and steady the animal's head. Some of the best shots in the regiment are then marked, with much circumstantiality, in the Unionist journals. Some



ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, SOUTH KENSINGTON: STATUE OF JAMES WATT IN THE EASTERN CENTRAL ARCADE.—SEE PAGE 293.

Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, two days after the engagement. It was with the greatest difficulty their guard defended them from the attacks of the demoralised Union men. This incident is depicted on the preceding page.

ARREST OF MR. FAULKNER AT WASHINGTON.

On the return of Mr. Faulkner from his mission at Paris he went, as is the custom in such cases, to Washington, in order to report his arrival to the Executive. While awaiting the settlement of certain formalities he took apartments at Brown's Hotel, and it was here he was arrested. It appears that Mr. Faulkner, a Southern man, is imbued with Southern tendencies; and it is charged against him that during his period of office in France he encouraged the Secessionist agents in every possible way, and even went so far as to purchase arms from French manufacturers for the use of the Confederate States—endeavouring also to procure the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by the French Government. Mr. Faulkner is now lodged in close confinement at the Provost Marshal's office; and it is reported that among the documents found with his effects papers of a treasonable character have been discovered.

MACHINERY FOR BREAKING UP ROADS AND CRUSHING OR TILLING LAND.

Mr. JAMES BRADY, junior, of Southwark, has patented an invention for "Improved Machinery for Lifting or Breaking-up Roads or Ways, Crushing Chalk, and Scarifying or Tilling Land." A satisfactory trial of the machine for the purpose of breaking up macadamised roads which require relaying took place a short time ago in Kensington-road. The work was accomplished at the rate of 600 superficial yards an hour, notwithstanding the hard surface of Guernsey granite of which the roadway was composed, entirely to the satisfaction of the surveyor of roads for that district. Among the gentlemen present who took an interest in the invention were several road surveyors and contractors, and gentlemen connected with the different boards of works in the metropolitan parishes. This is the first machine that has been used for the purpose of superseding the pickaxe in preparing the worn-out surfaces of roads to receive new material, and it seems thus far to have borne out the expectations of the inventor and to have met the approval of the gentlemen who witnessed its trial.

The nature of Mr. Brahy's invention and the manner in which it is to be performed are thus set forth in the specification of his patent:—"My invention of improved machinery for lifting or breaking up roads or ways, crushing slods, and scarifying or tilling land, relates to a novel arrange-

THE WAR IN AMERICA: UNION TROOPS ATTACKING CONFEDERATE PRISONERS IN THE STREETS OF WASHINGTON,—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE WAR IN AMERICA: ARREST OF MR. FAULKNER, LATE UNITED STATES' MINISTER TO FRANCE, AT BROWN'S HOTEL, WASHINGTON, ON THE CHARGE OF TREASON.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE BRITISH DEPENDENCIES AND THE EXHIBITION OF 1862.

It appears from the Times that in the exhibition of next year there will be such a show of excellent productions, manufactures, and fine art as has never been seen before or ever will. All, even to our most distant dependencies, are gathering together to be well represented, and to show the progress they are making and the interest taken in the scheme at home.

The Canadian Government has voted £5,000 towards the expenses of properly representing that grand colony; Cape Colony will give £5000; British Guiana, £2,000; Queensland, £2,000; Jamaica, £1,000; Trinidad, £1,000; Ceylon, £5,000; and £5,000 for an exhibition of gold; Victoria gives £10,000; New Brunswick, £1,000; British Honduras, £500; and Prince Edward's Island, £500. Similar liberality will be shown by all the other colonial Legislatures throughout the world.

The idea of the gold exhibition of the Australian colonies is a most valuable one. For the first time the English public will see a properly arranged and classified exhibition of the various products of the gold-fields, and the vast amount of which has in the short years raised Australia from the position of an unknown colony to that of a country which is a source of wonder and interest. There is not to be a mere display of nuggets; on the contrary, the nuggets for the most part are to be kept in the background, and the public will be asked to see a specimen here and there of the various forms in which the rich auriferous soil is displayed by the various processes of washing and crushing. It is wished at first only to show the gold in its rough state and gold sand, with the rock in the lump, or with only a small quantity of every grade of matrix, so as to show the public all the stages of metal at last coming in an eruption of pure assay, to the amount of £2,000,000 sterling. Twenty-five thousand pounds will be given for the gold portion of the settlement of Victoria £5000, with £5000 more for the general purposes of exhibition.

In 1851 Victoria was just starting into existence as a separate colony. Its population was then short of 80,000; it is now nearly 600,000 souls. Its imports were then under £3,000,000, and its exports under £4,000,000. Now the population is nearly 600,000, the imports have risen to nearly £15,000,000 annually, and its exports to £16,000,000 sterling, or £27,000,000 including specie. The colonists own upwards of 6,000,000 sheep and cattle, and have sent gold to the amount of £40,000,000 sterling, or £45,000,000 including specie.

Nor is it only in Victoria that we see such astounding progress in the ten years that have elapsed since New York, which in 1851 had only just been united to the interior railways, is now the great commercial emporium of the United States, and the centre to which the last two years become a great, prosperous, and independent colony, with its rising capital of Queensland, its Moreton Bay, and its Port Curtis. Its rich land is the wealthy and thriving settlement of Moreton Bay and Port Curtis, the beautiful Darling Downs, and the other districts with all good settlements, but these been colonised by the Phœnician Islanders, and have a peculiar interest in all that appertains to them. Like their forefathers, they keep up their primitive simplicity and isolation unthinned by the tumult of their mighty neighbour. They are a people apart, with their own laws and their own language, and they are now making rapid progress. Their population is 60,000 souls, and their exports are £1,000,000 sterling, or £1,500,000 including specie. The colonists own upwards of 400,000 cattle and sheep, and have sent gold to the amount of £1,000,000 sterling, or £1,400

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE MARCHIONESS OF BREADALBANE.

The Most Noble Ellen, Marchioness of Breadalbane, whose lamented death occurred on the 29th ultimo, at the family town house, 21, Portland-place, was the eldest daughter of the late George Baillie, Esq., of Jerviswood, N.B., by Anne, only child and sole heiress of the late Sir Patrick Pringle, Bart. Her Ladyship was born on the 24th of June, 1800, and was married on the 23rd of November, 1822, to the present Marquis of Breadalbane, then Earl of Ormelie, by whom she had issue—William Henry, Viscount Veliteris, and Charles Ernest, a Captain in the Grenadier Guards—and a daughter, Evelyn Georgina, who died in infancy. The deceased has father as third Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, Sept. 26, 1839, by Lucy Lordship was Chief Lady in Waiting to the Queen, Colonel of the 3rd Royal Perth Militia up to 1857, Captain of the 16th Duke Rifles, and Special Constable during the disturbances. He took no part in politics, but his religious opinions were Conservative. He was an excellent landlord, to the tenantry of his principal estate, Mount Stuart, was perversely a Liberal. In 1849 he published "Extracts from a Journal kept during the Revolutionary Movement of 1848-49 in the Various States of Europe," which he had visited after a long illness.

Earl of Haddington, of the Countess of Aberdeen, and of the Countess of Ashburnham.

THE EARL OF MOUNT-EDGCUMBE.

The Right Hon. Ernest Augustus Edgcumbe, D.C.L., and F.S.A., third Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, Viscount Edgcumbe and Valletort, and Baron Edgcumbe, of Mount Edgcumbe, in the county of Devon, and of Cotehele, in the county of Cornwall, in the peerage of Great Britain, was the elder son of Richard, second Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, by his wife, Sophia, third daughter of John, second Earl of Buckinghamshire. He was born March 22, 1797, and was educated at Harrow and at the University of Cambridge. He entered the Grenadier Guards, and in that regiment obtained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He married, May 5, 1831, Caroline, eldest daughter of the late Admiral Charles Fielding, R.N. (a Lady of the Bedchamber up to 1854, some while time the late Queen Victoria), by whom he has issue two sons and three daughters—William Henry, Viscount Veliteris, and Charles Ernest, a Captain in the Grenadier Guards—and a daughter, Evelyn Georgina, who died in infancy. The deceased has father as third Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, Sept. 26, 1839, by Lucy Lordship was Chief Lady in Waiting to the Queen, Colonel of the 3rd Royal Perth Militia up to 1857, Captain of the 16th Duke Rifles, and Special Constable during the disturbances. He took no part in politics, but his religious opinions were Conservative. He was an excellent landlord, to the tenantry of his principal estate, Mount Stuart, was perversely a Liberal. In 1849 he published "Extracts from a Journal kept during the Revolutionary Movement of 1848-49 in the Various States of Europe," which he had visited after a long illness. He succeeded by his elder son, William Henry, Viscount Veliteris, who, He is succeeded by his elder son, William Henry, Viscount Veliteris, who, at his birth, was born June 5, 1832, and was now fourth Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, who, at his birth, Lady Emma Augusta, was educated at Eton, and who married, Oct. 4, 1860, Lady Emma Augusta Hamilton, daughter of the late Duke of Abercorn, K.G., and has issue two female children. His Lordship is Extra Groom of the Bedchamber to the Queen. The Edgcumbe Family, and Barons of Mount-Edgcumbe—are a family of great antiquity. The name is evidently derived from the ancient family of great antiquity. The name is evidently derived from the ancient family of Richard Edgcumbe, a distinguished soldier, time the time of Edward III., and Richard Edgcumbe, a Lord of the Bedchamber to Henry VIII., on the field, after was, for the bravery he displayed, Knighted by Sovereign VIII., on the field, after the battle of Bosworth. For Cornwall, was created Baronet of Cotehele, Feb. 24, 1742-3. Treasurer in 1716, and Member for Lostwithiel, 1727-34, and Plymouth, 1734-41. He married, first, Gertrude, daughter of the first Earl, the father of the Earl just deceased, Revd and died at Richmond, in Surrey, and here will be found the following graceful inscription to his tomb in Kew Churchyard in the following graceful inscription to his memory:—"Richard, Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, is buried here, who was born at Cotehele, in Cornwall, and married in this neighbourhood for a residence, and, dying at Richmond, declared that his earthly remains should be laid in the parish where he had lived. Let his wish be obeyed." The deceased is to be deposited in this churchyard. Let us hope that his memorial part may remain in this rich old spot, in that shade which he loved to frequent, and that the Earl will wear it him."

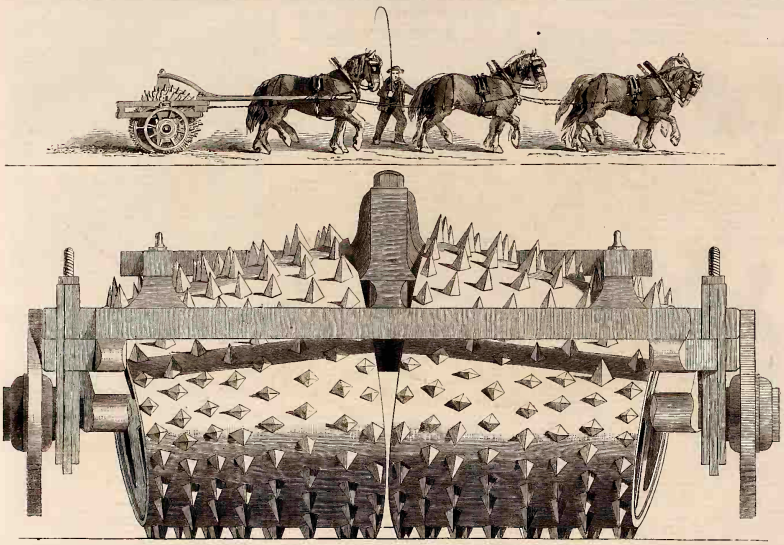
The Earl whose death has just occurred was born at Richmond.

LADY MARY ASHLEY.

Lady Mary Charlotte Ashley, whose lamented death occurred on the 5th inst. at Torquay, Devon, after a long illness, was the second daughter of the late Ashley Cooper, seventh Earl and present Earl of Shaftesbury, by his wife, Emily, Ashley Cooper, seventh Earl and present Earl of Shaftesbury, by his wife, Emily, eldest daughter of Peter Leopold, fifth Earl Cowper. The deceased lady was therefore married with her parents' consent, and as she there derived much benefit, it was deemed advisable to try what effect a change of air and scene would have on a weakened constitution, but unhappily the same result was not attained. Lady Mary was in her nineteenth year.

THOMAS BATEMAN, ESQ.

Thomas Bateman, Esq., of Lomberdale House, and of Middleton Hall, Derbyshire, died on the 26th ultimo, at the former residence, in his 71st year. He was born at Middleton Hall, and in his youth was distinguished as a learned and his manners of which has been occasionally referred to and made use of by many collectors in every branch of history and antiquities. He was an enthusiastic collector in every branch of history and antiquities. He was an enthusiastic antiquary, and he was famed for his knowledge of and for his extensive museum in antiquarian and miscellaneous matters. His collection was the pride of Derbyshire and the adjoining counties, extending over a period of more than seventy years, have resulted in the formation of what is now a collection of Celtic remains as no other museum, public or private, can rival. These were described in his museum in the Middleton Hall, and which were also the extensive and valuable collections of coins and antiquities which he had inherited by collateral kinsfolk and purchased from the Duke of Norfolk's museum. At this sale also, and at Middleton Hall, he had one of the most extensive and valuable libraries in the provinces, and one of the most select and modest numismatics. To all these he gave the public access. As an author Mr. Bateman was also known: his principal productions were "Ten Years' Diggings in the Celtic and Anglo-Saxon Graves of Derbyshire," and



BRAHY'S MACHINE FOR BREAKING-UP ROADS AND SCARIFYING OR TILLING LAND.—SEE PAGE 282

NEW BOULEVARD MALESHERBES, LOOKING TOWARDS THE MADELEINE.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1109.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE DECLINE OF THE POPULATION OF IRELAND.

THAT portion of the world's inhabitants among whom the English language is predominant has of late been indulging in a general census-taking. In the summer of last year the people of the United States summed up the goodly total of thirty-one millions and a half—a decennial increase of 35 per cent. It was their last corporate feat. No sooner were the numbers announced than the great Republic, unable to harmonise so large a family, fell asunder. In January of this year the great colony Canada reckoned up her two millions and a half—a larger proportional increase than that of the United States; and in April the British isles—the motherlands of a numerous and scattered progeny—numbered those of their children who still remained beneath the parental roof. South Britain and her contiguous islands were able to parade a population of twenty millions and a quarter, or an increase of 12 per cent in ten years. North Britain could boast a population of three millions, or an increase since 1851 of nearly six per cent. West Britain's was the sole discordant voice in this chorus of progress. The Niobe of nations had to confess a loss of more than 12 per cent in the number of her children—a confession which, on a superficial view of the case, was cheering only when viewed as an improvement on the preceding decade (1841-51), when the loss had been nearly 20 per cent.

This collapse of the population of Ireland from 8,175,124 in 1841 to 5,764,543 in 1861 is a phenomenon which arrests the attention of thinking men in all parts of the civilized world. Its causes have often been discussed before, but the publication of the figures of the last Census reopens the whole controversy.

The history of the growth and decline of the population of Ireland is full of startling fluctuations and moving incidents. The Irish race have felt in full force the effect of the economical changes of the last two centuries. Two centuries ago that western isle was a thinly-inhabited country. For the first three-quarters of the eighteenth century the Irish multiplied steadily and healthily, but not excessively; but from 1775 to 1835—a period of sixty years—there was an era of marvellous and excessive production of the human species: to this succeeded a few years when the natural increase was about balanced by emigration; and, lastly, twenty years of depletion as marvellous as the former period of increase. Whether this last period has even yet closed, to be succeeded by one of equilibrium between the natural increase and the emigration, we will consider hereafter. Let us first make good the preceding generalisations.

The first estimate of the population of Ireland is that of Sir William Petty for 1672. Sir William Petty had superintended a general survey of Ireland with a view to the settlement of the conflicting claims to the proprietorship of Irish landed property; and his authority as a careful and well-informed statistician ranks high. His estimate was 1,100,000. The growth of the population during the eighteenth century we ascertain approximately by the returns of the collectors of a tax called "hearth-money." These collectors give us the number of families, and by multiplying the number of families by 5½ we cannot be far wrong. In 1733 we accordingly find that the population had increased to about 2,100,000. In 1775 it seems to have increased another million. Thus in one hundred and three years the Irish race resident in Ireland had nearly trebled. In the cotton-growing States of America they express their gratitude to the shrub to which they owe their prosperity, and it may be said their very existence, by the loyal ejaculation, "Cotton is King!" In Ireland it was the Potato which was King. The Irish race based all their temporal hopes upon that admirable esculent. But the potato's reign was not yet over. In the succeeding sixty years it did wonders. It raised the population from 3,100,000 to something above 8,000,000. Considering that Ireland was almost a purely agricultural country, the number of persons to a square mile of rural territory could have been excelled only among the rice-eating populations of China and India. But in or about 1835 a tide of emigration to Great Britain, the British colonies, and the United States set in, which nearly counterbalanced the excess of births over deaths, for the Census of 1841 gives only 8,175,124. That emigration thenceforward swelled into a torrent, King Potato abdicated his throne, and the torrent became a flood, which reached its climax about 1852, and has since considerably subsided, though still far from insignificant. The result is to throw back the population to the figure at which it stood about fifty years ago. Major Newenham's hearth-money estimate in 1805 was 5,395,456. The estimate based on the abortive attempt to take the Census in 1812 and 1813 was 5,937,836. The figures of 1861 are between these two estimates—viz., 5,764,543.

If we seek for the causes of this vast emigration we find two—one which Ireland has in common with many other agricultural regions, the other peculiar to Ireland. Since the application of steam to land and ocean transportation, and the inauguration of the free-trade system, there has been a tendency of the agriculturists to flow into the cities on the one hand, or to emigrate to new agricultural regions on the other. This movement causes the agricultural population of the greater part of Central and Western Europe to be stationary or on the decline, while the cities rapidly increase in population. It makes itself felt in England. In Scotland it is so strong that in her last enumeration twelve of her counties have fallen off in population, and four others are about stationary. In New England and New York, comparatively undeveloped countries, though they are, the cities and their suburbs only increase, the rural districts simply maintain their old numbers. Thanks to the steroscad instrumentalities, the prairies of the Western States of America—California, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Cape—offer superior attractions to vast numbers of agriculturists native to the Old World on the ancient settlements of the New. Ireland is ill prepared to stand the shock of this double movement. England and Scotland, New England and New York, France and Germany, have numerous manufacturing centres whose increase overcomes or neutralises in the Census returns the loss or absence of increase of the rural inhabitants. But Ireland has few such foci, and therefore, under all circumstances, we see that a certain falling off in her population since 1841 was an inevitable result of the economical conditions of the civilised world during this period.

THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S NEW FOLKESTONE AND BOULOGNE PACKET VICTORIA,—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 301.

But had this general agency been the only cause at work we should have found the civic population of Ireland increase in numbers, even though the rural population fell off. But this is not the case. In twenty years Dublin has grown from 233,000 to 258,000; Belfast, from 44,000 to 76,000; and Londonderry, from 15,000 to 20,000. This is trifling for twenty years; but almost every other city shows a large decrease. Limerick has fallen from 65,000 to 35,000; Galway, from 22,000 to 25,000; Kilkenny, from 21,000 to 17,000. Most of the smaller towns tell the same tale. The only result of the general movement of population from county to town has been in Ireland to diminish the ratio in which the urban has fallen off as compared with the rural population.

What, then, is the cause special to Ireland which has increased, steadily and intensified the other general cause? merely supervened and intensified the other general cause? The failure of the potato. That root had reared a more multitudinous population than any that could have been reared in Ireland on cereals. The potato rotted; simultaneously the first onset perished by famine and pestilence, while the survivors wisely looked abroad for fresh fields and pastures new. These two causes, operating in the same direction, explain the historic emigration from Ireland, and solve the mysteries of the Censuses of 1851 and 61.

Has the drain been even now arrested? The foreign and colonial emigration of 1858-9 and 60 was hardly a fourth of what it was in 1851-2-3, while we know that the emigration to Britain is small compared with what it was fifteen years ago. A country where early marriage is fashionable, as in Ireland, can bear a considerable emigration without diminishing in numbers. This is the case with Britain. Our emigration far exceeds our immigration. Nevertheless, we multiply apace, because the excess of births over deaths maintains the excess of emigration over immigration, and leaves a handsome balance to our credit. There is little immigration into Ireland; but we find that every fecund, and there is not much celibacy. The American civil war has cut down Irish emigration to a lower figure than that of 1858, which was probably the lowest since 1840. On the other hand, the reflux of returned emigrants from America has never been so large as it is this year. There is reason, therefore, for supposing that Ireland has reached her nadir in this respect, and that the Census of 1871 will report a population not less than that of 1861; and, inasmuch as sentiment has at length established a registration of births, deaths, and marriages in Ireland, the annual reports of the Commissioners will enable us to judge from year to year whether the tide of humanity flows or ebbs in Erin.

But, because Ireland boasts fewer inhabitants than of yore, it would be a fallacy to infer that the numbers of the Irish race are fewer than in 1841. The contrary is true. The multitudinous Irish emigrants to America and Australia, where children are sources of wealth rather than incumbrances, have propagated their race quicker than those who stayed at home. The arguments to Britain, as British statistics show, have been fully as prolific as the Irish in Ireland. Settling in solid phalanxes everywhere, both sexes as a rule, and the male sex especially, have sought partners exclusively from their own ethnic stock. Where an exceptional disposition has been shown to mingle their blood with other European races, it has been almost always on the female side. The consequence is that the stock is propagated with great purity in many other countries besides Ireland, so that it may be said without exaggeration that persons of purely Irish and half Irish descent are not less numerous out of Ireland than in it. The emigration has been the means, not of "exterminating" the Celtic people, but of reproduction far greater than could have taken place had that emigration been more restricted.

If the Irish during the last twenty years have not decreased, but greatly increased, in numbers, have they enjoyed less prosperity, are they less instructed, have they less political power than before the tide of emigration flowed so strongly? It is safe to affirm that in all these points emigration has been an unqualified blessing both to those who went and those who stayed behind. We entirely agree with the Census Commissioners in the doubt they express "whether voluntary emigration will ever prevail among a people wholly destitute. It would not appear to be the first step in the march of improvement. It is when man has already begun to move onwards that he seeks a more advantageous field than his native country affords." Yes; it is a sign of an intelligent spirit of enterprise when a people, in the well-grounded hope of bettering their condition, leave the homes of their ancestors and brave the dangers and hardships of the transit and the first settlement in a strange country. In the present instance the honourable ambition that inspired the movement has been signally blessed. And the misery has been plucked the flower of independence. In industrial pursuits the Irish emigrant of both sexes has thriven extraordinarily. No European emigrants, and that only because them in this respect, except the Germans, and that only because of the great skill both in agriculture and manufactures which the latter possess, and which the Irish lacked. The greatest thrifty-goods merchant in America is a native of Ireland. The women seem to have succeeded even better than the men. The immense sums transmitted to their relatives in Ireland by the servant-girls have attested the strong domestic affections and the large savings of Irishwomen abroad. In the matter of education the young family of the emigrant has been taught by free unsectarian schools the elementary branches of knowledge, free from sectarian schools the elementary branches of knowledge, On leaving school their children have enjoyed every facility for the acquisition of trades. Political power has been his in a measure greater than he has known how to use wisely. What American or colonial politician does not consider the constituencies, or swear by "the Irish vote"? If the German emigrant is slightly superior in the industrial career, in politics he is a cipher by the side of the Irishman. Australian and Canadian premiers, Californian and Jamaican governors, American senators, spring directly from the ranks of the Hibernian emigrants. Two Presidents of the United States (Jackson and Buchanan), and more United States' Presidents (Jackson and Buchanan), and more United States' Presidents (Jackson and Buchanan), and more than one Judge of the Supreme Court, were the sons of Irish parents. To shed tears over the fate of the population that has vanished from Ireland is evidently to throw away one's sympathy on objects who do not need it.

And what of the Irish at home? While the emigrant has thriven has the stay-at-home retrograded? By no means. The population whose numbers have been thinned have increased in every sort of well-being. The over-peopled Ireland of 1841 was a land of misery and filth, gross ignorance, and a sullen superstition, political bitterness, and a demoniac outrage. The not station, political bitterness, and a demoniac outrage. The not-over-peopled Ireland of 1861 shows a nation better instructed, better clothed, and better paid. The number of the proletaire class has diminished, that of persons of comfortable means has grown, and of the learned professions increased. Mud cabins by the thousand have disappeared, and comfortable houses of stone and plaster have taken their place. In short, quantity has made way for quality. Although the Irish have not abandoned their aspirations for political independence of England—aspirations which are rather dormant than extinct—crime, even in Ireland, and the terrible Whiteboyism which once held its accursed secret sessions. Whiteboyism is now a crime of rare occurrence where once it was regarded as an ordinary event, and with assassination have disappeared the minor forms of agrarian outrage. Judges complain that the calendars are void of cases, and grand juries gratulate grand juries on the breast and thank Heaven the counties smile therefore. Such is not only the case in Dublin and other cities of Ireland are not as other counties elsewhere. The schools are full, the workhouses are empty. Who desires to return to the Ireland of twenty years ago? Even if the will were there, the power would be wanting. Even if the and to restore the Ireland of twenty years ago? Even if the population should experience a still further decline, it will only be because the labourer, who earns a shilling a day now where a few years ago he only earned sixpence, sees a chance of making a dollar a day abroad, or because he likes to join relatives already in foreign parts. He not only withdraws one competitor from the labour market, but frequently contributes to the most remittances to the relief of his aged parents or to the support of his sisters. This latter trait is still more characteristic of the female emigrant.

There is, therefore, no reason why we should wince at the figures of the Irish Census returns—no reason why we should avoid the subject as an unpleasant one for philanthropists to contemplate. With the exception of the one calamitous epoch of famine and pestilence, all else tells of fruitful progress and moral and intellectual advancement at home and abroad.

STATISTICS OF NEW ZEALAND.

The statistics of New Zealand for 1860 have just been published, by which we find that the European population of the colony, at the month of December, 1860, exclusive of the military and their families, numbered 99,021, being an increase of 9,000 during the year. The population was nearly equally divided, the small excess being in favour of the north before the end of the year, but the preponderance in favour of the south has since increased to 1,000 females.

The number of the Maori population was, at the same period, 59,868 females, making (with 1,000 Europeans) a total of 120,889. The males in the Maori population (with 19 sex not stated) a total of 59,278.* This was the case also with the other aboriginal races that have come under our rule, as in India, Java, and Ceylon, where the males of the above number 50,000 were in the majority. The population of Auckland is stated to be 25,000 of European descent, and the province of Otago, 12,000. Nelson, 7,252; Canterbury, 15,701; Wellington, 11,500; Grange, 12,000. Nelson (including Settlement), 12,000; Taranaki, 2,000; Bay, 2,031; and Taranaki, 1,918.

The registered deaths were 1692—of males and 824 females; while, 1444, in each of the same sexes. These deaths, it will be seen, are in excess of the births, evidently in excess of that of the former year, and in excess of the average of the preceding five years. Nevertheless the natural increase for the last six years is 9,000, and the total increase for 1860, 9,000.

The total value in the imports for 1860 was £1,548,333, being a decrease of £200,000 compared with the year 1859; and that the exports was £588,840, being an increase of £57,460 over the previous year. The value of the wool exported in 1860 was £1,000,000, the uniform rate of 1s. 4d. per lb.) was £444,392, showing an increase over 1859 of £100,000.

The returns of the shipping show an increase of tonnage, but a decrease in the number of the ships. The total tonnage in 1860 was 84,000 tons, being 1,000 less than in 1859; but the increase in the tonnage was 3,000. The "coloured" tonnage was 1,000 less than in 1859; but those are the principal ports, and the decrease were the same in number as in 1859, namely, 1,000. The number of registered vessels belonging to the ports of New Zealand in the year 1860, 324, with 84,000 tons, being a decrease by their Majesties proceeded to the cemetery, situated in the northern part of the town, where a funeral service was performed for General Fortschakoff, and for all those who fell in the defence of the town. In the evening the Emperor and Empress went to Bakhtcheseraï, where they remained for the night. Their Majesties also visited the cloister of the Assumption, and Tschnitt-Kale, and in returning to Sebastopol passed over the field of battle of Inkermann. The Presse announces that the Emperor will extend his tour to the Caucasus.

The popular agitation increases and spreads in Poland. There have been disturbances in Warsaw, Lublin, and Posen. In a word the cause the appeal to the spirit of nationalities has found a serious response among the Poles, and that half-measures either of repression or concession will be of no avail.

TURKEY.

Riza Pacha has been named Governor of Aleppo.

The Montenegrins, it is said, have secured the alliance of the Princes of Servia in the war just commencing with the Turks. Prince Michael is collecting a large number of troops on the side of Bosnia, and the Porte, alive to the danger which menaces it, has placed the fortress of Belgrade in a state of good defence. Omar Pacha proceeded on Sunday to join the Turkish army at Gatzkoe.

INDIA, CHINA, AND JAPAN.

India remains perfectly tranquil, unmolested by domestic or foreign enemies. On the lands of the departing famine we have, however, unfortunately to announce the approach of the scarcely less dreaded cholera, which was making frightful ravages in Agra and Meerut especially.

In China there has been no interruption of the peaceful relations between the English and French Plenipotentiaries and the Chinese Government. The Shantung rebels had received a defeat at the hands of our old enemies, the Taepings, and the Taeping rebellion was viewing itself out. The exploring party that proceeded up the Yangtze some time back, in the hope of reaching Lantchou overland, has been obliged to retrace its steps, and has arrived at Shanghai. As they advanced passive resistance was changed into active opposition, and the travellers found that the Emperor had given instructions, and even faint rumours of foreign successes utterly disbelieved.

From Japan the most important feature of Mr. Alcock from Nagasaki to Jeddo is reported. It appears to have been a complete success, and the party were perfectly well received by the populaces of the districts through which they passed. Enthusiastic accounts are given of the large city of Osaka and its port, Hiogo.

AUSTRALIA.

In Sydney there was a complete lull in politics, the only matter of interest being a renewal of the disturbances at the Lambing Flat Diggings, and the loss of several lives.

The last Parliament of the reign of Victoria had been dissolved, and a new Parliament summoned to meet on the 26th of August. The cause of the dissolution was a motion added to the Appropriation Bill by the Assembly, limiting the supplies to the end of the month of August, which they refused to withdraw, though the Governor, in a message, supported by the Council, declared it an infringement of the Queen's prerogative.

The exploring expedition under Mr. Burke has terminated disastrously. Mr. Burke returned to Melbourne on the 29th of June, and reported that Mr. Burke, with Messrs. Wills, Gray, and a third, had left the depot at Cooper's Creek to cross to the Gulf of Carpentaria on the 16th of December, but not since been heard of. Mr. Burke was subsequently met by the home party under Mr. Wright, and were belaguered by the natives. They remained for eighteen weeks waiting for Mr. Burke's return, when they had but four of their number by sickness, including Mr. Ludwig Becher, the naturalist and artist of the expedition, when they were compelled to retreat.

NEW ZEALAND.

The latest advices from New Zealand somewhat diminish the apprehension that fresh hostilities with the Maories are inevitable. The Waikato King has refused to acknowledge the authority of the Governor's demands; but the New Zealand Assembly had passed a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry—a vote which is held to indicate a change for peace; and the Governor had informed the Assembly that he would not commence hostilities unless they voted a large sum towards defraying the cost of the war—an intimation which is considered to damp any excess of warlike ardour on the part of the European settlers.

The Chambers of Denmark are convoked for Oct. 5, and it is expected that the debate will be a stormy one.

Madrid journals announce the convocation of the Cortes for the 20th or 30th of next month.

General Cluny died suddenly last week at Cherbourg from apoplexy.

The subscription opened in Portugal for erecting a monument to the memory of Camoens amounts to a sum of 25,000 dollars.

The Toronto Globe of August 20 announces the death of Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie, the leader of the Canadian rebellion.

A Turin letter says that a revival is manifested in that part of Italy, and that prayers for it are said daily in the churches. There has been but a slight decrease of the yearly harvest.

At Neuwiller and the neighbourhood, in the Bas Rhin, the gathering of hops has been commenced. The quality is generally speaking good, but the produce generally is somewhat less than usual.

The thirteenth general meeting of the German Catholic Union was opened at Mayence on the 8th inst. Twenty-seven thousand persons were present on the occasion.

The large exhibition building in the Champs Elysées, Paris, is again opened to the public, and contains, under the title of an "Exposition of the Industrial Arts," a variety of decorative articles, household furniture, and objects of vertu, to be sold by auction for the benefit of the poor.

According to Galignani workmen are busily employed in the backyard at Paris of the late Prince Napoleon Jerome Bonaparte, for the purpose parte of wrought-iron, measuring 9ft. 10 in. long, 2ft. 11in. wide, and 2ft. 5in. thick.

On the 1st of July the French Minister at Pekin gave a grand dinner in honour of the Ambassador and Envoy Extraordinary of Persia. Count Kleczkowski, the diplomatic representative were present on the occasion.

The Russian Academy of Arts has decided upon commencing the illustration of the Russian school of painters in the International Exhibition of 1862 with Finland, the Lithuanian provinces, and Russian painters.

Delhi has established a museum and institute. "The Dreamchild" is the best beer ever given up to the purpose. The ex-King's white elephant occupies the centre of the room, while two stones, one with the print of Mahomet's foot, and the other of Buddha's hand, are placed on each side table.

In a violent storm at Lodeve, in the Hérault, France, a few days ago, the lightning penetrated the room of a house in which a workman named Vidal, his wife, and three children were, rolled up the mat which it found them, without, however, injuring any one. It then entered a bedroom in which the father, a man of forty-four, was breathing his last, and after striking her in the forehead, caused instant death!

The Gazzetta di Milano says that quite a swarm of locusts that had descended on the peninsula of Krotch had been nearly exterminated by the peasants. A great loss indeed would have ensued had not the people many fields of wheat in the districts of Taverdola, Simbracqui, and Frenchise, and the remains of Roman Carthage. Schoengraf the destruction caused by the locusts is reported to be enormous.

According to the last census taken in Switzerland, the total population of the Confederation in December last was 2,510,432 souls, of whom 2,204,280 were Swiss citizens, and the rest foreigners. In religion 1,680,264 of the total were Protestants, 1,240,469 Catholics, the rest "Separatists," Jews, &c. The number of occupied houses was 377,782, and of families, 564,400. Of these latter 184,881 spoke French, 29,159 Italian, the rest German, &c.

The report of the death of the Queen of Madagascar has not been confirmed. The Paris Pays notices as follows a report that the French and English squadrons were "in observation" at Madagascar with a view to passing events:—"What truth there may be in the report as regards the English squadron we know not; but, so far as French ships are concerned, we may state that we have a frigate and a few smaller craft in these waters, as we have had for years past, which never see less, and the station is an immense one."

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

The Canadian steam-ship Hibernian, from Quebec, brings intelligence to the 7th inst.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS.

The naval expedition under the command of Commodore Stringham and General Butler left upon the forty-third commanded Hatteras Inlet, on the coast of North Carolina. The attack commenced on the morning of the 28th ult.; 800 Federals, commanded by Colonel Hawkins were landed through a heavy surf. All the boats were hilged in the surf, and no more could be landed between shores. Two frigates, the Minnesota and Wabash, commenced shelling from off the batteries. The shot from the battery fell short. In three hours the Confederates evacuated the fort, and were pursued by more than 300 United States troops on shore. On the next day Fort Hatteras was attacked. At two o'clock p.m. one eleven-inch shell having pierced the bomb-proof through a ventilator and exploded inside over the magazine, the enemy gave up the fight, and raised a white flag. The Federal troops were immediately marched into it. The Confederates were commanded by Commodore Barron, late of the United States navy, and subsequently Secretary of the Navy of the Confederate Navy. After some demur the force, consisting of 45 officers and 670 men, commissioned officers and privates, surrendered, and have been taken to New York. Their loss was 8 killed and 25 wounded. On the Federal side nobody was hurt. In the forts were mounted 25 pieces of artillery, 1,000 stand of arms, a large quantity of ordnance stores, provisions; three vessels laden with cotton and tobacco, and also the blockade-runner Winslow, recently captured. It is observed that the articles of capitulation are signed by S. Barron, "Flag Officer Provisional Navy, Commanding Naval Defences, Virginia and North Carolina," and by Wm. F. Martin, "Colonel 17th Regiment Infantry, North Carolina Volunteers." The fort was commanded by Federal officers appointed by Colonel Hawkins, and General Butler forthwith reinstated to Washington, where he received an ovation, and made a speech on the day he reached the end of the line.

The Confederates have since abandoned their fortifications at Ocracoke Inlet, also on the coast of North Carolina, a little to the south of Hatteras Inlet. The Federals have taken possession.

Multitudes of North Carolinians were coming in to Fort Hatteras to take the oath of allegiance. They had been driven from their homes by the Confederates.

The Richmond Enquirer of the 20th ult. publishes a letter from Fernandina, Florida, which states that the crew of the celebrated privateer Jeff. Davis had arrived there—thereby having been wrecked on the first cruise they had made. They were all safe.

Major-General Fremont, commanding the army of the West, has issued a proclamation declaring martial law throughout the Federal law throughout the State of Missouri. The lines of the army of occupation are for the present declared to extend from Leavenworth, Kansas, by way of the posts at Jefferson City, Rolla, and Ironton, to Cape Girardeau, on the Mississippi River. This includes about three-fourths of the State. All persons who shall be taken within these lines with arms in their hands within these lines shall be tried by courtmartial, and if found guilty will be shot. The property, real and personal, of all persons in the State of Missouri who shall take up arms against the United States, or who shall be directly proven to have taken active part with their enemies in the field, is declared to be confiscated to the public use, and their slaves, if any they have, are hereby declared free men.

A short telegram to Further Point announces that Pulaski, Kentucky, had been occupied by the Federals, overlooking the navigation position which the Kentuckians have striven to maintain against both sections of the late United States.

THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

A report had been in circulation in the north and in Kentucky that President Davis died in Richmond, of a congestive fever, on the 2nd inst. It is contradicted by the absolute impossibility that he could die of disease. Mr. Russell, in his last letter to the Times, speaks thus of Mr. Davis:—"He is a tall, thin man, with a sallow face, and a look of the absence of his bodyguard, to which he is subject, and its agonies have been so frequent of late that the public of not what it was assured, in consequence. He is a slight, spare man, who did not appear to be capable of resisting violent disease." If the report be true, Vice-President Stephens, of Georgia, will occupy the post of honour and responsibility. When last heard of, the Vice-President also was sick at Manassas, and he is still sufferer and altogether Mr. Davis.

East Tennessee is now co-operating with the Confederates, Knoxville, the capital, turning out some fine battalions of cavalry.

An Alabama newspaper says that the Confederates have the negroes more molasses and rice and less bacon. This plan would diminish the consumption of bacon two millions and a quarter of pounds weekly in the Southern Confederacy.

THE NATIONAL LOAN.

The New York papers publish full accounts of the way in which the public are coming forward and taking the 7 3-10ths per cent loan. Nevertheless, the aggregate subscriptions by the public (apart from the banks) on the 3rd inst. only stood at £650,000 sterling. Under these circumstances Secretary Chase has found it necessary to issue an appeal to the people of the United States in behalf of this investment. The most interesting passages of this appeal are as follows:—

"The real and personal values in the United States reach the vast aggregate of $20,000,000,000 dollars. The yearly income from the labour of the people is $2,000,000,000 dollars. The yearly surplus earnings of the loyal people are estimated at $300,000,000 dollars. The annual expenditure of the national government, before the present rebellion, while the well-considered judgment of military men of the highest rank and authority declared that a million of men were required to meet the military exigency, average, and still it may be brought to a conclusion before the close of the coming spring, is not expected to cost beyond this sum. The public debt on the 1st of July was $90,000,000 dollars loan authorised by Congress, but with a discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to the amount of $150,000,000 dollars, or France in years of peace. And it is not unreasonable to hope that the unanimous will of a people thus blessed by the exercise of the elective franchise, and by the possession of a territory unsurpassed in fertility by any of the states in incremation—that they will relieve their action, weigh their own wishes, and promptly and cheerfully sustain the government in the support of all their constitutional rights, and to allow them their full share in the burdens of the present struggle, and to contribute to the United States which in an evil hour they have tempted to throw off?"

THE NORTHERN STATES.

The Surveyor at New York has seized some forty vessels in New York harbour, under the confiscation law, who are said to be owned at the South. Similar seizures have taken place at Boston and Philadelphia.

The Federal Government are active in arresting persons charged with treasonable practices in the Northern States.

The immigration to New York this year from Europe consists chiefly of Germans, who settle on farms in the West, and are comparatively unhurt by the war. The Irish, who are chiefly employed in cities, feel the effect of hard times more acutely, and send home discouraging accounts, which check the immigration.

It having been discovered that vessels loaded with provisions and stores of all sorts were clearing for Mexican ports, and that the people bordering on Texas, the cargoes of which were doubtless intended for the enemy's use, all clearances for that port have been refused by the collectors of the United States.

The Northern journals continue their "frantic shaw" as a Boston paper calls it. Mr. Blair, Postmaster-General, has published that Fremont's proclamation in Missouri makes the war one of emancipation, and approves the idea as a military measure. Both are not coming in quick enough, the people are warned that resort will be had, if necessary, to conscription.

Prince Napoleon and suite have been travelling in Wisconsin.

CALIFORNIA.

A San Francisco correspondent says:—

The war has not yet done any serious damage to business generally in California. The general feeling here is one of peculiary prosperity. Labour is as high and as much in demand as at this time last year. San Francisco is improving with great rapidity. At no time in past years were so many dwellings and public buildings in course of erection, the Broadway of the Pacific.

The remains of T. R. M'Manus, the late Irish exile, were shipped from San Francisco on the 31st ult., for Ireland, by way of New York. They were escorted to the dock by a procession of Irishmen.

A ROMANCE IN HIGH LIFE.

An extraordinary case is under investigation by the Rugby magistrates, the accused person is Mr. Richard Guinness Hill, nephew of the well-known Dublin banker and brewer; and the technical offence charged against him is procuring the insertion of a false entry in the books of the registrar at Rugby.

The facts alleged by the prosecution, which we give with due reserve, are as follow:—Mr. Hill, now a man aged thirty-two, was some years ago married to a Miss Amy Georgian Burdett, granddaughter of Sir Francis Burdett. After marriage she made a will devising the whole of her property, about £3,000 a year, and bequeathing it, as said, a large estate, to her husband, in case she should die without surviving issue. In 1859 Mrs. Hill was expecting to be confined, and, being in Ireland, and wishing to have her child born in London, surveyed thither. She was, as stated by Rugby, and removed from her carriage to the nearest place where accommodation could be afforded—a small herbrose called the Black, about half a mile from the station. Here the child involved in the present inquiry was born. A few days afterwards the prisoner commenced a course to destroy the child, and succeeded with the presumed object of procuring himself of the property in case his wife should die before him. The first step was to have it registered under a false name, as "Robert Hill, son of Robert Hill and Mary Hill, maiden name Sergeant." Then he persuaded his wife to put it out to nurse, and went to London to make arrangements. He left the child was sent in charge of a young girl of fourteen, Catherine Parsons, the daughter of the woman with whom she was then nursing in a shed, for which was paized for particular reasons by the mother, and forms an important ingredient in the case. Catherine Parsons states that on arriving at the Euston-square station the child was met by the prisoner, who in a few hours afterwards, in the presence of this girl, handed over the child to two disreputable females—one a huckswoman—the woman who took the child insisting upon taking the shawl with her. The girl told her employer what had occurred, but the husband succeeded in terrifying his wife as to the safety of the child. From time to time Mrs. Hill inquired for her child, and was assured by her husband that it was in good health; afterwards, however, he said it was dead. Then, when pressed for a certificate of its death, he said it had been taken to Australia.

A serious quarrel ensued, and a separation took place. Mrs. Hill then called in the aid of detectives to discover her lost child. An advertisement brought forward a woman named Mackay, who brought the case pointed to a woman named Andrews. The police then followed up the inquiries of the detectives, and found her in a wretched room in Lincoln-court, Drury-lane, with a child believed to be the missing infant.

The description of the room is horrible:—In one corner lay a man nearly naked, apparently in a dying state, and sensating all over the floor were several women in a most ragged and filthy condition. The whole place was in a dreadful state; the stench from the filth being almost unbearable. The child was found in the miserable den Ernest alleged he had the heir to £14,000 a year almost in a state of nudity and covered with vermin and filth. No shoes were on the child's feet, and only one dirty rag enveloped the entire body. The toes were terribly scorched. In the possession of women, no doubt inflicted by walking on stones, while the head had badly recently discharged matter from a severe contusion and ill-usage. The house from bottom to top appeared to be occupied by the lowest classes, and the prisoner was only escaped with the child in safety by literally "paying his way" through the swarm of people who looked up every means of egress.

A shawl pledged for this woman has been identified by Mrs. Hill as the one sent with the child, and a box found in her possession is also identified as that which contained the child's clothes.

The statement of the woman Andrews is that she was standing begging one evening in the Haymarket with her two children, when a gentleman accosted her, putting a shilling in her hand, and beckoning her into a corner, and after some time promised her £10 a year to the care of a child. She agreed, and received the child from him at the Euston station, he telling her that she need only treat it as her own, or that she might, if she liked, sell it. She took it to her own residence, and says that its mother was dead, and that he was a clerk, and going abroad. She did not know the name nor address.

Mr. Hill was arrested in London on Saturday last, on his arrival from Belgium, and was examined on Monday at Rugby, where the legal officers with which he is connected are commissioners. The false entry of registry of the child, and has been remanded on bail of £1000 till next Tuesday.

The Provincial Council of Milan has voted a sum of 3000*l.* for a monument in commemoration of the late Alessandro Manzoni.

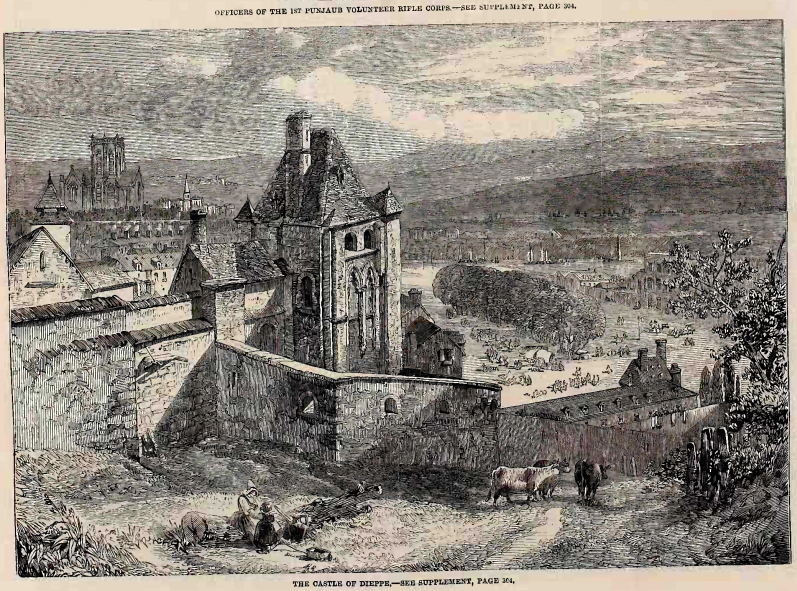
On the 9th inst. Frederic von Raumer, the historian, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with university education. The King of Prussia conferred upon the Orders of the Red Eagle of the first class, and the Queen presented him with a beautiful bronze vase ornamented with a portrait of Frederic the Great.

We are requested to state that the following papers were read in section D during the fourth day's proceedings of the British Association:—By Dr. G. D. Gibb, On the arrest of preparis metamorphosis of Vanessa Antiopa; by Capt. Calver, On the discovery of Orthoceratites and coal by A. Staniield, on new British species of Blechnum.

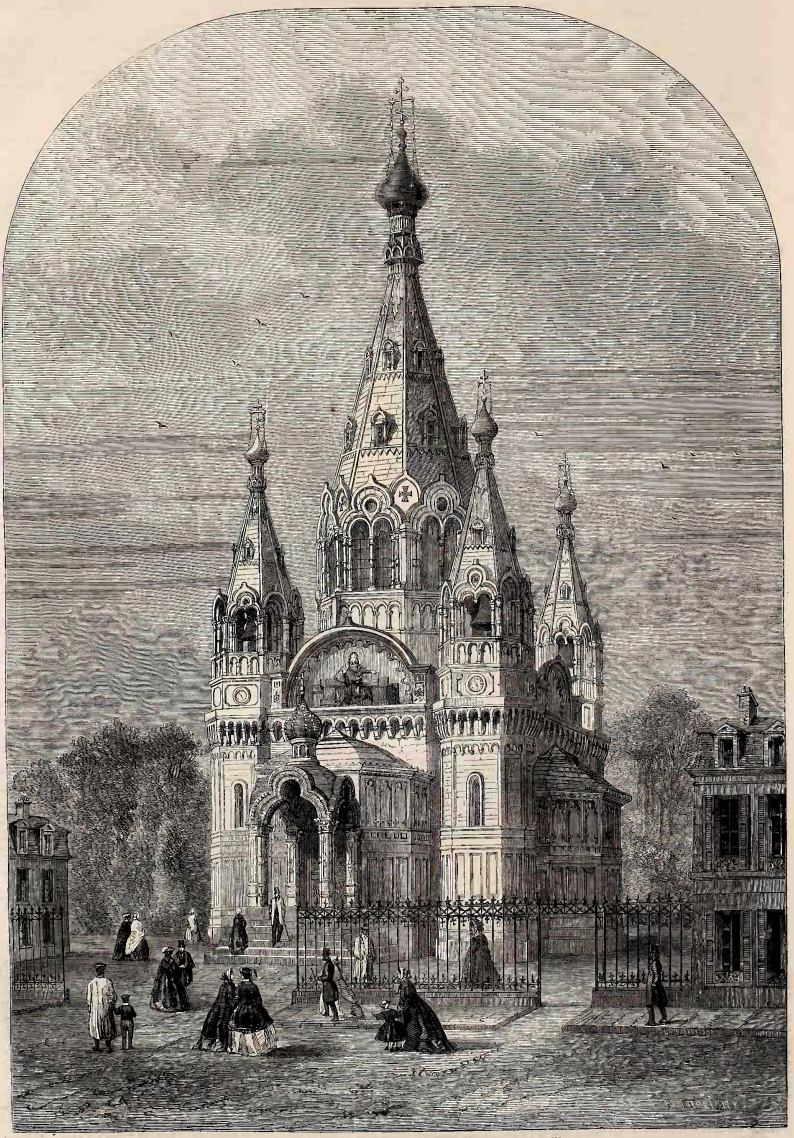
The Paris Morgue is not to be rebuilt. At the western point of the Ile du Louis, on a site formerly intended, by the Prefect of the Seine having not issued a notice to the effect that contractors will be received by the municipality for the building of a morgue at the extremity of the Ile du Palais, between the Pont de l'Archevêché and the new Pont Louis Philippe, on the site called Le Terrain, which is to be the future Place Dauphine.

The births of 1795 children—916 boys and 879 girls—were registered last week in London. The deaths registered in the same years 1854-60 the average number was 1468.—The deaths registered in London last week were 1194. Allowing for the deaths from zymotic diseases in the districts west of 1854 are excluded, it will be found that the average number of deaths for the whole of the metropolis during the month

OFFICERS OF THE 1ST PUNJAUB VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 304.



THE CASTLE OF DIEPPE.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 304.



THE NEW RUSSIAN CHURCH IN PARIS.—SEE SUPPLEMENT PAGE 304.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 22.—Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 23.—Charles I. dethroned, 1649.
TUESDAY, 24.—Charles I. beheaded, 1649.
WEDNESDAY, 25.—St. George's in the East closed, 1859.
THURSDAY, 26.—St. Cyprian.
FRIDAY, 27.—Battle of Boscawen, 1461.
SATURDAY, 28.—New Rivers completed, 1613.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 28, 1861.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
5 31	6 14	7 0	7 48	8 36	9 24	10 12

CUR CONTINENTAL SUBSCRIBERS.—To suit the convenience of residents in Germany, Russia, and the eastern portion of Europe, we have appointed Mr. Ludwig Denicke, of Leipsic, Special Agent for this Journal. Terms of subscription:—One Year, 10 thalers; Half-year, 5 thalers.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861.

RAILWAY COMPENSATION.

IN a preceding paper we have endeavoured to show that a great and pressing duty has now to be fulfilled by the railway companies if they would reassure the public mind, place their property in a healthy condition, and prevent—by making unnecessary—Government control in the actual administration of their affairs. For ourselves, we may say frankly we do not want to see their business taken out of their own hands. We are not at all desirous that they should point the moral and adorn the tale of some new philosophical or Parliamentary essay intended to show that all such giant organisations must fail under commercial management. Let them only vigorously legislate for themselves in the interest of the public safety, and the result must be better than if legislation were forced upon them. Who knows, or can know, so well as they do the nature and relations of the multitudinous details that have been gradually evoked and drawn together into a wonderfully complex, and in many respects strikingly beautiful, system? Who else can he so deeply interested or so well fitted altogether to improve, guide, and govern it?

Let no one say the necessary remedial processes will be too expensive. The truth is just the contrary. When we learn from a Parliamentary paper just issued that no less than one pound a quarter per cent of the entire amount available for dividends during the last year was taken away to pay for accidents, we can no longer resist the conclusion that what the companies cannot afford is to be quiet and let things alone. They must destroy accidents, or accidents will go far to destroy them.

But is the duty thus imposed on the companies the only one of that demands consideration? Is there nothing due from that public which just now requires so much? Certainly the companies are of a very different opinion. It may sound strange, but it is quite true, that they are at this moment meditating having recourse to a measure similar to that with which they are threatened—an appeal to Parliament, and in connection with the very subject that is agitating the public mind—this of railway accidents. Go to any of their half-yearly meetings, and you are almost sure to hear earnest, sometimes bitter, complaint of the injustice with which they conceive they are treated. Is there any force in that complaint? Let us see. Before 1846 the only law applicable to railway accidents was that under which carriers (whether by land or water) generally had conducted their business. If a person was simply injured, while travelling, through any neglect or wrongdoing, he could obtain damages. But if he were killed outright, there was no redress for his family. This cruel absurdity was remedied by Lord Campbell's Act, which enables the relatives of persons killed by wrongful or negligent conduct to recover damages through the instrumentality of a jury. Now the companies say that at present they are, in effect, made not only to assure the lives of passengers without any payment of assurance money, but do it under conditions that no assurance office would for a moment listen to, even if paid.

They say, also, that a disposition not unfrequently shows itself among juries to treat a company rather in accordance with its supposed wealth than with regard to the justness of the claim.

They say, further, that such a state of things tempts persons who may have a claim upon them to urge it to the most unreasonable extent; and one gentleman officially connected with railways enumerates cases in proof. Such as where £500 was claimed and £100 finally paid, £800 claimed and £80 paid, £1200 claimed and £325 paid, £1200 claimed and £250 paid, £6000 claimed and £1000 paid, £3000 claimed and £250 paid, £1000 claimed and £50 paid £500 claimed and £30 paid, and £7000 claimed (by a lady, for a slight hurt to the knee) and £625 paid. Now, it may very well be that some or most of these claims were not actually so unjust as they look; but such cases show clearly enough how little of rule exists to guide either party as to the proper sum to be demanded or consented to.

But it is the inequality shown in the varying sums allotted by juries to rich and poor, and shown, as regards the former, without any fixed rule of limitation, that is felt as the chief grievance. Why, asks one director, should a man who pays 2d. a mile for his journey claim £20,000 for an injury, while the man who pays 1d. asks only £200 under similar circumstances. "For my part," says another, "I cannot see why a poor man who paid his 1½d. should have a less sum allotted than the rich man who paid his 1½d." How the actual system works may be illustrated by two or three examples. On the Great Northern Railway a gentleman is killed who leaves behind him large property. Not having made a will, the whole goes to the eldest child, a minor. The widow and younger children are left destitute. They demand compensation, and obtain no less than £12,000 from the company. It is, therefore, far from improbable that the family, on a whole, is just this £12,000 richer than they would have been had the head of it died in a more natural way. Contrast with this the case of a professional gentleman, of the highest standing, who was killed on the South-Western. He had been in the receipt of a very large income, the whole of which died with him. Of course, here was, or might have been, a case for unusually heavy damages. Not a bit of it. His only relatives were two sisters, both married, and in independent circumstances, and not at all in a position to show (had they been so inclined) that they were directly injured by the death. So that whether compensation be looked at as an assurance, for which no premium has been paid, or as a penalty for misdeed, which may not be exacted in the worst cases, or may fall capriciously heavy in others, the result looks, it must be confessed, equally unsatisfactory.

But if cases of this nature were all that could be adduced we should be inclined to say the matter must remain as at present—solely with juries. They desire to hejust, at all events, and if the companies will remove all disturbing elements such as accidents clearly traceable in their origin, we believe they will not be harshly or inconsiderately used. There was a jury case not long since that revealed the right spirit. A gentleman who was severely shaken by an accident claimed £5000 from the company, which offered him £2000. He refused, and went to a jury, which awarded him £4000, of which he had only to pay his expenses. But, though we do not doubt the wish or the power of juries to act justly, we do doubt if they have as yet received sufficient help from legislation to show them what is just in certain cases. For instance, towards the close of 1859 an accident happened to the mail train from London to the Great North of Scotland, a particularly good train in all respects, very cheap, very conveniently timed, and very fast. For 30s. one is taken up in London at nine at night and set down in Edinburgh to an early breakfast next morning. The passengers are of a class to add to the respectability of the train. In front of the train, however, is only, but well-to-do professional men, such as lawyers and doctors, with a considerable sprinkling of men of business, who earn, it appears, their £2000 a year. The accident referred to occurred at Hitchin, through a misadventure of the signalman. The Great Northern, on its honour be it said, gives to each of its signalmen a gratuity of £2 10s. half-yearly if he has made no mistake, and if his conduct has been in other respects exemplary. The Hitchin signalman had received the gratuity on an unusually favourable case of the signal being set right now to make his first mistake. The Midland train was approaching, and he signaled to it, rightly, to come in: but seeing immediately after that the Great Northern was ready to go out, he again signalled so as to direct the Midland to stay, only to tell the latter train to pass on. He forgot that the Midland could not stop in time to prevent a collision; the two trains met at a speed of about ten miles an hour, and many persons, chiefly those of the third class, were injured, though, happily, none killed. Now, on what principle could the company be called on to compensate all those wealthy men who had paid third class fare—and that fare unusually low—just as though they had paid first? We can see absolutely none. But the company preferred to suffer privately—if suffer they must—and so consented to pay sums varying from £200 to £3000 to persons who had been in no part responsible for the error who had paid equal fares. Here, then, we think, is a wrong that demands legislative remedy. People can have no possible right to be treated as first class when they come for compensation who treated themselves as third class or second class when they paid their fare. And, as would probably be the case, if those passengers changed their style of travelling to adapt themselves to such a change of law, the companies could no longer complain if they received no premium: that change would be a sufficient premium. If, on the other hand, wealthy persons insisted that former habit, juries, when they were appealed to, would see the propriety of the law that compelled them to discriminate as to the quality of claims, by using people's own estimate of themselves, as shown by the chosen class. Not that we would advocate any rigid unyielding law, even for such cases: but that we think there should be a limit imposed for each. This principle exists, we believe, in the United States. It is said that the sum of 1250 dollars is the highest that can there be demanded for a railway accident. But even this measure of relief is, we are sure, disputed by many directors of the companies. It would be to the last degree unwise to face Parliament under the existing condition of things. To all appeals for a modification of the law the answer would be, "That law is the only existing safeguard for the public. Against the terror which your accidents excite you must be content to hear the opposing terror of a rough, indiscriminating, but effective law. To disarm both, you must take the initiative. When you have done so, come to us again, by all means."

FROM each succeeding week's news we gather that the struggle in the States is assuming more and more steadily the aspect of a real war, to be carried on according to the known rules, and in all respects after the fashion, of the Old-World contests. The singular mélange of valiquérous hostings and lamentable shortcomings, of military toiletting, scandalous jobs, female influence, and incompetent officering, is gradually dying out before the stern exigencies of the occasion. The first well-organised expedition under this new régime has proved entirely successful; and, though the overwhelming amount of force employed may detract a little from the honour and glory of the encounter, yet the importance of the position may fully compensate for any deficiency on that head. The Northerners have established themselves in command of the extensive system of gulfs and creeks which lie immediately behind the easternmost point of the Southern States, and which have hitherto supplied at once protection and a vast natural harbour for privateers, and they have thus at once struck a heavy blow at this questionable system of sea robbery and at the same time secured an important outpost in the enemy's country. In all probability a similarly well-planned expedition is at this moment sweeping down the Mississippi, and which, if successful, will have the effect, in conjunction with the blockade and the attitude of the Federal troops along the Northern border, of surrounding and isolating the whole eastern portion of the Seceding States. We suppose, by-the-way, no sane man in this country ever believed that in the present aspect of Italian affairs Garibaldi would for a moment dream of putting the Atlantic between himself and the Mediterranean at present. His refusal is now formally announced. The Southerners appear also to have made a decided move in the direction of English interference: the quasi proclamation of an intention to store the whole cotton crop and issue State Bonds against it can have no other meaning than to invite, or rather compel, us in behalf of Manchester, to break the blockade. The step is only another proof of how little our Transatlantic cousins understand our temper. We shall do nothing of the sort; we can buy and grow cotton elsewhere, though we admit that at present there is a doubt as to quality. But we are not going to war for Manchester, much as we desire to see it prosperous and this naturally brings up a regret at the somewhat gloomy aspect of commercial affairs in Lancashire and elsewhere. We are getting on through autumn; winter—perhaps as bitter a season as the last—will soon be upon us; and already mills are working short time, the short time, the stock of cotton is admitted to be getting low, and ominous meetings are taking place among the hands. That suicidal manœuvre—the strike—appears also to be spreading from the metropolis countrywards. It will be well for thoughtful men to lay these things to heart and endeavour to be prepared.

It will be matter of universal regret that the magnificent naval fabric on which we so much prided ourselves, and which had hitherto succeeded in scoring an amazing amount of confidence as an Atlantic seaship, has proved herself unequal to grapple with one of the gentle Eolian storms of that proverbially vexed ocean. Both her paddlewheels and her rudderhead wrenched off by the tremendous force of the waves, the Great Eastern lay for two days and three nights a mere log in the trough of the ocean, the tendency to roll which was originally observed in her being of course exaggerated to a most painful and dangerous degree, and fractured limbs and bruises in plenty were the inevitable result. We suspect the inquiry will elicit that the construction and fitting of temporary steering-gear, under such circumstances, was an act of little less than heroism. The moment steerage power could be applied the screw accomplished the rest with ease, though of course slowly. We fear confidence will be much shaken, if not entirely destroyed, in this noble vessel. People will not stay to reflect that, had no accident occurred to her rudder, the destruction of the wheels need not necessarily have stopped, though it would have prolonged, the voyage.

THE COURT.

THE Queen continues to enjoy the fine weather now prevailing in the Highlands.

HER Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, drove to Balchall on Wednesday morning, and honoured Mrs. Gordon with a visit. Prince Arthur rode to Loch Bulig and round by Invercauld. Prince Louis of Hesse, having completed his twenty-fourth year, received, to-day the congratulations of her Majesty and of the Royal family. The Duke of Newcastle arrived at Balmoral in succession to Sir Charles Wood as Secretary of State in attendance on her Majesty.

ON Thursday (tonight the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Prince Arthur, drove to Mar Lodge, and honoured the Countess of Fife with a visit. The Prince Consort and Prince Alfred went out deerstalking. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Helena, the Duke of Newcastle, the Hon. Mrs. Gordon, Miss Horsfield, Sir James Clark, Mr. Ramard, and the ladies and gentlemen in waiting.

ON Friday (tonight the Queen did not leave the castle.

ON Saturday her Majesty Queen and Princess Alice, accompanied by Princess Helena and Prince Arthur, took a ride. Prince Louis of Hesse went out deerstalking. Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson had the honour of being invited to dinner.

ON Sunday the Queen and the Prince Consort, with Prince Alfred and Princess Louis of Hesse, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Dr. Pirie, Professor of Divinity of Aberdeen University, officiated.

ON Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, rode out, while the Prince Consort, with Prince Alfred, Prince Louis of Hesse, and the Duke of Newcastle, has the woods driven for deer. Countess Russell was presented to the Queen to-day on Earl Russell's elevation to the peerage. Earl and Countess Russell and Viscount Amberley (their eldest son) had the honour of being invited to dinner.

ON Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, drove to Loch Bulig

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Bishop of London preached last Sunday in the English Church at Lausanne.

According to present arrangements the Bishop of Victoria will consecrate Dr. Hoagking on Oct. 4.

The Norwich Diocesan Choral Society will hold its annual meeting in Norwich Cathedral on Tuesday next.

The Bishop of Salisbury opened the new school at Chilbrook, Wilts, on Saturday evening.

On Sunday week the Rev. R. Harris, now in the ninety-eighth year of his age, preached at St. George's Church, Preston, of which he has been incumbent sixty-four years.

The Rev. Dr. Hodgson of Durham have elected the Right Rev. Dr. Charles Perry to the bishopric of Durham, and the confirmation will take place in Canterbury Cathedral on Oct. 2.

The Cathedral Church of Lichfield, having undergone much restoration, will be reopened on Tuesday, Oct. 22, when the annual festival of the provincial Synod will be held there.

On Tuesday afternoon the parish church of Fordham All Saints, in the diocese of Rochester, which has been erected at a cost of £7,000, was reopened for worship, the sermon being preached by the Bishop.

The foundation-stone of a new church at Havelock Park, New Southsea, was laid on the 19th inst., by the Ven. Archdeacon Jacob, D.D., Canon of Winchester. The church will be dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and will contain 1,000 sittings, all the pews to be appropriated to the parishioners.

The parish church of St. Benedict, Wood Enderby, was reopened on Sunday last, after having been entirely rebuilt, under the superintendence of Mr. Hackforth, of Boston. The church now consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, with a tower and spire at the west end of the nave. The first stone of the new chapel connected with St. John's College, Hurstpierpoint, was laid on Tuesday by the Provost of the college. The Bishop of Oxford officiated on the occasion, and at the dinner, which followed in the afternoon, the same dignitary urged the importance of providing the Metropolis with a complete education for the middle classes.

The foundation-stone of St. Luke's National Schools, Bedfordstreet, Longton, was laid on Saturday afternoon, the 17th inst., by Mrs. Darby, the Rectoress. The site, which cost £1000, was presented by Robert Gardner, Esq. These schools, when finished, will accommodate for 750 day scholars and 500 Sunday scholars.

The annual commemoration of Trinity College, Glenalmond, took place on Wednesday, and the proceedings were of more than usual interesting from the circumstance that the foundation-stone of the new hall was to be laid by Lady Burrell of Broomhall, and from the fact that, since the visitor was entertained at luncheon in the College Hall, the walls of which were lately renovated and decked with flowers.

The new Church of St. Mary, at Selly Oak, in the parish of Northfield, near Birmingham, was consecrated on the 15th inst. by the Lord Bishop of Worcester. It consists of nave and side aisles, transepts, chancel, and side-vestries on the east side, the latter for the accommodation of clergy. The spire rises to the height of 168ft, and is a prominent point in the landscape from the Lickey and Clent Hills.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—At Oxford the Rev. W. Monkhouse, Senior Fellow of Queens', the Rev. Nicholas Pocock, formerly Fellow of Corpus, and Mr. Bernard Pares, Scholar of Corpus on the Old Foundation, have announced themselves as candidates for the professorship of Queens' College. The names of the Rev. A. S. Farrar, D.D., of Bp. Auckland, and the Rev. T. R. Levy, have also been mentioned.

At Queen's College, Cambridge, on the 15th inst. the Lowmoor Prize for Bachelors will commence in the Senate House on Friday, Oct. 21, at nine o'clock a.m. The examiners are Rev. J. B. Lightfoot, of Trinity College, Archdeacon Prince, of St. John's College.

The Tyrwhitt scholarship, for medical students in Durham University under the new regulation is recommended by the Board of Council of Physicians, and the first scholar elected at Michaelmas will be held on 4th inst.

The head-mastership of Berwick-on-Tweed Grammar School has been conferred on the Rev. Robert Forsyth Scholefield, B.A., late Assistant-Classical Master of the Grammar School at Bishop's-Stortford. Mr. Marrideu graduated in 1858, and has been a second classic.

A mathematical mastership in Harrow Grammar School has been conferred on the Rev. J. C. Wilson, B.A., late Assistant-Mathematical Master at Rugby.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—Rev. W. Drake, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Coventry, to be Honorary Canon in Worcester Cathedral.—Rev. J. E. Bromby, to be Senior Classical of the Cathedral Middle Class.—Rev. C. H. Dew, to be Rector of Otterburn, Cornwall.—Rev. P. Gaskoin, to be Vicar of Ashbourne.—Rev. Henry Currie, of Hepburn, to be Vicar of Holy Trinity, Coleridge, Crewe.—Rev. R. A. Tisdall, to be Incumbent of St. Gregory the Great, Northampton.—Rev. T. F. Morton, to be Chaplain of the Penitentiary Hospital; Rev. T. Robertson, to be Chaplain to the Duke of Marlborough.—Perpetual Curacies: Rev. G. F. Farrer, to Bitchip, Kent: Rev. R. T. Herrington, to Dehington, Devon; Rev. E. Lewis, to Hoed: Devon; Rev. F. Williamson, to Sabrewin, Devon. Curacies: Rev. J. W. Marshall, to St. Martin, Birmingham: Rev. J. Stubbins, to Iver, Wilts: Rev. C. H. Taylor, to St. John's, Southsea-by-the Pleasure: Rev. T. A. Spurgeon, to West Ham, Essex.—Colonial Missionaries: Rev. Jabez Cornelius Whitley, B.A., of Queens' College, Cambridge, to Sydney, New South Wales: Rev. Henry Hutchinson, to Sandy Bay, Tasmania.—Rev. Dr. Kay, Principal of the Battersea Training College, and Mr. C. H. Bills, of St. Augustine's College, and Mr. J. W. Cox, of Magdalen College, to be Classical Masters; Mr. Bills to be Assistant-Master, to the diocese of Middleton, Mr. Cox to be Head-Master of the Grammar School at Yoeva Point; and Mr. C. F. Parker, of St. Aidan's Theological College, Birkenhead, to the diocese of Grahamstown, South Africa.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Queen has approved of Don Howard Fox as Vice-Consul at Falmouth in the Republic of Ocre.

On Wednesday the first stone of a proposed monument to Bishop Hooper was laid at Gloucester on the site of his martyrdom.

The Earl of Derby has laid the first stone of the engineering agreed to by the recommendation of the Marine Committee to provide a new life-boat for the Hayle district, at the disposal and use of their Liverpool branch of the service.

A silver cradle has been presented to the Mayoress of Wisbech by the members of the Corporation and private friends to record the birth of a son during the year of the mayoralty of Alderman Thomas Lynn, Esq., of Wisbech, 1864.

A society has been formed in Dublin to promote the employment of women in suitable industrial pursuits. It is established as a branch of the London Society for similar objects, and through it is in connection with the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science. The employment which the society seeks to introduce will be that of telegraphic clerks, in addition to the needs of the workers and the existing market for labour.

At the opening of a Baptist place of worship at Bristol on Wednesday week a gentleman who was present, and who gave up his beath, which seems to be seriously impaired, and the nurvic conduct of the mob which could not be quelled by the presence of the police, was much disturbed. There was much disquietment and great noise made because he declined to stand uncovered, and to go out in the open air. He was compelled to do so, and was seen to down by a rope from the window to foten the police.

The Worcester and Hereford section of the Midland Railway was opened throughout yesterday week. The first train left Worcester at nine o'clock in the morning, and reached Hereford in about forty minutes past four. The new line from Malvern Hills to Hereford is twenty-one miles in length, and runs through the Oakwood with the Severn and the West Midland Railway, and forms an important link of railway communication between the Welsh and West districts and Oxfordshire, London, and the Midland districts.

THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAY.—This line is fast reaching its way into the heart of the City. From the Great Western line at Paddington to the Victoria Station it is completed. At that station it has been carried under the Marylebone-road, or as it used to be called the New road. Between the Edgware-road and Baker-street Bridge the line will occupy the centre of that road, and from the church to Harley-street the tunnel is perfectly finished. Owing to the building of the Post Office at Trinity Church Square the line will have a little diverged, and are brought under the ornamental grounds as Farringdon-road and in the Farringdon-road. This will occasion the removal of one or two of the mansions in the crescent, and considerably mar its architectural beauties. Between Portland-road and Baker-street various owners like best in a loop, and thence to King's-cross the permanent archway is, with the exception of the short distance between Farringdon-street and the goods station to Bishop's-gate-street, complete. At King's-cross the line runs into the Valley of the Fleet, which it crosses for a short distance, until it is covered by the present buildings at Clerkenwell. On this section of the line there will be a station at or near the present railway station, and yesterday was designed as the last day of occupation to those who rented the houses in Arlington-street and the other streets branching off the King's-lan-road, which stand in the way of the line. The heaviest portions of the works is that between the Farringdon-road and Victoria-street, Holborn, as it has been necessary to tunnel through a hill of stiff clay.

The Board of Inland Revenue have decided to allow the drawback on paper to all stationers whether they are also printers or not.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Queen has given orders for the appointment of Captain Hugh Dunlop, R.N., to be Companion of the Order of the Bath.

The Lords of the Admiralty have just conferred a pension for wounds and distinguished service" on Captain Peter, R.N., chief constable of Cambridge and Huntingdon.

A general promotion of naval officers has been issued, to the effect that the Secretary of State for War has authorised the payment of one farthing per pound for all the shot fired from carbine and half-grass which may be manufactured.

John Grier, seaman of the Excellent, has been sentenced, by a courtmartial at Portsmouth, to two years' penal servitude, for maliciously striking Lieutenant Kennedy, and using threatening language to Lieutenant Rogers, of the Excellent.

News has just reached England of the death at Simla of Colonel Sir George Berkeley, at the age of forty-four. General Grant has succeeded to the office, after a short interval, of Adjutant-General. Lieut. East Huntley, Scots, a lieutenant only seven years of age, Captain Parry Dr Winton, and Lieutenant T. Hodges, Royal Artillery, are dead.

General Sir James Hope Grant, G.C.B., was presented on Thursday week with the freedom of the city of Perth as a mark of admiration for his services in India. The presentation took place in the City Hall, and a large and distinguished company of burgesses and gentlemen assembled to testify their regard for the gallant general.

The squadron under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir A. Milne, K.C.B., on the coasts of North America and the West Indies, consists of twenty effective vessels and eight others. There are ten second-rates, four corvettes, and six sloops, eight sloops, four are on the coast of Mexico, two at Bermuda, and the others are several leagues. The squadron is manned by 2,000 seamen, by 600 men, and mounts between 400 and 500 guns.

The defences of Chatham, from the water side, are being steadily pushed forward, and the new forts seaward are now open to the Medway for its course is fully mounted with Armstrong guns of the heaviest calibre. The defences of the Thames, however, are not yet complete. No change now in progress are fully carried out, this important naval station will be entirely secure from the sea.

A terrible crime was committed at Preston barracks last Saturday. A private named Wilson, belonging to the 1st battalion of the 60th regiment, was ordered to be confined within barracks for a certain period. He, however, thought proper to leave the barracks without leave, and was found in his old set, watching his opportunity, fired at his commanding officer, Captain Campbell, as that gentleman was passing in front of the guard-house, accompanied by Adjutant Masham. The ball passed through Colonel Grafton's body and wounded Captain Campbell. Wilson was then shot himself on Sunday and the Adjutant on Monday. The assassin is in custody.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Last Saturday the members of the 8th company of the London Scottish Rifle Volunteers, under the command of Captain Wheelhouse, went to Wimbledon, provided by Mr. James Duke Hill, who was by Sergeant Murray's the second prize in the Queen's Prize Match, and who had the honour to be the highest number of hits—after a tie between Corporals Davison and Sergeant Murray—in the Queen's Prize.

The 1st Surrey Administrative Battalion assembled on Wednesday week in the Corn Exchange, Kingston, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Campbell of Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell. A large assemblage of spectators was present. The 21st Surrey Artillery, accompanied by the band from the Victoria Docks and from the 42nd Rifle Corps, is now fully organised, the whole corps having been inspected by Major Rev. A. S. Farrer, R.A., assisted by Commandant Barnes as to the head of this force. A challenge-match has been made at Liverpool between the Liverpool Volunteers and the Irish Rifles (Bentley) Rifle Volunteers. The firing was favourable to the Bentley force, but the match was declared unfinished, and another match is to be fired or renewed at Wesley. On Tuesday the 13th Essex (Witham) Corps competed for a series of 21 in the Queen's Prize, which was won by Lieutenant Cole.

The town of Maidstone presented on Thursday week a scene of unusual animation on the occasion of the annual inspection of the Kent Rifles. There was a review of the whole of the artillery and rifle corps in their county, amounting to about 3,000 men. In the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Lintott (who delivered the prizes to the successful competitors at the annual county gathering), the command of the whole force was, by special request, handed to Private Andrews, of the 9th Norfolk Arsenal Rifles, together with the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. In the course of the day the companies were drawn up in order, and Viscount Sydney, with Colonel Lavie, Lieutenant-Colonel Lintott, Major Rev. A. S. Farrer, R.A., and his staff proceeded from rank to rank; the whole force then marched past at slow and quick time in excellent order, and the inspection was highly satisfactory. The accuracy and precision of the file-firing from more than one battalion could scarcely be surpassed. The Duke of Cambridge, Colonel-in-Chief, and other distinguished officers of the several corps assembled, they were addressed by Lord Sydney.

The Inspection of the Volunteers of Cambridgeshire by Lieutenant-Colonel Edwardes and Major Dashwood, retired list scores (Brighton) Artillery Volunteers, took place on Saturday last. The 1st and 2nd battalions of the corps were carried out in an excellent manner.

The annual meeting of the Volunteers of the Isle of Wight was held at Newtown-on-Tuesday week. More than 300 volunteers were present in the course of the day, and were marched under the command of Captain Wilson. The after parade was held in the field of the Earl and Countess Yarborough, the latter of the county cite at the hall.

The annual meeting of the Volunteers of Northumberland took place on Tuesday week. The ceremony challenge cup was won by Berwick-upon-Tweed. The prize was for a silver cup, to be fired for by a number of points at 500 yards, which was also won by Private Dorrell. The shooting during the day was generally excellent. Mr. Wm. Orde, of Nunnykirk, was driven by Corporal J. Jeffs at the 200 yards' stage.

The 1st Middlesex (Victoria Park) Rifle Volunteer Rifle Association commenced in the Deer Park, Shooklegh, on Monday, and terminated on Thursday. The number of rifle pits were divided into three sections, the First Administrative, and the Second, or Birmingham Battalions, and ten at each of the Third, or Staffordshire Battalions. Each company of volunteers were selected from each of these divisions for the usual number of rounds at 100 and 200 yards, and 15 rounds at 500 yards. The 1st Middlesex, 200 points, and obtained 415, and Mr. J. W. Lennox, pits 4, 5, both gentlemen being awarded the first prize of £5 each. The Birmingham Battalion, one of the companies in the 1st battalion then contended for money prizes at 300 and 500 yards, and Mr. W. H. Over, of Rugby, was the first prize winner, scoring 11 points after a tie with Sergeant Hayes, of Coventry, who obtained the second prize of £4, and Private Wall, of the 1st Middlesex Volunteer Artillery, pits 8, 9, and 45, as the third best shot. Twenty-five riflemen then contended for the "Challenge," and were divided into two sections by Colonel G. F. Clarke, of Ulleu, which was scored by Mr. C. Poole, of the 2nd Surrey, and Mr. Hutchinson, of the 1st Middlesex, pits 4, 5, and 45, respectively. The latter gentleman was declared the winner by the largest aggregate number of hits at the longest range, and Mr. Poole was second. Mr. Wm. Hall, of the 1st Middlesex, pits 8, 9, 10, 11, 18; 6th Coventry, 24; 7th Coventry, 24; Rugby, 29; Warrick and Leamington, 30; Stafford, 31; 1st Middlesex, 32; and 2nd Surrey, 33 points respectively.

On Thursday week the encampment of the Berkshire Volunteers on the Queen's Course, Newbury, commenced. The first day was taken up by a distribution of the prizes won by the successful competitors. The battalion was commanded by the Marquis of Abingdon, and the various evolutions and movements, under the command of Colonel Loyd Lindsay, Major Sir Peel Haworth, and Captain Hall, were carried out with great precision. A review was restored about on the hill to witness the proceedings. Lady Overstone, in an open carriage and four, accompanied by Lord Overstone, on the part of the Berkshire Volunteers, presented the prizes to the successful shots. The following are the names of the prize winners:—The cup will only be shot for. The regimental prize, a silver cup, value £20, was won by Private Hall, Co. (16 points); second prize as same stage, value £1 Sergeant-Major Cole, Co. (15 points); second prize, a silver cup, value £10, was won by Lieut. Ellen (7 points); second prize, £1, same range, Mr. Hollis. A silver cup, value £10, was given for the challenge cup, presented by Colonel Loyd Lindsay to the company making the highest aggregate score while shooting for the regimental prizes, won by Maidenhead company, who made 192 points. A silver cup, presented by Major Sir Paul Hunter for the greatest number of hits at 500 yards, won by Mr. Prinsep. The County Challenge Cup, with a purse of £20, and the bronze medal of the National Association, Mr. Smith, Windsor Great Park, second prize, Mr. Plumber, third, Mr. Nicholson, were presented by Mrs. Lindsay, after an appropriate introductory speech.

A fine was presented to the North Cotswold Corps of rifle volunteers by the Worcestershire Chronicle on the 15th inst., the contest having taken place on the ruins of Compton House, which was purchased for Charles I. in the civil wars, and destroyed by fire to prevent the possibility of its falling into the hands of the rebels.

The members of the 4th Middlesex (North London) Rifles recently had a competition for prizes. A rule, presented by Lord Truro, Lieutenant-Colonel commanding, was won by Sergeant T. Lavrie. The same gentleman also won the rifle presented by Lieutenant Wilmotty for competition by the 4th company. The silver cup, presented by the officers to the 2nd company, was won by Private G. Williams—the second prize being taken by Private King. Early in the ensuing month a silver cup, presented by Mr. C. Wyman, and a rifle, given by Mr. C. Poole, will be contended for by the members of the corps.

The annual inspection of the 2nd Hants Artillery by Col. Turner, R.A., took place at the Government Recreation Ground. The corps under the command of Captain Gale. After some gunnery-practice at the Spur Battery they proceeded to the Common, where they were inspected by Col. Turner and went through various evolutions, as 1,000 men from the garrison. At the conclusion of the inspection the corps marched into the grounds of the Council-house, and formed into three sides of a square. Lieut. Arnold, the adjutant, briefly stating that he was much pleased and gratified at the manner in which the corps had gone through the exercises. The first prize awarded to Captain Frost's rendezvous at Southsea, where they were entertained on the lawn.

The second day's meeting of the 3rd Kent Rifle Volunteers' camp at Wedgwoby were at the range near Newpors for a silver drinking-flask, a silver cup, and an ornamic clock, given respectively by Mr. Wootton, Mr. Wyatt, Lieutenant Tomb, and Ensign Pittis. The ranges were 200, 300, and 400 yards from the firing-point, five rounds at each distance. Marine, Mr. Woodford tied, making 20 points each; Mr. Warne, 19. The tie was decided by the number of hits, which resulted in Mr. Woodford winning the first. For the Lieutenant's prize, distance 200, 300, and 400 yards, five rounds at each, Mr. Woodford again won, making 18 points. The Captain's prize, distance 200, 500, and 700 yards, five rounds at each, Dr. Castle won, scoring 18 points.

The annual shooting-match of the 3rd Dorset (Dorchester) Rifle Corps took place at the Union Cricket-ground, on the Grimbald's Crown range, value £6, with the bronze champion medal, was won by Private A. Esson. The Mayor's plate, value £6, with the silver champion medal, was won by Private Joseph Homer. The borough members' Whitworth rifle, value £20, was won by Private Joseph Homer. The county prize, a Malvern badge, value £6 6s., given by the Lieutenant and Ensign, was won by Private T. Homer. A silver crenitage, value £5, given by Lieutenant at the previous contest, was won by Private J. T. Esson. The members and several other military guests of the corps were entertained at a banquet given by Sir Mayor, Mr. J. F. Hodges, in the Townhall.

The first annual Government inspection of the 3rd Devon Artillery Volunteers took place at Sidmouth on Wednesday week, under favourable auspices, the weather being in every respect that of spectators. The movements, consisting of all the ordinary evolutions of a field-day, were executed in a manner that elicited the general approval of the officer in charge of the district. Much expressed himself highly gratified with the appearance of the men.

The competitions comprising the 1st Administrative battalion of West Riding of Yorkshire Rifle Volunteers, under the command of Colonel the Earl De Grey and Ripon, were brought to a conclusion on Saturday last by a match at Stanley Ferry by Major G. G. Harcum, Government Inspector of Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Brandling, Lieutenant-Colonel Bye and Compton, Major Hughes, and other officers. The usual battalion evolutions having been carried out, the prizes were presented to the successful competitors. A great review of Yorkshire volunteers has been fixed to take place on the Queen's Birthday next year.

The Durham County Rifle Volunteer shooting competition was opened on Thursday week at the Rifle Butts, near Chester-le-Street, by the Earl of Durham, with a match between the Durham and Tyneside Rifles. The matches were fired at 200 yards, and the first shot in each team was fired by the Earl of Durham. On the conclusion of the match the competitors sat down to dinner, the Earl of Durham presiding. The challenge cup, given by Mr. H. Fenwick, M.P., was carried off by Sergeant Hughes, of the 1st Durham Rifle Volunteers. The cup was won at long range, but the weather was very unfavourable, the wind blowing half a gale. The Durham Light Infantry Volunteers, of Bishop Auckland, under Captain Francis Jackson, of the same corps, winning the second prize of £10. On Saturday evening the prizes were distributed to the rifle corps of the county Volunteers and a team fight, in which latter the Newcastle Volunteers took part, by the successful pair of the Duke of Durham at Durham Castle.

At a meeting of the Artillery and Rifle Volunteer officers of the city and county of Edinburgh, held on Wednesday week, it was resolved to form an association for the city and county of Edinburgh. There was a numerous attendance, Colonel Trotter, M.P., presiding, and Mr. Balfour, M.P., present.

The following prizes have recently been shot for by the 2nd Linlithgowshire Volunteers:—The first prize, a silver cup, value £5 5s., was won by Pte. Ure, 15 to the second; which were won by Sergeant Robertson and Private Stalking. 2nd, Mrs. Wilson, 14; Sergeant Robertson, 13; and Private Stalking, 12. The Officers' prize of £1 5s.—£2 2s to the first and £1 1s. to the second; which were won by Private Smith Grieve, 15, and Pte. Ure, 14. The silver cup medal, which was won by Sergeant Robertson. 5th. A silver medal, which was shot for by the members of the Bathgate prizes; which was won by Private Kirkwood.

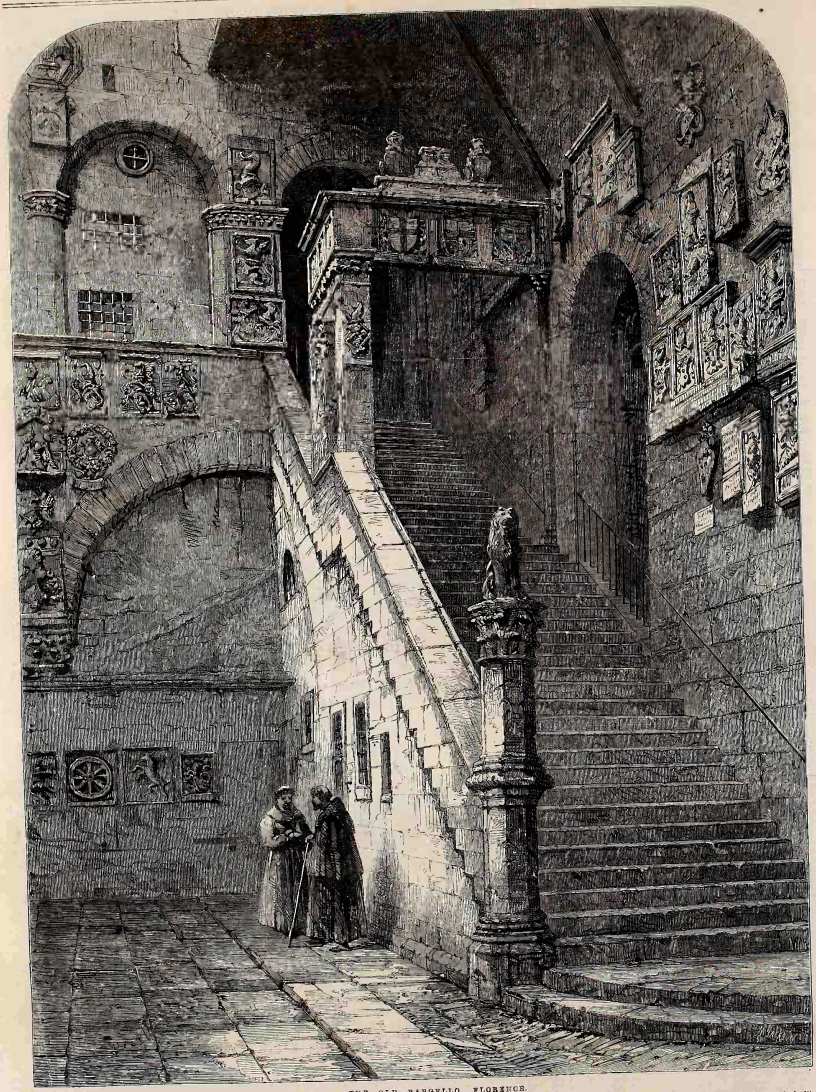
THE ST. GEORGE'S CHALLENGE VASE.—It is intended to offer to the volunteer battalions of Great Britain a handsome prize for annual competition, and the Council have a few of the conditions under which it is proposed the race proposed—That a piece of plate be presented by Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. H. Lindsay, on the part of the Council of St. George, to be annually competition by the volunteer rifle battalions of Great Britain, and that it be called the St. George's Challenge Vase—That the number of shots to be fired at which shall not be less than 150 guineas. That the ranges be 200 and 500 yards, with five shots in each range. That no battalion be allowed to enter for the vase battalion for three years consecutively, it shall become the exclusive property of such battalion, but that on the entrance fee each year (fixed at £5) for the purchase of another challenge vase, to be presented to the country upon the same conditions. That the number of marksmen per battalion be 25 (not to be 5s.) the score amount of which is made up of points gained by the 25 marksmen. That the battalion winning the vase for the first time have the name of the battalion engraved upon it, and that it be returned to the Council of St. George, to be competed for by the battalions in the following year, to be held and shot for as a record of the contest in which it has proved itself successful.

A letter in the Dennis Zeitung gives an account of a visit just paid by the Empress of Austria to the British ship of the line Queen at Corfu. The Queen was surrounded by a crowd of small boats, full of visitors to greet the Empress. The ship was dressed out with flags, yards were manned, and the Queen's band played the Austrian anthem as soon as the Empress stood on the top of the masts, welcomed her Majesty with three hearty British cheers. As she sat down on deck the admiral presented to her the officers of the corps of the Austrian national hymn. She went over all the ship, examining everything with much interest.

BREAK-DOWN OF THE GREAT EASTERN.—On her voyage across the Atlantic the Great Eastern, when about 200 miles off Cape Clear, encountered very much smoother weather than she had met with in the Channel, and she rendered her rudder useless. Many of the passengers were seasick, and the ship's company were somewhat alarmed at the prospect of the return that the lavishman was exposed to imminent danger, and the passengers were much concerned at the prospect of going back. The ship was duly notified to the public, and, happening to be in the neighbourhood of the ship, the agent of her line, Mr. Forwood, of Liverpool, was enabled to put into Cork Harbour on Tuesday evening without any difficulty.

THE NEW SAVINGS-BANK MOVEMENT.—A circular has been issued by the authorities of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway to the effect that a scan to be called the Railway Savings-Bank will be established forthwith. His business will be to ride on the seat placed for him on the tenders, and to keep a deposit-account with each of the police and fifty to 250 of the trains, as that in case of any accident to any of the carriages on the train, or of any signal from the guard, or any other circumstance requiring that the train be detained, he will be at once in communication with the engineman, and will be able to give the necessary orders. It will be his duty, moreover, to have charge of the carriages forming the train, to see that, in every respect, they are in a good condition for the conveyance of passengers, and to be careful to observe carefully the running of the different carriages, and to take note of any irregularity in the working of the machinery. In case unnecessary delay occurs, and to enter a note of this and of any other circumstance requiring to be recorded in a report-book for the use of the directors.

THE NEW SAVINGS-BANK MOVEMENT.—On Monday the new Post-office Savings-Bank system for enabling the public to invest the deposit of small savings, and for making the General Post Office available for that purpose, under the direct security of the State, came into operation throughout the metropolis and the provinces. About three hundred of these new receptacles for savings were opened simultaneously in London and the country; little or no organisation for the purpose being required beyond the authority of the Postmaster-General to the clerks of the various letter-receiving houses to receive deposits for remittances to the principal office, and to repay when called upon all sums so deposited with interest at the rate of 2½ per cent, repayment to be made not later than ten days after demand. The amount of business transacted on Monday at the Post Office savings-bank far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of those who arranged the detail of the scheme, a very large number of persons, male and female, of all ages and classes, having become depositors.



THE OLD BARGELLO, FLORENCE.

was situated was popularly called by the same name. But the grand old castle, which has for many centuries been doomed to bear that ill-omened appellation in Florence, was not always a Bargello. It was the work of Arnolfo, the celebrated architect of the cathedral, and was built to be the "Palazzo della Signoria," the residence of the chief magistrate, and the chief seat of the Republican Government, ages before the more celebrated and still more magnificent edifice now known as the Palazzo Vecchio. The old palace was built by the thriving and increasing Republic for that purpose. When Republican Florence became too great and too grand to be contented with the fine old halls built for it by Arnolfo, when the citizens required a "sala dei cinque cento"—a room fit for a council board of five hundred members—then the older building was degraded into a prison. And few chapters of the history of the rough old Republican times, or of the subsequent smoother but worse times of the Mediean principality, can be got through without records of troubles heads exposed at the Bargello windows, or decapitations in the centre of its picturesque old courtyard.

When deposed from its high estate to these vile uses the building was in many respects altered to match its altered fortunes. The wonderfully beautiful "loggia," or open arcade, around the con-tral court, was closed with hideous dead walls; and the magnificent ci-devant council hall was cut up into no less than five stories, or rather layers, of small prison cells. In short, the admirable Townhall—to translate its old title and use into familiar English—became an infamously bad prison, and continued such almost to the last days of the ousted Government. It has now been (the work is not quite but very nearly completed) restored to its original arrangement and appearance. The loggia around the court has been opened, the old hall cleared of the multiplicity of floors which cut up its magnificent height into five stories, and all traces of its prison life removed. An architect would at once appreciate the quality of the masonry which after so many centuries could bear to have five floors laid across the empty extent of a vast hall removed without danger. The chapel, too, in which exists the celebrated contemporary fresco portrait of Dante, has been completely restored.

And, now that Florence possesses once again her original seat of Government, to what use is the fine old building to be put?

A very happy idea has been started, and accepted by the municipality, to make it into an exclusively mediæval museum. The noble old halls and corridors are admirably adapted for the purpose; and the wealth of objects illustrative of mediæval art and mediæval life still existing in Florence, but so scattered as to be unavailable and almost unknown, is very great. "Still existing," we say, because the quantity of objects of that kind which has of late years been carried out of the country is almost incredible. The museums of every country in Europe, besides innumerable private collections, have received the bulk of their treasures of mediæval art in every branch from Tuscany. The mine seems absolutely inexhaustible; and the marvellous quantity of that which has been taken away, as well as the still large amount of that which remains in site, is a very striking proof and illustration of the extraordinary wealth, especially artistic wealth, that existed in Tuscany in her palmy days.

When the numerous small collections preserved, but in many cases unknown to the Florentines themselves and never dreamed of by strangers, shall be brought together in the ci-devant Bargello, the building and its contents will form one of the most interesting sights in Europe. It will be a very important aid to the means of artistic education existing in Florence, which there, for Italians and foreigners, forms a large portion of the business and life of the community; and the change in the destination of Arnolfo's master-piece will mark very characteristically and significantly the commencement of the new Italian era.

"WHO CAN THIS BE?" BY C. R. LESLIE, R.A., IN THE SHEEPSHANKS COLLECTION, SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

"WHO CAN THIS BE?"

BY C. R. LESLIE, R.A.

Leslie's quiet humour and dramatic tendency are fairly illustrated in this little work, which was painted by him in his best and ripest period, having been exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1839. A portly and pure-ground burgomaster walking in the public garden of his town, over which he presides (the prim-cut hedges and borders of which are of the true school of Dutch gardening), with his young and handsome wife leaning on his arm, is surprised to receive a most courtly salute from a young gallant in crimson coat and broad, betufted beaver. The old gentleman shows by the expression of his features that he is puzzled perhaps not without a slight suspicion that he is not the sole object of the delicate attention; and with something like misgiving, as he mechanically raises his hand to acknowledge the salute, he seems to inwardly ejaculate "Who can this be?" The lady, who is more alive to the motives of the intruder, seems to wish to avoid his glance; and, with an assumed air of unconsciousness and indifference, pretends to be wonderfully engaged by the gambols of her little pet spaniel. This clever little picture, which forms part of the collection munificently presented to the nation by Mr. Sheepshanks, and at present located at the South Kensington Museum, is solidly painted, in a full tone of colour.

MUSIC.

The Hereford Musical Festival, otherwise called "The Meeting of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford," was held last week. This is the smallest of the three provincial meetings which still keep up standing and established on a permanent footing; the others being the festivals of Birmingham and Norwich. The "Meeting of the Three Choirs" is the most ancient of the three, having existed for a century and a half; but it is on a much smaller scale than the others, and less remarkable in a musical point of view, for no exertion appears ever to have been made to impart to it variety and interest by the introduction of new works. Its halls of fame have always consisted of the standing dishes of the day—with a ballad-opera vocalis, cabalised to satisfy the appetite of the many: but not to stimulate the sated palate of the musical epicure. Hence it is that these meetings, good and pleasant as they are, do nothing towards the encouragement of art, and afford little and no food for the comments of the critic. They are carried on successfully, nevertheless; and that more especially in consideration of their object, which is of very great importance and interest. This object is to maintain a fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy in the dioceses of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford; a district in which the livings of the parochial clergy are generally speaking, smaller than in any other part of England. In the above three dioceses there are one hundred and forty-seven benefices of less than a hundred pounds a year; and there are now ten widows and seven orphans who are applicants for relief from the fund raised by these meetings. How little indeed, must in a poor and remote corner of th island, but in a rich and populous district in the heart of the kingdom, we cannot pretend to say; but every one, however attached he or she may be to ecclesiastical establishment, must feel that such a state of things ought not to be, and calls for amendment. In the meantime the present case is a considerable one in mitigating, at least, this crying evil; and they are, therefore, encouraged and supported by the fashionable inhabitants, both lay and clerical, of the district in which they are held.

Respecting the meeting at Hereford there is, as usual, little to say in a musical point of view. The miscellaneous performances the ordinary consisted of the following pieces:—Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Handel's "Samson," Haydn's "Seasons," "Hymn of Praise," Mozart's "Requiem," the first part of Haydn's "Seasons," and "The Messiah." The evening concerts were made up of a very miscellaneous selection, and only things which the world had tried, that made some approach to novelty was Benedict's very beautiful cantata, "Undine;" though this, since its first production, has given at the Norwich Festival, had been twice or thrice performed in London. The principal singers were Mdlle. Tietjens, Miss Dolby, and Miss Susan Pyne; Mdme. Dolby, Mrs. Weiss, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Winn. The band and chorus were small in comparison with those of Birmingham and Norwich, but were on the whole efficient; and the whole performances were well conducted by Mr. Townshend Smith. The pecuniary results were satisfactory. The collections for the assembly at the doors of the cathedral, it is stated, have been larger than at any previous meeting; and, however, that may be, the fund, it is estimated, will be benefited to an amount exceeding £1000.

THE THEATRES.

SADLER'S WELLS.—A revival of Shakspeare's "King Henry IV., (Second Part) was successfully exhibited on Saturday. Parts of this play have been frequently done, but the whole has not been put upon the stage in performance at all is a noteworthy circumstance. The piece is entirely a history, scarcely a drama. Its only object is to continue the account of the life of Hal, prior to his death; and to show the connection between Falstaff and his crew, with Justice Shallow, are thrown in as makeweights. However, though the play is as episodical as it can be, and in detail the poet descends to the lowest and meanest, not to say the most wicked, portions of life. There are in it, nevertheless, passages which Tennent are scarcely to the taste of even mixed audiences; yet, strange to say, while the London audience they possess a purity and delicacy that positive is in indulging in the most riotous enjoyment of the humour. Mr. Phelps in this play performs two parts—the Fourth Harry and Mr. Charles Shallow; the former character he has carefully studied by his son. The scene of the death was admirably rendered. In Shallow, Mr. Phelps has already made a high reputation, and in the present occasions we pointed out fully the characteristics of the assumption. Sterility in his individual forms was never better displayed than Mr. Barrett's Falstaff is excellent. The play is placed on the boards with the appropriate spectacular accompaniments, and merits prolonged patronage.

STRAND.—Another little piece has been produced at this theatre—a slight domestic sketch entitled "Love and Jealousy." As Tyrone has here adopted from the French vaudeville entitled "Au Travers de Regnar," by Mr. C. S. Chetnam. Miss Marie Wilton, as Louise d'Harcourt, plays on green spectacles, and makes herself look like an old woman, to guard her beauty from the over-ogrant attentions of the young officer of the French regiment under Louis XV., Monsieur de Bercy (Mr. Belford), nevertheless, makes her his toast; and thus the lady, in her proper character, tortures him a little, insisting on his marrying her forthwith. In the last scene all is cleared up to Louise, and the antigone dame is proved. With such performers as Mr. Belford and Miss Wilton, such characters as these were well supported, and the new drama was accordingly successful.

GEM THEATRE.—This little theatre, in Catherine-street, Strand, was opened on Tuesday for a dramatic performance, when "Delicate Ground," "The Merchant of Venice," and "Boots at the Swan," were performed by a company of amateurs who were not altogether ignorant of their business. The room, which is very elegant, was crowded with theatrical loungers.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

A MINERAL WATER at Baden, called the Marquelle, has been discovered by M. Jonnen, the eminent chemist, to be rich in lithia. As the chemical of lithia is a very good solvent of calculous gravel, this spring will no doubt acquire additional medical importance.

A SLATE QUARRY has been produced from the oil of cotton by M. Kuhlmann, who has subjected its properties to rigid scrutiny before communicating them to the Academy of Sciences at Paris. The slate has many and advantages as set forth in the Comptes Rendus.

M. QUETELET, the eminent natural philosopher of Brussels, has announced to the Royal Academy of Belgium that he will publish, in the course of the year, a work entitled "Physique du Monde," which will contain a resume of the observations of his valued friend, the late Baron Alexander de Humboldt, on the physical world and his work.

NOMENCLATURE OF NEW BEASTS.—At a recent meeting of the French Academy M. Levrelier maintained his idea of ceasing to give names to animals from their resemblance to other animals, and adopting a scientific and therefore more exact one. He instanced the rhinoceros, which he proposed to call "Monoceros," and the hippopotamus, which he wished to be named "Potamobius," as being more in accordance with the opinion opposed to that of this great naturalist.

MINIUM (red lead), as we learn by the Chemist, has been employed by shoemakers to colour the prepared leather to imitate morocco. The more expensive red ones. The shavings are simply washed with a solution of the carbonate of potash, and afterwards with muriatic acid. The large quantity of shavings so coloured have been seized in the market. The discovery will make a considerable saving to many leather manufacturers.

THE PIPING CROW OR MAGPIE OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—It is not uncommon for eggs of the same species of birds to vary so much both in size and colour that it is difficult to say to which of the species they belong. In some species. Dr. G. Bennett, in a communication to the Zoological Society, states that this is particularly the case in the eggs of the piping crow. On Aug. 26, 1851," says Mr. E. Bamay, who forwarded specimens to Dr. Bennett, "I found a nest of the piping crow containing four eggs. I have no variety of the eggs of this bird, and so much do they differ from each other that, had I not taken them from the nest, I could not have believed that they were the eggs of the same bird. All the young birds I have taken from the nest have had the brown eggs. The white eggs I have found in the nest of the crow from its size; but now in May (1850) changing the plumage at the breast to black. The eggs of the crow are rather smaller than those of the piping crow."

NUTRITION OF BONE.—In 1842 Chossat experimented on starving pigeons, and found that they lost about one-third of the weight of their food a certain quantity of calcareous salts, their blood, instead of imbibing in the process of nutrition, deposited a certain quantity of calcareous salts in the bony tissue, and thus in a space of time varying with the life and character of the animal, the whole of the calcareous salts of the bones were absorbed and death ensued. Chossat did not, however, endeavour to explain by chemical analysis the phenomena of which he was the author, or by what means the osseous tissue is destroyed. This purpose M. Alphonse Milne-Edwards has undertaken, and the results of his researches are published by the same physician in rigid analysis, the result of which, he says, confirm the opinion that the bones undergo in the living body a kind of chemical solution, and combine with lime with caseine. M. Edwards has also endeavoured to ascertain whether the bones are subjected to the same alternations of decay and renewal in the constitution by analogous compounds—e.g., salts of iron, manganese, or magnesia. The conclusion at which he arrives is that the bones are not only the egg, but not with bony tissue, in the constitution of which these salts enter, but that they are subject to the same laws of decay and renewal as what of an exceptional character, eliminating from the system such substances as are useless or developed in the course of nutrition.

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF PLANTS.—The physical influence of the Alps on vegetation has been studied by M. Martins, who has contributed a paper on the subject to the Philosophic Society of Paris. He discriminates the effects of the mountains under two heads. First, attributes it to complex chemical action, others are in merely a physical and mechanical way. He adds a long list of plants which, according to M. M. Cosalpon believes the trunk to be strewn the above-mentioned opinions. We cannot here enter into the details of the arguments which he adduces in each, such as cosmic, to which he due the presence of a maritime flora on the summit of the Pyrenees, and the absence of the same flora on the Alps. We refuse to recognise the physical character of the soil, its permanent condition the means by which it is worked by the hand of man, and modified by cultivation, therefore, all of which must exercise a great influence on the distribution of plants. Thus, for example, the Alps are composed of the primitive rocks, and growing on soils formed from these rocks, yet M. Cosalpon, after matured observation, has found that the greater number of species which grow on these plants to chemical action, but rather to the physical nature of those rocks by causing the retention of heat and moisture. Thus, in the Pyrenees, and in certain cases, the siliceous plants are found growing in calcareous soils, and calcareous plants in siliceous soils. The same thing occurs in the Alps, where the siliceous plants are found growing on calcareous soils, but this observation may be simulated by purely physical influences. He supports his views by examples drawn from the Pyrenees, the Alps, the Jura, the Vosges, and in La Serra, in Jura, in the Vosges, and in Auvergne. M. Cosalpon's communication excited much interest.

OZONE AND ANTOZONE.—Professor Schönbein, the discoverer of ozone, has published the substance of a communication which he has made a note on their specific differences. Certain metals, agitated in a fluid exposed to the action of ozone, become capable of decomposing peroxide. The oxygen is, so to say, polarised—i.e., separated into two kinds of ozone—ozone proper, which is the active principle of the atmosphere, and antozone, the latter only forms oxy-water, the former forms oxydes. The following are the means by which Professor Schönbein has discriminated between the two kinds of oxygen. A very dilute solution of the red prussiate and sesquioxide of iron is used to test the ozone. Prussian blue is always produced. Thus, in the air in gardens or villas between the town and the country, and in the air of the sea, in Jura, in the Vosges, and in Auvergne. M. Cosalpon's communication excited much interest.

OZONE AND ANTOZONE.—Professor Schönbein, the discoverer of ozone, has published the substance of a communication which he has made a note on their specific differences. Certain metals, agitated in a fluid exposed to the action of ozone, become capable of decomposing peroxide. The oxygen is, so to say, polarised—i.e., separated into two kinds of ozone—ozone proper, which is the active principle of the atmosphere, and antozone, the latter only forms oxy-water, the former forms oxydes. The following are the means by which Professor Schönbein has discriminated between the two kinds of oxygen. A very dilute solution of the red prussiate and sesquioxide of iron is used to test the ozone. Prussian blue is always produced. Thus, in the air in gardens or villas between the town and the country, and in the air of the sea, in Jura, in the Vosges, and in Auvergne. M. Cosalpon's communication excited much interest.

THE BRAINS OF VARIOUS SPECIES OF APES AND LEMURS have been compared by Mr. W. H. Flower, demonstrator of anatomy at Middlesex Hospital, in a paper read before the Zoological Society of London. Many links, he says, are still wanting in the chain of evidence required to establish the fact of the gradual development of the cerebral hemispheres from the lateral ventricle, and the peculiar disposition of cerebral substance which is found in the human brain. Some of these links, however, have been found existing in many distinct parts of the series appear to lead almost irresistibly to the conclusion that the progress of development in the cerebral hemispheres is deal of time to fill out, was fourth, and did not disappoint his stable. The running did not raise Marquis much in the Derby betting, and 100 to 6 was currently offered against him. The racing on the whole was exceedingly interesting; and, in fact, we hardly remember a better was exceedingly interesting; and, in fact, we hardly remember a better Doncaster Tuesday. The morning of the St. Leger was singularly short of betting incidents, and, though Cutler Ord's name was coloured (24) on the card, not a soul felt sure that she would even start, or even gave her a thought.

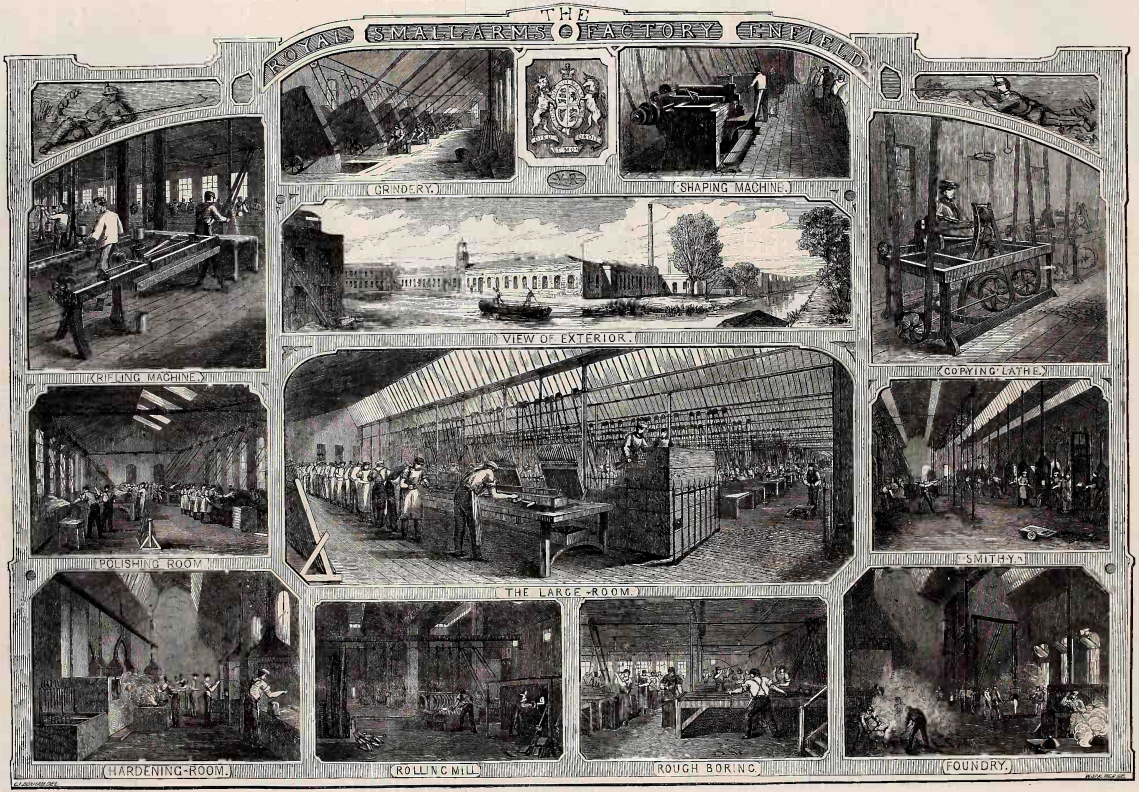
In the hour that Lord Derby's yearlings sold remarkably well, one fetching 5700 guineas, and another, by Stockwell from Mincepie, 5000, fifty fetching 4



SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 304.

REOPENING OF LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.

FOUR years have elapsed since the last partial reopening of this cathedral on the 16th of April, 1857. On and since that occasion subscriptions to the amount of about £7000 having been given and expended in further restorations, the results were on Tuesday exhibited to the public by another formal reopening of the fabric with full choral services. The Lord Bishop of Winchester, who was translated from Llandaff to Winchester, preached in the morning, and the Lord Bishop of Bangor in the afternoon. The following—to quote the last report of the Dean of Llandaff—are the principal works which have been done in the interim: "The once-ruined section of the nave has been thoroughly restored; its arcade and its western front (the latter is seen in the Engraving), its clerestory and its side aisles, rebuilt; its walls plastered, its windows glazed, and a new roof thrown over its whole span. The partition-wall (an ugly erection of the last century), which so long severed it from the portion used for public worship, has been removed, and from the western entrance the original design is once more manifest in all its beauty. The roofs of the side aisles of the eastern end have also been restored, with the exception of the two bays, which extend beyond the Chapter House, and which are separated from the others by a small vaulted chapel. The Bishop's throne and a portion of the stalls and the screen have also been nearly completed, and are fixed."

The works have all been done with the best materials and in a most substantial manner. The new roofs mentioned above are of English oak; the throne and stallwork of teak-wood and sequoia, enriched with inlaid woods of other colours. The throne has an octagonal canopy, groined within and rising to the height of 30ft., and will be adorned with panels of sculpture and figures.

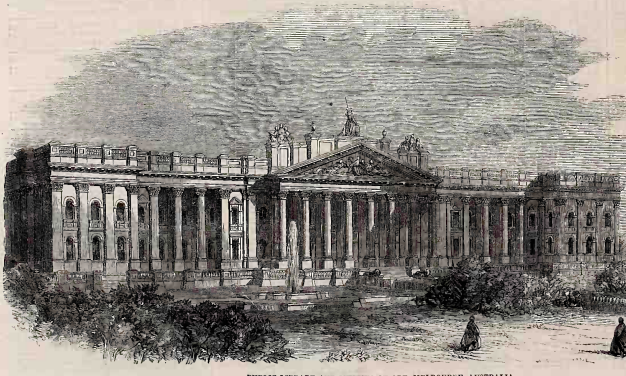
A new organ has been erected by Messrs. Gray and Davison, at a cost of £1000. The case and decoration of the pipes have been designed by the architects in union with the rest of the furniture of the choir. Thus, after the lapse of more than a hundred years, the choral service is enabled to be resumed, and will henceforth be continued. Of the View of the Cathedral West Front which we give the western end of the nave has been, as said above, restored. The northern tower, which is of the Perpendicular style, and called Jasper Tudor's Tower, remains to have its ornamental parapets replaced as they are known once to have existed. The southern tower has as yet only had the foundations and lower story constructed; the upper stages of the tower and the spire, together with the restoration of the Chapter House and many other minor works—and, it may be hoped, much further decoration of the interior—being what the Dean and Chapter trust to be enabled to carry out if the liberality of the public should furnish them with the means of so doing. The whole of these works are from the designs and under the superintendence of the diocesan architects, Messrs. Prichard and Seddon, and skilfully executed by Mr. Thomas Williams, of Canton, near Cardiff.

A valuable addition has also been made to the cathedral in the shape of paintings for the reredos by Mr. Dante Gabriel Rossetti. They consist of a large centrepiece representing an angel presenting a shepherd and a king to the Virgin and Child, and surrounded by other angels, typifying the adoration of our Saviour by both high and low; and two side pictures (one of which only as yet has been executed) of David, the precursor of our Lord, in the capacities of shepherd and king.

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL RESTORED.

MELBOURNE PUBLIC LIBRARY AND MUSEUM OF ART.

AN article in our last Number on the British Dependencies in connection with the Great Exhibition of 1862 bore testimony to the extraordinarily rapid progress of the Australian colonies in population and in material prosperity. There are now railways and telegraphs to towns in Australia which ten years ago were only stations with sheep-tracks through the bush. Steamers are plying on the Murray and the Darling, and Moreton Bay has within the last two years become an independent colony under the name of Queensland. It is in Victoria, however, that the growth has been most striking. Port Phillip, which at the time of our last international exhibition had only just been erected into a separate colony, is now the great settlement of the group. Nor is it in material prosperity alone that Victoria is progressing. Among the public buildings of Melbourne not the least important, and certainly not the least interesting, is its Public Library, of which we give an Engraving. A Museum of Art is connection with this noble building was opened to the public on the 24th of May last, by his Excellency the Governor, Sir H. Barkly. In a long address Sir Redmond Barry stated that the primary idea entertained by the trustees, in recommending the formation of a museum of art in connection with the library, had reference to the establishment of a school of design. With this view casts of some of the best-known works of antiquity had been procured. These formed but a small part of what the collection would be. As to the library, it was stated that the number of volumes on the shelves was now 57,240, and at the end of the year the number would be 59,000. The readers within the library have increased with the enlargement of the building. In 1856 they numbered 23,769, while during eleven months of 1860 the number was 162,115. His Excellency, in reply to the address of the learned President, said he regarded the collection as the first step towards the establishment of a school of design, in which the future artificers and manufacturers of Victoria might be imbued with purity of taste and correct principles of beauty. "Its enjoyments, however," said his Excellency, in conclusion, "will extend to all classes and all ages, from the students in our schools or at our University, who may here realise the poetic fancies of classical literature, and gather illustrations of what they read in Hesiod or in Homer, in Virgil or in Ovid, to the accomplished citizen of the world, who will rejoice to be thus reminded in this distant realm, where he has perhaps come to spend the evening of his life, of those forms of beauty and masterpieces of art with which he was so familiar in younger days, amid the kindred climes of Greece or Italy."



PUBLIC LIBRARY AND MUSEUM OF ART, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each Announcement.*

BIRTHS,

On the 16th inst., at Shrub's Hill, Sunningdale, the wife of J. R. Berry, Esq., of a daughter.

On the 16th inst., at 61, Grosvenor-street, the wife of Lt.-Colonel R. Bulli, of a son.

On the 4th inst., at the Fiscus of Athens, the lady of W. B. Neale, Esq., her Majesty's Consul for Continental Greece, of a son.

On the 21st of August, at St. George's, Bermuda, the wife of the Rev. J. Lumley Leach, of a son.

On the 15th inst., at the residence of her father, Peter Muir, Esq., 17, Porchfield-place, the wife of William Ireland Blackwood, Esq., of Southborough, Tunbridge Wells, of a daughter.

On the 13th inst., at Bexhill Hill, Upper Norwood, Mrs. Henry Sotheron, of a son.

On the 15th inst., at Ibiza, Ibiza (Spain), the wife of Alfred Rumbold, Esq., C.B., of a daughter.

At Sandringham, Norfolk, Lady Winnington, of a daughter, still-born.

DEATHS.

On the 16th inst., Grace, the beloved wife of J. Chamberlain, The Terrace, Peckham Rye, and Greenchurch-street, London.

On the 15th inst., at Brighton, at an advanced age, Miss Cuthie, of Bothell, Westmoath, Ireland, and of 2, Stirlingparade-terrace, London, relict of the late Gen. Cluthe, of Hyde Hall, Cheshire, and of Hyde Hall, Otago, State of New York, and Colonel Edmund Sandford, R.A., nephew of the Earl of Belvidere.

On the 2nd of August last, at Cabbera, Chile, of typhus fever, Emma, eldest daughter of S. H. Thomas, Esq., late of the Alms Department, Exchequer, in the fifteenth year of her age.

On the 16th inst, at Exeter, Hugh, Earl Fortescue, K.G., in his 75th year.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—Fresh up to the morning's arrival the supply of English wheat was very moderate. In both red and white qualities a steady business was done, and late rates were supported. The supply of foreign wheat was by no means extensive, and the demand was restricted to the wants of millers, at quotations fully equal to those of previous market day. In flour, the supply of which was limited, there was a steady sale, at former rates. In barley, prices had an upward tendency. The malt trade was in a rather inactive state. Oats were in fair request, at full prices. Beans and peas sold to a fair extent, at former rates. In maize, the supply was only moderate, with both beans and peas we were scarcely required, and the quotations for them were nominal. Of flour were in steady request, and their value was well maintained.

Mark-lane, Monday.—Arrivals this week: barley, 270; malt, 130; oats, 3,040; flour, 1,810; beans, 1,010; peas, 1,000; linseed, 14,760; barley, 180; malt, 40,300; flour, 9,900 barrels.

English.—Wheat, 4s. to 4s. 6d.; barley, 3s. to 3s. 4d.; malt, 5s. to 6s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, 5s. 2d. to 6s.; rye, 3s. to 3s. 4d.; peas, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d.; boilers, 3s. 8d. to 3s. 10d.; beans, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d.; Lincoln and Essex, 3s. 8d. to 3s. 10d.; oats, 2s. to 2s. 6d.; Lincoln and Yorkshire, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 8d.; Chevalier, 2s. 8d. to 2s. 10d.; potato, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 8d.; linseed, 54s. to 56s.; Mediterranean, 52s. to 54s.; Trieste and Galz, black, 50s. to 52s.; Egyptian, 48s. to 50s.; white, 50s. to 52s.; Odessa, 48s. to 50s.; Baltic, 48s. to 50s.; hempseed, 34s. to 36s.; canary, 50s. to 52s.; coriander, 18s. to 20s.; brown mustard, 9s. to 10s.; country, 7s. to 8s.; white, 8s. to 9s.; tares, 40s. to 42s. per bushel.

Foreign.—Wheat, Dantzic and Konigsberg, 50s. to 52s.; Pomeranian and Rostock, 48s. to 50s.; Marianopoli, 46s. to 48s.; Polish Odessa, 46s. to 48s.; Taganrog, 46s. to 48s.; Petersburg, 46s. to 48s.; Riga, 46s. to 48s.; Archangel, 46s. to 48s.; Salonica, 42s. to 44s.; Fine Pomeranian and Rostock, 50s. to 52s.; Danish and Holstein, 48s. to 50s.; Marianopoli, 46s. to 48s.; Ghirka

FAMILY TICKETS to the WATERING-PLACES, and to SOUTH COAST, are now issued by LONDON, BRIGHTON, and SOUTH-COAST RAILWAY, to families of four persons and upwards. Tickets are issued from Victoria, London-bridge, and Pimlico Stations, and from Shoreham, Portsmouth, Ryde, and Wight, Worthing, Hastings, &c. for four ladies. For Eastbourne, St. Leonards, and Eastbourne, no separate adult persons. Tickets and full particulars can be obtained at the Victoria, London-bridge, and Pimlico Stations Stations, and at the Company's offices, 45, Regent-street, Piccadilly.

PARIS in TWELVE HOURS and a HALF, viâ Dieppe, by the new DAILY TIDAL SERVICE, with Special Express Trial Trains both on the English and French railways—Dep. from Victoria, 8.30 a.m.; Arr. Paris, 8.30 p.m. Two departures daily (except Sundays). For hours of departure from London and Paris, see the "Times" daily.

FAMILY TICKETS to HASTINGS, ST. LEONARDS, and EASTBOURNE, for six or more persons (including Children and Servants), are issued from Victoria, London-bridge, and Kensington Stations, at reduced Fares, by the BRIGHTON and SOUTH COAST LINE, on application at the Booking-offices of those Stations, or at the Company's Offices, 149, Buckingham-palace-road; 79, Cheapside; and 28, Leadenhall-street. Further terms and Tickets for Families of Four Persons and upwards, for Pleasure Parties, Schools, &c., may be had at the Company's Offices, 149, Buckingham-palace-road, and 28, Leadenhall-street.

ALLIANCE BRITISH and FOREIGN LIFE and FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY, Established 1824. Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.
Head Offices—Edinburgh, Ipswich, and Bury St. Edmunds.
London, Fire Offices Station-street.
Resident—Sir Henry Monteith, Bart.
Auditor—Thomas Bazley, Esq.
James Alexander, Esq.
Charles G. Barnett, Esq.
George H. Barnard, Esq.
Bellenden Bell, Esq.
Sir John Bell, Bart.
William Chas. Bell, Esq.
Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P.
Joseph Hardcastle, Esq.
Henry Hardcastle, Esq.
Thomas Hodgkin, Esq.
Edward Holmes, Esq.
Sir Thomas Hare Hallett, Bart.
Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.
Sir Richard Jebb, M.D.
Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.
Sir Richard Jebb, M.D.
Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart.
Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart.
Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ITALIAN CAMPAIGN QUADRILLE on French Airs, beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." The waltz of the season. Beautifully illustrated in colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S ERIN GO BRAGH QUADRILLES. A new Quadrille on the most favourite of Thomas's National Melodies. Beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S FLOBIMELLE. New Waltz. Beautifully illustrated in Colours. With Cornet Accompaniment. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

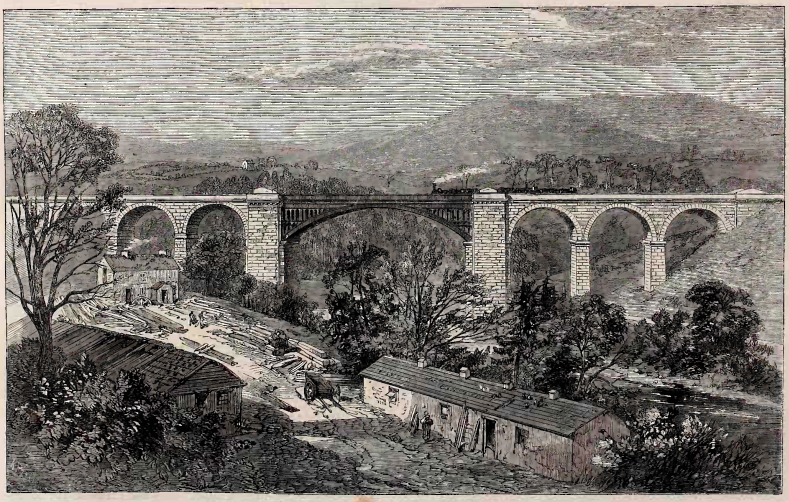
D'ALBERT'S PRINCE OF WALES or ST. JAMES'S GALOP. Just published, Beautifully Illustrated with a Portrait in Colours of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by BAXTER. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S CHEAP WOBKS FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS. Price 1s. 6d. each, post-free.
Chappell's Nursery Tunes. Violin.
Chappell's Popular Flute Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Cornet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular English Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Instruction Tutor.
Chappell's Popular German Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Flageolet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Clarionet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Violin Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Violoncello Tutor.
VIOLIN.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Second Violin and Bass Part to ditto.
Chappell's 100 Popular Operatic Airs.
Second Violin and Bass Part to ditto.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Il Ballo in Maschera."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Les Huguenots."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castile."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Le Prophète" and "Dinorah."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Robin Hood."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia Borgia."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia" and "Victoria."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Welsh Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
FLUTE.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Popular Operatic Airs.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castile."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Dinorah" and "Le Prophète."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Robin Hood."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia" and "Victoria."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Welsh Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
CORNET-A-PISTON.
Chappell's 100 Dances (principally D'Albert's).
Chappell's 100 Popular Operatic Airs.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Bridge Waltz."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "The Rose of Castile."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Dinorah" and "Le Prophète."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Robin Hood."
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Lucrezia" and "Victoria."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Welsh Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Songs, Anthems, Psalm Tunes, &c.
GERMAN CONCERTINA.
Chappell's 100 Popular Operatic Airs, Arranged for Two, Three, or Four Performers.
Chappell's 100 Popular Songs, with Accompaniment.
GUITAR.
Chappell's 100 Dances.
Chappell's 100 Songs, with Guitar Accompaniment, in two books, each 50 Songs.
HARMONIUM.
Chappell's 90 Sacred Melodies.
Chappell's 50 Secular Melodies.
CHAPPELL'S SHILLING OCTAVO Works, as they store contain D'Albert's and other popular Copyright Works.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, complete for 4 Band of Eight, Twelve, Sixteen, or more, Parts, Nos. 1 to 24, Price 1s. each; Nos. 25 to 36, Price 2s. each; Nos. 37 to 48, Price 1s. each; Nos. 49 to 52, Price 2s. each. Part 1 to Part 6 (Numbers 1 to 24), Price 12s. each. Part 7 to Part 9 (Numbers 25 to 36), Price 24s. each. Part 10 to Part 12 (Numbers 37 to 48), Price 12s. each. Part 13 to Part 14 (Numbers 49 to 52), Price 8s. each. Part 15 (Numbers 1 to 52), Price 48s. Part 16 (Numbers 1 to 52), Price 48s. Part 17 (Numbers 1 to 52), Price 48s. Part 18 (Numbers 1 to 52), Price 48s. Part 19 (Numbers 1 to 52), Price 48s. Part

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA: CONFEDERATES TRAPPING A BOAT'S CREW OF THE POTOMAC FLEET.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

A short time since the United States' sloop Resolute, while cruising along the Virginia shore of the Potomac, detached a boat to take possession of a scow that lay hard and fast in the mud, laden with barrels, supposed by the commander to contain powder for the use of the Disunionists. Just as the bowsman was preparing to hold on with the boathook a murderous fire was opened from behind the bushes on the bank, killing and wounding all but one at the first discharge. It was nothing more than a ruse to draw the Federalists on, and it succeeded too well. With great difficulty the boat was got out of range by those able to seize the oars, and shortly afterwards the Resolute came up and shelled the woods, but with what execution it is impossible to say.



VIADUCT ON THE LIME BRANCH OF THE LANCASTER AND CARLISLE RAILWAY.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE LIME VIADUCT.

THIS viaduct is situated at Waterside, on the Lune Valley branch of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, and the branch joins the railway at Low Gill station, runs thence by Sedbergh and Ricby Lonsdale, joining the Little North Western branch of the Midland Railway at Ingleton, thus forming a direct communication with the Yorkshire and east coast lines. The viaduct, from the design of Mr. I. L. Errington, C.E., consists of six stone arches, each 50 ft. span, the first one of 1805, span, the total length being 480ft. on a curve of half a mile radius; height from water 90ft. to level of rails. The iron arch has four wrought-iron spandrils of corrugated plate iron, which was constructed by Wm. Cudbard and Sons of Broadbum, and was tested by Mr. Charles Vignoles with six locomotive engines and tenders, weighing together 240 tons at a speed of twenty miles per hour, all the engines running in the same direction on one line of rails. Mr. Cudbard and Mr. Allen were the contractors for the railway, and the whole of the work was carried out under the superintendence of Donald Campbell, Esq., the resident engineer.

THE VICTORIA PACKET.

THIS new Rotterdam and Boulogne steamer, built by Samuda Brothers' engines by Penn and Son for the South-Eastern Railway Company, left London to take up her station on Saturday, the 7th inst., and made a most extraordinary voyage, which, probably, was rapidity has never been equalled. After leaving her moorings at Greenwich she passed Gravesend at 4.40 a.m.; Coal Hoisting Mark, 1 Nore Light, 5.37; West Goss Point, 5.53; Girdler Light, 6.15; Tongue Light, 6.32; North Foreland, 7.12; South Foreland, 8.41; Dover, 8.45; and arrived at Ruleston at 8.52; having thus performed the entire journey from Greenwich to Folkestone, a distance of 84 statute miles, in 3 hours 52 minutes, at an average rate of 21 miles per hour, the whole way. Making every allowance for tide, the actual speed throughout the whole of the distance was 19 miles per hour.

The dimensions of vessel and power of engines are as follow:—Length, 260ft.; breadth, 34ft.; depth, 12ft.; draught of water, 6ft.; tons (O.M.), 596; and engines, 250 horse power, nominal.

In the trial-trip in Long Reach with the Board of Trade the average of all the runs was 19.825 knots; results—6 runs with the tide, and blowing half a gale. On this occasion, when the wind slightly abated, the velocity attained on two runs equalled 20 knots.

On Tuesday the Victoria made her first voyage from Folkestone to Boulogne and back in the extraordinarily brief periods of one hour thirty-four minutes and one hour thirty-five minutes respectively, being at the rate of twenty miles an hour; although in the voyage over she encountered an adverse sea, and on the return voyage a strong north wind was dead ahead of her.

THE 1ST PUNJAUB VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.

THIS corps was, as its motto (Patrias in Indis) denotes, the first volunteer rifle corps raised in India. It numbers, including affiliated corps, between four and five hundred men. They are armed with the Enfield and discipline, and reckon some excellent shots among their members, having at a rifle-match at Lahore, in 1860, beaten some of the picked men of her Majesty's 24th and 32nd Regiments of Foot. The corps is composed of the principal members of the Civil Service, with the Chief Commissioner, Sir John Lawrence, at their head, is more adapted for service and climate than for show, but is nevertheless very neat, consisting of a "shako" of dark-coloured cloth and patent leather, surmounted ornamented with braid of the same colour, with a helmet and turban to match. The men are armed with the short Enfield rifle and wear bayonets; they are also provided with the regula in their attendance at drills and target practices and as the regulations require assistant surgeons to the corps are appointed from distinguished themselves during the late mutiny, there is no doubt but that, if brought again into action, they will give a good account of the enemy.

The officers whose portraits are given in our Engraving on page 290 are as follow:—Proceeding from left to right, the first on the front rank is, first, E. A. Perkins, Esq., Assistant to Financial Commissioner; second, Lieutenant Colonel Edwardes, C.B., Chief Commissioner, Lahore, Captain; A. A. Roberts, Esq., C.B., Judicial Commissioner, Punjaub, Commandant; Major G. Sim, Consulting Engineer to the Punjaub Government, second in command. Immediately behind them are J. Hearne, Assistant to Chief Engineer, Rawlpin; and G. Leppers, Esq., Civil Commissioner, Lahore, Captain—the former looking over the shoulders of Messrs. Forsyth and R. Bosworth, and the latter over those of Messrs. Cooper and Thorne. Those standing at the back, beginning at the left-hand corner, are A. Higgins, Esq., Head Assistant to Chief Engineer, Captain; J. G. Jones, Esq., Assistant to Chief Engineer, Punjaub, Major; Lieutenant-Colonel G. F. A. Kelly, Principal Assistant, Deputy Auditor and Accountant-General, Adjutant; and J. Davies, Esq., Assistant to Chief Engineer, Umlap.

THE CASTLE OF DIEPPE.

THE seaport town of Dieppe is situated at the mouth of the Arques, in Upper Normandy. It has a population of 20,000 inhabitants, a fine entrance and autumn, and is at the present time crowded with visitors. Our Number for the 10th of August last contained a view of the harbour of Dieppe; and we now give a view of the interior of the Castle. It stands on the tall cliff at the west end of the town, and boasts a picturesque chapel, with its quaint old-fashioned bell-tower, its high bridge and drawbridge spanning a chasm which runs down to the sea. It was built in the fourteenth century, but is much modernised, and is used as a barrack. This castle contains historical associations of great interest. Within those walls Henri IV., retreating before the army of the Leaguers, found shelter and security. "Vive Dieppe," so he called them, who had been the first to acknowledge his right to the throne, before the battle of Arques. The devotion of the people from the attachment of its inhabitants, the fidelity of its garrison, and the advantages of an open communication by sea with England. While here he received from Queen Elizabeth a reinforcement of 1000 Scotch and 4000 English soldiers. In 1589 the famous Duc-de-Mayenne, supported by a powerful army, marched on the town of the Ponde, defying the Royal authority was compelled to take refuge in the castle; but, being closely besieged by the two armies of Mayenne and Anne of Austria, she with difficulty at length escaped home by night, and, making her way amidst storm and tempest, after numerous dangers and adventures, embarked for England. The castle in an English vessel dressed as a man, and at length succeeded in reaching England. The Duchess remained for a short time at the beach, nearly under the castle. There are (to "Murray" informs us) no less than seventeen batteries on the cliffs. Of these, 11 are erected at the seaside, from which ladies take in robes resembling those of men, and gentlemen in wide trousers, and thus bathe in public. There are also bathing-machines for the beach.

THE NEW RUSSIAN CHURCH IN PARIS.

THE first notice of erecting this beautiful Oriental monument was broached by the Archpriest Wassiliff, the Chaplain of the Church of the Russian Embassy at Paris. Since the year 1820 the Embassy possessed a chapel in the Rue de Lauriston, but the progression of the Russian colony was by no means in harmony with the majesty of the Greek worship nor with the importance which the Russian empire at present occupies amongst the great Powers of Europe. Moreover, the augmentation in the number of devout Russians and other members of the Greek Catholic Church resident in Paris rendered it necessary to increase in the accommodation for the public performance of their religious duties. Actuated by these considerations, M. A. Wassiliff addressed the idea of organising a subscription to raise the sum necessary for the realisation of his project. After two fruitless demands for the requisite authorisation from his Government, he at length succeeded in obtaining it towards the end of 1856. Alexander II. (in whose honour the church has been dedicated to St. Alexander), the patron saint of the present Emperor of all the Russias), on giving his consent to M. Wassiliff's proposition, contributed £8000 from his private purse towards the expenses of the sacred edifice. The Russian Synod granted a similar sum, and the collections of the archiepiscopal Almoner from the wealthy members of the Greek Church promise to supply the remainder of the sum required, upwards of £32,000, of which £28,000 has been spent in the construction of the church, £12,000 in the purchase of the ground, and £4000 in the payment of two habitations intended for the members of the clergy attached to St. Alexander. The plan of the edifice was drawn up by M. Kozmine, professor of architecture at the Academy of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg; and its execution was confided to M. Strohm, member of the same academy.

St. Alexander has been built in the quarter of the Faubourg St. Honoré, on a fine piece of ground in the Rue de la Croix, situated between the Arc de Triomphe and the Park of Monceaux. The style of architecture of the new Russian church is that known as the Byzantine-Muscovite—that is, the style possessing most of the forms and of the ornamentation which, during the middle ages, characterised the edifices of the Christian worship. It is in the shape of a Greek cross—that is to say, a cross with four equal branches. The entire is dominated by a large pyramidal gilt cupola, surmounted by a small gilt dome and a bright cross. On each of the principal angles of the monument there is a small cupola similar to that which covers the body. The Christian sentiment attached to these five cupolas is that they symbolise Jesus Christ supported by the four Evangelists who recorded in their sacred words and actions of their Divine Master. The rich gilding of these cupolas, their brilliancy, their elegant workmanship, and their peculiar Oriental aspect, combine to render St. Alexander one of the most remarkable exteriors in the French capital, so rich already in buildings of the Greek, Gothic, and medieval style of architecture.

The interior of the church is divided into four compartments (the nearest to the nave, the sanctuary, and the space set apart for the faithful), grouped around the common centre, above which rises the grand cupola, supported by four columns. Immediately under the cupola a cornice runs entirely round the room giving the details, are of the richest and yet most harmonious description, the designs of the ornamental painting having been executed by M. Solomon, a pupil of M. Constantin Gay, the model of Byzantine churches and the principal object of the studies of Oriental artists. The walls, the ceiling, the pillars, and the arches of the ordinary rich ornamentation of Eastern churches, St. Alexander shows in which the whole interior is covered with paintings in oil of the saints, and a number of subjects taken from the Old and New Testaments. Some of the frescoes have been executed by the Archimandrite Wassiliff, who is also the author of those in the cupola chapel of Pine Arts at St. Petersburg. Those representing the Virgin and the Apostles are the work of M. Bolotoff, a pupil of Ingres. Taken altogether, the impression produced on entering this sacred edifice is most imposing, and well calculated to call forth those religious feelings which in other historical decoration is intended to convey.

The Church of St. Alexander was consecrated with great pomp on Wednesday, the 4th inst., by the Archbishop Isidore, Exarch of the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg, the first Oriental Bishop who has consecrated a church in Paris. The Archbishop Isidore, on his arrival, was full. By far the greater number of the persons invited were Russians, and, as a matter of course, the Russian Embassy was en grand costume on the occasion. Many Russian ladies possess of distinction at the ceremony, amongst others Marshal Vaillant and the Duchess of Malakoff, the Baron Haussmann, the Prefect of the Seine, Monsignor Lacroix, who accompanied by all the Oriental Archbishops and Bishops at present in Paris, officiated at the consecration of the church; which terminated, wax tapers were distributed to all present, and the procession, headed by the Bishop, with the cross and banners, proceeded round the church, the doors of which were closed, and immediately afterwards Divine service was celebrated therein for the first time.

Our Illustration of St. Alexander is from the pencil of M. Thorigny, who has very cleverly reproduced the effect of the sunset on the Russian church in Paris. It is, of itself occupies a space 92ft. square, the extreme elevation to the top of the cross being 157ft.

THE MANUFACTURE OF THE ENFIELD RIFLE.

THE national importance which invests the subject of rifled firearms, and the prominent manner in which it has lately been brought before the attention of the public, by the decision of the Government of her Majesty's forces with this description of weapon, and still more recently, and to general observers more fauiliarly by the volunteer movement, induce us to devote the following pages to a brief but, we hope, from the more important processes in the manufacture of the Enfield rifle. These will be illustrated by one of our present Engravings.

The small-arms factory was established by Government at Enfield Lock in 1848, and was at first used for the production of the ordinary musket, the new pattern of Brown Bess.

In 1854, when the experience gained in connection with the Russian war first taught us the necessity for a rifle musket, it was found that the establishment formed a convenient nucleus for the erection of works on which the Government could rely for the supply of weapons which might be fabricated. These improvements have since become a really magnificent series of buildings, and the efforts of those engaged at the institution have resulted in the production of the new rifle, the Enfield rifle," pattern 1853, which, whatever may be the comparative merits of the rifle which the volunteer public service has been ordered, is acknowledged on all hands to be a most efficient and deadly instrument of war, and the accuracy of which has been proved by innumerable returns of rifle-shooting matches all over the kingdom bear ample testimony.

The principle of rifling is now so generally understood, and the individual weapon itself is so well known, that any description of it would be unnecessary. We may, however, say that it is the invention of the Minié rifle, altered and improved for military purposes. We will now proceed to give our readers some idea of the mode in which the musket is followed in Enfield. The buildings that constitute the factory are situated on the banks of the River Lea, the site being undoubtedly chosen on account of the facility which it affords for the use of the means of transport which the navigable portion of that river presents. These consist principally of barges, some of which are of considerable burden, never might appear in themselves to be of any importance, and in which most of the actual manufacture is carried on (the different processes succeeding in all to no less than 50), office-rent which is the management, storerooms and houses, rolling-mills, foundry, engine-houses, provingroom, &c.; and, in addition to the premises in the occupation of Government, a number of houses belonging to Government, in the occupation of the principal officers connected with the factory, the inspector, proving clerk, and a schoolhouse for the children of these of the hands that live near. Of the immense extent occupied by all these one View of the Enfield factory, which appears on page 305, will convey a better idea than any description we can give. The buildings that constitute the factory are situated on the banks of the River Lea, the site being undoubtedly chosen on account of the facility which it affords for the use of the means of transport which the navigable portion of that river presents. These consist principally of barges, some of which are of considerable burden, never might appear in themselves to be of any importance, and in which most of the actual manufacture is carried on (the different processes succeeding in all to no less than 50), office-rent which is the management, storerooms and houses, rolling-mills, foundry, engine-houses, proving-room

ART IN HOLLAND AND BELGIUM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

BRUSSELS, Sept. 10.

In bringing to a close my brief artistic tour, I must beg permission to reflect upon you a communication of a somewhat loose and miscellaneous character, containing the result of various observations, some of them made under hurry in the course of travel.

There are four pictures in Holland which no art-pilgrim may pass by without paying them his debt of homage and admiration—viz., at Amsterdam, the "Banquet of the Civic Guard," in commemoration of the signing of the Treaty of Westphalia, by Van der Helst, and "The Night Guard," by Rembrandt; and at the Hague, Paul Potter's celebrated "Young Bull," and Rembrandt's "Lesson in Anatomy." The first and third are the undisputed chefs-d'œuvre of their class in the two most important pictures in Europe. It is nearly a quarter of a century since I first saw them, and then they were as fresh, as lifelike, since I first saw them, and then they were as fresh, as lifelike, as full-toned, and clear in colour as they were then—ay, as they were on the very day they were painted. In point of preservation they are on the very day they were painted. In point of preservation they are the two most wonderful works the technical mysteries involved in their production, they would be worth a pilgrimage from the whole body of artists of every land, for whom they are canvases of inexhaustible resource the permanence of their colours. Then, again, in the manipulation particularly, the certain treatment and the realisation of the subject-matter, they are absolutely safe, both, yet never to the extent of rule, have perfect, each on technical grounds, as of making one existing especial remark on technical grounds, as of making one case of objects one portion of the whole—objects of still-life, for instance, more conspicuous than the rest! In Potter's Bull the brushing of the hair has the perfect truth and accuracy of sculpture; but they do not take the lead of the smoother portions of the hide; and the dark leaves growing at the animal's feet, though crisp and juicy, as though they had been but just transplanted from the meadow in which they grew, do not throw into disparaging comparison the life of the honest herbage, or the bull's own glossy hide, scape in the distance. Such was this great master's art of doing all to perfection, but retaining all in "keeping." Rembrandt's "Lesson in Anatomy" is at first blush a painful subject, but it grows upon you as you consider its marvellous reality, and the degree of intellectual as you consider its marvellous reality, and the degree of intellectual character from it the same. The same master's "Night Guard Scene," though it has been disparaged by some critics, is, after all, a grand effort in colour and general effect, which in later researches I seldom been surpassed. I would gladly indulge in a few remarks about other chefs-d'œuvre of colour and manipulation amongst the relics of the old worthies at the Hague and Amsterdam, but must content myself with a passing ejaculation of admiration at "The Descent from the Cross, by Rembrandt;" the large Italian landscape with animals and figures, by Berchem; the Boy Blowing Bubbles, by F. van Mieris; the Young Mother Lice, and the Family of the Painter, by Jan Steen; and one or two of others by Ostade, Teniers, Terburg, &c., in the former; and the Allegories of the Shepherds, by George de Cuyper, the Fire of St. Nicholas, by Jan Steen; the Every Man to his Fancy (with boy's mouth wonderously slobbered with yolks of egg), by Schalken; Fatemal Council, by Terburg; the Evening School, and marvellous effect of candlelight and chiaroscuro), by Gerard Dow; the Avenue of Ashtrees (forming in itself in a glory of perfectly illusive sunlight), by Hondhrst; and the "Receive," by N. Maes.

The Van der Hoop Museum—containing the small collection of pictures presented by that gentleman to the city, the proceeds of the small charge of admission being appropriated to the relief of the poor—is worth a visit, if but for the grand Italian landscape by the Both, the charming watermill swelling in trees, and another landscape by Molkeiner, in Teniers, in his very peculiar style; by de Hoogh; a glorious old woman, spinning, by N. Maes; and the Fete Champêtre, by Teniers. It also contains forty specimens of modern Dutch art, amongst which are two fine illustrations of local history, by J. S. Dodge—Kenau Hasibar on the ramparts of Haarlem, and Van Speijk, the hero of the time, at the moment of blowing up his ship.

At Amsterdam there is a society called "Arti et Amicitiæ," which comprises all the artists and connoisseurs of the city, and whose exhibitions have been considered the hand-maidens of art. Visitors being once introduced here will find themselves at once on equality of all that is there, however, receive additions from time to time, which later in the season will give it one of more importance. There is some character in Abele's Sabbath morning, representing a whole family party going to church; and something pretty in A. F. Lamme's little picture of a girl peeping into a birdcage; and a great deal of truth and careful painting in J. Tasman's old gardener trimming a flower growing in a pot; but these are all that I remember out of a very large miscellaneous collection.

The leading men of the day are this year exhibiting at Antwerp, where Ten Kate takes the lead with five subject-pictures, the most striking of which are an "Episode of the Persecution of the Jews in the Middle Ages" and "Isaac Van Ostade in his Studio, with his Models." Spool, of Rotterdam, and Scholten, of Amsterdam, make a fair figure in history—"Charles IX. of France before his Mother, Catherine de Medicis, to the Massacre of the Huguenots," and the "Lady Jane Grey on the Morning of her Execution," both the latter being works of considerable merit. Burgers, of Amsterdam, and F. Leys, of Munich, are amongst the most successful painters of genre, of the Hague, are amongst the most successful painters of domestic life and other genre subjects. Many pictures of marine and other landscapes, chiefly local, are too numerous to mention.

A small collection of modern pictures, chiefly French, is to be seen at the pavilion in the little park at Haarlem, where they were removed from the Hague on the dispersion of Baron Nagel's collection. Countess Duchâtel's picture of the Battle of Waterloo, at the moment when the Duke of Orange received his wound, is the most conspicuous object in the collection, measuring full eight and 27ft. wide, and entirely filling one wall of the centre room. It is also a very able and effective performance, and, upon the whole, a good picture on this once-popular national subject that I have ever met with. By C. Kruseman is another conspicuous picture, "The Marriage of the Prince of Orange at Berlin, at the moment when his Royal Highness' horse was wounded" (1853), which is not so effective as the last. This picture has also the "Embankment of Antwerp," a large composition, supposed after the accepted models of renaissance art, but is wanting in true structural character. "The Good Samaritan," by Gallait, representing the moment when he is putting the wounded man on his horse, is a work of no mean pretensions. Navez was an historical painter of estimable capability and learning, but a little French in style. His picture of "Elisha remonstrating the Son of the Shunamite" is a considerable composition, and displays much power of design. In the boy is very successfully realised. Paulinck's "Toilette of Psyche" is a showy affair, in the cold, chaste style of Paris rather than of the latter end of the last century. Amongst the landscapes, those of Van Stolk are warm and Cuyp-like. The sea-pieces of J. H. Koekkoek are somewhat in the style of Backhuysen, but the water dark and leaden. P. G. Van Os paints landscapes with cattle somewhat in the manner of Berghem, but hard and artificial in treatment. In fact, everywhere we see more or less suggestions of the achievements of the older worthies. Of Alma-Tadema, sã, to J. Kobell must be examined for merit in animal painting as represented in this room. We have two examples of his talent—"A Herd of Oxen," full of life and variety of character, in an admirable landscape, and two cows reposing in a rich pasture land, with dock leaves, and a distant landscape, in the Potter, finely handled with a rich impasto. G. J. J. Van Os is natural and easy in a wooded landscape, with distance seen through trees (the animals by P. G. Van Os), and appears to excel in flowers, dead faces, and still-life.

The Museum at Brussels, though not enjoying a very high renown amongst the public galleries of Europe, should not be passed by unviewed. In German, Dutch, and Flemish schools it has a very fair collection. Its German portrait-remarkable specimens by Mabuse, Hemskirk, Gaspar de Crayer, Rubens, Jordaens, amongst the older masters; and a very full representation of those of later date, particularly those during the last century, and including the prize works since 1811. The latter comprising such names as Van Bree, Lens, Leys, Van Eyckon, Van Lerius, Verschuren, De Keyser, Alex. Thomas, Hamman, &c., in history; and Verboeckhoven, Ommeganck, Robbe, and others in landscape, De Brackeleer, in domestic subjects, &c., will justly excite admiration and give rise to a high opinion of the position of art in the country.

The gallery of M. Wiertz, in the forbourg near the station of the Luxembourg Railway, should also be visited, if only to give an idea how far enthusiasm in art and self-contained genius may carry a man. In this vast edifice we behold the extraordinary gigantic productions upon all sorts of subjects—some historical, some poetic, some philosophic—in the latter of which the artist's visionary temperament reveals in the wildest feats the most nightmare-oppressed brain could imagine, yet all displaying great power, both in drawing and colouring. The latter picture, some forty feet high and long, is called "The Last Judgment" contains some passages marvellously original and suggestive. The struggle for the dead body of Patroclus is really hard to recognise a masterly work—figures much more than life size. But what are we to think of "A Giant of the Future," by-and-by, in the opinion of the artist? Some feet high, with beauty hairs, as big as quills, on his legs, stooping down to pick up the little folk around him, for the purpose of devouring them? There are four other pictures of that three minutes' time, elapse on the guillotine—before, during, and after an execution—every incident being realised in extraordinary force! Or the little forbidden paper-boats, on locking through one of which we see a woman staring in delight, with her nearly bare head child in her lap; or, reversing the picture, we find our face reflected in a mirror, with a comical cap on our head? Go and see the Manie Wiertz, gentle reader, and come away puzzled as to the exact artistic pretensions and the exact mental condition of the presiding genius.

TESTIMONIAL TO GARIBALDI

A SHORT time ago our columns contained an account of the presentation to Garibaldi of a sword subscribed for by our Australian brethren. The testimonial which we herewith engrave has been presented to the General by a number of his admirers in the island of TESTIMONIAL TO GARIBALDI FROM RESIDENTS IN JAMAICA.

Jamaica. It consists of a monumental Corinthian column and pedestal, 8 feet high, of Jamaica limestone, supported on a square plinth at the corners of the pedestal; the column is surmounted with a very carefully-executed figure of the patriot, who is represented in the act of drawing his sword and surrounded by a group of cannon, the national flag of Italy, unfurled, being fixed in a pile of cannon balls at the base of the pedestal. The inscription—"Presented to the illustrious General Garibaldi by a number of his admirers in the island of Jamaica in testimony of their veneration for his character as a single-minded patriot as the deliverer of a large portion of his countrymen from the yoke of a cruel tyranny, and as the champion of liberty in Europe"—is engraved on a tablet on Garibaldi's Vivas Hbalia!" The testimonial was designed by G. Arnaldelli, Esq., of Kingston, Jamaica, and executed by Messrs. Smith and Nicholson, of London.

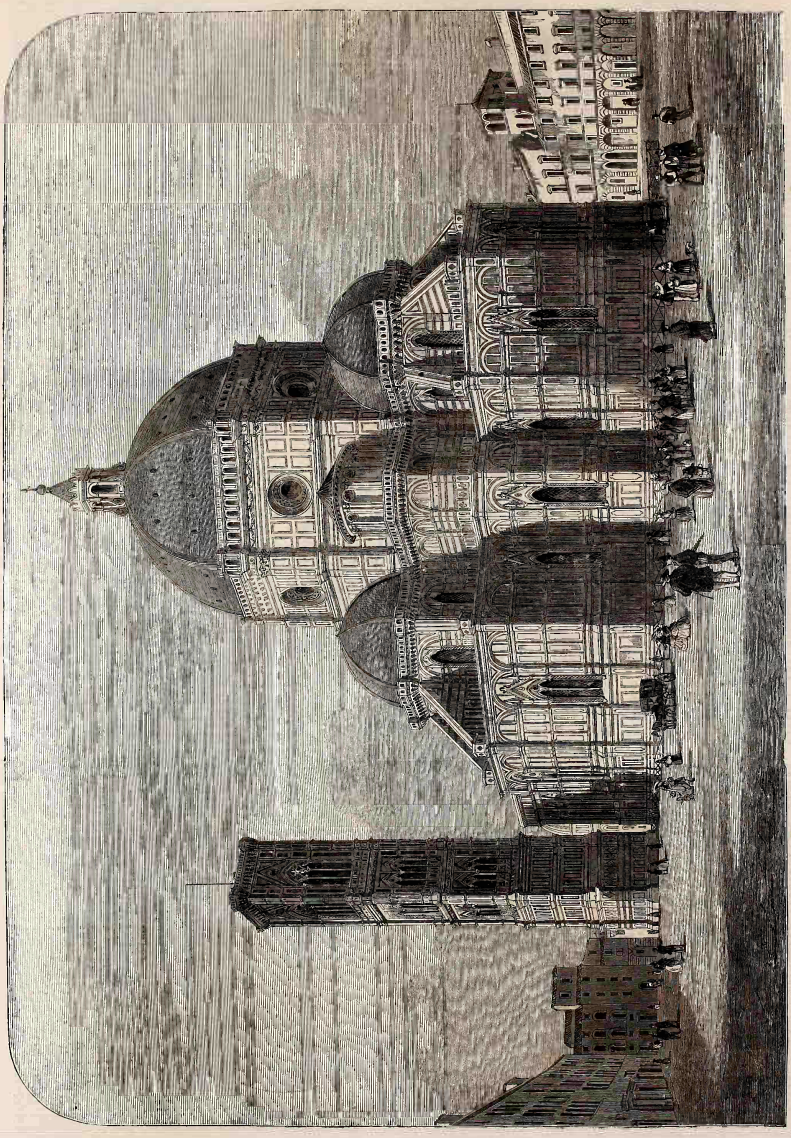
The marriage of General Türr with Mlle. Adeline Bonaparte Wyse was celebrated on Tuesday last at Rome.

An Archimandrite has been hitherto at the head of the Ecclesiastical Mission at Pekin, but it is now decided that a Bishop shall be sent out. The Archimandrite, in the case of a Bishop not being sent, will be appointed a long time in the Chinese capital, is selected for the dignity of being the first Russian Bishop in China.

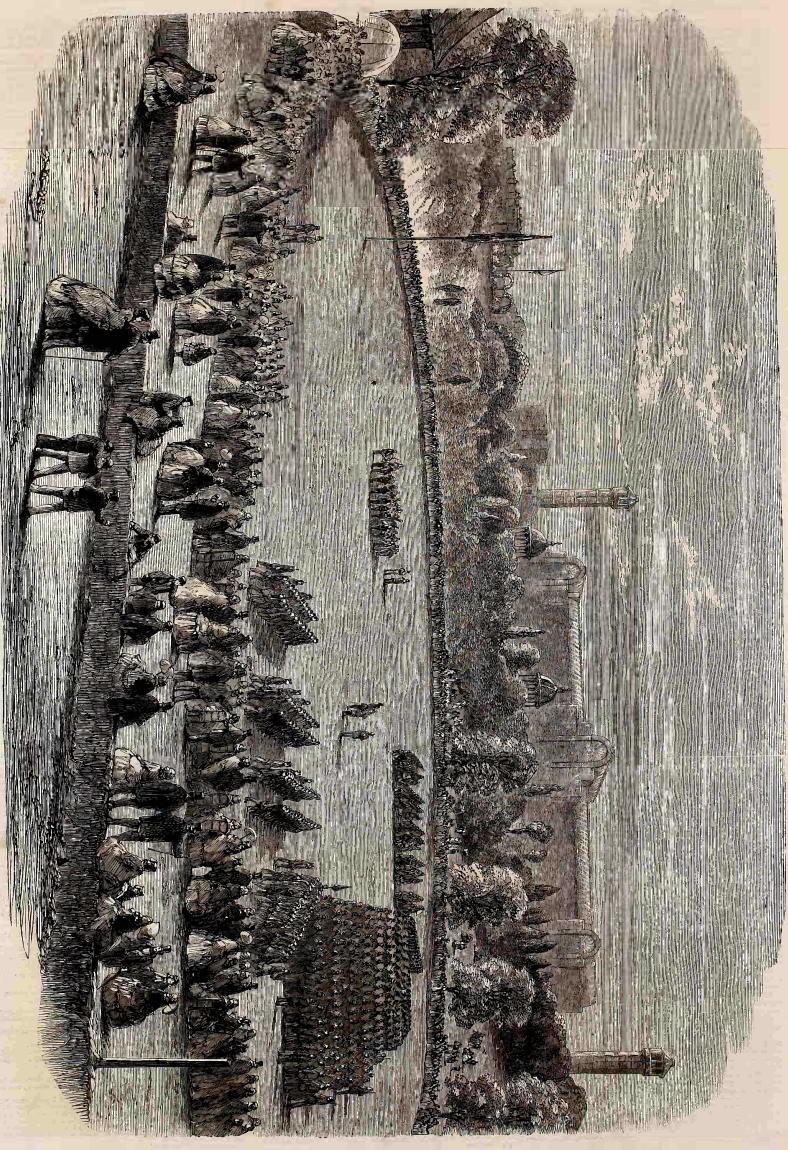
SIAMESE NOBLES ON THEIR TRAVELS.—The Kalahome, or Prime Minister, with his colleague, the Prince Krom Luang, arrived in Paris on the 13th inst. for Singapore, where they arrived on the 29th. The visit was not of an official character, but still it was intended to be made interesting by including a number of Siamese notabilities and several ladies, and the Singapore papers inform us that the Siamese visitors will be received by the Governor, and that the ladies have been gratifying their taste for millinery. The second and third sons of the King, the Prince Krom Luang Wongsa Dhiraj Sanit, are also among the party.

London and China Telegraph.

TITHES LEVIED ON THIEVES.—The arrest of a numerous band of thieves in Paris has led to the discovery of a new category of male tenants, who contrive to find a free and easy life by keeping a kind of black factory, who contrive to find a free and easy life by keeping a kind of black factory, who contrive to find a free and easy life by keeping a kind of black factory



SANTA MARIA DEL FIORE, THE CATHEDRAL OF FLORENCE.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.



REVIEW AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE OF CADETS ATTACHED TO METROPOLITAN AND SURREY VOLUNTEER CORPS.—SEE PAGE 312.

Relics of the Past.

THE VEHME-GERICHTE, OR SECRET TRIBUNALS OF WESTPHALIA.

(Concluded from page 292.)

HAVING prepared the way, in some measure, by the foregoing Sketch of the "Free Field Court of Gerfuy," we shall proceed to give a brief account of the origin, constitution, and course of procedure of the far more important and more celebrated institutions, the Vehme-gerichte of Westphalia. Partly from the absence and party from the ambiguity of records, the history of these powerful tribunals is unfortunately involved in great obscurity and perplexity. The earliest document which contains an express and undoubted reference to the Vehme-gericht is an instrument by which Engelbert, Count of the Mark, liberates one Gerrin, of Kinkenrode, from the feudal obligations of his inheritance of Broke, and it is declared to have been executed at Berke, the court being presided over by Berthold, Lord of Hoven. It is worthy of remark that is the indicted in the secrets of the Westphalian tribunals—being precisely the document is dated in the year 1387, and the interval of the date of 1280 the Vehmenotes are again mentioned as witnesses.

ORIGIN OF THE VEHME-GERICHTE.

The introduction of these tribunals into Westphalia took place, it is supposed, early in the century to which the document just alluded to belonged, but their institution must be looked for at a far earlier period. By some authorities it is carried back to the time of Charlemagne. Others ascribe their origin to the latter half of the eleventh century, regarding them as an invention of the Westphalian clergy, put forward the object of the Popes in their attempt to exercise dominion over all Christian Princes. Others, again, attribute the institution to Hatto, Archbishop of Cologne, who modelled these courts, so say the advocates of this theory, upon the system of the Inquisition then recently established. Among the authorities who refer the origin of the Vehme-gerichte to Charlemagne are Henry of Herxorden, a Dominican, who wrote against them in the time of the Emperor Sigismund; and about the middle of the fourteenth century, and Nicolas Sylvius (afterwards Pope Pius II.), who lived in a century later. Their testimony we are bound to add the earlier traditions of Westphalia, all of which point to Charlemagne as the founder of these tribunals. Wigand contends that these traditions are entitled to no respect, on the ground that "there are every here and there yet shown in the open fields some grey and mossy stone where such courts have met and held."

However plausible and interesting to the suggestions these hypothèses may be, there is nothing whatever to justify the assumption that, even in contemporary chronicles which affords them confirmation. Eginhard, the secretary and biographer of Charlemagne, makes no allusion to such courts in the fragments of annals which he has left behind him. The twelfth century are equally silent upon the subject. After all, the latest theory, that advocated by Francis Ludwig Arnd, and which the germ may be found in Wigand, is probably the true solution of the mystery. According to this writer, "The Vehme-Tribunals can only be considered as the original jurisdictions of the old Saxons which survived the subjugation of their country. The singular and mystic forms of action, the system of the concealed judgments, the watch-signs and symbols of recognition, may probably be ascribed to the period when the whole system was united in the hands of the Duties of Vengeance, and when the sentence was promulgated by the denouncers, assembled, like the Aci of old, before the altars of Thor or Wodin."

CONSTITUTION OF THE VEHME-GERICHTE.

The ancient Duchy of Westphalia, which comprised within its limits all the country between the Rhine and the Weser,* was formerly divided into districts called "Freygrafschaften," or free counties, each usually named one, and sometimes many, of the Vehme Courts, whose boundaries were carefully defined. Each district had its "Stuhlherr," or original lord, whose right was of an hereditary kind, who, if he did not choose to preside himself, might appoint a Count or "Freygraf" to supply his place. The person who was thus presented the Count for investiture he was compelled to swear that the nominee was truly and honestly, both by father and mother, born of the red earth, by the law of rood and string, and by the law which judges crime he had committed; and that he believed him perfectly well qualified to sit upon the "Red-earth-seat." The court itself was composed of the "Freyschoppen—ie., Scabini or Echevins, who were nominated by the Graf, and by him divided into two classes, the "Wissende" or "Enlightened," and the "Wissende" or "Wissend." The former were those who had not yet been admitted to a knowledge of the secrets of the fraternity; the "Wissende," or knowing, were the initiated, who had taken the solemn bond of secrecy, had been taught all the mysteries of the tribunal. The initiation of the first was very ceremonial and important. Before the assembled tribunal, the candidate was conducted before the assembled court, and was there interrogated respecting his qualifications. He was required to give assurance he had risen to knee down, and, placing his forefinger and thumb on a naked sword and a halter, to swear that he would conceal the secrets of the Holy Vehme from wife and child, from father and mother—from sister and brother—from fire and water from all upon which the sun shone or upon which it did not shine—from every being between earth and heaven. He had further to swear that he would "say forth" to the tribunal every crime and offence which came within the knowledge of the Knowing—whether he knew it to be true or had heard it from trustworthy report, and that he would not forbear to relate for love or liking, for fear or favour, not for silver, nor for precious stones. When this oath had been imposed upon him, and he had gone through all the formalities required by the occasion, the applicant was intrusted with the secrets of the dread tribunal. He received the password and the secret grip or sign by which the initiated made themselves known to each other, and he was then warned of the terrible punishment which awaited a member of the society who violated his oath or betrayed the secrets of the Holy Vehme. He would be seized by the Minister of Vengeance, his eyes blindfolded, his hands tied behind, he would be thrown down on the ground, his tongue would be torn out through the back of his neck, and he would then be hung seven feet higher than any other criminal.

Finally, in the name of the new member was inserted in the register, and henceforward he participated in the duties, the power, and the immunities of the mysterious and lofty body to which he belonged.

In addition to the Freigraf and the Schöppens or Echevins, there were necessary for the holding of a Vehmic Court, the services of "Frohnboten," or sergeants, and a clerk to enter the decisions in the blood-book (liber sanguinis). It was required that the sergeants or messengers should be freemen of the county, and that the qualifications of the ordinary "Schöppen." The supreme government of the Vehmic Tribunals was invested in a general chapter composed of the Freygraves and all the other initiated members of every degree; and, although perhaps originally organized in dependence upon Royal authority, the Vehme-gerichte regarded the Emperor as their head and submitted his right to modify and control their constitution and decisions.

Before this general chapter all members were accountable for their acts. Hence it is that the Freygraves reported the proceedings within their districts during the past year. Unworthy members were expelled or sustained a severer punishment. Statutes were here enacted for the better regulation of the society; new and important cases which called for a remedy was not provided by existing laws received their determination in the Supreme Parliament.

At the Echevins were of two classes, uninitiated and initiated, so the Vehmic Courts were of a threefold character: the ordinary court, which was an open Court or Fehmeuce, to which every freeman had access; the "Heimliche Acht" was the far-famed secret tribunal, at which no one but the initiated dared venture to appear.

The former court was held three times in each year. It was announced a fortnight before by the messengers and every householder of the county, whether free or servile, was bound under a penalty to appear at it, and declare on oath what crime he knew to have been committed in his neighbourhood. But the Secret Court, though assembled in broad daylight, under the oak or under the lime tree, took every precaution to prevent the disclosure of its proceedings. Hence the fearful oath administered to the initiated; and if any stranger was discovered in the court the unfortunate intruder instantly forfeited his life.

MODE OF PROCEDURE OF THE VEHMIC COURTS.

The "Offenbare Ding," or open court, exercised, as we have seen, a merely civil jurisdiction, and the proceedings in these cases were not very dissimilar to those of the ordinary courts of justice in Germany and England during the Middle Ages. It is from the Secret Vehmic Court which has obtained for the Vehmic Tribunals their tremendous celebrity, and it is this with which we are more particularly interested. The criminal jurisdiction of the Vehme was as extensive as it was powerful. Heresy may rank as a protection against its reckless authority; and it was only in the case of heresy that it manifested intrusion. The Vehme-gerichte took cognisance of all offences against the Christian faith, of all breaches of the peace, of all misdemeanours against magic, witchcraft, and poison; and they sometimes designated their jurisdiction as comprehending every offence against the honour of God and the welfare of man. Secrecy and the "Heimliche Acht" were of action—that when the criminal was taken in the fact, the inquisitorial; and the ordinary process. The Vehmic Tribunals, it appears, did not make constant circuits by night and by day, could apprehend a thief or murderer, or any other malefactor. If any other tribunal claimed the cognisance of the "malefactor," or in the very act, or if his own mouth confessed the crime, they hung him upon the next tree. These proofs of guilt were called the Haleende Hand (strong hand), the Blickende Schein (flashing appearance), and the Gichtige Mund (faltering mouth). But even under these circumstances, in order that execution might be legal, it was necessary in the first place that the suspected should be taken and executed summarily; for if he escaped and was caught again, he could not be put to death in the form, but must be proceeded against before the court with all the customary formalities. In the second place, it was required that three Echevins at least should be present at the capture to seize, to accuse, and to execute the criminal.

When a criminal was accused secretly before the tribunal, or the crime in an individual was vehemently suspected, or when the nature of the offence was such that its proof could only rest upon opinion and belief, the Vehmic Tribunals proceeded by the inquisitorial process. Fame was denounced by one of the initiated, and, if the court upon the information thought fit, it ordered the accused to be summoned. If he fled of his guilt, he was said to be "verfämbt," his life was forfeited, and every one was free to take it without incurring the guilt of murder, executed him without mercy or delay. The halter employed on these occasions was a withy, and when the malefactor resisted the Rehevins were allowed to slay him. If he came and stood his trial, and if the intimate that he had not been slain by robbers, but had been executed by the Vehmic Court. If he was found to have committed perjury, or entertained a person "verfämbt;" any offender who had escaped from the Echevins; or any party who after being summoned, pursued to no appear, he was declared "Wretch or Evildoer," and punished in the same doom. The "Wissend," or initiated, however, was in no respect bound by the oath of secrecy when any matter was brought before him that revealed the secrets of the court. He was presumed to be a true knight, and was accepted as compurgator. Any one who impeached or ill reputa which was fatal to the unwitnessed might be entirely refuted by the compurgatory oath of the Freyschöppen.

The ordinary process. Any one might be summoned to the accused to appear before the court to answer the charges of the appellant, and by the production of the necessary witnesses clear himself from the charge. The summonses was at the expense of the accuser, and was served by the Vehmic messengers. Three of these days of rest Echevins. The summonses varied according to whether the impeached was a Freigraf, a Freyschöppen, or one of the ignorant and uninitiated. For a Freigraf the summons was regularly issued by the whole tribunal either serve the accused personally or leave the citation at the place of his abode. If he failed to appear at the first court, he was summoned the charge within a given time, he was again summoned by four persons, and if he still failed to appear, he was summoned by six, and last time by six Echevins and a Count. But this respect was only shown to the ordained. To ordinary persons the summons was served at the door of the house, and was delivered by the Vehmic Sergeants. If the accused was a vagabond, with no fixed abode, the practice was to send out a party of the Vehmic Court to take him alive or dead wherever he might be found.

In default of appearance, and when the arraigned was in consequence of his contumacy declared "Wretch or Evildoer," the tribunal "verpfändete him, and proceed against him as is right. It stake him from his property, and declared him an outlaw, and his person forfeited to outlaw, and his person forfeited to outlaw, and his person forfeited to

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. H., WEST PARK, F. T. B., Caledonia, and others.—It will be seen by the detail that the author of Problem No. 915, and the examiners also, have confirmed the fact that it can be solved in one move less than the prescribed number by playing 1. B to K 2nd instead of 1. B to K 4th.

J. C. M., Dublin.—Your duet contest too late. Communications of the kind intended for Chess Column should be addressed to the Editor, 198, Strand.

A Reader.—It is perfectly correct.

C. F. Chichester.—We do not recognise the numbers of which most every Monday and Friday evenings at six o'clock in the Commercial Buildings, is to be solved by the Chichester Chess Club.

C. W., of Sunbury.—We are obliged by the offer and shall be glad to see them, although we apprehend they must have been printed in the machine issued by the Canterbury Committee.

W. W., Sheffield.—If we print games, they are published gratuitously. We shall endeavour to find room for them ere long.

Solutions of Problem No. 913, by Mr. Pauline, Mr. Bowyer, Mr. Bell, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Hyde, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Hyde, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Hyde

MOVABLE GASLIGHT APPARATUS.

It has for a long time been the custom, not to say the rule, in Paris, for tobacconists and many other public establishments to keep a light constantly burning, pro bono publico, and applicable to a variety of purposes, more especially to their lighting. The habit has become so general that no dealer in nicotine, when fortunate enough to obtain a Government permission to start in the trade, would think his establishment complete without some species of light ever available to the public, whether purchasers or not. Great complaints having been made of the dirty state and odour of the little oil-cups and other unsightly endearments adory tiaxcem, an ingenious contrivance, of very wide application, has just been adopted by the Parisian marchands de tabac and others, which has given equal satisfaction to themselves and to their customers, or to gratuitous patrons.

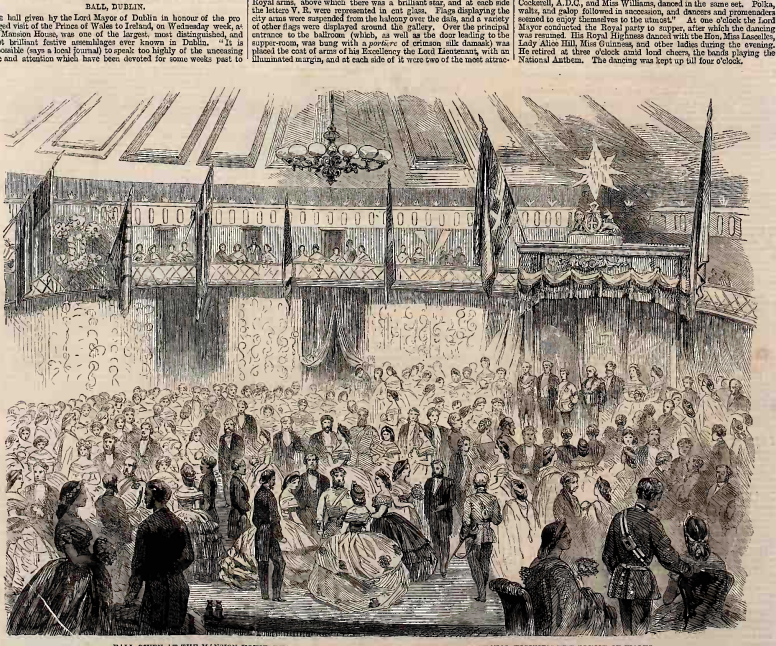
This small apparatus, of which we give an illustration from a well-known bureau on the Boulevards, was especially destined to the use of smokers in places of public resort, but may be rendered serviceable also in private houses, taverns, counting-houses, &c., or in any quarter where an occasional or movable light is required, the flame only emerging when the handle is removed from its place of repose. When at rest, as shown in our Engraving also, the flame is not at all visible, the orifice from which the gas escapes being closed, with the exception of one-twentieth part, just sufficient to keep a light constantly burning. The arrangements for the adaptation of these lights may be very elegant: we have seen some of the handles in fancy glass and amber, with gilt flexible tubing, gracefully disposed.

The adoption of this apparatus will lead to the suppression of paper lights and lucifers, oil-lamps, &c., the causes of many fires, dirt, and bad smells. In an economical point of view the saving is great, on account of the very trifling proportion of gas consumed wastefully. Owing to the improvements brought to bear on the new system of portable gaslights, they cannot get out of order, and are inextinguishable, thus presenting every guarantee for safety and convenience. The invention has been patented in France by MM. Duchamp and Trouillet.

NEW MOVABLE GASLIGHT APPARATUS.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AT THE LORD MAYOR'S BALL, DUBLIN.

THE ball given by the Lord Mayor of Dublin in honour of the pro longed visit of the Prince of Wales to Ireland, on Wednesday week, at the Mansion House, was one of the largest, most distinguished, and most brilliant festive assemblages ever known in Dublin. "It is impossible (says a local journal) to speak too highly of the unceasing care and attention which have been devoted for some weeks past to the arrangements for this occasion. Everything which taste could suggest and a lavish expenditure of money effect was done by his Lordship to provide for the comfort of his guests. The walls of the Round Room were covered by a beautiful chintz, the design being a drawing of the graceful hop-blossom, the tendrils of which, climbing round a pillar, formed a handsome border. Eight large mirrors were placed round the walls, and contributed much to the general effect. A raised dais, covered with crimson cloth, was placed opposite the entrance-door, and was provided with a variety of couches and easy-chairs for the accommodation of the Prince of Wales, the Lord Lieutenant, and the other distinguished guests. A marble vase filled with flowers stood at each side. The dais was surmounted by a canopy, draped with Utrecht velvet, and decorated with festoons of exquisite Irish gold tissued poplins of various patterns, from the looms of Atkinson and Co., of College-green, the firm of which the Lord Mayor is the principal. The pediment of the canopy supported the Royal arms, above which there was a brilliant star, and at each side the letters V. R. were represented in cut glass. Flags displaying the city arms were suspended from the balcony over the dais, and a variety of other flags were displayed around the gallery. Over the principal entrance to the ballroom (which, as well as the door leading to the supper-room, was hung with a portiere of crimson silk damask) was placed the coat of arms of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, with an illuminated margin, and at each side of it were two of the most attractive features in the decoration of the apartments—viz., the Prince of Wales's plume and the star of St. George, formed of glass prisms. As the accepted invitations amounted to nearly 2500, it was found necessary to provide additional accommodation for so large a number. The entire suite of apartments was therefore thrown open on this occasion, and the Oak Room, in which supper has generally been served, was appropriated to dancing. A temporary supper-room was erected in the garden, running parallel to the back wall of the Mansion House, and 196ft. long by 20ft. wide. This room was very tastefully decorated. It was hung with various-coloured chintz, and well lighted by gas, the branches springing from the columns that support the roof, and which were fluted in blue and white. The room terminated in a Turkish tent, arranged in an elegant and graceful style. A supper-table was placed in the tent, at which the Lord Mayor received the Prince of Wales, the Lord Lieutenant, and a circle of distinguished persons. The guests commenced to arrive shortly after ten o'clock, and poured in in a continued stream until an advanced hour. Each lady, on entering the ballroom, was presented with a card-programme of the dances, on the outer cover of which was a well-executed likeness of the Royal guest of the evening. About eleven o'clock his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Lord Lieutenant, General Sir G. Browne, General Bruce, Colonel Keppel, and other members of their respective suites, arrived at the Mansion House, escorted by a troop of cavalry, from the Royal Hospital, Kilmainham, where his Royal Highness had dined with the Commander of the Forces. A guard of honour was stationed at the Mansion House, over the door of which the words of the old Irish greeting, Cead Mille Failte, were displayed in illuminated characters. The Royal party were received by the Lord Mayor, and at once conducted to the ballroom, the band of the 15th Hussars, which, with Kelly's string bands, was stationed in the gallery, playing the National Anthem. As the Prince, who on his arrival was loudly cheered by an immense crowd which had assembled in Dawson-street, passed through the room to the dais a murmur of applause rose from the crowded assembly. Dancing was then commenced. His Royal Highness, who wore the uniform of an officer of the Guards, opened the ball by dancing a quadrille with Lady Emily Peel, the Lord Lieutenant and Lady Barbara Leeson being their vis-à-vis. Sir Robert Peel and Miss Lascelles, Mr. Cockerell, A.D.C., and Miss Williams, danced in the same set. Polka, waltz, and galop followed in succession, and dancers and promenaders seemed to enjoy themselves to the utmost." At one o'clock the Lord Mayor conducted the Royal party to supper, after which the dancing was resumed. His Royal Highness danced with the Hon. Miss Lascelles, Lady Alice Hill, Miss Guinness, and other ladies during the evening. He retired at three o'clock amid loud cheers, the bands playing the National Anthem. The dancing was kept up till four o'clock.



BALL GIVEN AT THE MANSION HOUSE, DUBLIN, BY THE LORD MAYOR, IN HONOUR OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1110.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE INDIAN FINANCE MINISTER AT THE METROPOLIS OF MANUFACTURES.

AMONG the advantages that have accrued to India and to the United Kingdom from the extinction of the East India Company not the least, assuredly, is the fuller recognition by both the Government of India and the people of Great Britain of the intimate relations in which their interests stand to each other. In the palmy days of the company it was held to be a maxim of sound policy to discourage European curiosity respecting the affairs of that vast and populous dependency. The Government at Calcutta and the directors in Leadenhall-street shrouded themselves and their empire in secrecy, isolated as far as was possible the one country from the other, and strove to prevent that amalgamation of interests with which they were sagacious enough to foresee that their monopoly of power, patronage, and influence could not long coexist. There may have been other than selfish reasons for this policy. Plausible arguments may be found which, to say the least, may cast a doubt upon the safety of allowing India to be permeated by European ideas and freely turned to account for European objects. It remains yet to be seen how far the real wants of the one can be satisfied by the other, and to what extent either the one or the other will gain from a close identification of their respective affairs. So far, however, as the experiment has been tried, facts appear to answer reasonable anticipations, and the closer and more intimate the association between Great Britain and India has become, the greater, on the whole, have been the benefits resulting to both.

The Government of India has not even yet been able to free itself entirely from the influence of the traditional policy handed down to it by the East India Company. The transition from the old exclusive system to one better adapted to develop the inexhaustible resources of our Eastern dependency proceeds slowly and cautiously; but it does proceed. Events on both sides have quickened the progress of political and commercial amalgamation far beyond anything that could have been effected by speculative theories and arguments. As in the case of Ireland, so in India. When man's shortsighted wisdom or folly had brought affairs to the brink of ruin Divine Providence snatched the reins out of his imbecile hands and guided the destinies of both countries alike into a safer track. The military mutinies, the financial embarrassments, the drought, famine, and pestilence with which India has been so severely tried, and the abrupt stoppage of the usual supplies of cotton to British manufacturing markets, have unceremoniously thrust aside many of the prejudices which have so long operated to keep England and India asunder; and, as in a tropical district, a violent convulsion of the elements will drive animals of the most opposite instincts to the same shelter, and suspend for awhile their mutual antagonism, so the awful crises which have swept over India, and that which now threatens the manufacturing industry of the United Kingdom, have removed not a few of the previously irremovable impediments to the creation of a permanent interdependence of the one upon the other.

THE DISASTER TO THE GREAT EASTERN: STATE OF HER GRAND SALOON DURING THE GALE.—SEE PAGE 316.

The visit of the Indian Finance Minister to Manchester, and the interview between him and deputations from several manufacturing or commercial bodies, may, we hope, be regarded as "the outward and visible sign" of the new and more enlightened spirit which will henceforth animate the policy of the Indian Government. The bare fact is agreeably suggestive. One cannot but be pleased to see India and Great Britain—the Power of almost inexhaustible production, and the Power of almost illimitable demand—brought together, and calmly and dispassionately entering upon mutual consultation with a view to such an adjustment of their respective interests as may best serve the ends of all. It is quite a novel phenomenon in the political history of British connexion with the East. Never before, that we remember, have the two interests, so effectively represented on this occasion, stood face to face, and, in free and friendly converse, compared notes. It is true that Mr. Laing was not armed with the authority of the Government at Calcutta, and that the deputations to whose addresses he attentively listened and courteously replied represented only a limited responsibility. But the very fact that the interview partook of an accidental and extempore character, and was, at most, only semi-official, tended to dissipate the reserve which would probably have been maintained under more formal conditions. The result has been a frank exhibition of desires and motives, and an equally frank confession of errors, on both sides. Manchester and Calcutta are probably better acquainted with each other, or, at any rate, more amicably disposed towards each other, than they have ever been before, and the mutual confidence which third rate discussion has served to elicit will mightily assist in bringing about sound practical conclusions.

On behalf of the Indian Government, Mr. Laing gave a concise but luminous resumé of the changes which have already been effected in its general policy, of the principal features which mark its present conditions, and of the hopes which may be rationally entertained with regard to its future. In almost all essential matters his views coincided with those of the deputations. A vigorous retrenchment in the public expenditure, a liberal policy upon public works, without which the internal resources of the country must remain undeveloped, a prompt, inexpensive, and reliable administration of justice, especially as between the employer and employed, and those guarantees of security for the absence of which capital is afraid to venture on taking commercial risks, he regarded as the great wants of India. He ran over the efforts which had already been made in these directions, and summarised their chief results. He showed that India is rapidly recovering from the deep and dangerous depression into which an almost exclusively military and coercive policy had plunged her; and he directly appealed to the men of business in this country to further their own interests by boldly embarking in those commercial enterprises which would prove as remunerative to themselves as they would be beneficial to India. It would be impossible to follow the right hon. gentleman through his exposition of India as it is, and as it is to be, without becoming sensible that the change for the better which has come over the counsels of the Indian Government since the extinction of the Company is as gratifying as it is marvellous, or without indulging in the most sanguine expectations that, after all, British supremacy in the East, unscrupulously as, for the most part, it was obtained, will yet result in incalculable blessings to the Oriental races.

But the peculiar interest of the interview between Calcutta and Manchester related to the future supplies of cotton. This is a question of vital interest to Lancashire, and, unfortunately, on as it may hereafter prove, fortunately, it presses for immediate solution. The stores which feed a large proportion of the manufacturing industry of this country are largely supplied from India. Whence are they to be renewed? There seems but little prospect that the abundant crop gathered in the Southern States of North America, and lying ready for exportation, will find its way to Europe before existing stocks on this side the Atlantic are exhausted. A famine of cotton will probably ensue, and will then begin already to feel its baleful influence. We are compelled to economise by working half time. In this trying emergency can India help us? And, if so, to what extent? The cotton plant is indigenous to India. Properly cultivated, it might be obtained from our own dependency, of any quality, and in any quantity. Even this very year, and taken almost unawares, Indian produce may materially assist us in averting the worst effects to be anticipated from the embargo laid upon that of America. Assure it a highly remunerative price, and a full crop of it will be forthcoming. But, in regard to the future, the question of an adequate supply of cotton from India is a mere question of governmental policy. Every requisite is available but that which the ruling authority at Calcutta alone can confer. There is suitable land in abundance; there is labour waiting to be employed; there will soon be sufficient means of internal communication; but how about the tenure of land and the enforcement of labour contracts? This is what the manufacturing industry of the north wished to learn from Mr. Laing.

We cannot say that his reply on these heads was quite satisfactory. There still seems to be some unaccountable objection in the view of the Government in India to the disposing of freeholds, even in lands now waste, and it is said that not less than a third part of the peninsula is given up to the jungle. The Indian Finance Minister objects that where the lands are waste labour is scarce, and implies that freehold tenures in such districts would, owing to this reason, turn out unprofitably. It is almost the only unsatisfactory feature of Mr. Laing's speech, and it is chiefly unsatisfactory because so intelligent and candid a Minister would hardly have assigned so obviously insufficient an objection to selling waste lands in freehold had he not been aware that other, but perhaps unassignable, objections to the policy are felt at Calcutta. Waste lands, especially in a tropical clime, are, of course, thinly inhabited, but as the vegetation is so encroaching a power in India that unless man cultivates the soil the jungle soon ejects him from it. But Mr. Laing will not deny that where employment attracts by adequate remuneration population is sure to follow. It would do so in India, as it would elsewhere. We will hope that the Finance Minister rather meant to evade answering a question yet undecided, and refrain from prematurely committing his colleagues, than to announce the predetermination of the Indian Government against the freehold tenure of land in the peninsula. At any rate, we feel convinced that until that problem has been solved any large employment of European capital in the cultivation of cotton in India will be locked for in vain.

We had no intention when we commenced these observations of dwelling upon any controverted point of economy, and have been beguiled into the few remarks we have made on the question of cotton supply and the best means to ensure it by the deep interest we, in common with most of our countrymen, feel in a wise adjustment of the difficulties which surround it. Our main object, however, has been to express our hope in the significant and cheering fact that Lancashire and Calcutta have informally taken counsel together on matters equally affecting the prosperity of each. It is one of the most auspicious signs of the time—far more to be valued for what it indicates than for what it is. May the happy example be followed! Henceforth, when Indian interests be regarded and dealt with as identified with British interests, and may the conquered races of that magnificent dependency derive nothing but good from their subjection to the British Crown!

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Constitutionnel announces that in consequence of the return of fine weather the Imperial Family will probably leave St. Cloud on Monday. The Progrès de Lyon states that orders have been received at Compiègne to prepare the apartments for the Emperor on Saturday, the 5th of October. The Empress paid a visit last Saturday to the Salle-d'Asile, at Bayonne, and was received by the Mayor, the Countess of Montijo, the prefect of the Basses-Pyrenees, and a number of superior functionaries.

A Grand Hunt at length been officially named for the meeting of crowned heads at Compiègne. The Moniteur of Monday announces in its usual official form that the King of Prussia will arrive in that place on the 6th of October, and adds—"It appears certain that almost at the same period there will be another Royal visit to France." According to the Pays, the Royal guests will be the King of Holland, others of the Paris papers say the King of Denmark.

A Grand Hunt at Compiègne is spoken of. The hunt and festivities with which he accompanied it, were expected to be signs of a less rigid administration of the laws. The expectation has been hitherto disappointed in every way, and, as a last instance of the Minister's inquisitorial management, it is stated that he has issued a circular to the various prefects requiring a return of all the writers in the periodical press, stating the amount of their salary, whether they are married or single, and the number of their children. Marseilles alone have as yet ventured to carry out the orders of their chief. At Marseilles, M. de Maupas (acting in pursuance of the Ministerial circular) has issued a mandate to the employés of that city five tabular schedules, to be filled up by them. These schedules run thus—1. Name and Christian name of each writer. 2. Qualities. A Writer here, A Writer there. 3. Whether married or single, and number of children. 6. Salary paid by the proprietor. 5. Any currency derived from other departments. 6. Scientific or literary missions. 10. Honorary distinctions. The proprietors of the Marseilles papers, on the receipt of this extraordinary document, unanimously held a meeting, and came to a resolution to give information as to the age and birthplace of the present manager, but declined to answer the rest of the questions. The Gazette du Midi publishes a note, signed by M. Bonifacy, giving a curious explanation of the reason for the demand. M. Bonifacy says—"The Government, wishing to decorate some eminent editors, asked for information from the prefects, but could not expect that its instructions, which were perfectly explicit, would be so misunderstood, and so singularly carried out."

On the 1st of October the English Treaty of Commerce with France will come into full operation.

The French Government has refused to allow officers to take service in the Federal army of America, being desirous to avoid any appearance of interfering, even indirectly, in the conflict between the contending States.

SPAIN.

The difficulties between the Spanish Government and the Holy See on the subject of church lands have at length, it is said, been settled. The Papal Nuncio at Madrid has received a brief authorising the Spanish Bishops to convey estates of ecclesiastical property for personal securities not transferable.

The insurrection is said to be over in Cuba, in addition to those already in the island, will make up a contingent of 4000 men. The squadron destined to act against Mexico will consist of twelve vessels mounting 120 guns. Provision will be added to the number of necessary transports. The command of the land forces will be entrusted to General Prim. The Captain-General of Cuba will be empowered to freight the requisite number of merchant vessels for the use of the expedition.

The frigate Patrocinio has been launched. Two other frigates will also be launched shortly.

The annual fêtes have commenced, and the concourse of people was very great. Seventy persons have been wounded in the arena.

PORTUGAL.

The marriage of the Princess Antonia of Portugal with Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen was celebrated at Lisbon on the 19th inst. with great pomp. The nuptial service took place in the Chapel Royal.

HOLLAND.

During the discussion in the Second Chamber of Deputies of the Address in reply to the King's Speech, the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the Government had recognised Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy, and had abstained from attending the fêtes at the official Gazette in the same manner as when Holland recognised the present Emperor of the French. The Minister for Foreign Affairs alone has submitted a proposition for the drought of the budget for 1862. The redemption of the public debt is postponed until the proposed junction of the rivers with the sea by means of canals, and the emancipation of the slaves in the Dutch colonies, have been carried out.

BELGIUM.

The annual fêtes of September at Brussels, in honour of the anniversary of the establishment of the kingdom, commenced on Sunday. They consisted of a parade of the National Guard of Brussels and of certain provincial towns; of a fir national, concerts, theatrical performances, illuminations, and fireworks. The weather was malevolent, but everything passed off well.

ITALY.

General Della Rocca will represent King Victor Emmanuel at Königsberg.

The King will go to Bologna on the 8th of October. After reviewing there the 4th Corps d'Armée, and inspecting the fortifications, he will return to Turin.

The Official Gazette of Wednesday publishes a circular addressed by Baron Ricasoli to the Italian Consular agents in reference to the mineral resources of Italy. Baron Ricasoli says the national flag, to which Venice is still wanting, covers 800,000 tons of shipping, manned by 100,000 sailors. He reminds the Consuls that the international engagements of Sardinia are the engagements which are valid in Italy, and that the treaties of the former Italian States are to be considered as abolished. Baron Ricasoli further says—"The Consuls have no political duties. They must, nevertheless, endeavour to exercise their influence according to the views of the Government. They must support the policy of the Government, which, in singing at the independence and unity of Italy, wishes to strengthen the peace of Europe; and which, in disengaging the Church from its temporal pre-occupation, wishes, nevertheless, to remain devoted to the Catholic religion and to insure its spiritual independence."

General Cialdini has addressed a congratulatory letter to the Municipality of Naples, rebuking the members of the council for wasting time in useless debates, and neglecting the real work required of them. "Naples," says the General, "has need of nightly scavengers and porters for the cleanliness of its streets; it has need of water, of easier communications, and of more convenient and open thoroughfares."

The Opinione denies the news published by the Pays that General Cialdini will be replaced at Naples, from ill-health:—"A new law on the internal administration of the country will shortly be published. This law will establish the office of Lieutenant-General, and the functions of General Cialdini will naturally cease.

Cosetta, one of the brigand chiefs, has surrendered himself to the authorities.

The marriage of the Prince of Tuscany with one of the sisters of Francis II. took place at Rome on Thursday week. The Pope pronounced the nuptial benediction in the Vatican, and afterwards celebrated Mass. The bride becomes the bride and bridegroom, Francis II., the ex-Queen of Naples, and the whole of the Royal family were present at the ceremony.

PRUSSIA.

The trial of Becker, for his attempt on the life of the King, took place on Monday. The jury found him guilty, rejecting the plea of insanity, and the Court sentenced him to twenty years' imprisonment, and at the expiration of that time to be banished the kingdom.

The Minister of the Interior is preparing a bill for the next Parliamentary Session, extending the principle of local self-government to the election of Mayors in the municipalities and the communes.

The Municipal Council of Berlin has voted a sum of 100,000 dollars to be offered to the King of Prussia on the occasion of his coronation for the construction of a Royal palace.

Councillor Twesten has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment, the minimum punishment allowed by law, on account of libelled with General Manteuffel.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

An Imperial ordonnance has been published on Wednesday prohibiting the meeting of the General Assembly of the Comitat of Pesth, which was to take place on Sept. 30, and threatening to employ force should the prohibition be disregarded.

The Comitat of Bihar has declared its adhesion to the protest of the Comitat of Pesth against the administration of the Imperial Court.

In Tuesday's sitting of the Upper House of the Council of the Empire the Government withdrew the bill on compromise in civil cases, because both Houses of the Hungarian Diet declared that no business is held on the subject.

The state of Hungary daily becomes more critical, and a crisis seems imminent. The municipal councils have neither power nor influence. The citizens are full of indignation at the conduct of the Diet.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

The Emperor, on his fête-day, was absent upon his tour, of which mention was made last week; and the citizens of St. Petersburg forwarded an address of congratulation in his absence to Peterhoff, to Livadia, in the Crimea. On the following day the Emperor returned a message of acknowledgment, and thanks to his fellow-citizens for the capital by the same channel of communication.

The annual religious fête at Chatelowkow, Poland, has terminated. Eighty thousand pilgrims, of all ranks, from Poland, were present, among whom fifty thousand were of the peasant class. The greatest unity and harmony prevailed throughout the proceedings, which were watched by a large detachment of troops, under General Wagner.

TURKEY.

The first conference on the union of the Danubian Principalities took place at Constantinople on Sunday, and proved resultless, the Porte, England, and France voting in favour of, and Russia, Austria, and Prussia against the measure.

It is believed that no important operation will be undertaken against the Montenegrins during the present year. Omer Pasha made a strong reconnoissance from Trebigne on the 21st inst., and ascertained that the Montenegrins had thrown up redoubts before Grahovo, but had made no preparations for assuming the offensive.

GREECE.

An attempt was made on Wednesday week to assassinate the Queen of Greece. A man, who is said to be a Turk, fired a pistol at the unarmed years old, and who declares that he had no accomplices, fired a revolver at her Majesty in the Palace Square at Athens, but missed his aim, and was immediately arrested. The Queen displayed much coolness and courage, and showed herself in public on the following day. A proclamation issued by the Minister of Justice that Dorlos is insane.

INDIA.

The cholera has made great ravages at Delhi, Meerut, and many other places in the North-West Provinces, but its virulence is abating. The amalgamation of the Indian and Queen's armies is progressing, great numbers of Indian officers having joined the Staff corps. The Governor-General has arrived at Simla to announce the establishment of a line of steamers between Kurrachee and Bushire.

At Bombay, Bullock's Indian Hotel, India Railway is open from Surat to Bahar, a distance of forty-five miles south of Surat.

The Government of Bombay has sanctioned the expenditure of a lac of rupees for the purchase of articles for the International Exhibition in 1862.

Exploring expeditions are about to penetrate Asia in different directions. Captain Smyth's expedition is now preparing at Almorah, and will start at the latest by the next fine season. He will proceed through the Himalayas into Central Asia, by Ladak and the Pangong Lake, and Khoken, to the north-east, as far as the Tibian-Shan, or celestial range of mountains, on the Chinese frontier.

Mr. Seton Kerr, Secretary to the Bengal Government, has resigned his appointment, which, it is said, has been accepted, under the following circumstances:—It must be premised that the Bengal authorities have declined to confer on Europeans the legislative functions attached to the European residents. Some time ago, according to an account of the affair in the Times, it appears that the contrivance of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Mr. J. P. Grant, to have a translation made for private circulation of the notorious drama written in the Bengalee language with the title of "Nil Durpun," in which the system of indigo-planting was described, with reflections of the grossest and most calumniatory kind upon the English character, into a number of 400 copies; and then, without consulting the Lieutenant-Governor any further on the subject, proceeded to distribute them, to the extent even of dispatching twenty copies to the Indian Secretary at home. When the explosion took place the case was brought before Lord Canning in Council, and his Lordship pronounced judgment by deciding that Mr. Seton Kerr can no longer be considered qualified to fill the office of Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

CHINA.

The Prussian Envoy has failed to negotiate a treaty with the Chinese Government. The port of Taiwan, in the island of Formosa, has been opened to European commerce, and Mr. Swinhoe has been appointed British Consul there. A rumour affirms that 100,000 rebels were approaching Shanghai. Nankin is still closely invested by the imperial troops. The neighbourhood of Canton is flooded.

JAPAN.

Ominous intelligence has been received from Japan. During the night of the 5th or 6th of July a band of armed assassins attacked the British Legation at Kanagawa, with the purpose of murdering all its inmates. Mr. Morrison and Mr. Oliphant were seriously wounded, but the others escaped unhurt, and all seem to have subsequently retired to Yokohama. All was quiet on the 21st of July, when Mr. Alcock was still at Jeddo. All was quiet on the 21st of July, when Mr. Alcock was still at Jeddo. An attempt, however, was made to set fire to the Japanese fleet in the harbours, and others had been ordered from Hong-Kong to Japan.

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

The Montreal Company's steam-ship North American brings journals from New York of the 12th inst., and telegrams to the 14th instant. A slight improvement between the American people already in sight, and a more liberal spirit towards the Government, seem to have been the result of the secession of the seven States. The Northern States are now more united than ever, and the Southern Union does not seem to be gaining strength. The Federal Government has been able to secure a loan of 10,000,000 dollars, and the Treasury is said to be in a satisfactory condition. Whatever it may be, which may cause the divergent interests now actually in conflict to coexist. The Americans generally would, then, give proof of their wisdom in not seeking in common such a settlement before a useless effusion of blood, a barren expenditure of wealth and of public credit, and such a destruction of reciprocal resources that have come to deepen an abyss between the two sections of the Republic, to be still more difficult to fill up than formerly, and in the ruin perhaps irreparable—of their commercial and political power.

Our August Master cannot reign himself to admit such deplorable antitheses. He hopes that Providence will place in confidence in the moderation and sense of the citizens of the Union who appreciate so judiciously their true interests. He thinks it happy to believe that the members of the Federal Government, and the influential men of the two parties, will raise all questions and will bring all their efforts to unite in the sentiment of the maintenance of that great work, so laboriously raised, and which appeared to rich in the future.

It is in this sense, Sir, that I desire you to express yourself, as well to the members of the Federal Government, as to the influential persons with whom you may meet, giving them the assurance that in every crest the American nation may avoid a great moral downfall in the person of our August Master during the important crisis which it is passing through at present, the preservation of any very good understanding.

GORTSCHAKOFF.

Mr. Seward, still a short and courteous reply expressing his profound sense of the "liberal, friendly, and magnanimous sentiments" of the Emperor, and regarding them "as a new guaranty of a friendship between the two countries which had its beginning with the national existence of the United States."

A DREADFUL RAILROAD CATASTROPHE.

A railway-bridge over the Platte River, on the Hannibal and St. Joseph Line, Missouri, broke down under the weight of a passenger train, conducting to the ground men, women, and children. The cars were precipitated into the river. Seventeen persons were instantly killed, and many others horribly mangled. Only three were able to call for assistance. It appears that the timber support of the bridge had been scarcely burnt through and the fire then extinguished, thus leaving no suspicious appearances about the structure. It was subsequently discovered that some other bridges on the route to St. Joseph were similarly disabled, and the tracks obstructed by logs. It is supposed to be the work of Missouri Secessionists.

PERSONAL.

The report of the death of Jefferson Davis is destitute of truth.

Prince Napoleon had left the United States and was travelling in Canada. He had received in Quebec.

The Prince de Joinville had arrived in New York, but declined the reception which was offered him by the Federal Government.

A letter from Paris announces the death of that charming actress Mdme. Rose Chéri, who expired last Saturday, of a malignant sore throat.

The Indépendance states that the future husband of the daughter of King Victor Emmanuel is not the King of Portugal, but the Duke of Oporto, the heir-apparent to that throne.

The Gazette of yesterday se bright contains a copy of a treaty concluded with the King of Lagos for the cession of the isle and port of Lagos to her Majesty.

The corn harvest has been most abundant this year in Hungary, and enormous quantities are in consequence ready for sale or export to countries of western Europe.

M. Meyerbeer has left Paris to direct the orchestra at the coronation of the King of Prussia at Konigsberg, and a grand march, composed by him for the occasion, is to be executed.

The boring of the artesian well at Passy seems to have reached the chalk at under or long expected. On Tuesday morn a stream gushed forth in considerable volume.

The Ost Deutsche Post states that portraits of M. Dosh, professor of music, painted both by lithography and photography, are sold for the benefit of the Orphan Asylum at Frith. Up to the present time 30,000 copies have been disposed of, producing a sum of 60,000 florins.

According to the Rural, of Rome, the effective strength of the Swiss army at the beginning of the present year was 100,000 men, 91,000 forming the Federal contingent, 6,000 the Federal reserve, and 3,000 the landwehr. In the latter number 2881 were not organized.

The Gazette de la Bourse states that a bomb, which had been placed under the window of the Baron Mario confectioner, kept by a widow named Marie Teresart, at Thionne, exploded about eight o'clock one evening last week. It did no further harm, however, than breaking all the glass in the windows. Half an hour before the Archduke Albert was in this very confectioner waiting for the train to Verona.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Bishop of Elyhas become so infirm that, at a recent confirmation, the venerable Prelate had to be supported on either side during the imposition of hands.

The village church of Rustington, Sussex, erected circa A.D. 1090, was reopened on Wednesday week, after having undergone a thorough and substantial repair.

The Bishop of London held a confirmation at Geneva on Wednesday week, preached in each of the three English chapels in Paris on Sunday, and on Monday left for Switzerland on a tour.

On Tuesday week the parish church of St. Leonard, Chelwood, Somerset, having been thoroughly restored in a style more pure and rich, from the designs of Mr. Norton, was formally opened by the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells.

The first synod of the Church of England in Canada met on the 12th inst. in the Cathedral of Montreal, under the presidency of the Metropolitan Bishop of Montreal. Many hundreds of persons were present.

There was a harvest thanksgiving service at Ely Cathedral on the 12th instant, which, according to the Cambridge Chronicle, was well attended by clergymen, magistrates, yeomen, farmers, tradesmen, artisans, and labourers.

A substantial new schoolhouse for girls has been in augurated in the parish of St. John, Stamford. It cost £500 and has every accommodation for 250 children that can "religious instruction imparted should be in strict accordance with the principles and tenets of the Reformed Protestant faith."

The parish church of Fordham, Essex, was reopened on Tuesday week, after a thorough restoration. The total cost was about £700, the chancel remains having been restored by the Rector, the Rev. W. H. Herring, who also contributed to the general repairs, which were effected by subscriptions and a rate, except a sum of £300, which still remains to be collected.

The annual Feast of the Dedication of the parish church of St. John the Baptist, Letton, Wilts, was this year combined with the celebration of the completion of the restoration of the church. The restoration has been the gradual work of the Vicar, the Rev. H. W. Bending, and the parishioners, at a cost of some £1,200, of which about £400 was contributed by the lay rector and patron, the Earl of St. Germans.

The consecration of St. John's, Dalston, have presented the Rev. W. Stone, M.A., Incumbent, with a testimonial of twenty-seven guineas, and an address in which they express their gratitude for the benefits conferred on the district by the erection of the church, and in appreciation of his pastoral labours among them.

The Temple Church, which has been for some time closed, is to be reopened on Sunday, the 6th of October, with a full choral service and a sermon by the Master, the Rev. Hugh Pearson. The Rev. Sir Frederick Hillsette Rolfe has almost entirely ridden the vow of the sextry side, but the lay portion of the church and portico are to remain as they have been of late, and also the elaborate Norman porch.

The restoration of the Eastern of Ely Cathedral, as a memorial of the lamented Dean Peacock, will be commenced in a few days, designs having been prepared by Mr. James M. Hayward, the architect to the new arch of considerable taste and skill, is presiding with the painting of the vaulted of the Lantern. The Dean and Chapter have resolved that the Ecclesiastical and other reviews from early Scripture history, being in course of execution, are colour and gilding, and the whole will be completed.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—Burel Benefices: The Rev. L. Bowman, Perpetual Curate of Walton, to Brampton, diocese of Carlisle; the Rev. J. Bowstead, Vicar of Bampton, Penrith, to Lazonby, same diocese. Rectories: Rev. Arthur Bickersteth to Leigh, Worcestershire; Rev. W. Bowden to Thatcham, Berks; Rev. T. Bridges to Wonston, Hants; Rev. J. Bullock to Ashton-under-Lyne; Rev. Peter's, Lincolnshire; Rev. J. Cooper to Ashton-under-Lyne; Rev. J. Cooper to Ashton-under-Lyne; Rev. J. Cooper to Ashton-under-Lyne

THE DONCASTER CUP.—SEE PAGE 316.

Engraving) was designed and manufactured for the occasion, and ornamented in a highly emblematic style with the armorial bearings of the Corporation of Boston, being in the form of a shield having two ducal coronets in pale or; with crest, a ram couchant on a woolpack; while the arms of the cup were appropriately represented by the supporters, two mermaids proper, ducally crowned. The other two cups were ornamented with rifle subjects in frosted silver. The shooting commenced at ten o'clock, and finished about five. Six members from the following corps contended—Boston, Spalding, Holbeach, Gosberton, and Donnington. There was some excellent shooting. The Hayer's cup, 200 yards range, was won by Quartermaster Sergeant Wheeler, of Boston; Mr. Cooke's cup, 400 yards range, by Private G. Thomas, of Boston; and Mr. Wren's cup, 600 yards range, by Bugler Cocks, of the Gosberton and Donnington corps. The successful competitors were then drawn up on the marsh, a number of ladies and gentlemen, including the Mayoress, occupied the bank, and Major Hopkins presented the several prizes in the names of the donors, complimenting the competitors upon the success which had attended their labours. The prizemen having returned thanks, three cheers were given for them, for the donors, for the Mayoress, and the Major, and the day's proceedings terminated.

CUP PRESENTED BY STEPHEN LEWIN, ESQ., MAYOR OF BOSTON, TO MR. WHEELER, AS THE BEST SHOT AT 200 YARDS RANGE OF THE 3RD LINCOLNSHIRE BATTALION OF RIFLE VOLUNTEERS.

STATUETTE OF LORD ELCHO.

THIS statuette of one of the most energetic promoters of the volunteer movement, and the active Colonel of the London Scottish Regiment, will, we are sure, be viewed with general interest by all the members of that particular body. It is manufactured by the firm of Sir James Duke and nephews, at the Hill Pottery, Burslem, and represents the gallant nobleman in full uniform, standing in a position of observation, resting on his sword, which—true to the motto, "Defence, not defiance,"—is sheathed, though quite ready to leap from its scabbard on the slightest intimation of danger. The likeness will be generally recognised as a very good one. A solitary thistle springing from the ground indicates the nationality of the subject and the corps of which he is the distinguished leader.

STATUETTE OF LORD ELCHO.

CALLER OU, THE WINNER OF THE ST. LEGER.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

EARLY MORNING AT YARMOUTH—ARRIVAL OF THE FIRST HERRING-BOATS OF THE SEASON.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 323.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 25.—18th Sunday after Trinity. Michaelmas Day.
MONDAY, 26.—St. Jerome.
TUESDAY, Oct. 1.—Remigius. Cambridge Michaelmas Term begins.
WEDNESDAY, 2.—Aragoscloses, 1853.
THURSDAY, 6.—Hyfler died, 1815.
FRIDAY, 7.—Sir J. Ramsde died, 1821. New Moon, 6h. 56m. a.m.
SATURDAY, 8.—The Solitaire declares War against Hawks, 1851.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 1, 1853.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
m. h.	m. h.	m. h.	m. h.	m. h.	m. h.	m. h.
38 0	1 0	1 23	1 46	2 9	2 33	2 58
38 12	1 12	1 35	1 58	2 21	2 45	3 10

Will be published early in October,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1853, price 1s., containing GROUPS OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS (printed in Colours), from Drawings by HARRISON WEIR, and interesting Illustrated Descriptions of the above by THOMAS MILLER; Twelve Fine-Art Engravings; also, Astronomical Diagrams (printed in Colours), &c., of Remarkable Phenomena, with Explanatory Notes by J. Hind; together with Illustrations of the Seasons, by A. Hunt. Office, 198, Strand.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—
Whole Page, £20. Half Page, £10. Quarter Page, £5.
Any smaller Advertisement, 2s. 6d. per line (double column).
 ILLUSTRATED ADVERTISEMENTS will be received.
CIRCULATION, 100,000.
Orders and Advertisements must be sent in early to ensure attention.

OUR CONTINENTAL SUBSCRIBERS.—To suit the convenience of residents in Germany, Russia, and the eastern portion of Europe, we have appointed Mr. Ludwig Denicke, of Leipsic, Special Agent for this Journal. Terms of subscription:—One Year, 10 thalers; Half-year, 5 thalers.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1853.

THE wisdom of the policy which has prompted both our own and the French Government to adhere strictly to a line of non-interference in reference to the American struggle has received a remarkable confirmation in the reception given to the Emperor of Russia's well-meant recommendation. The excellence of the intention is fully and readily recognised, but, for all practical purposes, the letter has received very much the same treatment at the hands of the Northern public as that usually assigned to intermeddlers in conjugal differences. We believe the secret of the general non-interfering policy of the European Powers to lie in the tacit admission by all the leading statesmen—including our own—that we do not, in truth and fact, understand or appreciate in any adequate measure the real points at issue. Meanwhile our Transatlantic brethren seem to us to take very reasonably, nothing whatever but to be allowed to settle their own differences in their own way. The future is emphatically in nubibus. Whether, in the event of victory proclaiming for the North, a re-union effected by coercion can have in it any element of lasting; whether any concessions can possibly conciliate States to send members to Congress; and whether, above all, the proclamation of freedom to the black population of the south be anything more than a mere military manœuvre;—these, and a number other questions of almost equal import, have their solution still in the womb of Time. This is notably a matter in reference to which we must be pardoned if we place no faith in the prophets.

Once more our Japanese news gives grave cause for doubt as to the permanence of the friendly relations said to have been so triumphantly effected. It is clear that as long as our accredited representatives in the island are not efficiently protected, but are liable to such murderous onslaughts as that of which we have just received the news, there is no real security to life or property there; and we must either be content to maintain a sufficient protecting force, naval and military, on the spot, and administer the affairs of the legation under the muzzles of Armstrong guns, or the Japanese authorities must have a sharp lesson read them on the nature of the protection afforded by civilised nations to the persons, suite, and property of their representatives.

The recent minute on national education appears to have produced very much the same effect on the clerical world as one of the new liquid metal shells is supposed to bring about on the crowded decks of an enemy's ship. In all directions every one is on fire, and furious speeches at meetings, and still more furious letters to the press, indicate the terrible nature of the commotion excited—very unreasonably, as we think. It is obviously impossible, in so small a compass as we devote to this week's topics, to enter at any length into the items complained of so bitterly; but we may remark generally for our readers' benefit that the spirit of the new minute is rather to test the merits of a school by what it has done than by what it promises to do; and they may draw their own deduction from this touching the animus of the bitter opposition with which the minute has been met.

The Comte de Persigny's last move on the chessboard of home politics in France is extremely comic. In the earlier days of this century, or rather in the later days of the last, if an agent of police had called on a "suspect" and gravely asked for certain information about his birth, parentage, education, and general history, the "suspect" in question might very reasonably have been excused for imagining the existence of some intentions wofully inimical to his notions of personal liberty. Now in France, as every one knows, editors of and contributors to the press come all more or less under the category of "suspects," and when certain particulars of the kind indicated were demanded, it is matter of small wonder that the request beget suspicion. We are next informed, however, that the information sought was merely in connection with an intention to decorate certain editors. Did the Emperor never hear the much-used quotation—

Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes?

Lord Ellenborough is doubtless a great authority on many topics, and doubtless, as a thoroughly plain outspoken nobleman who chooses to think and speak for himself, is entitled to our respect. Whether, howe ver, the country generally will accord to him the high position he challenges as a great military prophet is, to say the least, extremely questionable. His Lordship's notion of the use of our volunteer force in action appears to be that they should be thrown forward in order to cover by the smoke of their fire the movements of the regular troops, and so protect the latter from the terrible effects of the new rifle of artillery. Setting aside the obvious objection that even a few dozen of the old-fashioned "stinkpots" rolled into position by as many boys would answer the purpose of producing an impenetrable veil of smoke quite as effectually, Lord Ellenborough seems to have quite overlooked the fact that a very considerable number of the rifle corps are already pronounced by competent authority able to take position and manœuvre with the regulars, and that more must follow. Why, then, assign exclusively to volunteers duties which may equally devolve on the light companies of military regiments or the rifle brigade? It is perilous to draw distinctions. In case of invasion the volunteers will fall in with the line and share its work like any other regiments.

THE COURT.

The Queen continues to enjoy the relaxation of her Highland home. Her Majesty during the past week has made frequent excursions among the mountains, and on one occasion extended her drive nearly a hundred miles.

On Friday se'nnight the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, left Balmoral at nine o'clock in the morning on an excursion by luncheon to the Castle of Kindrochet-Eck and Resteneuk. From the Bridge of Muick the Royal party rode on ponies past Mount Keen, by the "Ladder Burn," to Glen Muick, where they lunched with Lord Dalhousie. After luncheon her Majesty visited the Queen's Cairn, and thence drove down the North Esk to Fetteresire, where her Majesty passed the night.

The Royal party left Fetteresain at a quarter before ten on Saturday morning, and returned to Balmoral at seven in the evening by the Cairn Mouth, Bridge of Dye, and Ballochy, proceeding from Ballochy through the Forest to the Bridge of Muick.

On Sunday the Queen and the Prince Consort, with Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, attended Divine service at the Church of Crathie.

On Monday the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting were in attendance. The Rev. Dr. Fowler officiated.

On Tuesday the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, went out driving, and walked in the afternoon. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, Princess Alice of Hesse and Viscount Powerscourt had the honour of being invited to dinner.

On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Hohenlohe, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Princess Louise, drove to Ah-na-Guithasach, and rode thence up to the head of Loch Muick of her Majesty landed. The Royal party returned to Balmoral in the evening. The Prince Consort and Prince Louis of Hesse, accompanied by Lord Stanley of Alderley, went out deer-stalking. The Right Hon. John Headlam, Judge Advocate General, arrived at the Castle, and transacted business with her Majesty.

His Royal Highness Prince Alfred left Balmoral at ten o'clock on the morning of the 19th inst., attended by Major Teesdale, C.B., under whose his Royal Highness embarked on Saturday on board the Niagara for the purpose of taking his station at Corfu, as Captain. His Royal Highness Prince Alfred returned to Balmoral on Saturday, after having made a tour through the Highlands, visiting Stirling, Callander, Loch Katrine, Inverness, Fort George, and Blair, where his Royal Highness honoured the Duke and Duchess of Atholl with a visit.

Lord Stanley of Alderley arrived at Balmoral on Saturday evening, in succession to the Duke of Newcastle, who left at an early hour in the morning.

Their Imperial Highnesses the Grand Duke and Duchess Constantine of Russia arrived at Dover on Wednesday, by special steamer, from Calais, on their way to Hyth, in the Isle of Wight, where a mansion has been engaged for their reception. The Grand Duke and Duchess were in attendance to meet their Imperial Highnesses.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen have arrived at Claridge's Hotel, from Southampton.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland arrived at Folkestone from Belgium on Saturday, by the South Eastern Railway Company's steamer Prince Arthur. Their Grace proceeded to London by the tidal train, and the Duke left for Dunrobin Castle.

The Duke of Beaufort returned to Gopsall House on Saturday from the Duke of Rutland's, where he and Lady Georgiana have since gone to Troy House, in Monmouthshire.

The Marchioness of Exeter and Lady Mary Cecil have left Queensberry House, for Burghley House, near Stamford, where they were joined on Saturday by the noble Marquis from Inverness.

The Countess of Jersey left England for the Continent.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston arrived at Cambridge House, Piccadilly, on Saturday, from Walmer Castle.

THE LORD MAYOR OF WALES AT CHESTER.—On entering Cobblers on the evening of the 20th the Prince of Wales and the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia were immediately waited that occupied by the King of Prussia, and were enthusiastically cheered, especially by those of British nationality, whose loyalty to the Queen of England, and to those who were a tour in Ireland. Immediately after the Royal carriages came an enormous procession, headed by the Sheriffs, the Aldermen, and the Mayor's coaches of the town, bearing their flags and banners, headed by the Chief Magistrate and the Town Council, surrounded by the Yeomanry Cavalry. The whole formed by was sweeping by the populace, and the procession made the circuit of the town, and when it reached the Royal Box in front of the Grand Stand it passed on slowly through the illuminated streets. The scene at this time was magnificent, for not only were the streets illuminated, but hundreds of persons on the Rhine bridge, at the magnificent castle of Eaton, at Eaton, and on the opposite shore, and on the neighbouring heights.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Miss Catherine Graham, formerly of Netherby, Cumberland, and for some time residing at Bath, was proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury on the 31st ult., was proved in London, on the 31th inst., by Major George Graham, Major Graham, the executor, will be found to be personally sworn under £1,000. Miss Lover whom Miss Harriet Lindsay is nominated executrix. The testatrix bequeaths all her property in the island of Malta, Her property is left to her sister Mrs. Lindsay, and her nephew James Lindsay, son of Dr. Lindsay, of the 13th Regiment of her Majesty's Madras Indian forces. This gallant officer, who appears to have possessed the esteem of all in military career in India, has left his property, both real and personal, to his relict for her entire use and disposition. The will is very short, and contains no other bequests or directions whatsoever.

The will of Algernon Attwood, Esq., formerly of Dartford, Kent, and of Crockenhurst-court, London, but late of Hanover, Torquay, Devon, which bears date the 7th of July last, was proved in the principal registry on the 7th inst. by his relict, sole executrix. The testator's will is extremely brief, and is chiefly confined to one bequest, which is in favour of his relict, to whom he has left his entire estate, real and personal, for her sole use and disposition; appointing her, together with three gentlemen, guardians to their children. The personal property of the late Mr. Attwood is sworn under £7,000. Messrs. Thomas Attwood, Esq., many years M.P. for Birmingham, who had acquired great popularity on the currency question.

LITERATURE AND ART.

IT is seldom that a baboon is capable of conferring any benefit on society. Monkeys perched in trees will certainly fling down showers of juicy and not ritiuous cocoanuts, but then they use them as missiles, and with them not unfrequently crack the skulls of the negroes who have been throwing stones at their pugnlips. Here and there we hear of an ape who helps a mountebank to earn his livelihood; but, as a rule, the simious tribe cost much more than they are worth. One would rather keep an ourang-outang a week than a fortnight; and, as for the Gorilla! as for that ferocious, sanguinary, untamable, treacherous, and semi-fabulous brute, who would ever suspect him of being a benefactor to humanity, or of putting bread into the mouths of honest men? Strange as it may appear, the Gorilla has this week appeared under a philanthropic aspect—that is, he has again given the newspapers a theme to quarrel about, the newspapers something to write about, and the public something to talk about. Are not these boons to the public at large, especially in mid September, when the daily press was almost moribund from inanition of news; when "enormous gooseberries" and "showers of frogs" were beginning to loom on the horizon, and when so bald and dreary a theme as "the new educational minute" was eagerly seized upon by famished newsmongers, and, in its minutest particulars—we mean no pun—dissected upon by the hour, de die in diem?

The new phase into which the Dr. Chnille-comes-Gray-cum-Ovenscontroversy is so curious has just entered is all due to a wonderful letter written from the Gaboon country by one Mr. Walker, and in which Mr. Du Chaillu is called all sorts of uncomplimentary names. How rejoiced we are that we have no part in the controversy! Tibi res antiquæ, said Maro, laudis et artis. Sooner or later, we suppose, it will be known who is right and who is wrong among these baboonatic belligerents.

"Can you spell correctly? Bad spelling is the rock on which 1766 out of 1972 Civil Service candidates were wrecked." Thus runs an advertisement which has attracted our eyes in a weekly paper. Can anybody spell correctly? George IV., it is reported, could not. In the "Smart Paper" the young Pretender spells his father's name, James, thus—"Jeams." Dr. Johnson seems to be agreed as to wretched speller, and wrote almost illegibly, purposely to conceal his defective orthography. With Lord Macdonald's opinion on the subject correct spelling we are all familiar; and if that eminent professor of phonetics, Mr. Isaac Pitman, had his way, "beautiful" would be spelt "butiful," and the journal in which we write would be the "Illustrated Lundn Nus." Recognising the principles of toleration as to orthography, we are still of opinion that considerable inconvenience may arise from the incorrect spelling of proper names. When the present Baroness of Stael was the President of the Board of Trade (1848), hundreds of votes given in his favour were cancelled through the fact of ignorant persons spelling up their tickets the name of "Ledwig Bonopat" and "Laigi Peopart," in lieu of the real ones, Louis Bonaparte.

M. Jouse has just completed a great work, in which, as in his illustrations to the "Wandering Jew," the grotesque is mingled with the fantastic, the remarkable with the horrible. He has engraved seventy-six large drawings as illustrations to the "Divina Commedia" of Dante Alighieri. Messrs. Hachette, of Paris, are the publishers; but the book has appeared, we believe, with an edition in London, and the translation of the Florentine's immortal text by Mr. W. M. Rossetti, a brother, we believe, of Miss Rossetti, the accomplished Pre-Raphaelite painter.

A very large circle of friends and admirers, public as well as private, will be grieved to hear that Mr. Edmund Yates, the versatile and indefatigable journalist, light Rétérieur, and dramatic critic, has been very dangerously ill, and is still gravely suffering. Mr. Yates was stricken down by bilious fever at Maritgny, on his way to Italy, and has had to undergo a brief surgical operation in Paris. He was brought back to England in a very critical state, and is now recruiting at the seaside, whence we trust shortly to hear news of his complete convalescence. The Life of Mr. Yates, by his fellow-labourer, harnessed to his rapid Pegasus by night as well as by day. Brace him up very strongly, Mr. Sala, put a little less fire into your wheels to the coil, and he will make rapid running; but be still brief about conditions.

The illustrious Italian poet Giovanni Battista Niccolai, the friend and contemporary of Manzoni and Silvio Pellico, and in his own country as famous as either of the great friends, is dead. He was the author of many admirable poems, classic plays, philological treatises, and academical orations. In his drama of "Nabucodonosor"—which even the Italians will persist in abbreviating into "Nabucco"—he is thought to have foreshadowed, under an Assyrian veil, the career of the first Napoleon. Niccolai's romantic drama, "Giovanni da Procida," produced in 1830, at Florence, had the honour of being suppressed, at the instigation of the Austrian Government. His "Lodovico," works, "Arnold of Brescia," appears to have been translated into the English language.

Ample biographical notices have already appeared of the late eminent portrait-sculptor, Mr. John Francis (the father of Mrs. Thornycroft), who died on the 16th inst. in his mansion adorned with a whole Gypsotheca of Whig notabilities in marble. It has been mentioned, as a peculiar feature in Francis's artistic organisation, that he executed a bust of the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha almost from imagination, and besides the portrait-bust, having studied the anatomy and the bust, when completed, gave the highest satisfaction to her Majesty and the Prince Consort. This reminds us of a curious anecdote of Lord Byron's. Having had a lady in deep mourning called upon him to order a portrait of her son, who had died at school in Italy, and had no materials to give him, not so much as a faded miniature or a profile cut out of black paper, Lord Byron, by dint of close questioning, ascertained complexion, expression, bearing, and dress of the deceased. This she did, day after day, for a considerable period, sitting behind the artist as he painted. The result was a magnificent likeness, sometimes alarming weeping, sometimes softly singing to herself. At length the portrait was completed, and the lady declared it to be a wonderful likeness, and thanked Northcote warmly for the pains he had taken. She paid him fifty guineas, the stipulated price, and went away, promising to send for the picture. It had never come back! Northcote never saw or heard from her more; he never knew her name; and all that he could remember of her son was that he had red in his cheeks.

An interesting treatise might be written on "plays that have been written with a political purpose, and that have had an influence on history." Schiller's "Robbers" is said to have helped to break up the Holy Roman Empire. Beaumarchais's "Barber of Seville" and "Marriage of Figaro" are always quoted among the proximate causes of the great French Revolution of 1789. Kotzebue's "Hussite" is said to shock the unanimous ethics of Russian bureaucracy to its foundations; and we have to thank Mr. Bengough for professing to be the author of the Italian opera, had a deeper political aim—as an attack on the Government of Sir Robert Walpole. To these "plays with a purpose" must now be added Mr. Dalgliesh's new plaything (whose name is called "N'il Darpus," which has thrown the whole Anglo-Indian community into a ferment, which has caused the Court of Directors in Calcutta to meditate a general seizure of all copies of the work, and which has even been made the subject of a question in the House of Commons, the answer to which has been anxiously looked for by the whole Indian public. We know all about "N'il Darpus," as a play, by this time; that also is the Bengalee Beaumarchais? Who responds to the cry of "Author, author"?

Brewers and beer drinkers will be interested to learn, on the authority of the Bavarian Bier Gazette, that the crop of that valuable vegetable in this year somewhat wonderful in Germany. The editor writes in perfect ecstasy. "Hops!" he exclaims, "hops here, there, and everywhere! There are real hands enough to be found for the picking, and wages are rising fast. The harvest is superior to anything that could have been imagined. Hops of inferior quality were sold at 80 florins the hundredweight, in Nuremberg. Afterwards have been sold at 70 florins, and Holzdorfer at 90 florins; at Schwabingen, from one day to the next, there was a fall of 100 florins to 70 florins; at Herbrech, on the 6th instant, the price was 60 to 65 florins, and a few days after 70 florins, and at last at 75 florins, but in small quantities, buyers holding back in the apparently well-grounded hope of a further fall. The exhibition upon this year's produce is something enormous."

The London Rifle Brigade took part in a grand divisional field-day at Aldershott on Saturday last, and acquitted themselves creditably by the side of the regular troops.

The metropolis was visited with a storm of wind and rain in the course of Sunday night and Monday morning, which occasioned some few casualties, and overflowed its banks and penetrated into the houses on certain of the lower streets, causing considerable alarm and even serious loss.

The annual Court Leet and Court Baron of the Manor of Kensington, Middlesex, was held on Wednesday at the Vestry-hall, Kensington, before Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., the steward of the manor. The business was of a formal character.

A deserted coaching affair took place at Capesthorne, near Macclesfield, on Sunday night, when three of Mr. Davenport's watchers were found in a state of insensibility, and a considerable quantity of the white game made their escape. Three of these, however, being known to the watchers, were afterwards apprehended, and have been committed for trial.

An influential meeting of the bankers and merchants of Birmingham has decided on the establishment of a new and extensive cattle market, and the first meeting will be held in a room built for the purpose, free of rent, by Mr. Michael Hallifax. The market will be held bi-weekly, and will be the first permanent cattle-market in the large district which extends from Birmingham to the coast at Liverpool. No one, happily, was killed, but twelve or fifteen were hurt.

A deserted coaching affair took place at Capesthorne, near Macclesfield, on Sunday night, when three of Mr. Davenport's watchers were found in a state of insensibility, and a considerable quantity of the white game made their escape. Three of these, however, being known to the watchers, were afterwards apprehended, and have been committed for trial.

An influential meeting of the bankers and merchants of Birmingham has decided on the establishment of a new and extensive cattle market, and the first meeting will be held in a room built for the purpose, free of rent, by Mr. Michael Hallifax. The market will be held bi-weekly, and will be the first permanent cattle-market in the large district which extends from Birmingham to the coast at Liverpool. No one, happily, was killed, but twelve or fifteen were hurt.

A letter-carrier on the Lombard-street walk, a youth, named Edmund William Bullen, has been apprehended on a charge of detaining one hundred and seventeen addressed letters, the persons in his walk, and congregating, in some instances, the valuable inclosures. It is stated that 100 letters were found concealed in a hole in the Post Office, some written in May and June, and others in July, which he had neglected to forward according to duty. April last. There was also 10 of the number posted for a short time on that walk. At Temple, Bullen, being brought before the Lord Mayor, was committed on Tuesday was brought up for examination before the Recorder of Wales sitting at the Mansion-house, when the circumstance of a passport being found upon him it and remanded, in the meantime.

A requisition, properly numerously signed, was presented to the Lord Mayor on Wednesday, requesting him to allow himself to be put in nomination as Lord Mayor for another year. It may be doubted if anything ever was the subject of a few months' agitation, but he had four counsels of the real one was written with the utmost anxiety of the opposite party that the election should be decided, though he could take no active steps in the matter, if the citizens' resolutions, and he has done so with a tact and manliness that have won for him votes, he would not refuse compliance. The interest of the next one only consists chiefly in this, that the Lord Mayor elect will be one of the few entitled to a baronetcy on occasion of the Prince of Wales coming of age. The honour is declined by only three individuals.

THE INDIAN FAMINE RELIEF FUND.—On Tuesday a general meeting of the subscribers to the Indian Relief Fund was held at the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor acted as Chairman, and there were present—Sir Francis Graham Moon, Bart., Alderman Finnis, Mr. H. M. Peyton, Mr. Cotterell, Mr. Deputy Chard, Mr. Low, and Mr. Goodman. The honorary secretaries reported that the total amount of the subscriptions received to the Mansion House was £114,425, of which £98,560 had been remitted to India; £6262 had been expended in the collection of subscriptions, and the total sum remained in hand, considering all bills not yet at maturity. Lord Canning, the Governor-General of India, in a letter to the Lord Mayor, dated Fort William on the 8th of August, writes—"I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to express, on behalf of the government of India, my sincere and grateful sense which I entertain of the noble and generous liberality which the British nation has displayed in coming to the relief of the sufferers of Upper India in the calamity with which they have been visited, and I trust you will kindly communicate to the public here the feelings manifested on this occasion will be accepted by the natives of India as evidence of the desire of the British nation to fulfil their duty to their fellow-subjects." An interesting letter was also read to the meeting, addressed by a native gentleman, in the native gentleman's own hand, to the secretaries of the fund, dated the 19th of August. He writes that he had been receiving letters of encouragement and thanks from the people of the country to his friendship the expression of their admiration of the noble manner in which they had behaved to the sufferers in 1814, during the time of the relief of the sufferers from the "terrible famine" which has been raging in the North-West Provinces. The Mayor of Fort Louis in the Mauritius had forwarded to Bombay £3000 as a first remittance, and the entire amount from that colony was expected to amount to £10,000. Besides the £198,560 forwarded from London to India, Manchester has sent £5400; Dublin, £4500; and Glasgow, £6000. Liverpool has also forwarded a correspondingly large sum.

CRIMEAN HOSPITAL.—Saturday last being the festival of St. Matthew, the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, City Chamberlain, and other members of the City Corporation attended by the Clerk of Christ's Hospital, met for the purpose of hearing the annual sermon. Service was performed in Christ Church, Newgate-street, by a senior wrangler and prizeman of St. John's College, Cambridge, M.A., an alumnus of Christ Church. The visitors then proceeded to the hall, where dinner was served in the usual style. The sermon by the Rev. Thomas Walker, third Grecian, who is proceeding to Pembroke College, Cambridge, is a very able one, and was listened to throughout with great attention. It was in a Greek oration, relating to the foundation of the college, by Mr. Arthur Thornhill Mayow, fifth Grecian (classical medalist), 1861, who is proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge. Mr. Edward Stafford Calne, the first Grecian (classical medalist), 1858, proceeded to Oxford in 1854, Exhibitioner in 1860 and 1861, and Michelson prizeman 1861), who is proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge. The English oration, which was also very well delivered by Robert George Glenn, the fourth Grecian, and Stafford Hamilton Burbidge, fifth Grecian, on the character of Francis Horton, second Grecian, scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, delivered the French oration, having been recently elected to Jesus College. Recitations in addition from "Henry VIII.," by Mr. Henry Hughes, sixth Grecian (mathematical medalist), 1861, and "Midsummer Night's Dream," by Mr. Alexander Stevens," by Mr. George Atkinson Cronin, eighth Grecian; Greek Sapphics, translations from Horace, "Carmen Seculare," by Mr. Edward Hamilton Bell, seventh Grecian; Latin Hexameters, "Insula Sanctosa," Richard Peile Chamberlain, by Mr. Richard Peile Chamberlain, fifth Grecian; Latin Hexameters, translation of "The Battle into Jerusalem," by Mr. Gilbert Jackson, sixth Grecian; Latin Alcaics, "Ad Lectorem," by Mr. Charles Edward Mallet, ninth Grecian; Latin Alcaics, "Ad Lectorem," by Mr. Charles Edward Mallet, ninth Grecian; Latin Sapph

THE DISASTER TO THE GREAT EASTERN: THE BIG SHIP BEING TOWED TOWARDS CORK HARBOUR.

THE DISASTER TO THE GREAT EASTERN.

THROUGH the courtesy of correspondents we are enabled to present our readers with two Illustrations in connection with the breakdown of the Great Eastern in the recent gale.

Mr. Hayward, of Adam-street, a passenger in the big ship, has favoured us with a Sketch of the grand saloon (ingra ul on the first page) when the topsy-turvy rolling of the vessel was at its worst; and a scene in which the hilarious is more mixed with the painful and dangerous it would be difficult, perhaps impossible, to conceive. Indeed, many of the victims themselves before the danger was real over, and while still smarting from their bruises, laughed heartily, we are told, at the comical positions in which they and their fellow-passengers had been placed. We have waited from Mr. Hayward, along with his sketch, a lively account of the short but perilous voyage of the Great Eastern, which we regret not being able to insert. The cries in the saloon, which forms the subject of our Engraving in, thus describes:—"While all this was coming to pass, as serious a disaster or even worse, perhaps, was occurring in the grand saloon, where ladies and children principally, who had not ventured into the dining-saloon, were congregated. From side to side they were being swayed to and fro, along with the settees and sofas, tables and sideboards, sliding or rolling on the floor in an undistinguished mass. As the big groom violins escaped the same human scene. Some, being clothed against the iron balconies which gave way with the pressure, and falling on to the glass flooring at the sides, smashed it to atoms, with fearful crashes. The iron columns became the temporary supports of clinging victims, and were loosened in their grasp, while the two or four gentlemen were dashed with violence against the great mirror, and actually burst through it—the glass falling about them in sloes, and inflicting cuts and bruises in all directions. The lower mirror was blown in by a monster stove which had tumbled over at an early period, and was rushing about amongst us all with frightful rapidity; whilst the pianoforte was thrown down in the ladies' saloon, and began to play an entirely new tune, and to dance to its own sweet music. The lowing of three poor cows on the deck added to the horrors of the time, till at last they were swept down altogether, and the chief part of their bowels and contents precipitated through the skylights, one poor animal hanging its head down and inquiring in a mournful manner what all the row was about. At last, to our astonishment, a swan—rare sight in saloons—came flying down, and added to the picturesque and ludicrous but at the same time awfully calamitous. Eventually, when nearly all had been smashed which could be, and when some sort of security had been given to the errant furniture, &c., the rolling still continuing, the passengers were alarmed by the fearful noise of the debris of the goods below, which, owing to the considerable rush of water which had fallen from the skylights and elsewhere, were careering in the vast halls below with mad delight. My sketch gives but a poor idea of what took place, and every passenger and the captain himself acknowledge that it is anything but exaggerated. All this distraction and alarm continued day and night while we lay in the trough of the sea, and until we steamed off with a tended rudder. Let any one who has seen the towering sides of the Great Eastern understand that the top plat-form of the paddle-box actually dipped the water on each side several times, and they will, perhaps, have a slight notion of the extent of the slope of the saloon floor." A letter appears in the Times by one of the passengers, signing himself "Jules Gervis," who "thought it would be much better to do our fortably," and who went to bed, tying his st to the bed-post. He writes as follows:—"My cabin was close to the first dining-saloon, where a horrible noise was going on. Attracted by curiosity, I opened the window of my neighbour's cabin, and saw the most curious sight I ever saw. Tables and chairs were dancing a horn-pipe; the stove joined most heartily in the fun, and the saucers seemed determined to break down all the nicely-turned mahogany columns and banisters, which snapped like glass. It was a noise as if rocks were shivered to and fro by an angry surf. In the grand saloon the devastation was almost greater still. A marble slab joined a high-nosed gentleman in the enterprise of smashing the largest mirror; of course, nose and mirror had the worst of it. Only with danger of life could people cross one of these doors." The bearing of the gallant captain, steadfast and serene, the conduct of the crew, the noble behaviour of the ladies, and the cool energy and forethought of the chief passengers, form the sober side to this strange scene of mingled horror and humour.

The accompanying Illustration shows the condition of the Great Eastern as she was being towed towards Cork harbour on Tuesday week. It is from a sketch taken by Mr. Stopford about four miles outside the Hailbouse. The whole of the ironwork of both paddle-wheels was carried away; the ship's boat and the lifeboats were in pieces at the after part of the ship, were hanging loosely about, whilst the ladder from the hurricane-deck to the paddle-wheel was twisted in the extraordinary way represented in our engraving.

The Great Eastern continues to lie in Queenstown harbour, where she is likely to remain for some time. The Board of Trade have, it is understood, resolved to institute an official investigation into the disaster.

When the ship was returning on Monday week a meeting of passengers was held, and resolutions were passed by large majorities, and memorials were passed in reference to the late events. The first was one expressive of their thanks to God for their safety; others condemned the directors and managers of the Great Ship Company for mismanagement; and another was in the form of a vote of thanks to Captain Walker for his conduct during the storm.

THE GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC.

ABOVE Washington the Potomac is obstructed by numerous falls and rapids, around all which canals have been constructed. The Great Falls—of which an illustration by our Special Artist is given on page 319—are about sixteen miles above the capital, and are occupied on the Maryland side by Union troops and on the Virginian side by the Confederates. The winter—for both armies are continually "putting" at each other from behind the rocks, though without much damage.

THE DONCASTER CUP.

NOT even the Ascot Cup, which has, as it were, the pick of the cracks unrunched by anything in the shape of a penalty, can boast a grander roll of winners than its Doncaster rival. Chance was the first of the series in 1801, and since then Trump, Cotton, Lottery, Fleur de Lis, Mulatto, The Soldier, Rockingham, Tomboy, Touchstone (twice), Don John, Charles XII., Beeswing (five times), Alice Hawthorn (twice), Sweetmeat, The Hero, War Eagle, Chanticleer, Cancrot, Voltigeur, Virago, Satellites, Fandango, Vedette (twice), and Sabreur have been among its most noble and winners. Still the modern struggles between Voltigeur and The Dutchman, Teddington and Kingston, Fandango and Melba, grand as they proved, were quite put in the shade last Friday, when the telegraph announced not only a dead heat for the first time, but a dead heat between the winners of the Derby and Oaks of the year. Thormanby's eyes shine light him from Doncaster, or he would have most likely been in it with 8st. 12lb. to try and beat up that Ascot fame which was somewhat tarnished by his running (and 7st. 10lb.) at Goodwood. About thirty were entered, but the field finally dwindled down to Rettledrum, 3 yrs., 7st. 7lb. (Bullock); Brown Duchess, 3 yrs., 8st. 11lb. (Middleton); The Lawyer (5, h.), 3 yrs., 7st. (Grimshaw); The Wizard, 4 yrs., 8st. 9lb. (Charlton); Avalanche, 4 yrs., 8st. 2lb. (Fordham); Rising Sun, 4 yrs., 8st. 9lb. (Wells); and Yorkminster, 3 yrs. (carried 8st. 9lb.) (T. Snowden). The betting was even on the Wizard, 6 to 1 each aget Rettledrum and Brown Duchess, 10 to 1 aget The Lawyer, 100 to 8 aget Avalanche, and 100 to 7 and Rising Sun. Yorkminster, after refusing to go near his horses, made joint running with Rising Sun to the turn beyond the Stand, where Sir Joseph's horse took the lead, and did not resign it to Rettledrum till about two distances from home, where the latter was joined by The Lawyer and The Wizard. Before reaching the distance Brown Duchess took her place at The Lawyer's girths, Rettledrum and his favourite, who was running on the extreme outside. Inside the distance The Wizard was in trouble, and The Lawyer, for a few strides, had his head in front, but, giving way opposite the private subscription stand, left Rettledrum with a slight lead, when Brown Duchess challenged, and, getting up on the post, increased the excitement of the struggle by making a dead heat—in the next stride the mare's head was first. The Lawyer was beaten three lengths, and The Wizard beat Avalanche for third place by a very bad fifth; the others walked in and did not pass the post. Run in 4m. 47sec.

A meeting was held shortly after between Colonel Townsley and Mr. Saxon in the inclosure, and it was mutually agreed between them not to distress their animals in another severe struggle for the championship; and, seeing that one had "a race in her before starting," and that the other was getting her 7lb. over and above her allowance as a mare, they both withdrew from the field on pretty even terms. Colonel Townsley took the cup to place beside the one which he won at Ascot with Hesperithusa, and Mr. Saxon, who cares more for solid bullion himself, received £100. Of course there was some little disappointment felt at not seeing the pair fight it out, but no one doubted the wisdom of the course pursued, and felt it if either of them had broken down on the hard ground the whole charm of the afternoon would be gone. The cup is from Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's establishment, New Bond-street, and is in the form of a tazza. It was designed and modelled by Mr. H. R. Rosell, and is ornamented in the renaissance style, and by removing the cover it can be used as a vase for flowers. The first frame commemorates the meeting of Henry II. and Malcolm of Scotland, in the year 1157, at Doncaster, at which meeting Malcolm did homage for his fief of Cumberland; and the second frieze represents a horse race. Three allegorical figures of Justice, of the town of Doncaster, and of the River Don decorate the foot; and the cover is surmounted by a figure of Fame offering laurel leaves to the victors.

THE NEW MONUMENT AT DIVES.

IN our Number for the 16th of August we briefly alluded to the public inauguration of a monument at Dives to commemorate the departure of the Norman fleet from that port for the conquest of England. As all the events connected with the history of the town of our First William possess a certain interest for Englishmen, we now publish a View of the Column, together with a few notes gleaned from French chronicles relating to the invasion which was to exercise so great an influence on the future destinies of Britain.

It was at the chateau of Bonneville, a favourite residence of our first Norman Monarch, distant about ten miles from Dives, that William assembled his Barons to deliberate over the projected descent upon England. The project was warmly discussed, and found so many opponents, on account of the heavy pecuniary burdens it would impose on the people of Normandy, that the King was obliged to have recourse to a stratagem that has since been frequently imitated by other Monarchs with success: he addressed himself to each adverse Baron in private, made a personal question of the matter, and thus obtained the separate adhesion of those whose combined opposition in an open deliberation would have frustrated his designs. William's subtlety thus conciliated the realisation of the Conqueror's great project was urged on with vigour and popularity. Some of the nobles furnished vessels, other armed men, others, again, offered their own persons. Moreover, the rich contributed their money, the merchant their wares, and the peasantry provisions, towards the equipment of the fleet that, nearly nine centuries ago, and with fifty thousand men on board, sailed towards our shores with the intention, so ably fulfilled, of permanent conquest.

At the time when William the Conqueror assembled his fleet at Dives, the importance of that port and its town was in keeping with the magnitude of the Royal Norman enterprise. The present deserted streets were then frequented by a busy, industrial population. There are but rare signs of activity now-days in the tranquil little place situated on one of the banks of the river of the same name. The streets, the principal square, the church (sufficiently remarkable and worthy, at any rate, of a city of the second order), seem all of too large proportions for the number of the inhabitants, considerably under six hundred, according to the last census. Indeed, apart from the interest attached to the circumstance of its early history, Dives has actually but only slight claims to consideration. Its day is past. Its commerce and its extent have, in a great measure, disappeared. Even its river would become impassable were it not for the constant dredging. Its river would twelve inches high: it now measures nearly one foot. If its eight arches continue to sink as they have done, the height of fifty-four or fifty-five feet between low and high water will be reduced to about twenty-five feet. The full rise of this tree is above one hundred yards in height, and between low and high tide is considerable.

THE GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC, AT GREAT FALLS, IN VIRGINIA, AS SEEN FROM THE MARYLAND SIDE. FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE UTRECHT SOCIETY OF SCIENCES offers a gold medal worth 600 francs (£23 16s.) for answers to the following subjects:—1. The vigorous determination of the atomic weight of at least one element among those on which, if time be not yet sufficiently researched, 2. The more exact definition of one or more species of invertebrate animals the history of which has not yet been sufficiently known. The memoirs are to be addressed to Dr. J. W. Gunning, the secretary of the society, Utrecht, before Nov. 30, 1865.

DIANYTE is the name given to a new metallic element discovered by M. von Kobell. In March, 1859, he found a new metallic acid, which he termed dianic, in minerals from the tantalite family, difficult to find pure, as was obvious from the fact that each worker came out with a pellet of earth in its jaws. As they were all furnished with the same implement, and so to approach quite near to the nest and watch their movements unnoticed. The earth which they brought out was always added to a considerable mound. On leaving the nest they generally rose eight or ten feet in the air, and on returning to their nest and working there till they came out. The earth which was usually at a distance of one hundred or two hundred feet from the nest they were never seen to bring from it. Sometimes they left beneath out a heavier load than they could rise with on the wing. When this was the case, after several unsuccessful efforts to raise it, they pushed it or carried it back again into the hole. When there was a strong wind, they were frequently driven into the great chestnut-trees, where it is difficult to find room for themselves; but, under such circumstances, they never abandoned their load. The number of arrivals and departures at the entrance was sometimes as great as be a minute, and at others as many as forty-five. The rain did not materially interfere with their work. Occasionally they left off working during a portion near the nest and to photographed by Messrs. M'Clean, last week, in their uniform of dark blue cap and tie to match, and white flannel shirt and breeches. The Cambridgeshire Eleven sustained a defeat at Bishop Auckland at the hands of twenty of that club, with Jackson and Wilsher. Hayward had no luck in either batting, and Carpenter's double score (19) was the best. Jackson bowled brilliantly, but Arnold, Reynolds, and Hayward were in great form, and in Bishop Auckland's second innings thirteen wickets fell before the thirty-seven was made. Already the Cambridge men have four matches and All England one for next month.

United have made free matches and All England one for next month.

"Double" has been prevailed upon to regulate his diet, and got rid of half a stone of flesh, and the consequence is that, in the ten-of match, on Monday, he ran the distance in 54 min. 20 sec. and won. White injured his foot (so he said), and stopped at the end of three miles. Where the course completed Mile-end Road by a park, and had a stop at the end of eight and a half. The Indian's running astonished everybody, and the onlookers, and thinking bells rowed him water. He Hereford, 2 to 1 against Bedford; 20 to 1 against Hudson Lees (0) and Hodgson (1).

An eight-oared race was rowed on Wednesday between members of the London Rowing Club. The race was interesting one of the season, and the valuable silver prize, the distance being the usual eight-oared course from Putney to Chiswick. Mr. Schlotel's crew came in first.

The Board of Guardians to the South Union of Dublin have agreed to permit the ladies who are members of the Social Science Association to visit the workhouse on Wednesday.

The National Life-boat Institution has received a donation of £10 from C. B. C. during the present week, and the silver medal of the institution has been sent to him. The thanks of the Committee have also been voted to Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Sunderland, for the gallant manner in which he and his crew rescued the crew of the ship Ann Jane, of Whitby, on the 10th inst., when she was in a sinking condition off the Sunderland coast.

A NOVEL MILITARY EXPERIMENT.—The French Government is very busy at present with military experiments. The last novelty to come in an invention, which is stated to have been tried with the most perfect success, to make a shell sink after having exploded, so as to prevent it from ricochetting. The scientific contrivance consists of a pair of india-rubber bands and a screw and piece, fitted with a little air bladder which, when heavily weighted at the feet.

EXPEDITION THROUGH BURMAH.—Dr. C. Williams took his departure for Rangoon in the steamer of Aug. 2, en route to Amerapoora, where he goes on a political mission to the Burmese Court. He will be in full communication with Col. Phayre, the Commissioner of Pegu, and will negotiate with the King of Burmah for the establishment of a line through Northern Burmah and the Himalaya passes into the Chinese province of Yunan. Dr. Williams is an assistant surgeon in her Majesty's 68th Regiment, and during his stay there also he medicine in Pegu has devoted much of his time to the study of the Burmese language, in which he is perfected, which will enable him to conduct ments which qualify him to accomplish efficiently the enterprise upon which he is bent. Many Europeans at the Burmese audience of the Burmese Emperor obtained. One great geographical problem which will be solved in carrying out the expedition will be the solution of a point now involved in doubt and uncertainty and obscurity—viz., is the west stream the great Sanpoo River, which flows from the west into the United Asia, debouches in the Yunan, or is it one of many it is ordinarily marked as taking a southerly turn, and pouring its flood into the Bay of Bengal? The Irrawaddy, and the Sanpoo, with the Ganges, whereas some assert that it takes no such bend, but, still continuing its eastern course, joins with the Irrawaddy, and so gains the sea. The expedition will in a new route from Burmah into the Chinese province of Yunan cannot be penal, as there is a commercial and regular trade conducted at present between the two countries; and it is with a view to carry a line of British commerce over the same ground that Dr. Williams visits that the present expedition is undertaken. The Court of Ava has been undertaken, preliminary, it is to be hoped, to the British other conditions of free journey into the undoubted wealth of the mountain districts of that court.—Exploration.

AUSTRIAN EXPLORATION.—On receiving news of the disasters which had befallen one of the detachments from Mr. Burke's exploring party, Dr. Leichhardt, and Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Landsborough, with great contemporary has the following:—"The parties who had been unfortunate, and who lost so many of the best of their individuals, were remarkable for which had never gone beyond Cooper's Creek, the point whence Mr. Burke set his three months' supply allowance of provisions. The unfortunate Burke parties had remained in inaction, and the individuals who had perished had fallen victims to the sudden change from bad provisions and long fasting to a period bountiful, and still more probably from inaction. Mr. Burke and his party, after all, only succeeded in reaching the mouth of Cooper's Creek on Dec. 16, intending to make first for Eyre's Creek, and thence northwards for the Gulf of Carpentaria, calculating that he would make the journey to the Gulf of Carpentaria in three months. He therefore left a party there with orders to await him for three months, and then to proceed home in four months and a half. Mr. Burke set off down to the Darling to the second party, which he found not to exist, and followed Mr. Landsborough's track, but which had not done so. Mr. Wright's party was found at Menindie, on the Darling, but of the three four of them had died. A meeting of the Relief Committee at Melbourne, becoming extremely anxious, had, as we have already stated, despatched Mr. Howitt with a fresh party to the relief of Mr. Burke's party. Mr. Howitt, on arriving with the news of the condition of the survivors of Mr. Burke's party, left Mr. Wright's party to their fate, and found Mr. Burke's party encamped with the natives. Mr. Howitt's arrival was received with a great sensation; and the Royal Standard was hoisted on the flagstaff, the proclaiming of the Chief Justice at the camp of the natives, and was attended by the Governor. At these meetings the most excited measures were taken to secure sympathy with the unfortunate explorers and their survivors. The colony was now aroused to full and bestirring exertion for exploring the unknown interior of Australia. Mr. Howitt's party was organized in four to twelve, including two aborigines for the benefit of tracking. Mr. Brahe, who had joined the reserve left at Cooper's Creek, was included in it. A member of Mr. Howitt's Gippsland exploring party, on whom he had great reliance, was also named, and Mr. Wheeler, a surgeon, who had been with Mr. Stuart on some of his expeditions and was accustomed to explorations, volunteered his services, which were accepted. Mr. Wheeler was furnished with all necessary remedies for scurvy or other complaints incident to travelling in this climate. Mr. Hugh Glue, a wealthy squatter, who has stations on the Darling, manifested to furnish the necessary supplies of provisions on his return at cost price, so that this party will escape the necessity of subsisting on poisonous flour. Mr. Howitt with his party started on the 6th of July, and soon after was heard of as having proceeded on his route from Swan-hill, on the Murray, with the advantage of a very wet season, affording him promise of plenty of water. The Government immediately put at the service of the Exploration Committee the armed screw-steamer Victoria, commanded by Captain Norman, to proceed to the Gulf of Carpentaria, to make search along the coast for the missing party, and to take up the new one on its arrival."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

P. T. S.—Received, the position is very good.

C. D. C.—You need not propose; but in any future contributions—and we hope for many—

"B. D. G." will save himself and us the risk of frequent mistakes by distinguishing between the Black and White Pawns. We have not room for the whole of the proposed plan of Subject Committee, 427 Strand. We will be good enough to receive and forward any communications. So far as we can decipher the first variation—that we attribute to Mr. Staunton—it is very much embodied in Mr. Walker's book, which he may refer to. Would Mr. Wood (Q Q 4) do it?

A CHESS QUIZ, PARIS.—You are obviously mistaken in both cases.

A. C. (Bristol).—Both are good. The other two, though inferior to that, are also decidedly a particularly good. The other two, though inferior to that, are also Solutions of Problem No. 916, by Anon, B. F. Alphin, T. O., Dropsie, Captain Dick, Rev. Wm. Wilkinson, Rev. J. Wayte, Rev. J. Mitchell, Rev. J. Owen, Rev. J. Hellard, Miss Brown, Rabbits, D. R. E., P. D. Tyler, R. C. W., W. P., Beaufort, C. R. L. S., M. G., Gurney, Dr. Gaskell, Dr. Forbes, Dr. Pigott, Dr. Pole, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hooper, Dr. Hunter, R. A. C., P. P., B. L. I., P. Q., Dr. Mitchell, G. P. Phillips, C. G. G., H. B., Dr. Hall, Dr. Hooper, Dr. Hunter, R. A. C., P. P., B. L. I., P. Q., Dr. Mitchell, G. P. Phillips, C. G. G., H. B., Dr. Hall, Dr. Hooper, Dr. Hunter, R. A. C., P. P., B. L. I., P. Q., Dr. Mitchell, G. P. Phillips, C. G. G., H. B., W. M. C., Beresford, R. P. C. G., Osborne, R. H. G., H. R. H., Pickford, Jaeger, W. F. F., W. E., Owen, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hooper, Dr. Hunter, R. A. C., P. P., B. L. I., P. Q., W. H. J., Gerrard, G. D. V., Alpha, H. W. S., A Subscriber, Timothy, H. C. V., T. B. A., T. B. Fellows, Dr. Pigott, Dr. Pole, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hooper, Dr. Hunter, R. A. C., Tyndale, A. W. L. C., Bridges, Ver. D. Edwin, W. S. Kershaw, W. C. C. are correct. All others are wrong.

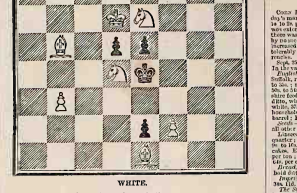
PROBLEM No. 918.

By R. D. C.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that the index of the precious metals has been on a fair average scale, that condition of commercial repose is now in force, and that the demand for gold on American account has almost wholly ceased, most Home Securities, arising from many causes, are of rare value for money, have been to a very inactive state, and prices have had a drooping tendency.

There has been a moderate, but by no means active, demand for accommodation. The supply of money is still increasing, and the best commercial bills are readily discounted in Lombard street at the annexed quotations:—

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Short bills	3 to 3½	Four months' bills	4 to 4½
Three months' bills	3½ to 4	Six months' bills	4½ to 4¾

There is an abundance of capital in the Stock Exchange, and it may be had for short periods at from 2½ to 3 per cent. The joint-stock banks are now raising 3½ per cent on deposits, and the discount houses allow only 2½ per cent for money "at call."

The rates for money in the principal cities on the Continent are as under:—

	Per cent.	Open market.		Bank rate.	Open market.
Paris	3	Per cent.	Per cent.	Turin	Per cent.
Vienna	5	4	3½	Florence	7
Berlin	4	3½	3	Hamburg	7
Frankfort	4	3½	3	Petersburg	4
Amsterdam	3	2½	2½	Madrid	5

About £300,000 in gold has been imported, chiefly from Australia and the Continent, and several additional loans have been made to the stock of bullion in the bank of England. The exchange at New York has risen to 109½, but has since advanced to 110¾, scarcely any gold has been sent to that port, but the exports to India have amounted to £1,400,000 sterling in silver.

An instalment of 20 per cent on the late Indian loan of £4,000,000 has been paid to the Treasury.

The Liverpool cotton market continues in an excited state. Prices have, consequently, undergone a further rise, several parcels of Surats and Dhollerahs having been purchased for New York.

The shipping list for Canada on Monday was much restricted, and prices had a drooping tendency:—Consols for Money, were done at 92¼; Ditto, for Account, 92¼; Reduced Three per Cents, 91¼; New Three per Cents, 91¼; Bank Stock, 219; Exchequer Bills, March, 4s. to 1s. 3s. prem.; Ditto, June, 5s. to 3s. prem.; Ditto, Long Annuities, 1885, 17 3-16; India Stock, 219; Ditto, 5 per Cent, 104; Ditto New 5 per Cent Stock, 104; Ditto Bonds, £1000, 3s. to 1s. prem.; Ditto Bonds, under £1000, 3s. to 1s. prem.; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 1s. prem.; India Bonds, 2s. to 3s. prem.; and Ditto, 1866, 3s. to 1s. prem.

The market for Foreign Bonds has been active. An advance of 8s. per cent has been obtained for Peru, and Turkish Securities have also improved. Other instances an improvement is noticed in the quotations, more especially as regards Buenos Ayres, Chilian, Ecuador, and Peruvian securities. Brazilian Five per Cents have marked 101¼; Ditto, 1859 and 1852, 101¾; Brazilian Four-and-a-half per Cents, 96; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 89½; Ditto, Deferred, 36; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 86½; Ecuador, New Consolidated Three per Cents, 19; Mexican Three per Cents, 19; Portuguese Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 34; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45; Russian Five per Cents, 103; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 93; Sardinian Five per Cents, 84; Spanish Certificates, 21; Spanish Three per Cents, 39; Turkish Six per Cents, 1858, 72; Ditto, Certificates, 8; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 1862, 72; New, 1862, £100 Bonds, 72; Ditto, £500 Bonds, 72; Turkish Four per Cents, 1862, Three per Cents, 36; Italian Five per Cents, 79½; French Three Cents, 69; Spanish Passive, 19; and Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 61.

In Joint-stock Bank Shares the dealings have been somewhat restricted: Australasian, 85 to 86; Bank of Egypt, 14 to 15; Bank of London, 20 to 21; Colonial, 211; British North American, 94; Chartered Mercantile of India, London, and China, 21 to 22; City, 20 to 21; Commercial of London, 20 to 21; Consolidated, 25½; London Joint-Stock, 32; London and Westminster, 67; National Provincial of England, 21 to 22; Union of Australia, 101; Union of London, 31.

The leading quotations for shares in new undertakings are as follows:—Antwerp Marine Railway, 3 to 4; Ardrossan Dock, 10 to 11; Bahia, 7 to 8; Bute, 1 to 1 1-16 prem.; Universal Marine Insurance, 1 to 2 dis.; London and Provincial Marine, 1 to 2 dis.; Oriental and General Marine, 1 to 2 prem.; Mercantile Five, 1 to 2 prem.; Commercial Union Five, 1 dis. to 2 prem.; and Bahia Steam, par to 1 prem.

Colonial Government Securities have changed hands to a limited extent:—Canada Five per Cents have sold at 101¾; New Brunswick Six per Cents, 1865; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1862, 103; Ditto, 1867, to 1876, 103; Ditto, 1854 and onwards, 99½; and Victoria Five per Cents, 103.

The Miscellaneous Market has been rather inactive. Anglo-Mexican Mint shares have been done at 143; Canada Land, 104; Crystal Palace, 14½; Ditto Six per Cent Perpetual Debenture, 104½; East India Irrigation and Canal, 1½; General Steam, 3½; Great India Steam-ship, 4½; Hall's Patent Deflector, 5½; London General Omnibus, 14½; North British Australasian, 1½; Oriental Inland Steam, 4½; Peel River Land and Mineral, 4½; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, New, 42½; Royal Mail Steam, 91½; Scinde and Arva Canal, 6½; East London Waterworks, 117; London Docks, 80½; and St. Katharine, 64.

The Railway Share Market has been in a very inactive state, and prices have shown a tendency to give way. The total calls for October amount to £457,767. The following are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

Caledonian, 87½; Chester and Holyhead, 30½; Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford, 10½; Ditto, Extension, 6½; Great Northern, 101½ ex div.; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 51½; Great Northern, 103½ ex div.; Great Western, 66½; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 102½; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 110½; London and North-Western, 93½; London and South-Western, 95; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 49½; Midland, 119½; North British, 59½; North-Eastern—Berwick, 91½; Ditto, York, 91; North Staffordshire, 12½; South-Eastern, 79½; Shareholders, 7½; West Midland—Oxford, 16½.

LINES LEASED AT FIXED RENTALS.—London and Greenwich, 39; Ditto, Preference, 11½; Midland—Bristol, 84.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Eastern Counties Five per Cent, No. 1, 10½; Great Northern, 103½; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 102½; Chatham, 4½; Ditto, Four-and-a-Half per Cent Stock, 104½; Ditto, Leicester and Hitchin, 92½; East Midland—Ordinary, 104½; Ditto, Preferred, 104½.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 98½; Great Indian Peninsula, 103½; Ditto, Four per Cent Guaranteed, 101½; Ditto, Five per Cent Debentures, 1858-1861, 101½; Grand Trunk of Canada, 19½; Ditto Six per Cent Debentures, 93; Great Indian Peninsula, Four per Cent Debentures of Canada, 91½; Ditto, 6 per Cent; Ditto Six per Cent Bonds, payable 1873, 97; Madras Five per Cent, 98½; Ditto, New, 103½.

FOREIGN.—Bahia and San Francisco, 13½; Dutch Rhenish, 15½; Great Luxembourg, 8½; Hainaut and Liege, 8½; Sambre and Meuse Five-and-a-Half per Cent Debentures, 84; San Paulo, 4½; South Australian and Lombardo-Venetian, 7½; West Flanders, 7½.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending Sept. 25 shows the following positive and negative changes with the previous week:—

An increase of circulation of	£216,670	An increase of bullion of	£12,613
A decrease of deposits of	1,000,000	A decrease of rest of	12,000
A decrease of other deposits of	485,787	An increase of reserve of	189,613
An increase of securities of	£1,702,457

The total circulation is now £20,604,948. Public deposits amount to £5,810,434; and private deposits to £11,067,502. Securities are £27,987,940; and the stock of bullion is £14,242,246.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Sept. 24.—Full average supplies of English wheat were on sale in to-day's market, in good condition. The demand from France having fallen off, prices gave way 1s. per quarter. Foreign wheat was in fair request, at the decline. Barley was in good demand, and 1s. per quarter dearer. Malt was steady, at barely late rates. Oats were in good request, and 6d. per quarter higher than on previous days. Beans and peas were in moderate request, and last week's prices were fully maintained. Flour was in good demand, at 6d. per sack more money.

Sept. 26.—Both English and foreign wheat ceased of barely, at Monday's decline in rates. In the value of sorts and qualities no change took place.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 50s. to 54s.; white, 48s. to 52s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s. to 52s.; white, 50s. to 54s.; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, red, 48s. to 52s.; white, 50s. to 54s.; Scotch, 48s. to 52s.; Irish, 46s. to 50s.; rye, 30s. to 32s.; grinding barley, 22s. to 24s.; Kingston and Ware, 34s. to 40s.; Chevalier, 42s. to 48s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed, 20s. to 22s.; Scotch and Irish, 22s. to 24s.; malting barley, 32s. to 36s.; Kingston and Ware, 52s. to 56s.; Chevalier, 52s. to 56s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, 48s. to 52s.; Scotch and Irish, 46s. to 50s.; malt, pale, 70s. to 74s.; brown, 66s. to 70s.; oats, English, potato, 28s. to 30s.; Scotch, 26s. to 28s.; Irish, potato, 24s. to 26s.; feed, 22s. to 24s.; beans, English, mazagan, 36s. to 38s.; tick, 34s. to 36s.; harrow, 34s. to 36s.; pigeon, 36s. to 38s.; Egyptian, 34s. to 36s.; peas, grey, 36s. to 38s.; maple, 40s. to 42s.; white, 40s. to 42s.; boilers, 40s. to 42s.; flour, per sack, 70s. to 74s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, per sack, 70s. to 74s.; country marks, 70s. to 74s.; Irish, per barrel, 32s. to 36s. per sack.

Foreign.—Wheat, free, 48s. to 52s.; barley, 30s. to 34s.; beans, 34s. to 36s.; peas, 36s. to 38s.; oats, 22s. to 24s.; flour, per barrel, 32s. to 36s.

Liverpool.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Bristol.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Hull.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Aberdeen.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Dublin.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Cork.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Limerick.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Belfast.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Waterford.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Sligo.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Galway.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Drogheda.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Newry.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Londonderry.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Wexford.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Kilkenny.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Tralee.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Dundalk.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Clonmel.—Wheat, 10s. to 12s. per cental; barley, 5s. to 6s.; oats, 4s. to 5s.; beans, 6s. to 7s.; peas, 6s. to 7s.; flour, 30s. to 32s. per barrel.

Carlow

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE 86TH REGIMENT BY THE PRINCE OF WALES AT THE CURRAGH CAMP.

inscribed on your banners, and of which you are so justly proud. To a regiment that has already achieved such a reputation, and is now in so high a state of efficiency under the able command of Colonel Hort, these colours may, indeed, be safely intrusted; and I feel convinced that wherever the opportunity shall arise you will show yourselves worthy of the memorable eulogy once pronounced by Lord Cornwallis upon your gallant corps—that they "furnished a conspicuous proof that discipline and valour in soldiers, when directed by zeal and capacity in officers, are irresistible."

Colonel Hort returned thanks in appropriate terms.

After the ceremony the Prince, the Earl of Carlisle, Sir G. Brown, and a large company were entertained at a luncheon by the officers of the regiment. Subsequently his Royal Highness visited the soldiers and their families in their quarters, where they had been provided by their officers with the good cheer necessary for the celebration of the event. In the evening the sergeants of the 86th entertained the sergeants of the Grenadier Guards at dinner, and thus the two branches of the brigade hospitably closed the period of the Prince of Wales's training at the Curragh.

The Prince left the camp, after three months' sojourn, on the 11th inst. Shortly after nine o'clock all the troops in the camp were under arms. The day was glorious, and the manœuvres of the troops were performed in admirable style and with the greatest precision. At the conclusion of the review his Royal Highness retired to his quarters, the cheering of the soldiers was incessant, and it was evident that the Prince was affected as he had often (at least for a season) to bid comrades in arms. The bands of the 1st Grenadier Guards and the 86th, as well as the soldiers of both regiments, which constituted the infantry brigade of which he was an officer, assembled round his quarters. At ten minutes past three o'clock he left his hut, attended by Major-General Ridley, Major-General Bruce, Colonel Keppel, and Colonel Higginson. On reappearing the bands played the National Anthem, the soldiers presented arms and cheered most lustily. The Prince bowed repeatedly, and as he drove off in the direction of Newbridge the cheering was again renewed.

We are indebted to Capt. de Fenton, of the 86th Regiment, for the photographs from which the accompanying illustrations in connection with the Prince's farewell to the Curragh Camp were taken. The first—that of the presentation of colours by the Prince—was taken during the consecration service. The second Engraving represents a square of the first battalion of the Grenadier Guards on the day the Prince left the Curragh, and on its return from the review where his Royal Highness had for the first time commanded the regiment, he having gone through the former field-days as a subaltern officer—as a Captain commanding his company. The regiment was halted on its way home that the photograph might be taken.

SQUARE OF THE FIRST BATTALION OF GRENADIER GUARDS, TO WHICH, BRIGADED WITH THE 86TH REGIMENT, THE PRINCE OF WALES WAS ATTACHED.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

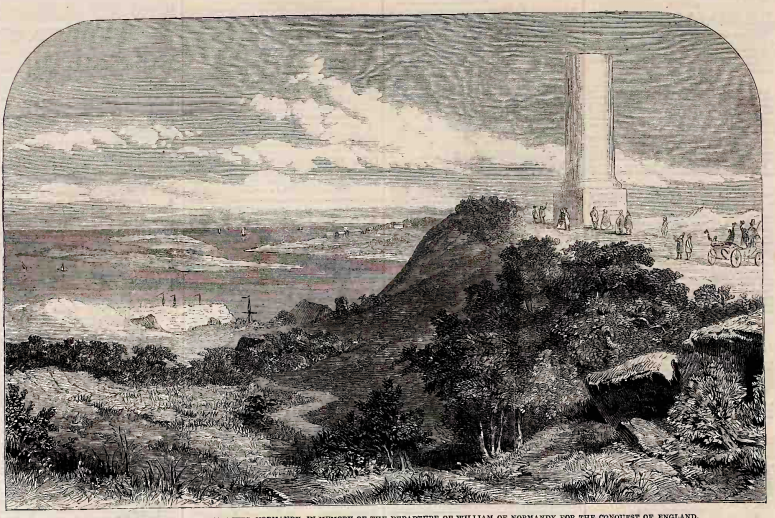
WITH the return of the Empress Eugénie from the baths of St. Sauveur to Compiègne or to Paris the inauguration of the fashions for the autumnal season is looked forward to with anxiety, as her Majesty and the ladies of the Court naturally give the prevailing tone to the numerous fashions prepared for their approval. For the perfect freedom of the seaside costume during the past season the fair baigneuses are indebted to the Impératrice, who has gracefully patronised the apparel best suited to the circumstances, without ever consulting the exigencies of her Imperial position. The fashionable world, on its return to Paris, will for some time bear traces of its peregrinations to the bains de mer, most visible in the varied shapes of the headdresses and the depths of the jupons intérieurs, of which we had recently occasion to speak in our article on the Paris fashions.

For the month of October dresses are to be comparatively plain, with one or two flounces only as the rule. For ordinary wear the lighter descriptions of stuffs are now abandoned, and stout silks, and even worsted materials, brought into requisition, according to the variations in the uncertain weather of the Parisian October.

Bonnets assert we have nothing new to note; but we may announce, with equal certainty and pleasure, the diminution in the proportions of the upper part of the ladies' cages—reduced by one-half their volume; unfortunately, the lower part still remains intact, yet we hail the change as a step in the right direction, which we trust may be followed by a greater reform.

In our text we shall present our readers with some drawings of the chaste just designed for the coming season by a firm which, in consequence of its relations with the dessus de la Cour, is always the first to be informed of the fashionable requirements.

We have placed the subjects of our Illustrations in one of the vineyards in the environs of Paris, where the country people are just now busily engaged in gathering the grapes for the vintage. There are but few vineyards north of the capital, which seems to form the boundary of the French wine-growing districts; for hence southwards the fruit becomes good, and it is rare to find a hillside favourably exposed that does not possess a more or less considerable vine-plantation.



MONUMENT RECENTLY ERECTED AT DIVES, NORMANDY, IN MEMORY OF THE DEPARTURE OF WILLIAM OF NORMANDY FOR THE CONQUEST OF ENGLAND.

SEE PAGE 328.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Full Dress.—Silver-grey silk robe, having on the skirt but one flounce, surmounted by a plain green ribbon, forming a festoon. The corsage is round-waisted, and finished off with a wide sash of the same colour as the dress. The sleeves are of moderate width, bordered at the edge with narrow green ribbon, and trimmed with a ruching passing from the shoulder to the front of the elbow. Plain leghorn bonnet, ornamented with roses above and below the front edge, and with green strings.

Fig. 2. Walking Dress.—This dress is in slate-coloured silk, ornamented with a series of black velvet-edged flounces arranged in such a manner as to resemble a tunic. The corsage is semi-décolleté, and forms a pelerine à la Marie-Antoinette, apart from the dress, but perfectly in keeping with it as to the style of the trimming. The sleeves are wide, and provided with two narrow flounces to match the skirt. White crape bonnet, the ornamental black velvet tour-de-tête enlivened by a rose in the centre; white strings.

Fig. 3. Dress for Morning Visit.—Robe of nankeen-coloured foulard de Chine, trimmed down the front with a row of silk buttons of the same colour. The bottom of the skirt is furnished with a fluted flounce, surmounted by three very narrow flat bands. Open corsage, provided with lapels, also edged with a narrow fluting and two flat bands, with which the superposed portion of the Maltese sleeves is also ornamented. Waistband à la Créole, fastened at the side. Straw bonnet, trimmed with lilac ribbons and flowers; white strings. Collar, chemisette, and undersleeves in plain white muslin.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

 The Charge for the Insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each announcement.*

BIRTHS.

On the 22nd inst., at 6, Sarswood-place, Hyde Park, the wife of Henry Wyllie, Esq., Miss Dora Chalmers, of a daughter.

On the 19th inst., at The Grove, Wandsworth, the wife of Mr. J. H. Somerset, of a daughter.

On the 16th inst., at Bexley Rectory, Norfolk, the wife of the Rev. J. Smith, of a daughter.

At Quedam, on the 15th inst., the wife of the Rev. Henry Chase Perry, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

Aug. 6, at the Church of Tsee, Leinkneberg, by the father of the bridegroom, assisted by the Revs. Charles Seymour and W. H. Stack, Charles Maurice Mitchell, Esq., Swan, son of the Rev. I. C. M'Causland, Rector of Cheasewic, to Rebekah, eldest daughter of the late Rev. William Maud, Rector of Ballee, in the county of Down. No cards sent.

On the 23rd inst., at King's Norton, Worcestershire, by the Rev. Arthur A. Ellis, M.A., Vicar of Stanford, Bishop, assisted by the Rev. J. M. L. Anson, M.A., Incumbent, Alexander Adderley, youngest son of Mr. Charles Bolton, of Handsworth, Birmingham, to Marrivine, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Richard Prosser, of Birmingham.

DEATHS.

On the 11th inst., Mr. Alfred Brooker, youngest son of the late Mr. Brooker, of Chattenden-row, Lordship-lane, Dulwich, aged 28.

On the 16th inst., at Rio Lodge, Maida Vale, Walter Forsyth, Esq., in his 62nd year, deeply lamented by his wife, relatives, and friends.

On the 19th inst., at his residence, Bruntsfield House, Bruntsfield, William Rawlings, late of Queen's-street, Haymarket, where he carried on the business of Leather and Innerlings for garments of the army, to which he respected by a large circle of friends. By his death the poor have lost a kind and liberal benefactor, aged 78.

At Boston, Lincolnshire, on the 20th Sept., Mr. Thomas Wilson, the builder of the Stump, aged 76.

On the 20th inst., at the residence of his grandfather, Peter Moon, Esq., of Portland-place, Peter Ireland, only son of William Michael Richardson, Esq., of Stoke Newington, Twelfth Night, aged four years.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.

BANKRUPTS.

J. HODGSON, Upper Mary-lebone-street, Middlesex, grocer—PEIFFER, Dean-st., Soho, and Gt. Portland-st., Marylebone, MATAJA, Hamburgh—HART, Sir, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne, dealer in coals—BRACKELL, Bristol, saddle manufacturer—MATTHEWS, Bromsgrove, ironfounder—W. PERSON and B. PEIGUE, Blackburn, cotton manufacturers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J. A. MACANDIE, Portobello, writer—J. G. BUTCHE, Glasgow, merchant—J. and J. M'LEAN, Glasgow, merchants—J. and J. GARDNER, Stirling, ironfounders—J. MUIR, Glasgow, spirit-dealer.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 24.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.

W. G. COOPER, 24, Peter-hill, Bucket-maker, and Halifax, Nova Scotia, merchant—LEVY, Devonshire-terrace, City, merchant.

BANKRUPTS.

W. BROWN, Somerleyton-place, Hampstead-road-place, Surgeon—R. WHITTEN and G. SIMMONS, Gracechurch-street, Corn-factors, and Mincing-lane, Tea-brokers—SHERWOOD, Southsea, Hampshire, licensed—M. B. ASHWORTH, Manchester, factor—G. R. WEBB, Frankley-green, Worcestershire, timber merchant—J. NUNNS, Milkwater, Australia, and Liverpool, merchant—J. and J. HOLDEN, Todmorden, Lancashire, J. H. and A. HOLDEN, Todmorden, Lancashire, cotton manufacturers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

P. H. BURRELL, Dundee, grocer—R. MYERS, Stranie, Butcher-bankers, Inverness.

THEATRE ROYAL, HAYMARKET.—Mr. EDWIN BOOTH, from the principal American Theatres, will make his appearance in England on Monday, Sept. 30, and for six nights only, in the character of Shylock, in THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday, Richard III. Thursday, Othello. Saturday, Hamlet. Supported by the full strength of the new Company. THE SOFTLY. After which a Farce, by J. Mathews; and other entertainments. A new Piece on Monday and Saturday by Tom Taylor, entitled ROYAL LYCEUM THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDMUND FALCONER.—On Monday, Sept. 30 (for the FIRST TIME IN ENGLAND), and during the week, A REPUTATION FOR WOMAN, OR LOVE AGAINST THE WORLD. Mrs. Scott Siddons (her first appearance in London) will play three characters in one Piece.

THEATRE ROYAL, LYCEUM.—GRAND SECRET, SHORT, SWIFT, and SUCCESSFUL.—On Monday, TWENTY-EIGHTH SECRET, and the last but two representations. On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, All the same terms.

Saturday, last Instrumental Concert, and Presentation of Cutlery to the London Rifle Brigade by the Lady Mayoress. Open at Seven.

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Other days. One Shilling. Children, Sixpence.

Orchestral Stalls and Omni Seats for Performance daily. Machinery in Motion. Picture Gallery, and all the usual attractions.

Season Tickets and Admission from the Lyceum Refreshment Bar-room.

The Basket and other Gymnastic Gentlemen, Fitzarlan, Desert Bachelors, and all other Features. Beauty and Intelligence of the bods of the horses and the comfort visit are now in full bloom. The Lyceum Omnibus runs to the door.

Monday, and for a Half-past One, and Saturday at Half-past Tickets.

Nurses—Half-a-Crown Season Tickets, available till April 30, 1862, may be had at the Original Entrance; 9, Exeter Hall; and the Box-office of the Company.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—BLONDIN'S LAST SEASON AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—Blondin will, for the last time this season, perform his wonderful Feats on the Rope, on Saturday next, Sept. 28, Oct. 5, 12, and 19, at Three o'clock. The Band of the Coldstream Guards will be in attendance. Admission, One Shilling; Children, Half-price. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d., and 5s. extra.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—BLONDIN on the ROPE.—Blondin will, by special desire, repeat his most extraordinary and daring feat ever attempted. Taking a moment's rest on the centre of the rope, he will lie down, turn a complete somersault, and resume his journey on foot, standing on each in every direction upon the rope, and taking it in one or even legs. Other wonderful feats will precede and follow this performance.—One Shilling.

MDME. LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT.—Exeter HALL.—THIS EVENING, SEPT. 28, will be given Mendelssohn's Oratorio of ELIJAH, the principal parts by Mdme. Lind-Goldschmidt, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss. The Band, being in all of the Bands for completing a Chorus, &c., in the Victoria Concert-room, Hyde Park, and the Crystal Palace, will be 500 strong. Tickets to be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's, Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street.—A full-length Portrait Model of the Prince of Wales is now added to the Chamber of Comparative Experiments, Anatomical, &c. Same Rooms, &c. Open from 11 in the Morning until from 10 p.m.

THE SISTERS SOPHIA and ANNIE, the Only original and highly-successful Entertainment, called SKETCHES FROM NATURE, will appear at Liverpool, Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

LONDON HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL, Great Ormond-street, W.C.

The Lord KINNAIRD—Chairman.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS are also urgently REQUIRED for this the only Homœopathic Hospital in the Metropolis.

Bankers—Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand. Secretary, E. ABEL BARNETT, Hon. Sec.

45, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

MESSRS. SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and CO.'S NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.

JOSEPH'S COAT. By the Author of "Miriam May." Third Edition. 3 vols. 31s.

"The force of the author of "Cripps Kn" is now a household word."—Morning Post.

ASHCOMBE CHURCHYARD. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

GREAT CATCHES; or, Grand Master Stroke. 2 vols. 21s.

THE LADY OF THE MANOR AND PORCHFOLD. 1 vol. 10s. 6d.

LOVING AND BEING LOVED. By the Authoress of "Under the Grass." 1 vols. 21s.

THE CASTLE AND COTTAGE IN SPAIN. By Lady WALLACE, Author of "Two Girls in Europe." 1 vols. 21s.

JOSEPH IN THE SNOW AND THE CLOCKMAKER. By Lady WALLACE.

MY DAUGHTER MARJORIE. 1 vol. 10s. 6d. [This day.

SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and Co., 66, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

ALL ROUND THE WORLD. Part XII. Published Monthly, price 1s.

Edited by W. F. ADDENBORTH, F.R.G.S. Contents:—Journey to North America—Boston and New York—American Hotels—Public Houses—Military Academy—Life at Newport—New Orleans—Mississippi—Cotton Plantations—Slave Auctions—Slave Dwellings—Slave Children—Slave Women—Slave Men—Pacific Continent—Crossing the Alleghanies—The Potomac—Harper's Ferry—Washington—Sandy Beach—Richmond—Slave Trade—Prospects of America—Relative Position of States—Weakness of Union—Armies—Commanders—Navies—Blockade—Privateers—Conclusion—Reminiscences—Retrospect.

London: W. KENT and Co., Paternoster-row.

This day, price 1s., with Illustration by "Phiz"

ST. JAMES'S MAGAZINE.

Contents for October:—I. Conducted by Mrs. S. C. HALL. Contents for October:—I. Marlowe and Shakspeare—II. Lord Lyttleton—III. Lady Cave: a Scottish Story—A. The Hieroglyphic Rooms. By F. W. Fairholt, F.S.A.—B. Lord Peel (Portrait)—C. Sir Robert Peel—D. Leeds—Leeds Library—E. Mrs. Norton (Portrait)—F. Our Weary Lot—G. Mr. Sala's Gaslight and Daylight—H. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—I. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—J. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—K. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—L. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—M. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—N. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—O. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—P. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—Q. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—R. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—S. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—T. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—U. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—V. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—W. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—X. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—Y. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—Z. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—II. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—III. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—IV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—V. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—VI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—VII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—VIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—IX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—X. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—XI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—XII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—XIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—XIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—XV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—XVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—XVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—XVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—XIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—XX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—XXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—XXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—XXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—XXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—XXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—XXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—XXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—XXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—XXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—XXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—XXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—XXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—XXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—XXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—XXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—XXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—XXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—XXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—XXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—XL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—XLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—XLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—XLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—XLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—XLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—XLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—XLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—XLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—XLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—L. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—LI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—LII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—LIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—LIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—LV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—LVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—LVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—LVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—LIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—LX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—LXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—LXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—LXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—LXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—LXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—LXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—LXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—LXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—LXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—LXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—LXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—LXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—LXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—LXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—LXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—LXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—LXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—LXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—LXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—LXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—LXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—LXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—LXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—LXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—LXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—LXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—LXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—LXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—LXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—XC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—XCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—XCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—XCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—XCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—XCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—XCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—XCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—XCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—XCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—C. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CXL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CXLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CXLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CXLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CXLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CXLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CXLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CXLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CXLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CXLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CLX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CLXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CLXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CLXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CLXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CLXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CLXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CLXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CLXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CLXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CLXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CLXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CLXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CLXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CLXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CLXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CLXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CLXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CLXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CLXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CLXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CLXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CLXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CLXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CLXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CLXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CLXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CLXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CLXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CLXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CXC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CXCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CXCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CXCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CXCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CXCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CXCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CXCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CXCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CXCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCXL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCXLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCXLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCXLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCXLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCXLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCXLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCXLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCXLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCXLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCLX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCLXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCLXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCLXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCLXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCLXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCLXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCLXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCLXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCLXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCLXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCLXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCLXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCLXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCLXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCLXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCLXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCLXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCLXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCLXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCLXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCLXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCLXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCLXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCLXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCLXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCLXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCLXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCLXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCLXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCXC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCXCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCXCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCXCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCXCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCXCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCXCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCXCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCXCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCXCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCXL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCXLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCXLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCXLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCXLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCXLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCXLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCXLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCXLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCXLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCLX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCLXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCLXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCLXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCLXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCLXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCLXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCLXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCLXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCLXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCLXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCLXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCLXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCLXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCLXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCLXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCLXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCLXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCLXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCLXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCLXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCLXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCLXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCLXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCLXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCLXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCLXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCLXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCLXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCLXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CCCXC. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CCCXCI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CCCXCII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CCCXCIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CCCXCIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CCCXCV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CCCXCVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CCCXCVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CCCXCVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CCCXCIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CD. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDXXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDXXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDXXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDXXXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDXXXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDXXXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDXXXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDXXXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDXXXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDXXXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDXL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDXLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDXLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDXLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDXLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDXLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDXLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDXLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDXLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDXLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDL. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDLI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDLII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDLIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDLIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDLV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDLVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDLVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDLVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDLIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDLX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDLXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDLXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Expectations—CDLXIII. Mr. Thackeray's Virginians—CDLXIV. Mr. Trollope's Orley Farm—CDLXV. Mr. Reade's Cloister and the Hearth—CDLXVI. Mr. Kingsley's Hereward the Wake—CDLXVII. Mr. Lever's Davenport Dunn—CDLXVIII. Mr. Bulwer Lytton's Caxtons—CDLXIX. Mr. Disraeli's Lothair—CDLXX. Mr. Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset—CDLXXI. Mr. Thackeray's Four Georges—CDLXXII. Mr. Dickens's Great Exp

EXTRAORDINARY POWER OF MEMORY.—At the ROYAL ADELPHI THEATRE, EVERY EVENING, at Eight, and on MONDAY, Oct. 3, 7, PAULTON, Esq., the great Memory-Reader, will exhibit his wonderful power of remembering by repetition, which has completely placed at his command the contents of many hundreds of books, selected at random by any gentleman, simultaneously; and, being unable to calculate against the strongest arithmetician, and not even the multiplication table in England, to try his skill against him, he will, by the power of memory, perform the most difficult and gentlemanly sum in the most wonderful manner before the audience, by handing in their cards. Refreshments in the public or private rooms at Simpson's Divan Tavern, adjoining the Strand Court Divan, No. 103, and 105, Strand, opposite Exeter Hall.

EXAMINATIONS for SCIENCE CLASSES.—The COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL on EDUCATION, The ANNUAL EXAMINATIONS in SCIENCE and ART will commence on MONDAY, the 10th instant, at SOUTH KENSINGTON, and on MONDAY, the 17th, at the Provincial Centres. Candidates wishing to present themselves must forward their names to the SECRETARY, Department of Science and Art, Kensington, London W., on or before the 5th, except those entering at the Provincial Centres, for which the Secretaries of the Local Committees should be applied to. By Order of the Committee of Council on Education.

LADIES' DRAWING-CLASSES.—Mr. B. R. LINDSAY, Author of the New Series of Patterns in Wood-Engraving, and Author of various publications on Drawing and Perspective, begs to announce that his classes (limited to six pupils each) re-assemble on Oct. 1. For terms and particulars apply to his residence, 3, Gloucester-terrace, Hyde-park. Mr. Lindsay's system of teaching STRAIGHT DRAWING MODELS, showing the principles of sketch at once from Nature, 1st lot, 10s.; 2nd, 10s.; 3rd, 10s.; 4th, 10s.; 5th, 10s.; 6th, 10s.; 7th, 10s.; 8th, 10s.; 9th, 10s.; 10th, 10s.; 11th, 10s.; 12th, 10s.; 13th, 10s.; 14th, 10s.; 15th, 10s.; 16th, 10s.; 17th, 10s.; 18th, 10s.; 19th, 10s.; 20th, 10s.; 21st, 10s.; 22nd, 10s.; 23rd, 10s.; 24th, 10s.; 25th, 10s.; 26th, 10s.; 27th, 10s.; 28th, 10s.; 29th, 10s.; 30th, 10s.; 31st, 10s.; 32nd, 10s.; 33rd, 10s.; 34th, 10s.; 35th, 10s.; 36th, 10s.; 37th, 10s.; 38th, 10s.; 39th, 10s.; 40th, 10s.; 41st, 10s.; 42nd, 10s.; 43rd, 10s.; 44th, 10s.; 45th, 10s.; 46th, 10s.; 47th, 10s.; 48th, 10s.; 49th, 10s.; 50th, 10s.; 51st, 10s.; 52nd, 10s.; 53rd, 10s.; 54th, 10s.; 55th, 10s.; 56th, 10s.; 57th, 10s.; 58th, 10s.; 59th, 10s.; 60th, 10s.; 61st, 10s.; 62nd, 10s.; 63rd, 10s.; 64th, 10s.; 65th, 10s.; 66th, 10s.; 67th, 10s.; 68th, 10s.; 69th, 10s.; 70th, 10s.; 71st, 10s.; 72nd, 10s.; 73rd, 10s.; 74th, 10s.; 75th, 10s.; 76th, 10s.; 77th, 10s.; 78th, 10s.; 79th, 10s.; 80th, 10s.; 81st, 10s.; 82nd, 10s.; 83rd, 10s.; 84th, 10s.; 85th, 10s.; 86th, 10s.; 87th, 10s.; 88th, 10s.; 89th, 10s.; 90th, 10s.; 91st, 10s.; 92nd, 10s.; 93rd, 10s.; 94th, 10s.; 95th, 10s.; 96th, 10s.; 97th, 10s.; 98th, 10s.; 99th, 10s.; 100th, 10s.; 101st, 10s.; 102nd, 10s.; 103rd, 10s.; 104th, 10s.; 105th, 10s.; 106th, 10s.; 107th, 10s.; 108th, 10s.; 109th, 10s.; 110th, 10s.; 111th, 10s.; 112th, 10s.; 113th, 10s.; 114th, 10s.; 115th, 10s.; 116th, 10s.; 117th, 10s.; 118th, 10s.; 119th, 10s.; 120th, 10s.; 121st, 10s.; 122nd, 10s.; 123rd, 10s.; 124th, 10s.; 125th, 10s.; 126th, 10s.; 127th, 10s.; 128th, 10s.; 129th, 10s.; 130th, 10s.; 131st, 10s.; 132nd, 10s.; 133rd, 10s.; 134th, 10s.; 135th, 10s.; 136th, 10s.; 137th, 10s.; 138th, 10s.; 139th, 10s.; 140th, 10s.; 141st, 10s.; 142nd, 10s.; 143rd, 10s.;

NEW BOOKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST and BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

THE CAVANGO RIVER. A Narrative of Travel, Exploration, and Adventure. By CHARLES JOHN ANDERSSON, Author of "Lake Ngami," "The Okavango River," &c.

A SECRET HISTORY OF THE COURT OF FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XV. Edited by Dr. CHALLICE. From the LIFE OF JEANNE D'ALBERT, QUEEN OF NAVARRE. By Miss FRASER. In Second and Cheaper Edition.

LADY CHARLOTTE BURY'S DOMESTIC SKETCHES IN BERNAL 2s. Cheap edition, now ready.

NOTICE TO QUIT. By W. G. WILLS. 3 vols.

EAST AND WEST. By JAMES HAMILTON, Author of "A HERO IN SPITE OF HIMSELF." By Captain BEDE.

ALONE IN THE WORLD. By the Author of "Cousin Geoffrey." 1 vol.

COUNTY SOCIETY. 3 vs. (Next week.

THE BIOGRAPHIES OF ENGLAND'S LITERARY WOMEN. Now ready, very shortly, Vol. IVa.

THE LITERARY WOMEN OF ENGLAND

from the Earliest Times.

SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and Co., 66, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

ON the FIRST of OCTOBER will be Published, in Gold and Colours, the ILLUMINATION ALPHABETICAL TOUR MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF ILLUMINATION. Price 1s. Monthly Numbers and Parts. Published by Messrs. DAY and SON, Lithographers to the Queen.

ILLUMINATION.—LAING'S EDITION OF MANUAL OF ILLUMINATION.

Nearly ready, very shortly, Vol. IVa.

THE LITERARY WOMEN OF ENGLAND

from the Earliest Times.

SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and Co., 66, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

ON the FIRST of OCTOBER will be Published, in Gold and Colours, the ILLUMINATION ALPHABETICAL TOUR MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF ILLUMINATION. Price 1s. Monthly Numbers and Parts. Published by Messrs. DAY and SON, Lithographers to the Queen.

ILLUMINATION.—LAING'S EDITION OF MANUAL OF ILLUMINATION.

Second Edition, Revision, with 178 Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 14s.

SURGICAL DISEASES OF THE EYE.

By ALFRED WALTON, Surgeon to the Great London Ophthalmic Hospital and to St. Mary's Hospital.

JOHN CHURCHILL, New Burlington-street.

Just published, beautifully illustrated, price 6s., the Third Edition of BEN HYDDING.

By Dr. NELSON and SONS, Paternoster-row; Edinburgh, and New York.

Just published, price 2s. 6d.,

EASTBOURNE, AS A RESORT FOR HEALTH.

By CHARLES MAYHAN, M.D., and WM. ABBOTT SMITH, M.R.—London: Churchill.

THE ATHENÆUM.—On and after October

1st it is proposed to publish the "ATHENÆUM" Journal on Thursday instead of Saturday. Early intelligence will thus be handed to the world each week, and the publication will be more convenient for the circulation of literary journals constructed by high price, and the every description of retail trade, postponing it to the day of publication and authority. The Proprietors believe that the greater portion of the Public will appreciate, if not accept, the change.

The Proprietors have always held as the principle in the conduct of the "ATHENÆUM" that the interests of the Public and the Trade are identical. They have been at infinite labour and expense to render the Journal worthy the support of all classes of literary men, with forty columns of advertisements, offered to us for the general benefit.

The Proprietors, taking advantage of the abolition of the paper duty, have further resolved to reduce the price of the Journal to Fourpence; and the Publication will be removed to Saturdays.

MOIRÈS ANTIQUES,

Magnificent quality, 14 guineas.

SEWELL and Co., Compton House, Soho.

HOUSEHOLD LINEN DEPARTMENT.

JOHN HARVEY, SON, and Co., of 9, Ludgate-hill, beg to call the attention of their numerous Customers and the Public to their Stock, which comprises DAMASK TABLECLOTHS, for sumptuous, of Scotch, Irish, and Saxony diaper and damask, by 2½ yards, 2½ by 3, 3 by 3, 3 by 3½, 3 by 4, 3½ by 3½, 3½ by 4, 3½ by 4½, and 3½ by 5; also Napkins to match, from 7s. to 24 guinea; cotton sheeting from 1 to 7 inch wide; huckaback, diaper, and Marseilles quilts, for Bedroom, Dining-room, and Nursery use; Counterpanes, Blankets, and Sheets. Carriage paid upon bands up and number 7 counties; counties united upon an house in London, amounting to £5.

SILKS, Rich, Plain, Striped, and Checked

Moiré Silks, 24s. per Dress of 7 yards, well worth the attention of families. Patterns sent free by post. Also patterns and prices of Rich Silks, suitable for Mantles, Shawls, &c., sent free by post.—JOHN HARVEY, SON, and Co., 9, Ludgate-hill. Established upwards of fifty years. Carriage paid upon orders £5.

REAL FUR SEAL CLOAKS,

By Special Warrant to the Queen and Royal Family.

G. PELLER, 495, West Strand, Charing-cross.

Ulstard cloaks. Established 1770.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT. Established in 1770.

LADIES' WEDDING OUTFITS

sent free of carriage.

Descriptive Lists, with prices, sent free by post.

CAPPER, SON, and CO., 49, Groombridge-street, London, E.C.

Sent post-free, Descriptive Lists of

COMPLETE SETS OF BABY LINEN,

which account bears

throughout the United Kingdom and all the COLONIES.

UNDERCLOTHING FOR BOYS, INDIA, and CHINA.

for Ladies and Children of all ages.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT. Established in 1770.

BABIES' BASSINETS,

ready for use, or sent home free of carriage.

Bassinets

Trimmed and Furnished to correspond.

CAPPER, SON, and CO., 49, Groombridge-street, London, E.C.

Descriptive Lists, with Prices, sent free by post.

LADIES' UNDER-CLOTHING.—A large

Stock of Chemises, Night-dresses, Drawers, Petticoats, Corsets, Robes, &c., in the Ladies' Outfitting, Waterproof, and Gold Medal Shirt Establishment, 76, Strand, corner of Bedford-street. Sacks of price free by post on application.

EIDER-DOWN PETTICOATS.—These

Petticoats, for many years honoured by Royal and distinguished patronage, are still to be obtained only of the Inventor, and combine—Lot of prices may be had of W. H. BATSON and CO., 1, Mansion-street, Bond-street.

C L A R K'S

AUTUMNAL or WINTER SUITS,

from 30s.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

C L A R K'S

AUTUMNAL and WINTER OVERCOATS and CAPES, from 21s.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

C L A R K'S

SCOTCH TWEED AUTUMNAL and WINTER TROUSERS, 10s.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

C L A R K'S

WATERPROOF INVERNESS WRAPPERS,

from 21s.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

C L A R K'S

JUVENILE CLOTHING,

for Quality and Style unequalled—

Harrow Suits . . . . . from 30s.

Knickerbocker Ditto . . . . . 21s.

Raymond Wrapper . . . . . 21s.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

C L A R K'S

TWEED RIDING-HABITS,

from 4l.

SUPERFINE CLOTH DITTO,

from 6l.

W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 129, Regent-street.

SHIRTS.—Morning and Evening SHIRTS of every description, fitting with precision and comfort, at moderate prices.—LAYCOCK and WILSON, 79, Regent-street, Piccadilly, S.W.

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ATTILA QUADRILLE. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S MILANESE POLKA. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD. Price 3s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours. 4s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW QUADRILLE, MADRID. Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW VALSE, SULTANA. Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ABBERT'S NELLY GRAY-VALSE, with Correct Accompaniment. Now out just published. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S CHEAP WORKS FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS. Price 1s. 6d. each, post-free.

TUTOR.

Chappell's Popular Violin Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Violoncello Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Cornet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular English Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular German Concertina Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Flute Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Tambourine Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Clarionet Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Harmonium Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Singing Tutor.
Chappell's Popular Pianoforte Tutor.

COLLECTIONS.

Chappell's 100 Dances (original Melodies of D'Albert's)
Second Violin and Bass Part to Ditto.
Chappell's 100 Dances (Second Series).
Second Violin and Bass Part to Ditto.
Chappell's 100 Operatic Gems.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Melodies.
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs "The Bells in Marlow."
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs "The Amber Witch."
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs "The Crusaders."
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs from "Les Huguenots."
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs "Stradella."
Chappell's Twenty-four Airs from "Lucrezia Borgia."
Chappell's 100 Hungarian, Bohemian, and Polish Melodies.
Chappell's 50 Airs, Irish and Welsh.
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Country Dance Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Dances (Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, Polka Mazurkas, &c.)

ENGLISH CONCERTINA.

Chappell's 100 Dance Melodies, Arranged for English Concertina.
Chappell's 100 Operatic Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Sacred Melodies, "Lorline" and "Victorian" Concertina.
Chappell's Favourite Airs from "Les Huguenots."
Chappell's 100 Irish Airs.
Chappell's 100 Scotch Airs.
Chappell's 100 Christy Minstrel Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Dances (Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, Polka Mazurkas, &c.)

GERMAN CONCERTINA.

Chappell's 100 Dance Melodies, Arranged for German Concertina.
Chappell's 100 Operatic Melodies, Songs, Dances, &c.
Chappell's 50 Popular Airs, Arranged for Accompaniment.

GUITAR.

Chappell's 100 Dances.
Chappell's Popular Songs, with Guitar Accompaniment, in two books. Price 2s. 6d. each.

HARMONIUM.

Chappell's 50 Sacred Melodies.
Chappell's 100 Dance Melodies.
Can be had to be taken to order CHAPPELL'S Cheap Works, as they Above appear in Chappell's Musical Magazine, Price 6d. Monthly.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE

TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest set of instructions ever published. Illustrated with numerous exercises and a great variety of the most popular airs, arranged progressively. Full music size, price 6s. post-free.

"Mr. A. Lee of Brinley Richards's Popular Pieces will be sent on application to

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF-PRICE.—All Music, and the best Editions, at half the published price, sent post-free for postage-stamps. Catalogues gratis.

HOWARD and CO., 20, New Bond-street, W.

HOWARD PAUL'S GREAT SONG.

MR. GORILLA; or, the Lion of the Period. Sung by Mr. Howard Paul. Illustrated. HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

Second Nightly at Madame Gassier.

COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES, Played with immense success. Price 4s. Solo or Duet, Septet, 5s. 6d.; Full Band, 6s.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

The Latest Excitement.

COOTE'S DEVIL'S LAKE GALOP on the celebrated American Walk Round. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Full Band, 4s. Illustrated in Colours.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S LEOTARD VALSES, price 4s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Full Band, 4s. 6d.; both Illustrated with a splendid likeness of Leotard.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S CORNFLOWER VALSE, price 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s. Considered to be the gem of the season.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

OH, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME! Ballad by WALLACE. Sung with the greatest success by Miss Poole at the Monday Popular Concerts.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET. A most pleasing Song. The words and music both beautiful. By FRED. BUCKLEY. To answer to the Unity. Price 2s. 6d.

HOWARD and CRAY, 65, New Bond-street.

MOME, OURY'S BARBIERE DI SEVIGLIA. Grand brilliant fantasia, played by the composer at her concerts, with extraordinary success. Publishing in two and three popular sizes. Price 4s. ARNOULT and PARLY, 19, Hanover-square.

LILIAN'S GRAND DIVERTISSEMENT.—A most highly brilliant and effective arrangement of the favourite Song. Price 4s. ARNOULT and PARLY, 19, Hanover-square.

OSBORNE'S "LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM." A most successful and happy arrangement of this beautiful melody as a Pianoforte Fantasia. Price 4s.

ARNOULT and PARLY, 19, Hanover-square.

SCHLOESSER'S LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche Brillante. A spirited and dashing piece for the Pianoforte, played by the composer with great success at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s.

CHEAPEST MUSIC REPOSITORY IN ENGLAND.—All the New Music half price and postage-free. Orders executed by return of post. Country Dealers supplied on liberal terms. Catalogues gratis and post-free.—D'ALCORN, 6, Baldwin-place, Oxford-street, W.

NEW MUSIC.

MELLON'S PATTI POLKA, performed and redemanded every night at the Ambert Concerts at Covent Garden, is now ready, price 3s. 6d.

ROBERT and KOTTA, Holles-street.

THE CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Thirty-two Classical Pieces, by Mozart, Beethoven, Haydn, Handel, Weber, Mendelssohn, Cramer, Clementi, Dussek, and Hummel, all beautifully and suitable for the youngest performers.

ROBERT and KOTTA, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM, Second Edition, much enlarged, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Thirty-two Pieces, arranged for Right Hand, Left Hand, or both, in addition to a Set of Quadrilles, Polkas, Waltzes, and Marches, all the compositions of the most favourite Pianoforte Masters.

ROBERT and KOTTA, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL FOR BRASS BANDS, printed on pasteboards. Now ready, 12 Numbers, each containing Six Marches, arranged for 20 performers, price 8d. The parts may be had separately, price 2d. each; the Conductor's Score, price 4d. Each Number may be had of all Music-sellers. Boosey's Quick-step Journal contains the most popular Marches arranged by J. A. ELTZE, Bandmaster Royal Marines. A specimen sent post-free for 8d.

BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS' 20 ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTCH AIRS, arranged as Duets for VIOLIN and PIANO, by W. WATSON, is now each (with separate Violin part), price 2s. 6d. Specimen sent post-free for 18 stamps.

BOOSEYS' 12 OPERATIC AIRS arranged as DUETS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, in one book Price 12s. Specimen sent post-free for 18 stamps.

BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

RODE, BAILLOT, AND KREUTZER'S METHOD FOR THE VIOLIN.—BOOSEY and SONS' New Edition (issued on the 25th inst.) is the only one in which the Violin Exercises of Rodes, in 64; Fiorillo's 36 Caprices, in 64; and Kreutzer's 42 Studies, in 64, are connected by 8 Violin Duets. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS by the LATE ALLISON.—Extract from "The Times" of 7th inst.—"Allison gives to the public a number of songs which will be found favourite in the drawing-room. The skill of poet and composer is nicely and skill in musical art."

BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, No. 7, for September, is now ready, price 6d., and contains 11 of the latest Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c. 9 Airs from Balfe's new opera, "The Bohemian Girl." 2 Airs from Wallace's "Lurline." 2 Airs from Verdi's "Trovatore." 2 Airs from Auber's "Crown Diamonds." 2 Airs from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète." 2 Airs from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." 2 Airs from Rossini's "Barber of Seville." 2 Airs from Auber's "Fra Diavolo." 2 Airs from Wallace's "Maritana." The first six numbers may be had, price 6d. each.

BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

NEW VOCAL DUETS, "HOPEFUL SPAIN, SUPPOSE SUMMER, PLENTIOUS AUTUMN, and "SOLDIER, REST," by HENRY SMART, are now ready, price 3s. each. Also, "Sweet Spring," by the same composer, price 3s. "Sweet Spring" is the first of a series of Vocal Duets by Henry Smart, to be published monthly, and will be found to possess the same characteristics of elegance and originality as the above.

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG, by the Composer of "Will you love me then as now?" &c., YES, I LOVE THEE. This is a song of the affections, and will be found one of the most pleasing and effective compositions of the season. It is exciting that it will soon be upon every piano.

DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

"THE PRICE NOW HEARD IN EVERY DRAWING ROOM IS LA PRIERE EXAUCEE (The Prayer Granted), by Henry Pontet. Also Pontet's "The Harbour Pilot," Moreau's Valse, per THERESA BADARZEWSKA. Pontet's Polka, per ditto. Pontet's Galop, per ditto. Price 3s. Saint-port-free for 18 st.; also "La Priere Exaucee," for Harmonium, by Alexandre. Price 2s. 6d. net. Post-free for 15 stamps.

London: CRAMER, BEALE, and CHAPPELL, 201, Regent-street, W.

WHEN DO YOU MEAN TO CHANGE Your Name?" Reading of "The Name" in "Home, Sweet Home." "I shall never think I shall marry." Descriptive Song. "Oh, Mary, this London's a wearisome place." "Unless many more names, the words of these are perfectly meaningless." Price 2s. each. Post-free for 13 stamps. "Will you love me then as now?" Song of every description. Price 2s. 6d. net. Post-free for 30 stamps. "Yes, I love thee." Song. Price 2s. 6d. net. Post-free for 30 stamps.

MUSIC HALF-PRICE and Post-free.—All full-sized Music of every publisher forwarded to any part of the country at HALF-PRICE, postage-free. Music lent for perusal, and exchanged for any other. Just published, Select Catalogue of the Cheapest Music ever offered. Gratis and post-free.

JOHN REED, 271, Tottenham-court-road, W.

ADAM'S DIXEY LAND QUADRILLES.—A. The last extensive the celebrated Melody sung by the Sandays, Price 4s. Illustrated in Colours. "Dixie's Land" is the theme of every Nigger Concert, and is the most popular Melodies sung by the Christy Minstrels. Every number of the Pianoforte price 4s., post-free for 24 stamps.

DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street, W.

DIANOFORTES for HIRE, 14s. per Month. 13 Guineas, varnished. No hire charged if purchased in six months. Pianofortes by all the best makers, for Sale or Hire, on the Three Years' System. Illustrated Lists forwarded on application.—WILLIS and SONS, 192, Regent-street (Removed from 210).

TO PURCHASERS of PIANOFORTES.—CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES by the best makers, in Cottage, Semi-Cottage, and Grand Pianofortes, by Collard, Broadwood, Kirkman, &c., at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description, by the best makers, for Sale or Hire.

50, New Bond-street, W., opposite Sloane-street.

NEW FIVE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, the only two-rank Harmonium, with Knee-swell, suitable for the cottage, school, or drawing-room. 50, New Bond-street, W., opposite Sloane-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five octaves, two footboards, and in oak or mahogany cases. Also a large assortment of second-hand Harmoniums. Descriptive Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street, W.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of keys, CC to F in alt, two footboards, and in oak cases, 8 stops, and 2 rows of vibrators, in two sound case, at 40 guineas. Also a new Harmonium, with 3 rows of vibrators, 16 stops, and 2 rows of pedals, 150 guineas. These Instruments are recommended as the most perfect and complete Harmoniums ever made. Descriptive Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street, W., opposite Sloane-street.

TO PURCHASERS of HARMONIUMS.—CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND HARMONIUMS by the best makers, in Cottage, Semi-Cottage, and Grand Harmoniums, by Alexandre, Debain, Prestoni, &c., at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description, by the best makers, for Sale or Hire.

50, New Bond-street, W., opposite Sloane-street.

PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS.—CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS, by the best makers, at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description, by the best makers, for Sale or Hire.

50, New Bond-street, W., opposite Sloane-street.

ORTMANN'S and PLUMB have Grands of all descriptions at moderate prices, for Hire, from 2½ a month; also the small Semi-Piano at 1l. for extinction with any other hire in town. Orders—111, Regent-street.

BRASS BANDS.—DRUM-AND-FIFE BANDS.—Cornets, Saxhorns, Clarionets, Concert Vibrating Harps, Flutes, Flageolets, Drums, Cymbals, Tambourines, Sticks, Bands, Straps, Cases, Bags, Stands, Lamps, Tuning-forks, Pitch-pipes, Music-stands, Music-paper, Pianofortes, at prices below French Instruments, by GEORGE WITHERS and SONS, Manufacturers, Dealers, and Shippers supplied. Price-lists, with drawings, free by post.

NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS, Printers, and Others, are informed that an ADVERTISER relative to our PATENT ROTARY FRICTION-MACHINES, and other articles for Printers' use, will receive prompt attention if addressed to R. HOE and Co., care of Mr. Edward Lloyd, 12, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street.

W. F. THOMAS and CO.'S PATENT SEWING-MACHINES.—In these machines are combined the most approved construction, as shown by hooking, pure stitch, and reversing motion, with the greatest simplicity, strength, and economy of thread, needle, and attachments of every description are supplied. The stitching produced is alike on both sides of the material, that is, the same as that produced by hand, and will not rip out. Lists of prices and specimens of the work can be had on application at 4, Cheapside, and 15, Regent-street.

FIRE-ANNIHILATOR, or Vapour Fire-engine.

In practical value proved beyond question by upwards of 1,000 Fires, and the Testimony of the Fire-Brigades of London, Paris, and all capitals. Sold at the Fire-Annihilator Company No. 100, Leadenhall-street, London.

CHUBB'S FILE-PROOF and THIEF-PROOF SAFES. CHUBBS' DETECTIVE LOCKS and PATENT DOOR LATCHES. Illustrated Price Lists gratis and post-free.

Chubb and Son, 57, St. Paul's-churchyard, London.

CARPETS! CARPETS!

At an enormous reduction, in consequence of the American panic.

Stout Brussels . . . . . at 1s. 9d.
Rich Tapestry Brussels . . . . . at 2s. 6d.
Very choice patterns, best quality . . . . . at 3s. 3d.
Rich Velvet Pile . . . . . at 3s. 11d.
HAPLE and CO., 145, Tottenham-court-road, London.

BEDSTEADS in Wood, Iron, and Brass, fitted with Furniture and Bedding complete. The largest assortment in the Kingdom.

J. MAPLE and CO., 145, Tottenham-court-road.

FURNITURE

Carriage Free to any part of the Kingdom.

Frame & Brussels, 2 yards by 2½ . . . . . 2l. 15s.
Ditto, Tapestry . . . . . 3l. 15s.
Illustrated and priced Catalogue gratis and post-free.

FURNISHING WAREHOUSES, 69, 70, 71, and 72, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

ATKINSON and CO. have always on hand a very large and choice Stock of Furniture, Carpets, Bedding, &c.

Cabinet Dining-room Chairs, in Rosewood, Mahogany, or Oak, 28s. Drawing-room, in fine figured walnut wood, stuffed, all hair, 3l. 10s. Couches to match, 5l. 5s.

Cabinetmen to be had either on application or post-free, on the premises of any part of the United Kingdom, for the purpose of making estimates for Furnishing.

Bedsteads, Curtain, Examination, Dressing, Bedroom-suites, &c. &c. Bedding of every description. Carpets, Floor-cloths, Mats, all wool; and Union Damasks, Moreen Curtains, Table-covers, Chintzes, Cretonnes, Dimities, Quilts, Blankets, and Counterpanes.

CAUTION.—SMEE'S SPRING MATTRESS,

Tucker's Patent, as Sold by Public Companies, Constantly, exactly, and carefully made, and kept ready for use, of the best materials and unrivalled workmanship, by the Patentees, who have the honour to be appointed upholsterers of the Queen's Spring Mattress is carefully made of the best materials and unrivalled workmanship.

William Smee and Sons, having now the entire of the patent right in their own hands, are the only makers.

Sold by all Bedding Dealers.

Size No. 1 for Bedsteads 3 feet wide . . . . 2l. 2s.
Ditto 4 feet . . . . 2l. 10s.
Ditto 6 feet . . . . 3l. 3s.

Other sizes in proportion. To be obtained of most respectable Upholsterers and Bedding Dealers throughout the Kingdom.

Especial notice should be taken that each Spring Mattress bears the name of "William Smee and Sons."

MAPPIN BROTHERS' TABLE KNIVES.

KING WILLIAM-STREET, LONDON-BRIDGE.

ESTABLISHED UPWARDS OF HALF A CENTURY.

Messrs. MAPPINS' TABLE KNIVES still maintain their accustomed superiority. Their Blades are of the finest steel and manufacture, and of the very best quality, with handles they hardest, most durable, and cheapest in use.

Handles.	Quality.	Quality.	Quality.
	No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
Ivory	3 4 0	3 0 0	2 12 0
Very handsome ivory (as cut)	3 8 0	3 4 0	3 0 0
Finest African ivory	4 0 0	3 8 0	3 4 0
Choice stag	3 4 0	3 0 0	2 12 0
Good ox bone	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 15 0
Very best ditto	0 8 6	0 12 0	0 16 0
Good strong Carvers	0 7 6	0 11 0	0 15 0
Very best ditto	0 8 6	0 12 0	0 16 0
Cornelly Scrvice	1l. 14 0	1l. 8 0	1l. 4 0
Ditto, finer quality	2 2 0	1 16 0	1 10 0

Messrs. MAPPIN'S Table Knives are sold by all Ironmongers, and by respectable dealers in Sheffield Cutlery, London-bridge, or to the Manufactory, Queen's Cutlery Works, Sheffield.

GABBANERS' £2-2s. DINNER SERVICES.—A large assortment of patterns of the choicest description, including the new Shell and Reed pattern, for which we have at the lowest possible prices. Table plans and brilliant quality and finish, with every article of the best manufacture. Dessert Services, Tea Services, Breakfast Services, Bedroom Services, Ornamental China, Glass, Electro-plate, Bronzes, Lamps, Kitchenware, and Turnery.

Gabbaners' Establishment, 109 and 110 pouet, Illustrated catalogues post-free.

41, OXFORD-STREET, W.

OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS, With Light and Meretician Lustres for Gas and Candles. Glass Dinner Services for 12 persons, from £5. Glass Dessert Services for 12 persons, from £3. Glass Table Decanters, per pair, from 10s. Ornamental Glass Shades, Globes, and Chimneys, for grocers Lamps, and Furnishing Orders, promptly executed. OSLER, Manufacturer of Glass, 45, Oxford-street, W. Birmingham—Manufactory and Show-rooms, Broad-street.

FRENCH MODERATOR LAMPS.—A magnificent assortment may be seen at MAPPLEBECK and LOWNDES' Warehouse, Strand.

ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE, in Bottle, recommended by R. DE JERSEY and CO. the Faculty, may now be had of the Brewers, Burton-upon-Trent; at their Agents, 61 and 62, Threadneedle-street, London.

SELTON CHEESE—FRESH BUTTER, Eggs, &c., sent to any address on all three to

CRAFT,

Cheesemonger and Provision Merchant,

Established 1760.

Families only.

Cross to call parts required.

BROWN AND POLSON'S

PATENT CORN FLOUR.

"This is superior to anything I have ever tried known."

Mrs. ——, Cookery Lecturer, Edinburgh.

Many other testimonials from Ladies of the highest rank in accordance to descriptive articles, sold every where BROWN and POLSON'S

FLOUR Warranted, free to Families, in and Packets, 1lb. and 2lb. each, by Grocers, Chemists, &c. Manufactory, Paisley, and 33, Moorgate-street, London.

A MOST DESIRABLE BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.

EPPS'S COCOA

(commonly called Epps's Homœopathic Cocoa).

The delicious aroma, nutritive qualities, and valuable medicinal properties of this preparation have procured its general adoption as a most desirable breakfast beverage.—Sold only in packets and tins, labelled JAMES EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, London." 1/2, 1lb., and 1lb. packets, 1s. 6d., 3s., and 6s. Also in 5lb. and 10lb. tins.

THE FINEST TRANSPARENT WAX CANDLES, 1d. per hour.

Sold by all Chandlers, and wholesale only at the Manufactory, Price-street, Birmingham.

THE FINEST TRANSPARENT WAX CANDLES, 1d. per hour.

Sold by all Chandlers, and wholesale only at the Manufactory, Price-street, Birmingham.

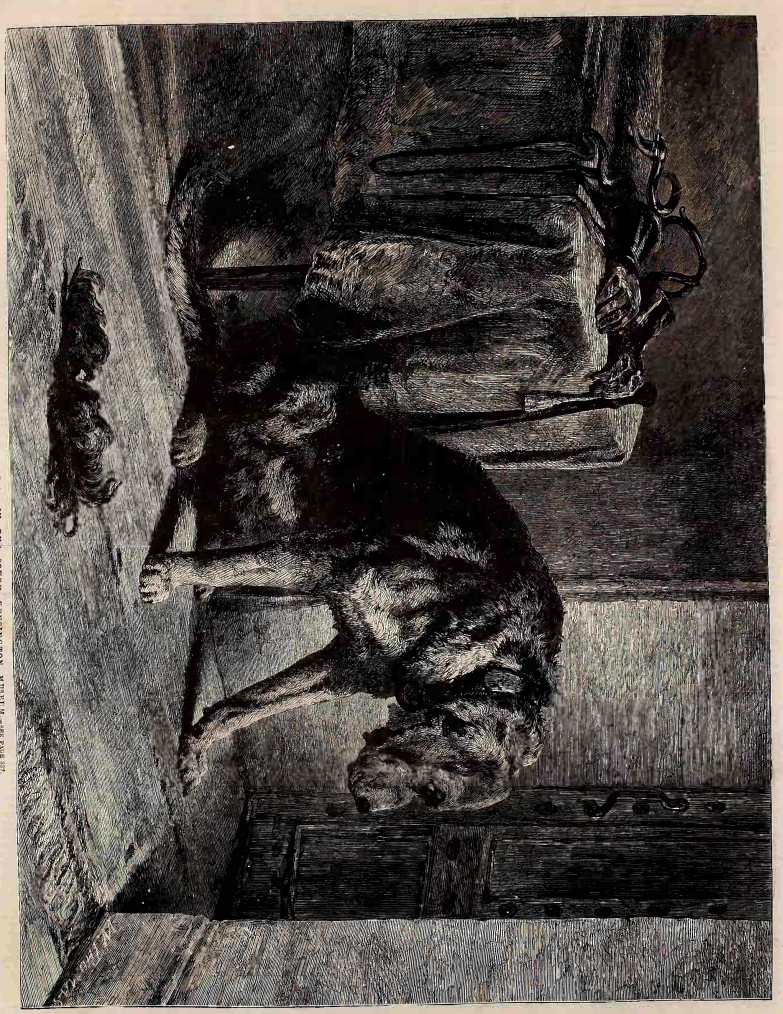
EXTRAORDINARY MERIT must belong to that which

EVERY ONE,

and such is the case with the

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by JOHN CHARLES LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY SEPTEMBER 28, 1861.



SUPPERS.—BY SIR E. LANDSEER, R.A., IN THE ROYAL KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—SEE PAGE 328.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.

THE site of the Great Exhibition building having been completely laid out, and the works advanced to a point of progress which renders the general plan intelligible even to the non-professional eye, the commissioners some weeks ago issued ivory tickets to each of the guarantors for their submission with a friend on Saturday, to see the growth of the extraordinary brick and iron structure which, through the exercise of their disinterested public spirit, will before many months elapse, be thrown open for the promotion of the arts and industry of the world. The same facilities have, as a matter of course, been extended to the leading representatives of the press and others whose relations with science and art were considered such as to entitle them to the favour. Armed with one of these "tickets," we a few days ago paid a visit to the works, when we were much astonished and gratified at the substantial progress which had been made since our former visit, and the character of the brickwork in this compartment may be conceived from the fact that some of the piers near the centre of the building are 15ft. wide and 15ft. thick, and that the foundations throughout are of concrete 8ft. thick. The length of the gallery, as has been before stated, is 1150ft., and internally it will be divided into arched doorways, as at the Manchester Exhibition, into nine compartments, the largest of which will be 322ft. and the smallest 60ft. long, being equal to 1150ft. in length. These apartments, being necessarily lighted from above, will occupy the upper floor of the range of buildings, the lower, or basement, being appropriated to the exhibition of sculpture. The wall next fronting Cromwell-road, though recessed for windows, will be without lights in the upper portion, but the lower will be pierced with arches measuring 16ft. by 12ft. The only deviation from the original plan in this front wall is the introduction of a projection at the eight window places in the extreme subdivisions between the intermediate porches and the ends of the building, there will be only three, the remaining five being added to the central subdivisions, immediately adjacent to the main porch, where they will be thirteen in number on each side. The effect of this will be to increase to a certain extent the indefinite character which would result from the total absence of varying plan in the front wall as compared with the flank facade, and to which we adverted in our notice of the plan of the building in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of the 22nd of March, and is therefore, to a slight extent, an improvement. The way to a light extent only, because the flatness and baldness of the wall surface throughout the entire length will almost necessarily be felt when we look on it, from any point of view, the idea of a central portico balanced by wings, which is essential to any architectural treatment in architectural structure. The extreme projection of the principal picture-gallery in Cromwell-road will be through three recessed arches. They are each 20ft. wide and 30ft. high, and, from the great space which they occupy, will be imposing in their quantities as the principal facade of St. John Lateran at Rome and other Renaissance productions of the kind. "These entrances," it is added, "invite elaborate decoration hereafter."

An important modification in the plan of the building, as at present seen being carried on, consists in the addition of "auxiliary picture-galleries," branching off at the ends of the main gallery, down Prince Albert's and Exhibition road respectively. These additional spaces may be permitted to say, go to some extent to meet an objection which we made to the arrangements, namely, that the picture-gallery as originally planned, more especially on the ground of the monotonous character of one continuous gallery, uniformly lighted, which we observed was "not calculated to give full effect to every description of painting, some requiring special conditions of light, which can only be obtained by a combination of side and overhead, semi—small cabinet pictures, for instance, standing in need of a strong, large gallery properly so called, with a top and side light." These auxiliary picture-galleries will be jointly 1290ft. in length, and they will differ in dimensions as well as in aspect from the main central gallery, being 20ft. wide and 40ft. high. They are intended to receive "the smaller-sized oil paintings, the water-colour paintings, miniatures, drawings, sculpture, and engravings." In point of lighting, however, we are not so well satisfied with the plan of the architect as we are in other respects. We are told the official account put forth by the commissioners that these auxiliary galleries will be "of course lighted on the same principle as already described"—that is, by a side and continuous light from above. With all deference to Captain Fowke's superior experience and judgment in these matters, we cannot but admit that there is no "of course" in the matter, but that, on the contrary, there are a certain class of pictures which decidedly demand a strong side light in addition to a diffused light from above to give them full effect. This is particularly the case with subject pictures of the Dutch and Flemish schools, which were intended for the adornment of the apartments of an ordinary dwelling-house, and not for the gallery. It applies also with more or less force to the majority of water-colour drawings and engravings. But, besides this, considerations of the temper of the spectator and his impressions produced upon his mind by subject treatment, should dictate applying a little variety in the conditions of lighting in a building intended for the education of pleasure. The long monotonous lighted from above, may be very conducive to the contemplation of the large works of the seven historical pictures, which will be admitted into the open air light and the bright external world in the most refreshing occasionally, and is particularly appropriate when looking at landscape and other subjects appertaining to the domestic influences. We sincerely trust, therefore, that, before the work is carried too far, the architect will alter the category of departing from his uniformly principle of lighting, at least as regards a portion of these auxiliaries. There may also be a doubt as to the convenience to artists and collectors, that the conditions of light required by different pictures are useless in variety, and that the light on the wall having a window in it may be somewhat of a nuisance to the gallery, throwing a glare over the picture. This objection, however, may be obviated by hanging panels or shutters, and thus covering the entire walls, by means of which each individual picture may be brought into the best position with reference to the direction of the light, whilst any desired position with reference to the direction of the light, whilst the general nuisance will give a subdued effect to the light itself, which could not be obtained on a side wall closer to the window, and the light will hereby be of a character different to that obtained from above. An illustration of the peculiar efficacy of this recurve sense under the notice of the artist of the present age is a few weeks ago at the Museum at Amsterdam, where a picture by Nicholas Maas ("Le Retreseur"), representing a girl, life-size, looking out of window, affixed to the outer wall facing the window, was, at a certain hour, seen where it was, but, on being moved to a position partially inclining to the light, the colours came out with a depth and brilliancy of effect which could not have been obtained in any other light, certainly not in a light descending from above.

Before passing from this subject it may be remarked that these lateral or auxiliary galleries extend down Prince Albert's-road as far as the commencement of the site for the Annex for the reception of those works which the Horticultural Society's western entrance is situated, and Prince Albert's-road to an opposite point marking the line of the society's main entrance. These, therefore, bring of brick are an addition to the portion of buildings originally designed to be of a permanent character. The party-wall of the Horticultural Society which runs between the extensions of these galleries is stated in the official plan to be the "northern boundary of ground (16¼ acres) conditionally agreed to be reserved for an exhibition in 1872." All these circumstances point to the ulterior views of the promoters of the exhibition, which are for the institution of "decennial exhibitions of the works of art and industry"—a vast project, fraught with great results, in which all the artistic and industrial interests of the world at large are more or less concerned, and the working out of which all ought to feel it a personal obligation to watch over and assist to good end.

We will now proceed through the central entrance under the picture-gallery to explore the preparations for

THE NAVE AND TRANSEPTS.

And here a scene presents itself which, both by its extent and the variety and singular character of the structural arrangements rapidly exciting the wonder and admiration of the beholder.

In front, at a distance of some 200ft. or more, and extending nearly the entire picture-gallery which you have just left behind, is a double row of pillars of the nave, and upon which the galleries have been already fixed; and at either end of the avenue so formed appear the preliminary scaffoldings erected for the purpose of the necessary works in placing and fixing the iron roof of the two huge domes, which are to be 250ft. high, exceeding that of St. Paul's by 35ft., and yielding sequence to that of St. Peter's at Rome by 20ft. Right and left the vast range of the nave the eye travels through a maze of scaffolding and ironwork connected with the various industrial courts, until it rests upon the foundations of the Horticultural Society's Gardens, which forms the northern boundary of the vast enceinte, and through which the entrance to the Annex, already alluded to, will next be obtained. Right and left, extending north and south, appears the scaffolding in connection with the works for the transepts, which intersect the nave under the two domes; the whole presenting a mass of timber, brick, carriage, iron tubing, plpage, and other building materials, and of machinery of all sorts for the moving and fixing of the latter, and of human hands and human intelligences to apply, combine, and direct the whole. Hitherto, we have seen comparatively little, which perhaps was never before brought together under any circumstances, within the same space, for any single work. To give an idea of the extent of the works, we may state that the ordinary labour going forward; none of that noise and bustle usually attendant upon building operations, prevails in this vast undertaking, which insomuch that we imagined that we were in the presence of some hundred or so of workmen at the utmost; yet we were told that between 2000 and 3000 men are on the ground and by night work at the moment. On the other hand, if we did not remark much of that bustle which is the usual accompaniment of the labour of a building, we saw obvious evidence of the rapid progressive results of its exercise, in connection with a skilful application of machinery, and several portions of the iron framework of the monster building absolutely growing under our eyes, as if by the action of magic.

The following are the dimensions of the dome will be 1070ft. in length of the nave itself under the dome, 800ft. The total length of the nave, 1870ft. The two transepts will be 1000ft. high and 48ft. wide. They will be lighted on both sides by clerestory windows, and will be 72ft. wide, and will be lighted through watertight, which could hardly be the case with glass. The official report informs us further that in the transepts "the effect of light on a colour is somewhat more than is merely glass blushing" by which lamesnt, a building constructed entirely of glass, "would be a very cold and cheerless one to spend a day in without." As to the effect of the clerestory windows we are told—"The nave, which runs east and west, will thus have a north and south light by which to work, and the transepts having any knowledge of art fully understands, but which a public critic not having the benefit of the same knowledge will not understand, the necessity of which fact to this is should in fairness be added that the same sara will also have a north and south light by which to work, such also is understood, and that "any one having any knowledge of art fully understands" the disadvantages of a double or cross light in the case more particularly of a picture. But, if this be the case, such also is understood for pictures, but for industrial products, the question of lighting from the sides or the ends is of little or no importance.

Another circumstance will come into operation affecting the appearance of the new resulting from the gift of the Queen, which is 45ft. larger than of the surrounding roads. "By a happy conception," the official report tells us, "Captain Fowke has used this condition to produce a most striking effect in the nave. Each end, looking north, into the building upon entering, the visitor ascends two steps to a great platform, which extends the whole width of the nave, crosses the transept, and transepts by three noble flights of steps, each 60ft. wide, which lead themselves to most decorative arrangements; or he may ascend this platform by the two flights of steps which are to be constructed in towers of the building." We have already, in our article of March 23, expressed our hope that such proposal in the surface, which is 45ft. above the nave by an ascent followed by a descent, and which at the time we have now to refer to, appears to be completed, will be found, by actually the result of the architect's caprice. It now appears that it is matter of necessity, the result of conditions of site which could have been avoided by the exercise of a little more forethought, and that is to say, the external road, which perhaps could not expensive a proceeding. But, be this as it may, we still however hope that some portions may be completed as a sample of what the exterior architecture may be made by the hands of intelligence, by the study of science applied, as no ornament added to a building can alter its architectural character.

[Our Engraving represents the Nave as it will appear when completed.

To complete our survey of the main features of the building we now proceed to the former of which run parallel with the nave, at about 150ft. distance from it, and abut upon the arcade of the Horticultural Gardens, which, as we have already stated, will be appropriated to the outside of the west wall of the gardens.

THE REFRESHMENT HALLS AND MACHINERY GALLERIES,

The refreshment halls and arcades, as we are told, "will be permanent buildings, of a most picturesque and striking features." They will overlook, with a north aspect, the Gardens of the Horticultural Society, the trees of which will, at the time of the opening of the exhibition, be 1500ft. in length and 30ft. in width. The luxuries, "both light and solid," to be supplied to the visitors, according to the official report—"the visitor will be able to obtain—in the morning, a déjeuner a la fourchette; at luncheon, Neapolitan ices or Bass's ale; at five o'clock tea"—and, in the evening, the choicest of Allsopp's, Guinness's, or Barclay's or Gilmore's stout"! "and bread and cheese; at dinner, English roast and boiled joints, a substantial meal; at supper, cookery from Paris, with samples of wines of all nations" (wine, unlike beer, being an open question).

The only permanent character of this department is explained in the announcement that "at the close of the exhibition they will become the metropolitan refreshment halls (a (?) the metropolis supplying a great public want in this respect," an announcement which we read with enough regret to express. The relative considerations of permanent commercial speculation on the part of the exhibition commissioners, and to some extent of the commissioners of the Horticultural Society, and to we cannot quite see) the purposes with which they were established, and altogether unwarranted by anything contained in their charter of incorporation. But, apart from these considerations, the feelings of the occupants of the costly mansions immediately surrounding the Exhibition building would, in common fairness, claim to be considered before "a great public want" in the dinner, tea, and supper line came to be supplied under their very noses.

The contract for the supply of refreshments during the exhibition has not yet been let, though the tenders have been sent out. We sincerely hope that in a matter so deeply involving the comfort and pecuniary means of the public, and, as a consequence, so materially affecting the ultimate success of the undertaking, the commissioners will well consider what they are doing before they act. With the experience, far from satisfactory, of the general working of the commissariat department at the Hyde Park Exhibition and at the Crystal Palace under various forms of management, down to the present day, we think the commissioners would do well, in the first instance, to take the advice of practical men on this subject, and afterwards employ it as a check upon, or supervise the whole arrangements, examining from time to time the supplies of provisions and observing the mode of service, and prepared at all times to receive and adjudicate promptly upon all complaints on the part of the public. Indeed, upon public grounds and in the true interests of the exhibition we have very great doubts as to the expediency of letting a contract at all in this department, so as to make it the source of income to the commissioners. So far from putting to tender the privilege of making enormous gains out of the public for pitiful and sandwiches, tepid tea, and exhausted bags of coddled fowls, we think it would be more worthy of a great national enterprise like the present to take tenders for a tariff for the supply of various specified consumable as a price, just as provisions are supplied to the Army and Navy, only in detail instead of wholesale. The system would be more expensive in the latter case in so far that all supplies were up to standard both as to quantity and quality. The contractor would have to give a bond, under heavy penalties, for the satisfactory execution of his contract. He would provide all necessary furniture, utensils, &c., and would occupy his premises at a small fixed rent, being liable, like any tenant, to ejectment in case of serious neglect or breach of duty. We throw out the suggestion in all crudeness as one which, if not in the present, in some future exhibition of the kind, may be considered worthy of attention.

The machinery-galleries are the only portions which "are obviously of a temporary character," and which, along the west side of the Horticultural Gardens for about 1000ft. in length by 200ft. in width, in four separate sheds. These galleries are now completed, and are constructed of timber ingeniously contrived for strength, lightness, and cheapness. They are framed upon, without any pillars.

In a corner of one of these galleries the visitor will observe the photographic shed of Messrs. Birmingham and Co., to whom the commissioners have contracted for the supply of photographic properties within the building for the consideration of a certain money payment. We cannot but regret that the services of this most eminent firm—it is certainly contrary to the liberal spirit of the times; and—particularly as the exhibition is to be devoted to objects of virtu, is not one which might like to employ his own photographer—will operate in a coercive manner hardly to be justified.

We have already given the various parts of the building in its progress, and the individual notabilities and other persons engaged in the works. Messrs. Kelk and Lucas, the eminent contractors, in contemplation to take photographs of all the guarantors (some twelve hundred in number) for the formation of a monster album, six copies of which are placed in conspicuous parts of the building during the exhibition, and three of which will afterwards be presented to the Queen, the Commissioners, the Society of Arts, and some other public institution; the remaining three to be retained as the property of the contractors. Arrangements have to be disposed of as they may think proper. A fee of one guinea is proposed which is paid by each guarantor on being enrolled in this honours-list testimonial; but it is hoped, however, will be returned to it in the shape of twenty copies of his own portrait, or those of any of his brethren of the guarantee list who may choose to select.

THE LAYING OUT AND PROGRESS OF THE WORKS.

It is now time that, as a matter of history, we should say something of the means and resources by which these works have been carried so far as they have gone, have been carried out.

The laying out of the ground commenced on the 9th of March. The plan by which the exhibition is to take place was originally supposed to be a true parallelogram, the longer sides of which measured 1152ft., the shorter about 1000ft. But, as the operations went on, it was speedily discovered a divergence of two or three feet between the two longer sides. The operations, in fact, required great accuracy, and were performed by three separate agencies—by Mr. Marshall for the contractors, and for the commissioners by Mr. Wakeford, as well as by Captain Fowke, R.E., and Captain Scott, who sent printed copies of the grand parallelogram, with the foundations to be excavated, to the ground, and a base of concrete put in, on which brick piers, with York stone slabs, were placed to receive the iron columns. The shape for the ground, and the foundations, was that of a true oval.

The official report informs us that "the iron castings are executed at the Stavely Ironworks, Derbyshire, and Mr. Barlow, a director of many ironmasters (this might as well have been omitted) is himself superintending the operations." There are 116 columns of cast iron, 24ft. 6in. in height, 18in. in diameter, connected with a like number of square pilasters; 312 8-in. round columns and 149 12-in. square columns, 24ft. 6in. high; 1000 24ft. 6in. square cheese-plates and 150 10-in. square columns supporting the floors of the picture-galleries; and 92 round columns supporting those of the flat floor-cases. The compiler of the official report, lost in admiration at these stupendous "quantities," pauses to make a calculation, of which he thus sums up the result:—"If all the columns could be set on end, and extend their full extent from the Exhibition building either eastward as far as the London Docks, or westward as far as the Great Western Railway Station at Hammersmith, or as far as the Sydenham Crystal Palace"—from which the most important connection we draw is that, if these several places are to communicate with the Gore House estate. We might add without fear of contradiction that the guarantee fund if spread out in penny pieces would cover the whole of the same space. However, we will not further trifle with these sovereigns and piled up they would reach to a height exactly ten times that of the monster square tower of Babel, as further evidence of the calculations of this sort, which are endless in variety; being astonished by the age and economic respect which we have for the "Queen's English," we have been originally asked "How many cows' tails would reach to the moon?" as suddenly and promptly replied, "One if it was long enough." More to the purpose, we may conclude with the following item of iron by stating that, with the addition of 1185 girders, 11,600ft. of pipe, 10,000ft. of gutter, 1000 tons of rails, 1050 lineal feet, 700 trusses and girders, 1400 shoes, &c., the whole is estimated to weigh nearly 4000 tons.

The general width of the passages, or the distance from centre to centre of adjacent columns is 25ft. (In the Exhibition of 1851, and in the Crystal Palace at Sydenham, every alternate column is 24ft., which is 26ft., or a fraction or multiple of that number.) In the nave the columns are placed in double rows, 15ft. each, and 15ft. in distance other square, and also 15ft. in breadth. The square columns placed a few inches behind the round ones, support the girders on which the flooring rests, and the round columns are those which carry the water from the roof.

The lateral distances of the columns having been measured by means of lengths of well-seasoned deal battens, 15ft. each, the spaces over which their exact centres were determined was very ingenious, the structure of the building depending upon the centres of gravity of the with mathematical accuracy. On the York slabs which rest upon the brick piers, and upon which the columns are placed, a centre line being drilled into the upper surface of each slab, a small hole being drilled into the spot to mark it exactly. It is obvious, however, that something more would be required than merely to place the base of the column on the spot if the column should rest; for in setting up the column it would, of course, be impossible to see when the centre coincided with the centre line of the stone slab. In order to ensure accuracy in this respect three circles were struck in the stone from the given centre, and in the centre of these concentric circles a hole was drilled to receive a set guides in lowering the column into its foundations. In the case of the round columns, squares were laid out instead of circles, and the lines marked in the same manner. In lowering a column, the bottom flange of the base plate came within one of one of these circles or squares, the centre was certain to be over the point from which the squares or circles had been struck, and thus mathematical accuracy was secured. A deviation of a quarter of an inch in two or three columns would derange the whole building, as the girders would not fit into their places in the columns. The heavy pieces of ironwork, weighing from 24 to 40 cwt., were hoisted and moved about with very great facility by means of a steam hoist, worked by a portable engine of 10-horse power. The ropes, which were laid in every direction on the ground, and which passed through blocks and pulleys, were called on a grooved central drum, and in motion by the action of two large-toothed wheels, working into a small pinion, and a column or girder was raised to the required height in two or three minutes. In placing and fixing the ribs of the roof of the nave, an enormous stage which has been constructed will be made use of. This stage, which has timber enough in it for the construction of an ordinary mansion, weighs very nearly 100 tons; it is placed upon twelve wheels, working upon enormous shoot iron axles, and its base covers an area of rather more than 50ft. square. Notwithstanding its enormous weight, the stage may be easily moved by four men, with levers, along the line of rails upon which it is placed. This monster stage will be useful when the men have to paint and finish the roof, the height of which is 100ft. from the floor.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.

VIEW OF THE NAVE

VIEW · OF · THE · NAVE

The monster domes will each be supported by eight cast-iron columns two feet in diameter, perfectly round, and each one will have a bold projection, or ornament (the first was put up on the 26th of August). These pillars will rise to the height of 108 feet, being uniform in diameter throughout. Each of these columns is formed of five separate lengths jointed together by bolts passing through flanges cast on the inside, so that the completed pillar appears when finished quite still not be perceptible, and will have the appearance of an enormous mast, without, however, the tapering end. In order to erect these pillars the parts it was necessary to lower some person down the inside of the column, and as there was not room for a full-grown man in the diameter at the flanges not being more than sixteen inches—the work of putting in the bolts and screwing them was performed by a boy, carrying with him a bullseye lantern to see the work by. In order to keep these columns in their place, a deep collar, or run of iron, will be placed round, and encircle the whole, of the eight columns, and from this the ribs of the dome will spring. So long as this collar remains in position, the bursting of tall columns will be almost an impossibility, while the nave, transept, and brick work of the side fronts will, it is stated, be sufficient heftiness to keep these imposing structures in their places. For many weeks past the workmen have been engaged erecting the enormous framework of wood or scaffolding which will be required for the purpose of putting the arched roofs in their places. It is calculated that 2000 loads, or 100,000 cubic feet of timber will have to be sawn, levelled, and bolted together to support this platform and the ironwork while in progress.

Amongst other arrangements necessary for the conduct and safety of these works another important one has been made, and a new 9-inch main run across the building on the north side of the nave, and from the branches are led at right angles, and fitted with valves, to fixed at distance of not more than 50 yards apart. The main has, as each communication with existing fire-mains, one of them being that which is in the Exhibition-road, and the other that in the Albert-road. Unless, therefore, the two mains should fail—a contingency most remote—there will be no lack of water for anything when required, an adequate supply of water.

In conclusion, we must but fully admit the magnitude and interesting character of this enterprise and the rapidity and exactness with which all the necessary provisions are being carried out, in which, however, we are but one of many instances which have come under our notice of the abundant skill and resources which the country commands, and the spirit and energy which is only brought out when occasion may be imperiously disposable for the purpose. For the building itself, we have no doubt that, in point of utility and convenience of arrangement, it will be found fully adequate to the occasion which calls it into existence. But, to go further—to talk of it as an architectural work, or as one calculated under circumstances, or with the application of the means to such decoration, to become ornamental to the neighbourhood—"a thing of beauty and to be for ever"—would be simply ridiculous. Looking at it in respect merely of quantities of materials and amount of labour bestowed upon it, we can agree with the enthusiastic compiler of the official report in the following speculative observations:—"A slight comparison of the Exhibition buildings with the House of Parliament will show how much greater must be the completion of the former. The Houses of Parliament cover seven acres of ground, and have cost, with the enclosing walls, fees, and a half millions of pound sterling, and they have been in progress twenty-five years. The Exhibition buildings cover (?) twenty-one acres, are to be roofed in twelve weeks, have no enclosing boundary, to an extent of ground occupying sixteen acres, may be secured both for the present and future exhibitions for £400,000, to be raised not by taxation but by voluntary contributions. It is obvious that many years must elapse before we could hope to see their character so as to make ornamental national buildings of them. . . . Like the cathedrals of old, their completion must be a work extending over many years. . . . Comment upon this statement of facts would be quite superfluous, further than to observe that the writer pretends to draw comparisons between things which in some of their essential conditions have any relations between them. Why not let every tub stand on its own bottom?

LITERATURE.

Cavour: A Memoir. By Edward Dicey. Macmillan.

The author of "Rome in 1860" has proved his right to be listened to when he speaks on Italian subjects. He has shown that he brings to the consideration of such questions no little knowledge of Italian politics, whether in their external or more occult and inner relations. He is unquestionably one of those who appreciate at their true importance Italy and its belongings from personal observation, and he has had opportunities of looking into the diplomatic events which have gathered so thickly around that country in the last few years which have been duly availed himself. From him, therefore, a memoir of Cavour demands attention; but he himself says, the time has not yet arrived in which to write fully the life of that statesman. Many long years must yet elapse before either friend or foe can judge fairly of his memory. Time alone can show whether the great work in which Cavour devoted himself, and which at the moment of his premature death he left nearly accomplished, is a permanent one, or but a short and enduring basis. Some years of trial and test must elapse; and then the Italian question has emerged from the atmosphere of passion and prejudice, by which it is at present surrounded, into that of sober judgment, before the full power of some impartial thinker and observer to write the history of Cavour which will be as nearly as possible identical with that of the revolution which has taken place in Italy. The strange incidents which are associated with his name are so immediately connected with the sympathies or antipathies of the case in which he was engaged, that a perfect judicial decision is difficult, if not unattainable. Cavour himself was utterly regardless of the view taken of his motives and acts; and though, doubtless, he had in his power ample means of vindicating his principles and his conduct from any criticism which may have been exercised upon them, he was content to leave the issue to his life work in the way which seemed best adapted for the attainment of his ends; and, indeed, another great but misrepresented statesman left his character to the verdict of posterity. Admitting the difficulties which stand in the way of a complete record of the man and his times, there yet seems to be reasons why an outline of his life and acts such as this before us should not be presented to the world. According to Mr. Dicey's own profession it is a memoir, not a life, or a complete and a history. It has been his object to describe the character and policy of Cavour as he judged them from his personal knowledge, and by the public acts. He has had sources of private information of which he has availed himself, but at the same time his experience has taught him to place little confidence in secondhand reports of Cavour's confidential opinions, and in all cases he has preferred public to private information. When it is said that, while evidently an admirer of Cavour, the author is quite conscious of his faults, it will probably be admitted that his qualifications for the task he has undertaken are tolerably complete.

The chapters on the birth, lineage, and training of Cavour are sufficiently informatory. Many of us may know little of those circumstances, and those who are acquainted with them will not be sorry to find them reproduced in an agreeable and concise shape. It is probably not generally known that the real name of the Cavour family is Benso—a race amongst the oldest of the noble houses of Piedmont. The tradition goes that the founder of the race originally came from Saxon Germany. This much is certain, that as early as 1150 there appears in the annals of the house of Savoy the name of Hubert Benso, Viscount of Baldissière, and Lord of Santena, the present seat of the Cavours, where, by his own wish, the late Count was buried. During the middle ages the Benso seem to have been chiefly connected with the small and obscure republic of Chieri, near which their property was situated. In the wars of the Guelphs and Ghibellines they sided with the Imperialist faction; and when Henry VII. of Luxembourg entered Italy an Article Benso was sent as envoy from the free city of Chieri to the Emperor of Germany. When the Dukes of Savoy extended their dominions to the Sub-Alpine provinces, the names of the Benso appear among the grandees of the Ducal Court and its neighbouring States. Godfredo Benso, Marquis of Pavia, defended the fortress of Medea, during one of the armies of Louis XIII. of France. Cesare Benso was about the same time Bishop of Asti. In 1598 Ascanio Benso was Minister to the Duke of Parma; while Antonio Benso, holding the rank of Colonel in the armies of the Venetian Republic, distinguished himself at the siege of Candia. In the wars of Italy, at the end the 17th and especially century Michel Benso, Knight of the order of the Annunziata, was left dead on the rank at the Bonnita, leading his little force in charge of Cavour, situated in the province of Pignerola. In Italy titles are but rarely inherited, and the Bensos from the first Baron of Cavour known and spoken of commonly as Cavours, though all the members of the family bore, and still bear, the name of Benso di Cavour. In 1787 Filippo Antonio Benso, Baron of Cavour, became lord of the title was the Marquis Michele Guiseppe, the father of the present famous Count Cavour. From Cavours was conveyed into the French department of the Hautes Alpes, under the Government of the Empire. Gustavo, husband of the beautiful Pauline Bonaparte, the Marquis di Cavour held the office of Grand Chamberlain to the Palace. In fact, the whole Cavour family of that day were closely allied with the Bonapartes. Michelina, who was sister to the old Geneva family of the Sclions, was Lady in Waiting to the Princess Eugenie Hortense, the Marquis Alexandre Ducheyron Commander of Tonnerre, was Maid of Honour at the Imperial Court of France; while another, Mme. d'Auvergne, held the same office in the Court of Queen Hortense. Another member of the family, Mme. de Cavour, at the height of the Napoleonic fortunes, when the victories of Essling and Wagram gave the Emperor the command of Austria's crown, was the marriage of the Emperor with the Grand Duchess Marie Louise of Austria, that Mme. de Cavour, the second at Court, was the first who was ushered into the world, beneath the special protection of the Napoleons. He was baptised on August 10, 1810, under the name of Camillo Benso, the Emperor, taking the Princess Pauline and Prince Camillo Borghese, acted as his godfather, while the Princess Julius Adelaide, wife of the Grand Duke of the Baden, and mother afterwards another Napoleon, as Emperor of France, kept sending letters to Mme. Cavour to learn tidings of the great Italian statesman, who was lying in the old house in the Rue Neuve, and of whom he has been first presented to the world by the hands of the sister of Napoleon I.

The childhood and first youth of Cavour present nothing remarkable. At an early age he was sent to the Academy of Turin, and when ten years old, was appointed page to Charles Albert, then Prince Regent of Savoy-Carignan during the temporary retirement of Victor Emmanuel I. from the cares of State. Here he remained, as Cavour were locked coldly on account of their former connection with the Napoleon dynasty, till the young prince left for the army as a courier about him, was sent back to the academy as unfit for the business of life. Here he was at the time of which we first hear of him. He entered the army at an earlier age than was accordant with the regulations, but soldiering was as little to his taste as academy life, and he soon resigned his commission. It is probable even then observing that middle course in political opinion which characterised him to the last, and which enabled him to keep on friendly with the revolutionary party in Italy, he became the object of special surveillance by the Austrian police. Be this as it may, Cavour himself resided a long time in France and a good deal in Switzerland. His visits to England were never of long duration, and Mr. Dicey is of opinion that, as a consequence, he never fully appreciated the views derived from reading than personal observation. He was a great English traveller, but he was not a great Englishman. He never indulged in intercourse with intelligent and well-informed Englishmen as by preference. He had sympathies always with the French mind, and things especially noteworthy—first, the writer's extraordinary partiality for English institutions, and secondly, his somewhat hasty and unreasonable censure of the manner in which he carries out all principles to their practical rather than to their logical results. I call his partiality to the English constitution because it was so alien to the temperament of those amongst whom he lived. It was not, too, that abstract partiality to England which we find in Alfieri, and which the Revolutionaries of the day. What he valued in England, more than all our forms and kind of government, was our natural conservatism and our practice—of which we have abstract. Casual observers accused Cavour of inconsistency because, with all his admiration of England, he was the author of the second Italian War, and the Treaty of Villafranca, but, whether right or wrong, he was also right in considering himself sympathetic always with the people, and not called the inexorable logic of facts—with deers and not with theories." We have quoted these sentences because we think that they contain the key to the whole of Cavour's career as an Italian statesman. Statements in view, those who wish to form an estimate of his character will find in the work before us ample materials for understanding of the policy of his career.

During his residence abroad, which were directed mainly to countries where he found freedom and progress, though supposed to be an able traveller, he studied deeply the character, the literature, and the government of the land he visited. In 1835 he visited Paris, sociously ambitious, and from the point of view, and with the objects to which he afterwards devoted his life. Returning to Turin, he entered life, from one little incident alone. His request was granted, and for nearly two years he lived on this out of the way property, managing it himself, until the last days of 1842, when he was called out the rental. It will, perhaps, shock some of Cavour's admirers when they learn that he had a passion for play, which at one period seriously injured his property. With that moderation which was always characteristic of him, instead of leaving off gambling and refusing to touch a card, he resolved to play only for small stakes, as he had done before. Till within the last few years, when his occupations became overpowering, he was a constant frequenter of the Turin Casino, and was reckoned the first whist-player in the "Circle." On one of his later visits to Paris, during the Exhibition year, he refused to play with M. de Rothschild at 1000-franc points, and rose winner of 150,000 francs. His biographer is of opinion that when he gave up gambling he gave up whist also, because his one passion in the world was for public life. It should be added that he fought one duel, but it was on purely public grounds, and was occasioned by a remark of Count Solaro, the leader of the Clerical party in the Chamber of Deputies, setting at defiance the sanctity of the Constitutionalists. It was amongst them, as supporters of the Ministry then headed by Balbo, that Cavour placed himself, and the great object which he proposed to himself was to maintain the Constitution at all risks, and that it was preserved intact was in no small measure due to his efforts. From this time his course, though slow and chequered, was still upward; and at length, in October, 1852, he became Premier of Piedmont, which he held with but short intervals for the next nine years, until at last he culminated First Minister of the Kingdom of Italy.

We have dwelt with something of minuteness on the earlier part of the life of Cavour for the obvious reason that it is less known than the history of his comparatively short term of power. From the policy which led to the final attainment of his early dreams of ambition we do not propose to enter. It is, we are painfully conscious, the perusal of that portion of Mr. Dicey's work which refers to that policy. The arguments by which the writer pursues his course in drawing in sustenance of France are cogent, if not unanswerable. But on that assistance all Cavour's hopes depended is proved by the statement that just before the commencement of the war in 1859, when he was relying on the help of France, the publication in the Austrian official journals of the fact that Sardinia should disband these armaments until a congress met, causing him to doubt the sincerity of the Imperial Government. Mr. Dicey's book is, however, not in effect on him—his alarm and dejection were so extreme that his friends had to watch him during the day for fear of his mind giving way. It is in this work laid down with such force that a collision between Austria and Sardinia was inevitable, and Cavour's experience of 1848 placed him in the scale of bringing in a French army to work out the freedom of Italy. Much is brought forward to show that Cavour's original idea was confined to a kingdom of Upper Italy, composed of Piedmont and the Lombardo provinces. Was this also failed, through the Treaty of Villafranca, he modified his scheme by the annexation of Central Italy, and when that was accomplished he would personally have preferred pausing in the work of Italian Sanction. Lord Derby and Lord John Russell in the House of Commons this year tends to confirm this statement, knowing, as we do, that his information must have been obtained from Sir Augustus Paget, who was much in the Premier's confidence. It was evident that if once the new Italian kingdom was finally constituted Venice and Rome would fall to it, and that sooner or later the great northern State would rule virtually, if not nominally, the whole peninsula. But then came the Sicilian insurrection and Garibaldi's movement into Naples—circumstances which caused Cavour to declare that "this was not one of the most difficult but the most difficult position in which he had ever been placed." It was impossible for Sardinia to take part in the Sicilian insurrection, still less to assist Naples, for that would make war without the aid of France, and in an expedition designed to overthrow the Papal temporal destiny the aid of France was not forthcoming. On the other hand it was impossible for the Minister to put down volunteer expeditions in aid of the Sicilian insurgents. The Government which had come to power on the cry that it was the Lombard sword to join in thwarting the efforts of the Southern Italians to free themselves from the worse than Austrian tyranny of Naples. Those events and the struggle down the Garibaldian expedition by force, measures must have been adopted inconsistent with constitutional liberty, or else power must have been allowed to pass entirely into the hands of the pure democratic party. In such a position the only way of escaping from the embarrassments and of treading a safe course was to allow others to do what the Government would not do, to let others profit by the prestige of the Sicilian success, to encourage the Red Shirts in the hope that they would prevail a failure; to permit, in fact, a new series of events to be developed without the guidance of the Government, and to watch for a favourable opportunity for interposing with effect in the interests of the country and of settled institutions. This was the policy which Cavour worked out with consummate skill—with a skill which we all know. In the following opinion of the writer of this most interesting book we fully concur:

As to Cavour himself, I know not that those who loved and those who honoured him have much cause to regret his too early death. He died in the meridian of his life, in the full maturity of his mental and moral faculties. He had lived just long enough, and not too long. Since this, he had found his life's work, and had accomplished it. His fame was then the salvation of his country, and then he departed in peace, with a death that was calm and edifying.

But for Italy, the loss of the strong will, and the wise brain and noble heart, of the tried and practised statesman, was a loss indeed. It is true that he left behind him the best and most enduring monument that a statesman can leave behind him—the work that he had begun to perfect for not many days, would again be > and in the end,

> Because he was himself, his body fail.

But there is room still to hope.

It carries us much, from Turin, as I have done, during the few weeks that followed Cavour's death, how, when the shock passed away, the first thought both of governments and people was to follow the path Cavour had pointed out to them. The measures which he had proposed, the policy he had pursued, the men he had selected, seemed to all parties the wisest and safest. It was a long time to come yet the road Cavour will direct the destinies of Italy. There is no room to doubt that I know well from this. A great statesman may do much for his own country, but there must be an innate greatness in a people who can show any such manifestation as the Italians have shown of late for the memory of Camillo Benso di Cavour.

"SUSPENSE." BY SIR EDWIN LANDSEER.

This picture, admirable as a specimen of dog painting—a branch of art in which Sir E. Landseer has no rival amongst contemporary painters—is also remarkable for the ingenious manner in which it is handled. We have upon the imaginative, not with the integral quiet simplicity, to suggest a tragic incident. A noble bloodhound is represented watching at a closed door for the return of his master, a knight of the olden time, who, after a bloody encounter with some dire foe, has been hastily removed, wounded or dead, from the spot. From the upper part of the vast gauntlets on the table, the torn eagle-plume lying on the floor, and, further still, the stains of fresh blood which disfigure the surface of the latter, are plainly indicated the quality of the absent hero and the nature of the adventure in which he has been engaged, and the strong and terror of which all too well he is aware. The picture was exhibited at the British Institution in 1854. Unfortunately, the picture of the painting has cracked in parts, through the use of asphaltum. It forms part of the Sheepshanks Collection exhibited at the South Kensington Museum.

HERRING FISHERY AT YARMOUTH.

WAITING FOR THE FISH.

This is a picturesque and characteristic illustration of an incident in a busy fishing port, and although it is not a very quick suggestive of seafaring life that are so frequently presented as fitting subjects for the pencil of the artist, it is of no less interest to Yarmouth, in Norfolk; the time chosen is that of early morning—a time which, without its being one of actual repose, is the sufficient contrastive to that of the more exciting activity of the latter portion of the day. It is represented as occurring at the side of the old jetty, looking in the direction of the harbour's mouth, and a antiquarian view of the return of the herring-boats from the deep-sea fishery, which at this season of the year is confined to the great coast of the North Sea, whilst the spring fishery being more exclusively devoted to supplying, for immediate consumption, the white or fresh herrings to the London and provincial markets.

In the foreground, seated on a "reserve horse," is a fisherman's boy lazily scanning the horizon for a glimpse of the expected vessels, undisturbed and absently indifferent to the indications of more active life which are to be observed around him—a second boy, also represented in by an old fisherman who, seated at the base of one of the supports of the jetty, is quietly enjoying his morning's "whiff," and who seems to be the connecting link between the men and the apparently beauty goodwill in the faces of these his, for the time being, harder-working confrères on his left—the bearers of the bags of bay nail to the beach, a pile of which is seen stacked in the background; coaching himself with thoughts of his prospective gains in which, we have every reason to believe, will be the productive results of a successful year's fishery. There are also signs of yet earlier arrivals indicated by the earing away of the remainder of the produce of some few smaller vessels, such as cobles and others, seen at anchor a short distance off, busily engaged in taking in sail for another voyage. These are vessels chiefly adapted for fishing nearer home, and seldom stay during the whole season, as they cannot venture so far out as the larger craft. In the upper part of the background is shown the commencement of the Jetty-road, leading to the Quay, flanked on the one side by the Bath Hotel and Esplanade, and on the other by the Barking Smack, a noted house-of-call of the fishermen, in the rear of the premises of which is a lofty "look-out," a striking object, by visitors well known and remembered.

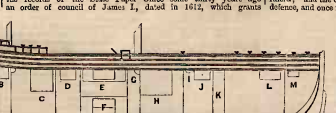
Yarmouth from the earliest times has always been held of the first importance as the one ancient and renowned mart for herrings; and we find the inhabitants have long been possessed of many privileges, and a degree of protection afforded to the fishermen not accorded to those of other ports, the fishermen of Norfolk and Suffolk, from the martial value of the fishers of those ports, being accounted from serving in the Navy, a great concession, when we consider that at one time the British fisheries were almost the only nursery for seamen; and we read that in the year 1671 King Charles II. was so impressed with the commercial advantages to be derived from these fisheries that when on a visit to Yarmouth in that year, accompanied by the Duke of York and a numerous retinue, the Corporation presented his Majesty with four golden herrings and a chain of £250 value. The King, highly delighted with his reception, in return knighted three gentlemen of the town. The money embarked by the King in the fisheries was, however, from his pressing necessities, afterwards withdrawn by him, the merchants who joined with him also doing the same. Great encouragement has been given at various times by the Government to the different fisheries, and in 1750 an Act was passed granting a charter to a corporation called the Society of the Free British Fishery, having for its object the extension of the British fisheries by the creation of a system of bounties, which system, from the great abuse attending it, was ultimately brought to an end in 1830, and other and better means adopted.

Yarmouth has another end, from its intimate association with the trade carried on, a more than minor claim upon our consideration. "Yarmouth (we quote an old gazetteer) is a place noted for its red herrings, which are loosely called Yarmouth capons; as also for its couches, which are nothing more than sledges drawn about with one horse on a flat next the sea. The streets, of which there are few that are wide, are chiefly very narrow, and just wide enough for their little carriages to pass through." This description, however, is but little calculated to give the votary of health or pleasure an idea of its real use, inasmuch as a reference to the Engraving will show that it is not precisely the kind of "coach" a gentlemanly would covet to drive his family out for an airing in.

THE YARMOUTH TROLL, OR BEACH-CART.

THE YARMOUTH TROLL, OR BEACH-CART.

This "coach," as it explained in its Illustration, is a low beach-cart, used in the conveyance of the fish from the seaside: it is properly called a trail, and is used for the purpose of its construction to the transference of the streets aforesaid, which, consisting of a series of rows or alleys running parallel from east to west, have common junction with the quay: they are in number somewhere of 100, and are not of sufficient width to admit of the passage of the usual kind of cart. These trolls will carry a great load, the dimensions being great adopted in the height to which they will sometimes pack the buckets. They are still used in preference to other modes of conveyance, the common mode with the carry through these alleys by the road from the beach being the most direct, an additional advantage attached to the shafts to drag them, when loaded, through the sands to the roadway.



A, the cabin; B, bread and salt room; C, net-room, screen foot; D, beer and water spoutlet, two barrels' length; E, kits—cards; F, salt and bread room; G, main mast; H, main bulkhead, three barrels' length; I, capstan; J, for bass-ropes; K, a hand's length; L, the main-coach; M, the cut-coach.

PLAN OF THE HERRING-BUSS.

THE HERRING BUSS.

In regard to the deep-sea fishery, we give our readers some idea of the plan of operations carried on at that period. This fishery being pursued at a distance from home, the vessels employed are necessarily large and of great tonnage, and, as they are absent for a longer period than usual—the time of absence extending from three to six days—many of the persons ordinarily employed till the fish are landed, are of necessity pursued on shipboard, involving greater encroachment in the description of vessels employed, which, on the average, are from 50 to 80 tons burden, cutter-built: they are technically termed busses, and carry a complement of fifteen men, according to the size of the boat. They lie low in the water, and have sufficient room in the hold for the stowage of salt, nets, barrels, and provisions; the sides are furnished with rollers and bedboards, to facilitate the drawing in of the nets, which vary in number from 180 to 200, costing between £300 and £400. They have also six ropes, each 120 fathoms in length, the average weight of each being from 4 cwt. to 4½ cwt., and the total value from £50 to £60. These nets are generally found to be renewed nearly every fourth year, owing to the ravages of the dogfish, the greatest enemy the fishermen have to contend with, for their prey upon the herrings when inclosed within the nets, their sharp dorsal fins cutting through the meshes of the nets, and so injuring the nets themselves. The extent of the ravages committed by these fish may be gathered by the following paragraph from one of the weekly papers of the past month. A correspondent of the Northern Express, writing from Fraserburgh, says:—"You Caithness people are complaining of lots of dogfish, but greatly doubt if you have such as we have this season. What do you say to a shot of 152 score, or upwards of 3000, dogs? That was caught on Thursday from the boat Anne Mary, of Cairnbarrh, Alexander May skipper, who sold his take at 8½d. per score, realising £5 7s. 8d. for one morning's catch of dogs!" In some cases the mischief done has been so great that last for the enormous draft of dogs the quantity of herrings brought ashore would have been doubled. The herring-lines is a two-masted vessel. We annex a plan by which its construction will be still further understood. It is that of a herringbuss of 75 tons burden, embracing a stowage of 160 lasts, or 50,000, herrings. The whole charge of a buss of this burden, with all its appurtenances complete, would be about £1000, the number of hands to man it as situated.

The fishing is never carried on but in the night, and the darkest nights, accompanied by a slight breeze, are the most propitious. A man or two are left on board the buss to take charge of her, and the rest go out in the boats, each manned with four hands, for the purpose of setting the nets. Each boat has two trains of nets, 220 or 250 yards long, and from 11 to 12 yards deep. Both trains are tied together by the back rope, and so set windward and the other to leeward. The boats are fastened at each end, and allowed to drift to leeward with the nets. Every half-hour or oftener the men endeavour to ascertain if there are any herrings in the net. This they do by following along the line of the back rope, and mixing here and there a piece of the netting. By this means they not only find when they are getting good fishing-ground, but learn whether the herrings swim high or low, and they raise or sink the nets accordingly, by shortening or lengthening the hoops by which the nets are kept up. They have a certain code of signals amongst themselves by which they act in the ordering of casting and drawing in their nets. At daylight the fishermen take their engines to their respective busses. When the herrings swim great numbers their labours are comparatively light. The nets are set in the evening, a small anchor being affixed to each end of the train: in this case the trains are not joined together, but are set separately and near the buss, on board of which the men sleep. Early in the evening the nets are thrown over the side of the boat, which is steered away under easy sail, and the success or failure of the evening's cast ascertained at daylight. The fish caught are then opened, gutted, salted, and packed into barrels in layers of salt. About one-third of a ton is used to a last. Bay salt is the salt used, as, by dissolving slowly, it furnishes a gradual supply of brine.

Of the class of people engaged in this laborious trade—one not wholly devoid of peril to themselves, and who are mainly dependent on the success of the year's fishery for their support in winter—it is a source of satisfaction to know that they are uniformly a steady race of men. In this port they have a church of their own, St. John's (the beachmen's), in which their attendance is in general very good, considering that many of the fishermen are oftimes necessarily absent.

THE HON. ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON.

The Engraving on the next page represents a group of the officers and men of the Hon. Artillery Company of London in the uniform of the present day. We propose to add to it a slight sketch of the history of the regiment, commencing with the period from which its existence can be with certainty traced—viz., the year 1610. The military prowess of the citizens of London is no doubt associated with much earlier days, and an impression has existed that this regiment is identical with the Fraternity or Guild of St. George, to whom, in the twenty-ninth year of his reign, King Henry VIII. granted a charter, constituting them "Overseers of the Science of Artillery—that ye so wyt, for long bowes, cross bowes, and hand gonnes," and to whom a lease of the Old Artillery Garden in Moorfields was granted. But it appears from the old records of the company that it was revived in 1610. The very term revived implies non-existence at that time, and the ressuscitus of the late Duke of Sussex eliminated from among the records of the State Paper Office some thirty years ago an order of council of James I., dated in 1612, which grants that the Master Gunner, a few years afterwards, was fain to present a petition to King James I., by which, after quaintly complaining that the new-comers (having obtained permission to exercise in the garden) had not only built an armoury there, but were endeavouring to turn out his Majesty's gunners and disinherit the King, the petitioner prayed that his Majesty would expel the intruders. It seems, however, that the new company must have found favour in the eyes of Majesty, for the petition did not succeed, and the disgraced gunners were relegated to the ingenious expedient of buying out their invaders, who then, in 1657, finally evacuated the old Artillery Garden, and permanently established themselves in their present quarters, to which they had in a great measure removed some years earlier.

Throughout the disturbed times which intervened between their revival and their removal to their present head-quarters the regiment formed a portion of the London Levies, who played so conspicuous a part in the transactions of the times, and are celebrated by Clarendon in his "History of the Rebellion" for their undaunted steadiness, which, for the first time, checked and turned the previously invincible cavalry of Prince Rupert.

But, though the regiment certainly was on the side of the Commonwealth, there are still inscribed in the ancient vellum book of the company (a relic of considerable antiquarian value) the autograph signatures, as members of the company, of Prince Rupert himself, Prince Charles, James Duke of York, Charles Elector Palatine, and many other celebrities attached to the Royal cause.

After the Restoration, and from that time until the present, the company has continued to receive an unabrogated succession of marks of Royal favour. Each Monarch successively, by warrants under the Royal sign manual, confirmed to them their ancient privileges; and either the King himself or a Prince of the Blood has always been Captain-General. From the time of King William III. inclusive the warrants conferring those honours are preserved among the company's archives, and they form an interesting antiquarian collection.

The present Captain-General and Colonel is his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, who was pleased to accept the appointment at the demise of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, and who has always taken the liveliest interest in the corps.

The Artillery Company, being thus by constant favour the oldest volunteer body in England, and having the advantage of a permanent establishment, has continued to maintain its efficiency during many years through a species even of obloquy and ridicule, until the period ensured when a new alarm of possible invasion again exemplified the wisdom of the expressive maxim, "In pace caute fulcra," and the country once more awoke to the necessity of self-defence, and once more to the patriotism and zeal of the body of the volunteer regiments of England.

Until the year 1841 the company possessed the right of electing its own officers. In that year a new warrant reserved to her Majesty the appointment of the field officers and adjutant; and in 1849 a further warrant also reserved to her Majesty the appointment of all the commissioned officers. This latter reservation was expressed in the warrant to be intended "as a mark of her Royal favour, and of our interest in the welfare of our said company, and of the efficiency of the corps composed." It could hardly become the company to discuss, though they deprived them of a valued privilege of election. Yet there were unwilling symptoms of dissatisfaction at the change, and for a time the company was not a little affected by the withdrawal of their confidence.

The uniform of the battalion was by the late King William IV. assimilated to that of the Guards, with the single difference that the ornamental gold cord with the Guards, was silver with this regiment. The horse and foot artillery wear blue and silver, with brown leather belts, and sable busbies.

The head-quarters or artillery-ground is in the City-road, closely adjoining to Finsbury-square. They consist of a large and convenient armoury-house (which is however undergoing extensive alterations to adapt it to the convenience of the increased numbers) and of a parade-ground and enclosure of about seven acres.

It is not possible within the limits of this article to give more than a general outline of the origin and present state of the regiment. The incidents of an existence of 250 years' duration, however condensed, would occupy a larger portion of our columns than we can devote to them. And we will only now proceed briefly to describe the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Colville of Culross, successor to the late Right Hon. Henry Fitzroy, commanded by Major Jamieson and Snell, the Instructor of Musketry (Captain Field), and Captain and Adjutant Potts, the regiment, which consists of a remarkably fine body of young men, fully sustains the ancient character of that in all the accounts of reviews and combined volunteer movements the Hon. Artillery Company are invariably remarked upon as conspicuous for their military appearance and precision.

It is a common error to call the regiment the "Royal" Artillery Company—the title is "The Honourable" not "Royal." This title has been borne by the company immemorially; and, upon a doubt being raised respecting it in the office of the Secretary at War, it was officially confirmed by her Majesty by memorandum gazetted in May, 1860.

MONUMENT TO THE ROYAL MARINES ERECTED IN THE CEMETERY, HONG-KONG, CHINA, 1860.

MONUMENT TO THE ROYAL MARINES AT HONG-KONG.

This handsome memorial of service has been placed in the cemetery at Hong-Kong. The design is by R. S. Rawlings, Esq., of the Royal Engineer Department, and it is executed in massive granite, the inscription-slabs only being of white marble. Its dimensions are 10ft. square at the base and 20ft. 6in. in height.

The front inscription is as follows:—"In memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, buglers, and privates of the Brigade of Royal Marines (Light Infantry); and the non-commissioned officers, buglers, and gunners of the battery of Royal Marine Artillery, who fell in the execution of their duty in China during the years 1857, 1858, 1859, and 1860. Erected by their comrades." The slab on the righthand side gives the names of three officers and 48 men killed in action; whilst that on the left shows the total loss from all causes to have been 257; and the numbers wounded were 27 officers, 16 sergeants, 20 corporals, four buglers, and 155 gunners and privates. The rear slab records the services of the brigade, from the taking of Canton, in Dec., 1857, with the various expeditions in the neighbourhood, the Taku Forts in 1859, the defence of Shanghai, and the brilliant campaign in the north, which ended in the Treaty of Pekin on Oct. 24, 1860.

SERGEANT AND PRIVATE IN HEAVY MARCHING ORDER. QUARTERMASTER BALLIN. MUSKETRY INSTRUCTOR. CAPTAIN FIELD. LIEUT.-COLONEL LORD COVILLE. CAPT. FOX. CAPT. AND ADJT. POTTS. ENSIGN NORTON. MAJOR ROBINSON. SURGEON SKEY. LIEUT. DAWES, ARTILLERY DIVISION. PRIVATE. HORSE ARTILLERY, PRIVATE, UNDRESS:

OFFICERS AND PRIVATES OF THE HON. ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1111.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE REVENUE.

THERE are customs and associations in this country connected with the quarter of the year which terminates on Michaelmas Day which give to it a kind of specialty; and it so chances that this year there are circumstances which render the consideration of the returns of the national revenue more interesting than usual. More than one fiscal change comes into operation in the present month which may hereafter cause a strict comparison with the returns of the present quarter. The results of great financial experiments, which can scarcely ever be tried again on so grand a scale as that which has characterised the last two efforts of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, must become apparent ere long. At last we have arrived at a state of things in this country in which duties are levied for purposes of revenue only, and prohibition and protection have become entirely obsolete as facts. In this month the new French tariff comes into action; and by the end of the next three months some judgment will have been formed as to its influence on the trade between the two countries. Necessarily somewhat behind us in the race of free trade, it is something for the professors of that doctrine to be able to congratulate both France and England that prohibition at least has also ceased in the former land. Comparatively moderate duties are now imposed on all the most important articles of British manufacture. It is understood that our manufacturers feel no little confidence in the prospects of a growing trade in such articles as cotton goods, hosiery, pottery, cutlery, articles in leather, ships and boats, glass wares, carriages and so on; while considerable capital on both sides is said to be embarked, numerous agencies appointed, and large orders given. It is not undeserving of notice that this new, and we trust large, outlet for our commercial enterprises should have been created at a moment when the civil war in America threatens to diminish, if it has not actually and seriously diminished, our trade with that country. It is, in fact, another illustration of that system of compensation with which free trade is so full—of that creative power which is inherent in its very essence, and which is for ever supplying accidental deficiencies and neutralising bad effects arising from artificial or unexpected causes. The connection between the principles which regulate commerce and the revenue of this country are sufficiently obvious to justify an allusion to the inauguration of a new trading state of things between us and our neighbours in an examination of the condition of our national ledger for the quarter and the year.

PROGRESS OF THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION: THE MACHINERY DEPARTMENT.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 395.

These considerations gain additional interest from the fact that there is a singular community of bewailing between the representatives of Protection in France and England respectively. Predictions of ruin and annihilation of industry among our neighbours and allies are curiously coincident with cries of exultation among a small retrospective section of political economists in this country, who see in the falling off of our revenue this year what they conceive to be the legitimate effects of the adoption of the principles of free trade as nearly as possible in their integrity. In the results of Mr. Gladstone's financial scheme of last Session these shortsighted patriots see reason to chuckle over the prospect of coming difficulty and distress in the community to which they belong. But we may believe the day for the beginning of a reaction which is to prove that all which has been done by our greatest statesmen and financiers in the last ten years is wrong and injurious. A brief examination of the items of revenue as they appear in the last returns will show on what grounds this mixture of triumph and lamentation is based. On the quarter just expired there is a deficiency amounting to £2,056,934 as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1861. For this at any rate, the Customs duties are not responsible, for they show an increase of £34,000. If this proves anything, it demonstrates that the results of the Commercial Treaty with France, which until now has only partially come into operation, are not such as the desponding prophets declared would come to pass when we reduced or abolished our import duties; it speaks well for the future when the expansion of trade, arising from increased freedom of commerce, comes into full operation. The Excise exhibits a decrease of £868,000; but it must be remembered that in the corresponding quarter of last year the malt credit was made an extra receipt, and that when the abolition of the paper duty has been still in suspense, and the import nominally levied, every one knows that the manufacture of that article has been greatly diminished, and in many cases temporarily suspended, and this may account in some degree for the falling off. Indeed, in most other respects, in the face of the bad harvest of last year, the yield from the Excise has somewhat increased. In Stamps there is a decrease of about £40,000, and in what are called Taxes there is a nominal variation; the former has been caused by the reduction of the duty on advertisements, which may be classed as purely casual, and somewhat on the same footing as business transactions which are common at this time of the year. Then comes the Income Tax, in which there is a diminution for the quarter of £1,290,000, clearly deducible from three causes—namely, the reduction from 10d. to 9d. in the pound; the circumstance that last year two quarterly payments were levied in the September quarter; and lastly because, owing to the late period of the Session at which the tax was agreed to the collection has been postponed beyond the usual time. The Post Office account shows an increase amounting to £70,000. The decrease on the whole year is, however, only to be reckoned at £1,003,817. Surely this is no very alarming diminution, even if it proceeded from insensible causes, and could not be fully accounted for as the expected and predetermined effect of the operations of the Finance Minister.

The alarmists will have more than this to fright them still further from their propriety in the two quarters which have yet to pass before the close of the financial year in April next. The income tax will probably produce half a million less, and the repeal of the duty on paper will no doubt be accountable for another loss of about seven hundred thousand pounds; and this, added to the existing deficit, will make up a deficiency, as compared with 1861, of about £2,900,000. If we remember rightly, this is exactly the calculation which entered into the Budget of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. This deficiency was stated as, if not inevitable, at least to be expected and reckoned upon, and provided for by a reduction in expenditure to a similar amount, which was stated in detail. Beyond this, there were on the occasion of the production of the financial statement, and in all the discussions on the Budget, indications of a preconceived notion in Mr. Gladstone's mind that the watchword of any future Minister must be abatement in the national disbursement. The temper of the House of Commons in dealing with the Estimates as a whole, and in criticism of the items, manifested a strong sympathy in this respect with the executive guardian of the public purse. Many indications, slight in themselves but significant enough, point to a policy on the part of the Government founded on the principle of not only making a stand against further increase in our public expenditure, but of efforts to diminish and to curtail the existing high figures on the debit side of the balance-sheet of the country. Looking back on the history of the last Session of Parliament, it is not easy to see how any Government can come before the Legislature next year without developing some positive policy. The experiment of tinkering and peddling was tried last year with very doubtful success, and with an accession of petty worry and wearisome trouble to the Ministry which its chiefs will hardly be so sanguine and injudicious as to venture to encounter again. If they, in the exercise of their prudence and forethought, and assuming that responsibility which it is their duty to undertake, will present themselves before the public, with reduction of national expenditure as the keystone of their policy, they will at once shift their responsibility on to the shoulders of Parliament; and if that assembly should prove to be as crotchety and unmanageable, as variable and unstable, as it was last year, depend upon it that an appeal from them to public opinion upon such a question will tend to replace the existing body by one which will carry out those principles of government and legislation which must ere long prevail in the affairs of this country. It is the truest of all maxims to say that the most rigid economists of the public purse does not desire to see efficiency sacrificed to mere abstract saving. No one wants to save money by the demolition of any service which contributes to the safety, the high position, or, using the words in their ecclesiastical and conventional sense, the pride of the people of England. The preservation of all these is abundantly consistent with an expenditure of much less than seventy millions; and it remains to be seen whether the events of next winter will not furnish a necessity beyond appeal or control for some attempt at lightening taxation.

At any rate, there are, we imagine, but few who believe that a national bankruptcy is impending because a single year presents what may be an exceptional, and certainly is a moderate, falling off in our revenue. A long succession of prosperous years have induced some feeling of timidity, just that which makes a man who has a good deal to lose fear a robbery much more than he who has little or nothing to be abstracted from him. It may be that the favourable times which we have enjoyed are not to be followed by the era of troubles; but, if so, it will at least test the solidity of the foundations on which our national weal is based, and prove whether they are calculated to enable us equally to profit by the sunshine of prosperity and to bear the storms of adversity. Half the value of systems is tried when they come in turn. The politico-economic system which we in England have established in the last twenty years was, surely, never intended by its exponents and exeentants to be a mere fair-weather expedient. If, as we believe, it possesses the solidity and soundness which its adherents claim to possess give it credit, it will prove equal to either fortune, and as competent to avert misfortunes which are incidental to all human things as it has undoubtedly already proved productive of blessings and success.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor arrived at St. Cloud on Tuesday, and immediately presided at a Cabinet Council.

The French Commercial Treaty came into operation on Monday. Peace Congress, last in many articles our merchants are taking advantage of it.

On Sunday the iron-plated frigate Formidable was launched at Toulon on Tuesday.

Notwithstanding the assertion of the Constitutionnel that the inquiries into the affairs of the editors of journals was a mistake, several provincial editors have been called on to answer for the articles which have appeared in their papers on the Roman questions, and the Siècle and the Temps indignantly protest against the inquisition.

The Bishop of Poitiers is again in trouble. In a late sermon, alluding to the persecutions endured by St. Peter, he pointed out as a remarkable coincidence that it was not the first Herod, or the second, but "Herod the Third," who had cast the apostle into prison. For this innocuous proceedings have been commenced against the fiery and sarcastic Prelate.

SPAIN.

The Queen returned to Madrid on Wednesday.

The Moorish Envoy has arrived at Madrid, accompanied by a suite of thirty persons.

The meeting of the Cortes is said to be fixed for the 30th inst.

PORTUGAL.

It is stated that a marriage has been arranged between the King and the Princess of Hohenzollern.

The anniversary of the death of Don Pedro IV. was kept in Lisbon with the usual solemnities, the King, as is customary, attending the High Mass in the Church of St. Vincent de Fora.

The vintage has been gathered in many parts of Portugal, and the yield of grapes has proved much greater than was expected.

Mr. Henderson, who for many years filled the post of translator to the British Legation at Lisbon, has died of consumption.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The committee on religious affairs of the Chamber of Deputies of Austria has resolved to declare the political equality of all citizens, whatever their religion, and to abolish the right to confiscate, on the ground of religion, real property, and to be admitted to public functions.

The Austrian Government has concluded a convention with the Prussian Government which regulates the question of the use of the Austrian and Prussian stations on travellers' passports.

There has been a small disturbance at Pesth. On Thursday week the Custom-house officers having seized some smuggled tobacco, the informer, a woman, was furiously pursued by the people. The gendarmes and military, who rescued the woman, were received with hisses and derisive cries, the people also shouting "Eljen Garibaldi!" The military made use of their arms, and several people were wounded. Numerous arrests have been made in consequence.

Other intelligence from the Hungarian capital appears to indicate a return by Austria to reactionary measures. On Wednesday week, as reported in this Journal last week, an Imperial ordinance was published prohibiting the meeting of the Hungarian Diet and Assembly of the Comitats, which was to take place on Monday last, and threatening to employ force should the prohibition be disregarded. A telegram dated Monday states that—

During yesterday and to-day large crowds have assembled before the building where the meeting of the Assembly of the Comitat was to be held, and numerous patrols of troops are occupied in preventing any disturbance. The Government, with this object in view, has applied to the Archbishop of Pesth for the loan of the building. The people are greatly excited, but order has not been disturbed. The magistrate of the Comitat of Pesth has tendered his resignation. On hearing the fact of the prohibition, the Hungarian Diet assembled to accompany his house. They were followed by military patrols. When the deputation reached the Palace of the Chargeomte, the Archduke delivered a speech, to which the Chargeomte replied. The crowds then voluntarily dispersed. Another deputation waited on Count Forgach, to inquire whether the sittings of the Assembly of the Comitat are held was accepted last night by the military, and the members were permitted from assembling by force. All the functionaries in the Comitat have tendered their resignation.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

The Emperor left Peterhoff, in the Gulf of Finland, on the 9th ult., on board the Tigre. He arrived at Theodosia on the morning of the 16th. Having landed, mass in the cathedral, he, Majesty inspected the Military Hospital, the Museum, and the Arsenal, and left for Kertch, where he remained the same evening. He inspected the Government establishments there during the morning of the 18th, and re-embarked at noon for Taman, whence his Majesty makes a tour through part of the Caucasus.

According to the latest news from Warsaw, the Polish Bishops had addressed a memorandum to the Governor of Poland, demanding the re-establishment of the former rights of the Catholic Church in that country. The Governor, however, refused to accept it, upon which the Bishops met and were addressed by the Archbishop, who, in his speech, said:—"Let us always stand by the people and defend the cause of the fatherland, and not forget that we are Poles."

Bills have been posted up and privately circulated in Warsaw containing an address to the Poles, Lithuanians, and Ruthenians, calling upon them to send deputations from all the towns and places of the former kingdom of Poland, as constituted in the year 1772, to a solemn meeting to be held on the 10th of October next at Horhila, near Lublin.

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

THE Canadian steamer North Briton brings New York journals to the 19th and telegrams to the 21st inst.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS.

The only fighting of importance has taken place in Western Missouri, in a town called Lexington, on the north bank of the Missouri River. General Price, of the States' rights party, commenced the attack on the Federal intrenchments at Lexington, defended by Colonel Mulligan's command, on the 16th. On the night of the 18th all day, and ended in the repulse of the assailants. The loss of the "rebels" is set down by the Northerners at 600. On the 17th and 18th the attack was renewed. On the last occasion the "rebels" were scattered by a bayonet charge of the Irish Brigade. The attack was to be renewed on the following day. Meanwhile the Federals had been reinforced by 4000 men, and other reinforcements were rapidly approaching. In the same State, at Blue Mills Landing, 600 Confederates have been routed by 1500 Federals.

The hitherto neutral State of Kentucky is now occupied by both Federal and Confederate troops, but no engagement had yet taken place between them. The Kentucky Legislature, by a vote of 71 to 24, has requested the Confederates to withdraw from the soil of the State; but the Confederate General replies that the possession of the pass in the Cumberland mountains is necessary for the safety of his position, and that withdraw while the Federal troops are permitted to remain.

It is announced that preparations for two important movements against the Southern coast are going rapidly forward, so that the expeditions will be sent to sea within a very few days. One of them on the land forces will be commanded by General Butler, and in the other by General Sherman. The number of troops employed in the two expeditions will be 25,000 men, with naval forces of proportionate strength. The particular points to be attacked are kept secret.

THE BLOCKADE.

Four British vessels have been captured coming into Hatteras Inlet laden with stores from Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The Captain-General of Cuba has issued a proclamation declaring that vessels sailing under the Confederate flag and engaged in legitimate trade will be admitted into Cuban ports on equal terms with all other vessels.

The British Government will be allowed to communicate with their Consuls in seceded ports by means of ships of war.

THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

General Beauregard's report of the engagement of July 18 (preceding that of Bull Run) has been published. It is dated July 21, and is compared with the insignificant proportions of the skirmish. He admits that he was "opportunely informed of the determination of the enemy to advance on Manassas," the terms the battle as "artillery duel;" states the losses on his side at 15 killed and 73 wounded, and that he took 25 prisoners, 17 stand of arms, a large quantity of accoutrements and blankets, and 150 hats. The delay in the preparation of the report is owing to his commencing administrative duties.

The cotton and tobacco crops have been much damaged by heavy rains. The new crop of cotton would reach, it was estimated, 3,000,000 bales. In Louisiana the crop is a failure.

The New Orleans banks have suspended cash payments.

General John A. Dix succeeds the learned Secretary, relative of the Father of his Country, and the proprietor of the Mount Vernon estate, whose killed by a Federal mutineer, Jere Clemens, in Western Virginia.

GENERAL FREMONT'S PROCLAMATION RESCINDED.

The most important political news of the week under review is the rescinding of the above emancipation edition of General Fremont's proclamation. The following is President Lincoln is as follows:—

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.

MAJOR-General John C. Fremont.

SIR,—Yours of the 8th in answer to mine of the 2nd inst., has been just received. Assuming that you have now had time and opportunity to consider the subject of your position than I could at the distance, on seeing your proclamation of Aug. 30, I cannot but renew the general substance of the said objectionable clause, however, in relation to the confiscation of property and the liberation of slaves, appears to be fully justifiable in the proclamation. In the Act of Congress passed the 6th of last August upon the same subject, and hence I wrote you expressing my wish that you would modify your proclamation accordingly. Your answer, just received, expresses the preference on your part that I should make the modification, and enjoins that it be done at once. It is, therefore, ordered that the said clause of said proclamation be so modified, held and construed as to conform with, and not to transcend the provisions on the same subject contained in the Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes," approved Aug. 6, 1861," and that said Act be published at length with this order.

Your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN.

Several Republican papers in the North comment severely on this act of Mr. Lincoln; but it is the opinion of public journalists seem to approve it in the wisdom of the course taken. Mr. Lincoln was influenced in this direction by a desire to retain his hold on the loyal population in the adhering slaveholding States.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENTS.

Three startling catastrophes are reported. On the night of the 17th ult. a railroad bridge, on the line of the Erie and Ohio, on the Ohio and Mississippi Railway, in Southern Indiana, gave way under a train of cars, precipitating a portion of the 11th Illinois Volunteers, and precipitated nearly the whole of the cars into the bed of the creek. Almost 50 soldiers were killed and 100 wounded. It is feared that Lieutenant-Colonel Bowman, who was tampered with the bridge, a large proportion of the inhabitants of Southern Indiana being emigrants from the South.

A steam-boat explosion occurred on the Sacramento River, California, on the 23rd ult., when the Jim Bell was blown up, killing about fifteen of the passengers certain, and probably many more. Twelve were scalded, some of whom had since died.

At the Dominion Powder Works, Hoboken, several bullet-girls were burnt to death on the 14th. As the girls were dressing for a ballet they stepped into the powder-room with "The Evening Star" of them, named Orle, while in the act of getting down her dress, was set on fire by the flame of a gas jet. One of her sisters endeavoured to extinguish the flames, but in the effort her own clothes were ignited. Catching up a bucket of water, she rushed to the door to save others. A third sister ran to the rescue with a blanket, but in the struggle they crushed into an adjoining room filled with bullet-girls, whose gauze also caught fire. In their terror some of them leaped from the windows into the street. Many of them were more or less severely burnt, and the result was that six of them died within a few hours after the occurrence, and four more were not expected to survive. All the principal theatres of Philadelphia had given benefits for the families of the victims. The Girls were Englishwomen.

COMMISSIONERS TO THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

The President has appointed the following gentlemen to represent the interests of the American exhibitors in the World's Fair of 1862:—namely, W. H. Seward, Secretary of State; Caleb Smith, Secretary of the Interior; Edward Everett, of Massachusetts; Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institution; Robert J. Walker, of New York; J. M. Coleman, of Pennsylvania; J. H. Kilpatrick, of Ohio; J. R. Partridge, of Maryland; B. F. Isaacs, of New York; Richard Wallach, of Virginia; Washington; W. W. Seaton, of Washington; and D. C. G. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Census Bureau.

FINANCE.

The national loan is being taken at the rate of 700,000 dollars per diem in New York, and in smaller amounts in Philadelphia, Boston, Troy, and Pittsburg.

Exchange on England has risen to 109, a rate higher than it has ruled since the commencement of the revolution. The Baltimore banks are forwarding their Southern deposits to England for fear of confiscation.

The Treasury demand-notes are being eagerly taken up in the West supplying to the people, for the first time since the national bank was suppressed, a really national currency.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The New Hampshire Gazette, a journal 105 years of age, has suspended in consequence of the hard times.

The Russian Prince Salm-Salm and Major J. F. De Courcey, a British officer who held a commission in the Turkish Contingent during the Crimean War, have accepted commissions in the Federal army. Colonel Rankin, M.P., of Canada, has offered to raise a regiment of lancers for the same cause in Canada. The offer has been accepted.

The regiment is nominally to be deemed a Michigan regiment.

Prince Napoleon had returned from his Western and Canadian tour to New York.

THE CORONATION OF THE KING OF PRUSSIA.

The Prussian Moniteur publishes a Royal proclamation announcing that the King will remove his Court to Königsberg on the 14th inst., and that his coronation will take place on the 18th, being the day on which the Order of the Black Eagle was instituted.

On the 15th, the anniversary of the accession; grand banquet given by the King.

On the 16th, the anniversary of the coronation; grand banquet given by the King.

On the 17th, Dinner in the city by the Grand Chamberlain and the Minister of Foreign Affairs; the evening reception given by their Majesties.

On the 18th, the coronation; dinner given by the diplomatic corps; dinner at Rauch.

On the 19th, Dinner at the Palace given by their Majesties.

On the following days Court fêtes amongst the Princes of the Royal family; and on the 25th Ball at the Palace.

The King has invited the members of the Berlin Representative Chamber to attend the approaching coronation ceremonies at Königsberg. The Chamber has declined to go to the expense of a special deputation, but it is said that several high military dignities will be conferred.

Lord Clarendon will represent her Majesty as Ambassador Extraordinary at the coronation.

On Thursday se'nnight a terrible accident occurred on the Northern Railway, near the Paris station. Five passengers were killed, and several others severely injured.

The monument raised to the memory of the late King Ernest of Hanover was inaugurated on the 22nd ult., in presence of the King, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the Duke Cumberland.

Letters from Perth speak of harsh measures just taken by the Vienna Government with respect to several emigrants of Austrian Lombardy, who have settled in Perth, under whose authority they have been ordered to abandon that city up and down the Danube, and who have been ordered to obtain leave to enter Hungary.

Letters from Perth mention that the Hungarian ladies now wear as ornaments black bracelets called "Souvenirs of Arad." The names of the seven Hungarian Generals executed at Arad have been added to the list of "Hungary knights not to be dealt."

The vessel frigate Gloire returned to Toulon on Sunday afternoon from Rio, having on board the Maritime Prefect of Toulon, General Frédéric, and Admiral Bichot, of the Brazilian Navy. The Gloire has left behind her the usual manœuvres performed in a naval action were practised, and her gunners have been found extremely skilful in the use of their guns. The second officer in command of the Gloire was promoted on his arrival at Toulon to the command of the steam-vessel Prony.

The new port of Formosa, which was opened to trade by the Treaty of Tien-Tsin, has now been dignified by a consular establishment. Mr. Robert Swinhoe, interpreter to the army, has been appointed Consul to Tai-Wan Foo to take charge. It will be an independent vice-consulate, Mr. Consul Parkes residing with his family at Canton, though her Majesty's Consul at Foo-Chow, that he may be apprised of what is going on, in case any disturbance should be in progress at Formosa, under whose authority the island is placed.—London and China Telegraph.

The Tasmanian, which arrived at Southampton a few days ago with the West India mail, experienced a terrific hurricane on the 15th ult., soon after she left St. Thomas. The commander, Inman, says that one of the tempest that he was in the vortex of a cyclone, immediately put his ship about. The wind subsided in an instant, and continued dead calm for half an hour afterwards. As the Tasmanian got out of the vortex the barometer gradually rose, and the wind came from the storm quarter, precisely as it left it. The captain described a circle, the diameter of which was one hundred miles as nearly as could be calculated.

A LION LOOSE.—On Wednesday week at Hamburg a lion which was being conveyed in a wooden cage from a menagerie to a vessel, contrived to get his head to break loose and get out of his temporary prison. The keeper, who was close by, fled, one of the bystanders threw a rope round the carriage. The driver, who was upon one of the two others, and still in blank ignorance of the fight. In a moment the lion's paws were entangled in the rope, who happened to be just behind came up, and with great coolness fastened the rope round the lion's head. At a time the lion was thus secured, the head and neck of the destroyer, and, with the help of half-a-dozen of the bolder lookers on, the animal was dragged to the ship in the waggon and secured.

THE OUTRAGE ON THE BRITISH EMBASSY IN JAPAN.—The attack upon the mansion of the British Embassy at Jeddo, which was lately made by the insurgents, is one of the most daring acts of the opposition party in Japan—those nobles who have recently been forced to open their ports and admit, while they would fain keep out, the foreigner. Jeddo is under the sway of the Tycoon, and the escape of Mr. Alcock and his colleagues from the murderous rage of these irregularly armed bands, numbering several thousands, is one of the most wonderful escapes we've heard. The people were hatched by a faction notoriously jealous of our influence, and who have created a civil war in the country hostile to them. The Tycoon's troops have been defeated in several of these encounters, and stating that he should consult them with regard to the course which should be pursued in the present crisis. Our Envoy, and that in Japan, who was in the house of the British Legation at the time of the attack, has forwarded to us a most interesting account in connection with the outrage, which, together with a description of the scene of the affray, will appear in our Number for next week.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Sir George Grey left for New Zealand on the 13th of August. A disturbance among the Zulu Kaffirs about the commencement of the present year threatened to destroy the peace of the frontier war with the natives. The Kafirs had planned an inroad on a large cattle kraal in order to obtain the young Zulu chief who had taken refuge there. Timely information, however, reached the colonial authorities, and the troops at Cape Town were at once sent up. This movement alarmed the natives, who now say that an inroad was never intended. The volunteer corps did not proceed to the Kafir country. Sir George Grey also met the Cape Parliament on the 22nd of August. The proceedings of the Cape Parliament were opened by the Governor, who addressed both Legislative Councils. He stated generally that best feelings existed between the colonists and natives, and proved expressing the desire of the colony to make some contributions towards its defence. An Act has been passed for the construction of a railway between Cape Town and the frontier, to be subsidized by the Government. The proposals made by Sir George Grey to the Cape and Natal Parliament before his departure for New Zealand constitute as follows:—"New Zealand can give us little social attention but much political help. I look back with regret at some things done, at much that has been left undone, and at many grievous errors of those through whom, from distant, seem growing into life. But amidst these mingled feelings of sorrow and of hope, which must ever live in my mind, there will ever survive a grateful remembrance of the sympathies and confidence which have so many and such valuable proofs been given by this Parliament and the inhabitants of South Africa to the efforts I have made to conduct successfully the Queen's service, and to give effect to her Majesty's gracious desire to promote the happiness and welfare of her subjects, and of all races to whom the influence of her benevolent sway reaches. I now, in her Majesty's name, propose this Parliament to the Legislature of the Cape of Good Hope to Saturday, the 16th day of November next, and it is hereby prorogued accordingly. The Colonial Government being unable to render pecuniary assistance, the local establishment for the Great Exhibition have proposed.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

AMERICA.—New York, Sept. 24.—Lexington, Missouri, has capitulated to the Confederate forces. The Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres have been promoted officers in the Federal army. The steamers City of New York and Jura have arrived out. The Secessionists have been interrupted in Cuba.

The following intelligence has been received direct from the Southern States. The number of troops under General Beauregard amounted to 1,000,000 bales on the 6th of September. On that day, the day President Davis was reported to have died, he was at his office at Richmond attending to official business. The report is confirmed that the authorities of Spain in Cuba have issued an order to have the same protection extended to vessels sailing under the Confederate flag that is enjoyed by the flags of other countries. An Richmond the assistant-clerk of the enemy at New Orleans, Mr. Hollis, had arrived. General Beauregard is closely hemmed in between the lines of Beauregard and Johnson and the Potomac. No importance whatever was attached to the visit of Hunter and Memminger to Richmond, as it was merely to discuss public matters freely. The cotton-picking season had fully commenced, and the planters were busily engaged in getting their crops to the seaboard, there to remain at the disposal of Government until the raising of the blockade.

SPAIN.—Madrid, Oct. 2.—The Correspondancia Autografa of to-day says:—"We are authorized to deny the statement that the preparations for the Spanish expedition to Mexico have been suspended, and to declare positively that they are being actively carried on. The expedition of Spain will leave very shortly, without prejudice to the co-operation of the squadrons of England and France, which are to proceed to Vera Cruz and England. A Council of Ministers was held to-day. Various questions relating to colonial affairs formed the subject of a protracted discussion."

COUNTRY NEWS.

The herring fishery is being actively and successfully prosecuted off the eastern and western coasts.

The Queen has approved of Mr. John S. Prettyman as Consul at Glasgow for the United States of America.

An explosion of firedamp took place in the South Moutyn pit, Pontypool, Monmouthshire, by which ten men and a boy were killed.

The county of Somerset is bestirring itself to erect a statue of their philosopher, Locke, as a companion to the one recently erected to their poet, Blake.

Sir Bridges Powell Henniker, Bart., has consented to preside at the annual dinner of the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, which is to be held on Friday, the 18th inst., at Castle Hedingham.

Lord Palmerston has consented to distribute the certificates to the successful candidates in the Oxford local examination, at a meeting which is to be held at the Carfax Assembly Room, Oxford, on the 11th inst.

A handsome testimonial, consisting of a silver tea and coffee service, has been subscribed, and will shortly be erected near Mount Pottinger, in the county of Down, to the memory of Ensign Lewis Wm. Scarlett, R.N.

The Mayor and the School of Science at Liverpool are to be opened about the 10th inst. Earl Granville, the Lord President of the Council, Lord Wrottesley, Sir Charles Lyell, and many other scientific and other noblemen and gentlemen are expected.

A most destructive fire has occurred through the town of Tralee on Saturday se'nnight, doing vast damage to property. In some streets the inhabitants were compelled to remove from the upper apartments of their houses, the flames having reached the second stories.

Liverpool has been infested with a gang of burglars, who carried on their depredations on a most systematic plan. Several daring robberies have been committed, the victims being mostly pawnbrokers and jewellers, and the property stolen is of a most valuable description.

The memorial which has been erected at Stratford to commemorate the public services and munificence of Mr. Shakspeare was publicly inaugurated on Tuesday. It consists, very appropriately, of a set of drinking-fountains and an obelisk. We intend to give Engravings of the memorial next week.

The prizes and certificates awarded to the successful candidates at the Oxford examinations for the Middle Classes, will be distributed on Monday afternoon, in the theatre of the Royal Institutions in that city. There was a numerous meeting of the Council, and Visitors, at the Institution, last night, the Bishop of Manchester presided.

A diving-bell was tried on Tuesday week, broke from the vessel to which it was moored in it. One of them escaped, but the other was drawn in eighty feet of water, with only eighteen feet of air in it. It was supposed that the other two left was raised, and the man, alive but insensible, was restored after some hours' treatment by friends.

Sir Benjamin Hamilton has been addressing some of the farmers of Norfolk on subsoils in relation to agriculture. The occasion was a meeting of the Norfolk Agricultural Association, at which Lord Hastings presided. Sir Roderick especially alluded to the value of those phosphatic substances which are now so valuable, and which, he said, will be of immense fertilising as any guano in the market.

A new gang of convicts has been seen off the coast of the Underfall Isle of Wight. On Wednesday week one was noticed at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, in the water, pushing before him a piece of wood, and swimming above the surface, and apparently enjoying the warmth and coloness of the sea. The convict was then about a quarter of a mile from the shore.

Sir Henry Leigh, Esq., the venerable Lord Lieutenant of Monmouthshire, has been poisoned by his valet giving him a lotion in mistake for his medicine. The valet has been arrested. The mistake was speedily discovered, and every effort was made to counteract the effects of the poison. Sir Henry was very severely injured, and was at one time thought to be in the greatest agony. He was aged eighty-five. The valet has been many years in Sir Leigh's service, and was much trusted by the old gentleman.

A banquet was given on Wednesday se'nnight to the Marquis of Downshire, in the Townhall, Banbridge, by the inhabitants of that town and neighbourhood, as a mark of their high appreciation of his Lordship's character as a kind and liberal landlord. Nearly 300 persons were present to do honour to the occasion. The Townhall was handsomely decorated for the limited accomodation. The Townhall was filled in the most gratifying manner.

The Earl of Strathmore, Lord Lieutenant of Suffolk, has been requested by the Lord Chancellor to act as Chairman of the Commission which was made in the Council Chamber at the Townhall, Ipswich, on Thursday, for the purpose of inquiring into the charges against the Borough Magistrates, of which the noble Earl has been president for nearly thirty years. Lord Cranworth, Lord Justice Knight Bruce, and Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood, of which he is head, and the proceedings passed off in a gratifying manner.

Capesthorne Hall, Cheshire, the residence of Mr. Davenport, was discovered to be on fire between two and three o'clock on Wednesday morning. The fire originated in the roof, and spread with such rapidity that, together with the valuable books, paintings, statuary, and plate were destroyed, the whole of the magnificent pile, with the exception of the wings of eight members, fell a prey to the flames. The loss of the house, and its contents, and a fine collection of game, is said to be enormous, and for only a small portion of which is the property insured.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The National Gallery closed last Saturday. It is not expected to be re-opened before the first week in November.

Ward, late cashier to Coster and Co., of Aldermanbury, has been sentenced to six years' penal servitude for embezzlement.

Bartholomew Wittmayer, valet to the Austrian Ambassador, committed suicide on Sunday forenoon by throwing himself from one of the top windows of Chandos House, Cavendish-square, on the spot. He had been for some time desponding and subject to hallucinations.

The report of the committee on the decay of the stone of the Houses of Parliament has just been issued. They believe that a very large portion of the stone in the palace at Westminster is in very durable condition, and they entertain a confident expectation that a remedy will soon be found to arrest or control the decay where it has unfortunately begun to appear.

The Metropolitan Board of Works have granted their approval, on the application of Mr. C. W. Eyre, for the formation of eight new streets around and upon the Foundling Estate. The names of these streets are to be Hitchen-street, Palmerston-street, Hewlett-street, Bidlest-street, Leonard-street, Baldwin-street, Wicklow-street, and Guilford-street.

The new Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Messrs. Cockerell and Waterlow, were sworn into office on Monday. Mr. Cockerell was presented the Rev. Thomas Birney, of the Weigh House Chapel, to be his Chaplain for the year of his shrievalty, and Mr. Waterlow appointed Mr. Sweetland Dudley Baker, Mr. Twentyman has appointed as his Chaplain the Rev. Albert Arthur, M.A., Curate of All Souls' Church, St. John's-wood, and Mr. Gorman will act as his Under-Sheriff.

An exhibition of dogs was opened on Tuesday at the Holborn Horse Repository. It comprises about 200 animals, divided into 4 classes, including sporting dogs of all descriptions, spaniels, mastiffs, bloodhounds, bulldogs, terriers, and miscellaneous dogs, such as those of the toy-shop breeds. The bloodhounds, in particular, are greatly admired, and a pair of them were sold for 50 guineas, the property of Lord Derby at previous purchasers.

The births of 1848 children (925 boys and 923 girls) were registered in London last week. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1851-60 the average number was 1,617. The deaths registered in the same week was 1198; which, as compared with the returns of four previous weeks, exhibits but very slight variations. The number of deaths in the corresponding weeks of ten previous years 1851-60, corrected for increase of population, is 1,229. His correspondent died in the week, the death of whom was a widow, ninety-eight years of age; the first at Fulham.

Another of our ancient institutions has been abolished. The "scrapers-boy" at Westminster Abbey, who, instituted so far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, ceased to exist on Saturday last, in pursuance of an Act of Queen Victoria. By the provisions of the Act it will be now no longer the duty of the boy to scrape the mud from the shoes of the worshippers. The Act likewise confers upon the virgers and vestry clerk of the Collegiate Church the power to remove any person who shall cause or permit any dog to enter or remain in the church, or shall in any way obstruct the execution of the said office, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s." The scraper-boy's occupation was gone for ever.

The Lord Mayor presided on Wednesday over an influential meeting in the Mansion House, which was called for the purpose of considering a society that has been some years in existence, engaged in giving instruction in the principles of gymnastic exercises. The meeting was held, under the title of the City of London College. It was stated that 6000 pounds have been raised for the purpose of erecting a building suitable for the intention, and that, in the new form of a college, the institution will be carried on. The Lord Mayor, Prince Consort Lodge, presided, and it became the patron, and the Bishop of London the president, of the college. Resolutions in favour of the scheme were carried, and subscriptions and donations amounting to upwards of £4,000 were announced.

THE TREASURES OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—An important improvement, which has long been under consideration, consisting of a rearrangement and consolidation of the catalogues of the library of the British Museum, is, it is said, to be commenced forthwith. The extent of the catalogue—or, rather, catalogues, in five or six volumes. The Grenville Catalogue, in seven volumes; the old interleaved catalogue, in eighty-two volumes; the Catalogue of Additions, in thirty-five; the Manuscript Catalogue, in three hundred volumes. A staff of clerks has been appointed to commence the work of consolidation, and to throw into one alphabet, alphabetically arranged. The transcript to be made at once in triplicate, and to be placed in the Trustees' room for their inspection.

THE METROPOLITAN MEDICAL SCHOOLS.—On Tuesday the medical schools in connection with the principal metropolitan hospitals were opened for the year 1861-62. Considerable interest, owing to the sweeping changes which have been made by the Act of Parliament, was manifested by the students in attending in large numbers the introductories on which students will hereafter be admitted to the medical profession. Introductory addresses were delivered at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, by Dr. Albert Farquer, the Dean; at Guy's, by Dr. Wilks, Esq., F.R.C.P.; at St. Thomas's, by Dr. Barnes; at St. Mary's, by Dr. Ballard, Esq., B.A.; at King's College, by Dr. Frankland; at Charing-cross, by Dr. Hillier; at the London, by Dr. Sieveking; at the University College, by Dr. Quain; at Westminster, by Mr. Wordsworth; at St. Mary's, Paddington, by Spencer Smith, Esq., F.R.C.S.; at St. George's, by Dr. Hutchinson; at the Middlesex, by Dr. Brewer; at the Hunterian Museum, by Dr. Acland; at the Royal Free Hospital, by Professor Bentley, F.L.S.

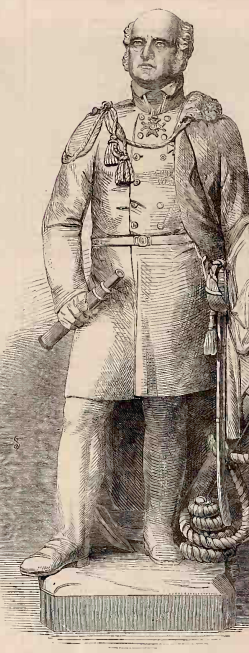
THE ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.—A common hall of the Corporation of London was held at Guildhall on Monday to elect the Lord Mayor for the ensuing year. The proceedings excited more than usual interest as it was known that Mr. Alderman Lusk and Mr. Alderman Ellis were candidates. Mr. John Jones moved Mr Lordship's nomination mainly on the ground that the Lord Mayor had resided at Guildhall, he said, had added to the dignity of the present Government "to destroy the privileges of the City. The nomination of Sir Peter Laurie was seconded by Alderman Sidney, who said he was sure that Sir Peter would have been warmly cheered when Mr. Sheriff Cockerell took a similar course. Mr. Alderman Lusk, on being nominated, thanked the meeting, and declaring that it deemed he would not serve. The show of hands was declared by the Sheriffs to be in favour of Mr. Lusk, and a poll was demanded on behalf of the Lord Mayor. The polling closed on Wednesday. The numbers at the close of the poll, which terminated at 4 o'clock on that day 860, out of about 1600 who had polled. In the course of the evening Mr. Alderman Lusk addressed his constituents from the hustings. He was right, he said, to go to the poll, because it was only in that way that the majority was in favour of his Lordship's re-election, Sir Henry declined to put the livery or his Lordship's friends to further trouble.

CIVIC BANQUET AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—Last Saturday was celebrated with more than usual festivity at the Mansion House. The banquet at Michaelmas, entertained the members of the Court of Aldermen and the new Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Messrs. Cockerell and Alderman Hadley, who served in the long gallery. At the annual festival the Lord Mayor for the time being has the privilege of inviting to this occasion one of the clergymen, the livery not having then shown a successor to the present chief magistrate. The clergymen invited on this occasion were the Rev. Dr. Curteis, Preb. Sibbey, Canon Rees, Allen, and Cosnett; the curates Sinclair, Cowell, Hunt, Hill, Bowden, Bennett, Hodgson, Hawkins, Hamilton, and Twentyman; Mr. Commissioner Harvey, Mr. Commissioner Kelly, Mr. Weatherley, the Town Clerk, the Chamberlain of the City, architect Denis Unwin, Mr. and Mrs. William Humphrey, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Bailey, Deputy and Under Sheriff Hurly, Deputy and Under Sheriff Bailey, Deputy and Under Sheriff Farrer, Mr. Under-Sheriff Eagleton, and many others. The usual loyal and civic toasts were given from the chair, and Mr. Cockerell proposed and drank of the latter, "The health of the Lady Mayoress," which was received with the usual demonstrations of respect. The company separated about ten o'clock.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.—A meeting of this institution was held on Thursday week at Hobson, John-street, Adelphi—Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, G.C.B., in the chair. Rewards to the amount of £19 were voted to the crews of the institution's life-boats stationed at Holyhead, Gowker, and Plymouth; schooner Prince of Wales, of Penzance; schooner Success, brig Agnes, of Plymouth; schooner Prince, of Peterhead; barque Lucy, of Sunderland; and the crew of a London pilot-boat. Some interesting facts were also voted to the crews of the institution's life-boats stationed at Deal, Ramsgate, Broadstairs, and Margate, in rescuing the crew, consisting of eleven men, of the Danish barque Hertha, which, on the night of the 15th ult., was driven on the Goodwin Sands. The vessel struck on the sand, and the crew, finding that the life-boats could not approach her, took to the rigging, and remained there for nearly twenty hours, when the life-boats succeeded in getting alongside, and rescued them. The vessel was afterwards got off by the steam-tug Boxer, of Sunderland, and put into Deal, for repairing four men from the life-boat Charles Dibdin, stationed at Ramsgate, were drowned in a heavy gale of wind on the night of the 15th ult. Various other rewards were voted to the crews of the institution's life-boats stationed at Deal and Margate, and to the crew of the life-boat Charles Dibdin, stationed at Ramsgate, for rescuing from the wreck of the Danish barque Hertha, which was driven on the Goodwin Sands in a heavy gale of wind on the night of the 15th ult. Various other rewards were voted to the crews of the institution's life-boats stationed at Deal and Margate, and to the crew of the life-boat Charles Dibdin, stationed at Ramsgate, for rescuing from the wreck of the Danish barque Hertha, which was driven on the Goodwin Sands in a heavy gale of wind on the night of the 15th ult. The vessel struck on the sand, and the crew, finding that the life-boats could not approach her, took to the rigging, and remained there for nearly twenty hours, when the life-boats succeeded in getting alongside, and rescued them. The vessel was afterwards got off by the steam-tug Boxer, of Sunderland, and put into Deal, for repairing four men from the life-boat Charles Dibdin, stationed at Ramsgate, were drowned

STATUE OF SIR J. FRANKLIN.

THE colossal statue of Sir John Franklin of which we give an Engraving is to be placed on a granite pedestal in front of the Townhall at Spilsby, in Lincolnshire, the native place of Sir John Franklin. It is the result of a public subscription set on foot by the inhabitants of that town, who wished to do honour to their illustrious townsman. The statue has been executed by Mr. G. Bacon, the sculptor of the Mendelssohn statue, which was inaugurated with much ceremony at the festival given at the Crystal Palace last year—from a sketch made by him under the direction of Lady Franklin and many of Sir John's relatives and personal friends; and has been pronounced by Mrs. Booth (Sir John's niece), Sir Roderick Murchison, Mr. John Barrow, and many others, to be a most faithful likeness. The statue was cast in bronze on Wednesday by Mr. Rogers, who was many years the foreman at the foundry of Messrs. Robinson and Cottam, and who introduced the casting of large statues in one piece.



STATUE OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN, TO BE ERECTED AT SPILSBY, LINCOLNSHIRE.

YORKTOWN, VIRGINIA.

ONE of the most important strongholds in Virginia is the peninsula between the York and James Rivers, on which are Williamsburg, the ancient capital of Virginia; Jamestown, where was the first English settlement; and Yorktown—these three localities being still in the possession of the Virginians, and strongly fortified; while the extremity of the peninsula is occupied by the Federalists, together with the fortress (Monroe) at the point. Independently of its importance in the present war, the old city of Yorktown is full of interest both to the antiquarian and lover of the picturesque.

Originally Virginia was divided into only eight counties, of which York was one, Yorktown having been made the capital in 1705. The counties have been gradually added to and subdivided subsequently, in proportion to the increase of population and extension of the settlements west of the mountains, there now being upwards of one hundred and fifty.

During the early history of Virginia, Yorktown was a place of much commercial importance, and there are again anticipations of a magnificent future for the dilapidated and desolated village. For many years it has been only an unimportant fishing town, having remained in its original condition and retained its old associations: only two buildings have been erected since the revolutionary war. The old church, built 170 years ago, was burned down in 1814, a "frame" edifice having since replaced it. The churchyard, like those of several other early settlements, bears quite an English appearance. Old family tombstones, with broad slabs and carved inscriptions, lie broken and half buried in weeds and rubbish.

The Swan Tavern, still standing, and now crowded with soldiers, is said to be the oldest in Virginia; but the building exciting the largest share of interest is the old Nelson Mansion (from which our View was taken), the family residence of the Nelsons, who emigrated from Cumberland, occupied a high standing in the county of York, and were the "ancestors of all the Nelsons" in Virginia. During the revolutionary war, when this place was occupied by the English, and bombarded by the allied armies of France and America, Lord Cornwallis made the Nelson House his headquarters until one day, whilst his Lordship was at dinner, his favourite servant in attendance was shot by a cannon-ball which entered through the wall. After this unwelcome visitor Cornwallis removed his quarters to a less prominent abode.

Two or three months ago the quiet and unoffending citizens of Yorktown were pursuing their peaceful avocations when a couple of war-steamers appeared off the shore, and several cannon balls came flying through the air, without, however, doing any other injury than to the nerves of the women and children, who forthwith "packed up" and departed for safer localities, while the men took immediate precautions to defend the place, which is now one vast military encampment. There is a long line of camps on the ridge of the high river banks, another in an open space of the woods beyond, and a third is down on the shore; behind you, around you, which ever way you turn, the pointed tents dart up in bright relief before the broad river and blue line of distant coast, or lie snugly imbedded in the dark green woods; and from one or another of these encampments one's ears are perpetually assailed by the drum and the fife, which comprise the principal military music of Yorktown. The Southern stock of hand instruments is nearly exhausted, so the fife rings changes on the martial airs of "Dixie Land" and the "Marseillaise," varied by Irish jigs; and the drum beats time to the march or parade. Round the corner of an old building pour forth a company of soldiers in "undress"—very "undress"—costume, looking like a troop of navvies, though one-half may be men of fortune and position, who at home command their hundred servants and their carriages and horses, but here willingly, eagerly, shoulder their axe, and sally forth at dawn of day to throw up breastworks and erect batteries.

Across that field march a company to drill, along that road goes another; there a patrol of Zouaves are keeping guard before the head-quarters of the General, which is an old dilapidated building of revolutionary times. Here comes a troop of horses, then a line of baggage-wagons of crazy form and uncertain motion; yonder is a train of a hundred mules. The old town is alive with bustle, the whole scene is bewildering. It is not English in spite of the antique buildings, which are at variance with the charactar of the foliage, the bright sky, and glaring sun. The river reminds one of the Eau below Powderham, without its background of Haldon and Warborough. It is dotted with little butterfly fishing-boats, which, peacefully gliding here and there, add another contradiction to this scene of warlike preparations, and with a telescope you may even see the malicious Pawnee crossing about the mouth of the river, some fifteen miles off, not daring, however, to come within gunshot. The scene is not American, with those dull, dingy, old dwellings, in place of the gaily-painted, fanciful little eyrie-like residences of modern America. The groups of loungers are perfectly American though, entirely at ease and at home, whether perched upon fences, sitting on doorsteps, or lounging under the trees. But along come a company of Zouaves, and the American associations are wafted to Algeria or the Crimea, which are again destroyed by the most unoriental scenery, and the negro women in Eastern turbans and very Western crinolines. It is a scene of itself, of the times and the occasion, a scene in this second great American revolution, which will take its place in the world's history as far different in its complication of causes and results as is the scene above described.

The whole scenery of Yorktown is picturesque, even in its present most desolate and rugged condition. The foliage of locust and linden trees is everywhere beautiful—the trump of soldiers cannot affect that—and there is a sad poetry in the luxuriance of the vines and wild flowers which spring up in every corner, the broken fences and the trampled gardens smiling again under the magnificence of the gaudy trumpet-flower, and every heap of rubbish covered with the delicate passion-flower. The embankments freshly thrown up are soon green with vegetation, and a few minutes' walk will take you into woods where war and strife seem but a dream or a history of the past. From wooded banks deep ravines and romantic roads wind down to the shore, which, covered with fine sand, is washed by a few semi-saline waves and marine plants.

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA: VIEW OF YORKTOWN, VIRGINIA, FROM THE OLD NELSON HOUSE.

"THE DEAD OF MILTON SHE CONJURES UP."—SEE EXPLANATORY ARTICLE IN P. 342.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 6.—19th Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 7.—General Humiliation, 1857.
TUESDAY, 8.—Edward the Confessor.
WEDNESDAY, 9.—St. Denys.
THURSDAY, 10.—Quarter and Cambridge Michlle Term begins.
FRIDAY, 11.—American discovered, 1492.
SATURDAY, 12.—Foundling Hospital established, 1739.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 12, 1861.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
2 31	3 13	3 57	4 43	5 31	6 21	7 13
P. M.	P. M.	P. M.	P. M.	P. M.	P. M.	P. M.
2 53	3 35	4 19	5 5	5 53	6 43	7 35

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Manual of Illumination. Parish Edition. Longman and Co.
Cromie, Kitty of Lyle. A Tragedy. By Major Richards. 2nd Edition. Longmans.
Tyndall, John, and the Royal Institution: a Personal Narrative of Circumstances and Opinions. By the Rev. Alexander Dyce, M.A., and Sir Alexander Grant, M.B., and G. C. Bompas, M.D. Stanford.
Ride and Walk, or, the Mystery of the Gorse. By Wilfrid Gardner. New Edition. Longman and Co.
Hills and Plains: a Very Old Story and a Very Old Song. Hall.
Lectures on Rugby Abbey, Nuneaton, the Wrekin, and Old Melrose; and the Poems and Parish of Minton. By J. A. Wade. Hamilton and Adams.
Journeys and Explorations in the Cotton Kingdom of the United States. By F. L. Olmsted. Two vols. Low and Son.
Encyclopædia of Nations. By O. Cuthbert Lee and Son.
Munich Treat. By E. M. P. Two editions. Hall.
Sermons for Mothers and Daughters. By the Rev. Sir Edward Blackett, Bart. Longman and Co.
Memoirs, Letters, and Remains of Alexis de Tocqueville. Translated from the French. Two editions. Longman and Co.
Wanderings in the Arctic as a Winter Circuit. By J. H. Bonnycastle. Hurst and Blackett.
Sermons Preached in Lent, 1861. By Archibald Boyd, Rector of Glenorchy and Inishail, Argyleshire. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.
Report of the Commissioners appointed to Inquire into the Operation of the Acts relating to Joint Stock Companies. Vol. I. Eyre and Spottiswoode.
Report of the Superintendent of the Government Emigrant Office at Liverpool. Vol. I. Eyre and Spottiswoode.
Almanacs.
The Clonmel Railway connecting England with the Continent. By Thomas Bayley Potter.
The Cricket and Football Almanac. Bell and Daldy.
Hindu Ages. By C. Kinahi. Four vols. Trübner.
The History and Articles of Masonry, now Published for the Craft. By a Mason. Bell and Daldy.
Sermons Preached at Whitehall. By Alexander Penrose Forbes, D.D., Bishop of Brechin. Rivingtons.
Sermons, Mainly Practical. By Henry Melvill, B.D., Canon of St. Paul's. Two volumes. Rivingtons.
Wanderings and Sketches in a Winter Climate. By J. H. Bonnycastle. Hurst and Blackett.
Sermons Preached in Lent, 1861. By Archibald Boyd, Rector of Glenorchy and Inishail, Argyleshire. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.
Report of the Superintendent of the Government Emigrant Office at Liverpool. Vol. I. Eyre and Spottiswoode.
Almanacs.
The Clonmel Railway connecting England with the Continent. By Thomas Bayley Potter.
The Cricket and Football Almanac. Bell and Daldy.
Hindu Ages. By C. Kinahi. Four vols. Trübner.
The History and Articles of Masonry, now Published for the Craft. By a Mason. Bell and Daldy.
Sermons Preached at Whitehall. By Alexander Penrose Forbes, D.D., Bishop of Brechin. Rivingtons.
Sermons, Mainly Practical. By Henry Melvill, B.D., Canon of St. Paul's. Two volumes. Rivingtons.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1861.

It no doubt savours of cowardice to indulge in any sort of exultation at the difficulties of a rival; but it is indeed difficult to peruse the file of American journals brought over by each successive mail without something like a quiet chuckle at the singular admissions which are gradually and most reluctantly forced out. Blessed ourselves with a really free and constitutional Government, a responsible Ministry, an unfettered press, and tribunals of unquestionable integrity, it has been difficult—perhaps we ought rather to say unpalatable—to our imaginations to picture the social condition of moral decay on the other side of the Atlantic which has contributed so largely to bring about the present struggle, and promises fair to make its final solution a work of such time and difficulty. The serious hindrances presented by the want of a standing army and an adequate navy, formidable as they seem to us as nothing compared with the entire absence of actual freedom of thought and action involved in such proceedings as the torture of independent editors, an exercise of female influence rivalling the worst features of the Court of Louis XIV., and a consequent thralling into impossible positions of men of no real competency whatever. It is impossible at the same time not to connect this chronic disorder of the most exalted functions of American administration with the tone at once so surly and so persistently indulged in a reference to the attitude and intentions of this country. When not our Transatlantic kinsmen—as well as French Colonels and M. Dupin—begin to understand that war is the very last thing an Englishman thirsts for? His forced upon us undoubtedly from time to time, and we accept it as a necessity, and not to be subdue it; but we recognise it all the while as an odious necessity, involving an expenditure of human lives which we would fain spare, a waste of national treasure which we can ill afford, and an interruption to commerce which strikes us like a malignant disease. All this is perfectly clear and comprehensible to no doubt furnished by the present condition and future prospects of our cotton trade, and of the hundreds of thousands implicated in it; but even this, the South may be well assured, will not tempt us to force the blockade. We can and shall wait for better times and a wiser counsel.

The customary tarring and feathering process of the States receives its exact counterpart in the storm surveillance exercised by the paternal Government of France over its press. All the speculative, social, and political ideas which this week appeared in reference to the inquisitorial inquiries addressed to editors in that country have failed to disabuse the general mind of the grave suspicion that sinister motives lurked in the background. The Ultramontane Bishop of Poitiers dexterously availed himself of the opportunity to plant another thorn in the side of "Herod the Third," and M. Dupin to utter a jeremiad on the Commercial Treaty in the shape of a reply to M. Chevalier. We cannot help repeating that the tone of M. Dupin's letter, wherever this country is alluded to, is utterly unjustifiable, and, we had almost said, absurd.

The attitude of passive resistance assumed in Hungary is, as we anticipated, placing the Austrian Government daily in deeper difficulties. The ill-advised step of preventing the assemblage of the Comitat at Pesth by military interference has been instantly followed by the resignation of all the municipal authorities, from the highest to the lowest. Has not the Emperor one wise man in his Council, or cannot he himself see who must win in such a match as this?

A languid poll of nearly a week's duration has ended in the re-election of Alderman Cubitt to the office of Lord Mayor of London. In the City the contest seems to have excited but little interest. Among the general public, we believe the election will be, on the whole, gladly recognised. The year 1862 will be an important one, and will bring a throng of foreign and distinguished visitors among us, and we believe the Lord Mayor owes his re-election chiefly to the hearty and indiscriminating manner in which he has dispensed the traditional hospitalities of our ancient city.

We are very glad, too, to observe that a civic institution so long in embryo is at last beginning to show symptoms of independent vitality. The City of London College, originally conceived as a means of affording evening instruction to the thousands of young men engaged in various subordinate situations in the metropolis, is at last to be consolidated with the Prince Consort for Patron, and the very appropriate ex-Head Master of Rugby School, Bishop Tait, for President. We wish the undertaking all success.

We are anxious to call attention to two notable facts—one, that very nearly a score of our volunteer corps have been pronounced by the best military authorities 2d quite competent to manœuvre with regular troops; the other, that the experiment of so manœuvring them has been tried with marked success at Glasgow. Sir Hope Grant, though obliged to leave the ground before the evolutions were over, left his unqualified approval in the hands of his brother General. Considering the very limited opportunities for drill afforded to most volunteers, these results are indeed encouraging.

THE REVENUE.

	The Year ended Sept. 30, 1861.			Quarter ended Sept. 30, 1861.
	Net Receipts.	Increase	Decrease	Net Receipts.	Increase	Decrease
	£	£	£	£	£	£
Customs... ..	23,488,000	95,000	..	4,842,000	94,000	..
Excise	18,624,000	..	1,446,000	4,221,000	..	868,000
Stamps	8,426,000	154,912	..	2,161,000	..	29,000
Taxes	3,130,000	..	127,000	160,000	..	6,000
Property Tax..	11,133,000	823,184	..	991,000	..	1,230,000
Post Office ...	2,470,000	130,000	..	870,000	70,000	..
Crown Lands ..	172,000	2,711	..	30,000	1,000	..
Miscellaneous	1,942,511	..	607,429	297,758	..	17,345
Totals	69,386,509	1,176,812	2,180,429	14,604,272	164,911	2,221,345
		£1,003,917 Net Increase.			£2,056,434 Net Decrease.

THE COURT.

The Queen continues to enjoy her sojourn in the Highlands.

On Thursday se'nnight her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, and attended by Lady Churchill, drove to Loch Builg, and rode thence on ponies to Inchnory, and round by Dunaide to Tomahoak, at which place the carriage was in readiness to convey the Royal party back to Balmoral. Princess Helena accompanied her Majesty as far as Loch Builg, attended by Lady Augusta Bruce. The Prince Consort went out horseback.

On Friday se'nnight the Queen and Prince Consort walked and drove in the grounds of the castle. Princess Alice, attended by Lady Churchill, drove to Birkhall, and honoured Mrs. Gordon with a visit. Prince Louis of Hesse went out deerstalking. Earl Russell had the honour of joining the Royal dinner party.

On Saturday the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, left the castle at half-past eight o'clock, and drove by Castleton to the Derry Shiel, at which place ponies were in waiting. The Royal party rode thence by Glen Muick, by Loch Dulechan and Beinn-na-Main, to Loch Aven. Her Majesty returned in the same manner, and reached the castle at a quarter-past eight in the evening. Princess Alice rode on ahead, with Lady Churchill. Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold, attended by Baron Westerweller, rode over the hills to Ballochbuie. The Earl of Dalhousie arrived at the castle on a visit to her Majesty.

On Sunday the Queen and Prince Consort, Princess Helena, Princess Alice, and Prince Louis of Hesse, attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Mr. Macfarlane officiated.

On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, and attended by Lady Churchill, drove up Glen Muick, where ponies were in waiting, and her Majesty rode over the Coil's house. Princess Helena also accompanied the Queen as far as the Gate of Muick, and drove back again. The Prince Consort and Prince Louis of Hesse went out deerstalking. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, attended by Major-General the Hon. R. Bruce and Captain Grey, arrived at the castle at half-past five o'clock.

On Tuesday the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Princess of Hohenlohe, drove to Castleton. The Prince of Wales, with Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, went out riding. Princess Helena and Princess Augusta de Bar Lodge, and Princess Louise of Fife with a visit. The Duke of Argyll arrived at the castle, and succeeded Lord Elgin as Lord Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire in Her Majesty.

The Court will leave Balmoral on its return to England on the 20th inst.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, accompanied by his Secretary, Captain Teesdale, and by Major-General the Hon. R. Bruce, Equerry in Waiting to the Queen, left Balmoral on Saturday morning, and arrived at Windsor Castle on Monday evening. His Royal Highness left London for the same evening for Balmoral.

His Imperial Highness Duke Nicolas of Leuchtenberg, accompanied by General Rehbinder, has arrived at Claridge's Hotel from a tour in Scotland.

The Duke and Duchess of Beaufort have returned to Gopsall, the Earl and Countess Howe's seat in Leicestershire, from Troy House, Monmouthshire.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland are entertaining a select circle of friends at Dunrobin Castle.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter and Lady Mary Cecil arrived at the family residence in Grosvenor-square, on Tuesday, from Burghley House, Stamford.

The Earl of Clarendon, who is appointed Ambassador Extraordinary from her Majesty the Queen to the Court of Spain, on the occasion of the Royal Marriage, will leave town to-day (Saturday), accompanied by his staff, for Kingsdown.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston left town on Saturday for Broadlands, Hants.

Viscount Hardinge and family arrived in town on Saturday from a tour of visits to Ireland. Her Ladyship has since left for Walmer Castle, to visit the Earl and Countess of Stradbroke.

Viscount and Viscountess Clifden have left Lord Taunton's seat, near Wodtton, for Cowarn Castle, the noble Viscount's seat in the county of Hereford.

At Baden-Baden a monument erected to the memory of the Grand Duke Leopold of Baden was inaugurated a few days ago in presence of the Grand Duke and Duchess.

The Prince and Princess of Servia returned to Belgrade yesterday se'nnight, and were welcomed with extraordinary enthusiasm by the inhabitants. Their journey through the provinces has been a real triumphal march.

The fourth session of the International Philanthropic Congress is announced to be held in London next year, on the occasion of the Great Exhibition. Among the noblemen and gentlemen who have expressed their concurrence are Lord Brougham and the Council of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl Doole, Earl Portescue, Lord Ebury, Lord Raynham, the Right Hon. W. Cowper, M.P., Sir Thomas Phillips, Alderman Mechi, Mr. Harry Chester; Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P.; Mr. Edwin Chadwick, C.B.; Mr. Henry Fitzroy, M.P.; Mr. Hepworth Dixon, F.R.S.; Mr. T. Twining; Dr. Sutherland, F.R.S., and Dr. Southwood Smith, F.R.S.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The statements made that the Bishop of Ely and the Bishop of Ripon are seriously ill were, we are happy to say, without foundation.

The Bishop of London held a confirmation on young English people at Boma on Tuesday week, and delivered a sermon.

The Rev. T. F. Foord-Bowes, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, expired at Folkestone on the 29th ult., aged eighty-five.

The Rev. Dr. Hessey, Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School, has been installed as a prebendary of that in St. Paul's Cathedral.

A festival of parochial choirs is to be held at Spalding, Lincolnshire, on a date not yet fixed, but attempted at Bly, Peterborough, &c. The day selected is Dec. 8.

The result of the excavations on the site of Chertsey Abbey has been to expose the foundations of the east end of the choir and part of the cloisters; and a large quantity of encaustic tiles, pieces of sculpture, &c., has been found.

The foundation-stone of a new church for Orrell, Litherland, and Ford, was on Wednesday week laid by the Earl of Sefton, on a piece of ground which his Lordship had given for the purpose, about a mile from the Seaforth station. The beautification of a new burial-ground at Tyrell St. Mary was laid on Friday week by the Rev. Henry Mackenzie.

Chalkhouse Church, Somerset, was reopened on the 23rd ult., after having been restored and enlarged. The nave, which is the oldest part of the church, was made at the cost of the Vicar, the Rev. W. Dixon. Hutcheson Brown, Esq., of Bristol, presided on Thursday week after the completion of the restorations, which had been commenced by the late Chancellor Martin, to former Vicar of the parish, who left a sum of money for repairing the font, has carved pulpit, and the significant rood-screen.

The following new churches have been recently consecrated:—On Tuesday week, Tottenham Church, erected by the Manchester of Aldebury to the memory of his father-in-law, the late Canon of Pembroke, by the Bishop of Salisbury. (A view of the nave of this church appeared in the Number of this Journal for the 4th of May last.) The new Church of St. Mary Magdalene, in the parish of St. Mary Magor, Exeter, on Tuesday week, by Bishop Spencer, acting for the Archbishop of London. The Bishop of London on Tuesday last consecrated a new church in Marlock-street, Edgware-road. This building, which is to be known by the name of St. Michael and All Angels, had been commenced on Michaelmas Day, 1860, and is now complete and open for daily service as a chapel of ease to St. John's, Paddington.

AITAR STAIRS.—The parish church of Linton in Craven, Yorkshire, is now undergoing extensive restoration. A portion of the roof is dug up at the east end of the south chancel aisle (near to the pleasing and well-executed modern window recently erected), and, beneath a thick coat of plaster, a piscina, and a sedilia, which, from the richness of the mouldings, appear to be of the fifteenth century, have been brought to light. The piscina is of the usual form, with a trefoil-headed niche, and a projecting bracket for the chalice. The sedilia, which is of three stalls, is also of the usual form, with trefoil-headed niches, and projecting bracket for the chalice. The sedilia, which is of three stalls, is also of the usual form, with trefoil-headed niches, and projecting brackets for the priest, deacon, and subdeacon. The whole of the stalls, with the exception of the middle one, have been destroyed, and the floor has been raised to the level of the seats. The middle stall is perfect, with the exception of the top, which has been cut away to form a flat surface, and the front has been mutilated. The measures 6ft. 6in. long, by 2ft. 11in., wide and 5ft. 6in. high. In the general destruction of the ancient beauties which in the second year of Queen Victoria, or in the subsequent devastations of the Puritans, very few, it is believed, escaped; and, as such, the reception of the sedilia in the Crypt of St. Mary Magdalene at Ripon, this is supposed to be the only one in Yorkshire.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. T. G. Golightly, Rector of Stapleton, Bristol, to be Rural Dean of Stapleton.—Berkshire: The Rev. R. B. Barter to Grotton, Somerset; Rev. F. Poynder to Inworth, Essex; Rev. E. Bull to Ashton, Somerset. Devon: The Rev. J. Cole to Crewkerne, Lancashire; Rev. J. C. K. Saunders to Semperingham, Lincolnshire, Rev. J. Bowden to Ashton-under-Lyne; Rev. Charles Overtheton to Bolton-le-Moors; Rev. J. Richards to Wolborough, Devon; Rev. G. R. F. Davis to Wilford Priory, Somersetshire; Rev. W. Yeo to Ashton, Devon; Rev. Thomas Hayward to Tavistock; Rev. Reynold Pechell, Rural Dean, to Woods to Haworth, Bradford, Yorkshire. Chester: The Rev. G. C. Dodgson to Ashton-on-Mersey, Manchester; Rev. S. N. Smith to St. Peter, Oldham-road, Manchester.—Guardian.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—Oxford: In a Convocation to be holden on Tuesday next, the 8th inst., at two o'clock, the Chancellor nominating the Vice-Chancellor for the ensuing year will be communicated to the House. The Hebdomadal Board has appointed Monday, the election in Easter College to three scholarships—two of the value of £70, and one of £50 per annum, tenable for four years. There will be also a vacant time no election to four exhibitions, restricted to persons in need of assistance at the University.

Cambridge: There are already 171 freshmen entered at Trinity for the October Term. Alderman Salomons has presented for St. John's College scholars have likewise good entries, with one or two exceptions. Tuesday being the first day of the Michaelmas Term, the Senate House and the Law Schools were filled, and the following were elected for the year ensuing:—Senior Proctor—the Rev. W. Hayes, Fellow and Tutor of Caius; Junior Proctor—the Rev. J. Hayes, Fellow and Tutor of Christ's. The Hulsean prize-ship is vacant by the decease of the Very Rev. the Dean of Ely.

Mr. H. J. Clayton, B.A., of Jesus College, Cambridge, has been appointed to the Head Mastership of the Grammar School, Sudbury, which has been vacant since Christmas; and the Rev. Theodore W. Jones, M.A., Postmaster, Merton College, Oxford, to the vice-presidentship of the Lansdown and Bath Proprietary College.

THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF LONDONDERRY AND HER IRISH TENANTRY.

The annual entertainment given by Princess Anne, Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry, to her tenantry at Wynyard Park on Thursday week, was held on the near Holmes. There were about three hundred present. The dinner took place in the Tuscan Temple, which was tastefully decorated with evergreens, flowers, and appropriate inscriptions. After the usual toasts Mr. J. Kellow (a tenantfarmer) proposed "The health of the Marchioness of Londonderry," which was drank with enthusiasm.

The Marchioness of Londonderry made the following speech:

"Mr. friends, your affectionate reception always rejoices my heart—none have better cause to know it than you. I hardly remember a time when I was not glad to meet you, and I hope it will be many years before I shall be too old to be glad. And while I deplore that the state of things as regards your farms, your homes, &c., is far from what I could wish, I am glad that I can see some progress has been made. The simple fact that in 1858 only 27 acres were in cultivation, and in 1861 that number is increased to 1,000 acres, shows. On the other hand, I grieve to hear that, in defiance of all warning and advice, you have planted more than 1,000 acres of potatoes, which is the worst ever did before; and much have told that has been, and how universal is the blight, and we mourned you to have lost your repeat the experiment. I am glad to see enterprise is shown among you by the increased number of competitors for prizes for the best-cultivated farms, and I trust that this will lead to something to interest and stimulate your energies, as the shows for flowers and vegetables have obliged us to abandon the annual one. I am much pleased gratitude to me for the road I have lately made through Ballyteady, and I hope it will be of much benefit to the tenants in the neighbourhood, and to those who it really made my heart ache to see an industrious set of people without work to do, and no means of employing them. I am glad to be able to say that you have worked hard, and given all the aid in your power to forward this object, and even when the days were shortened, and the benefit it to render were not sparing of their exertion and zeal. This shows you know that a good deal depends on yourselves, and I feel always glad to see you have accomplished by the public spirit of individuals. I am pleased with the progress that I ought rather to say with the spirit; for he has been blessed early and late, encouraging the road and labouring himself. You are very fortunate in having so excellent a man as Mr. Wilson to watch over you, as he has done for eleven years. I am sure you feel rejoiced to welcome him to meet deservedly does mine, and that so strictly and conscientiously fulfils his duties to both. I am glad to see the Industrial Society has been so successful and progressing, and, thanks to the excellent system and valuable aid of the National Society, I hope there are few children in the neighbourhood who cannot read their own faults if your children are not properly educated. It ought to be a source of pride to you to see that there is no fear of the Bible, as the benefits

LITERATURE AND ART.

On Tuesday for Thursday last, the 1st-lot of October, three days of legislative grass being accorded for the farewell labours of the exclusives, the wicked old paper duty tumbled off its pedestal, and crumbled finally into dust and ashes. Henceforth paper is free; and the human intellect, in England at least, is free from the taxpayer's rate. It is, perhaps, premature to speculate on the results of the removal of this long-suffered fiscal burden. There may occur within a few months a paper mania, and that may be followed by another in a few weeks by a paper panic. Absit omen. We felt it our duty to lose holiday on the 1st of October; and, as we were fortunate enough to be invited to dine with the Master, Warden, and Court of Assistants of the Stationers' Company, we took advantage of a bounteous feast in the new old hall of the Stationers to drink a congratulatory toast to untaxed paper while joining in the traditional sentiment (varied down by excellent usage) of "The Stationers' Company, root and branch, may it flourish for ever!"

An affectionate, warm-hearted, appreciative man has just passed away. Poor Arthur Smith is dead—dead at the early age of thirty-seven! He was the beloved brother of Albert Smith; and, as manager of the famous Egyptian Hall entertainments, was of late also manager of the Lyceum Theatre. Hall entertainments, we are of opinion, never to be. He was not only a thoroughly man of business, but a genial humorist and lively writer; and to him belongs the fame of the original idea of the Mont Blanc Entertainment. The latest public duty which Arthur Smith performed was the business arrangement of Mr. Charles Dickens's reading rooms. He inherited his brother's power of writing over which a stronger fatality hangs as though it were fated to turn into dry leaves. Every one who knew Arthur Smith will herewith find food for sympathy who knew him loved him.

Item, for everybody who possesses the periodical, fanciful yet reliable information, and a little glass, and a little drainage, and a few miles of foot-pavement in the streets, we may hope that the Post Office Directory for 1862 will be excellent.

To lively yet accurate, picturesque yet practical, fanciful yet reliable Mr. John Hollingshead has now confirmed the task of writing an introduction of a "popular" nature to the Catalogue of the International Exhibition of 1862. Mr. Hollingshead is well and happily qualified for the task. Mr. Hollingshead is an adept in matters of art as well as matters of industry; and his graphic and vivacious style is a guide to the reader of the very driest of dry-salable English—will make the wonders of the new Palace at South Kensington easy to be understood and enjoyed.

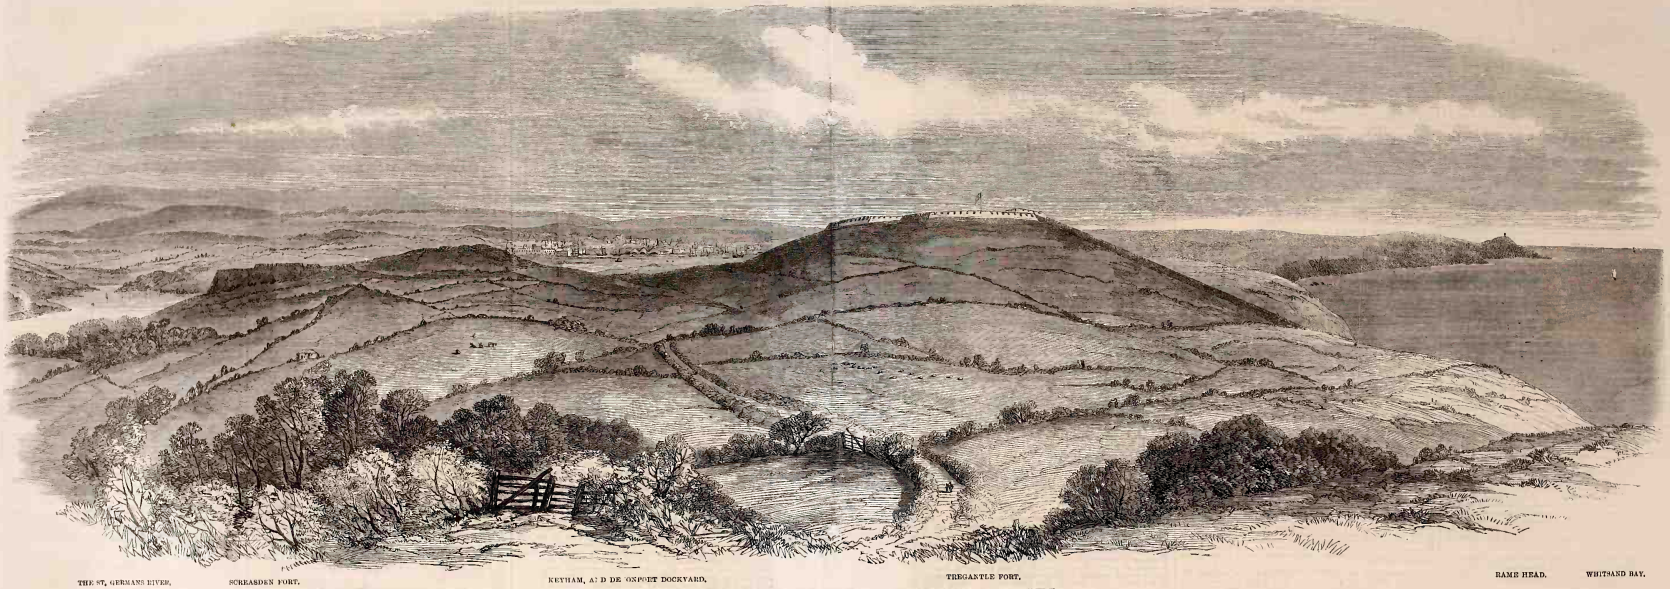
Journalism seems to be looking up in Naples. Fifteen months since there was but one daily journal in the capital of the Two Sicilies—the Gazette de Naples. Now there are seven. What its contents mean in information, and a little gas, and a little drainage, and a few miles of foot-pavement in the streets, we may hope that the Post Office Directory for 1862 will be excellent.

Republican or Liberal, Italian or Neapolitan, the lawyers at the Cape.

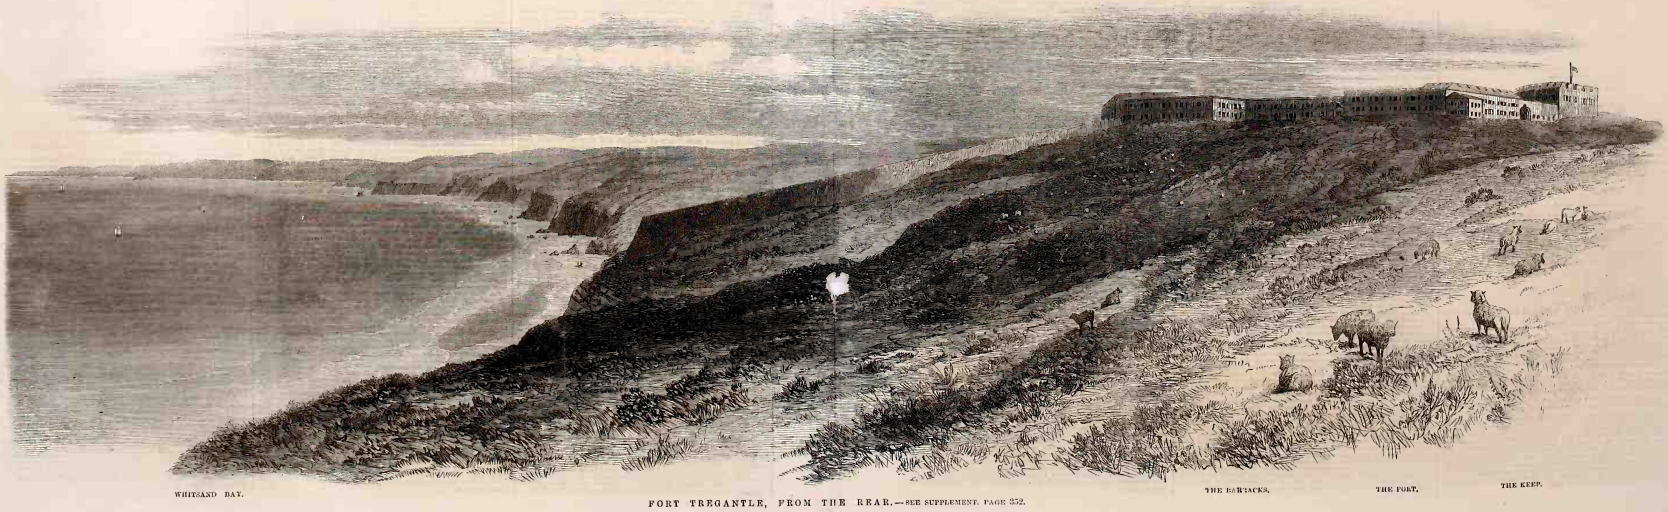
An old copyright case has been occupying the lawyers at the Cape of Good Hope. Who does not remember the book containing Mr. Dickens's "Great Expectations" in its columns; but, the piracy having taken place in a Republic, where reproduction was unchecked, and the embargo laid upon it confirmed by the Supreme Court. This is a step in the right direction. The Cape is not a million miles to our antipodes; there was but one daily journal in the capital of the Two Sicilies—the Gazette de Naples. Now there are seven. What its contents mean in information, and a little glass, and a little drainage, and a few miles of foot-pavement in the streets, we may hope that the Post Office Directory for 1862 will be excellent.

The approaching coronation of King William of Prussia will be marked all students of Thomas Carlyle of the accession given at the coronation of Frederick I., the first Prussian King, in the great historian's life of Frederick the Great. "No door was open anywhere but the principal one," describes the ceremony to Königsberg:—"the tapestries, the banners, the of the proceedings to Königsberg:—"the tapestries, the banners, the fountains running wine—the two Bishops seated for dinner under a Estate's canopy, and of purple velvet, with diamond buttons on it Knight-Marshal of the Household, with a sceptre as a pestle, and a mortar with fifteen hundred pounds a piece, as besomed much as 'a corporation Post Office at South Kensington can be supposed to do.' Finally, the Queen Elector, who being much bored during the scene, was at last "dismissed to undress, and to be looked at by the people." Had social curiosity seen to snuggling the not her snuffling, the picture of the social curiosity seen to snuggling the not her snuffling, the picture of the social curiosity practice, and "Queen Elector" is a fine subject. His Royal husband was horrified at this solecism against etiquette

THE WESTERN DEFENCES OF DEVONPORT AND PLYMOUTH.

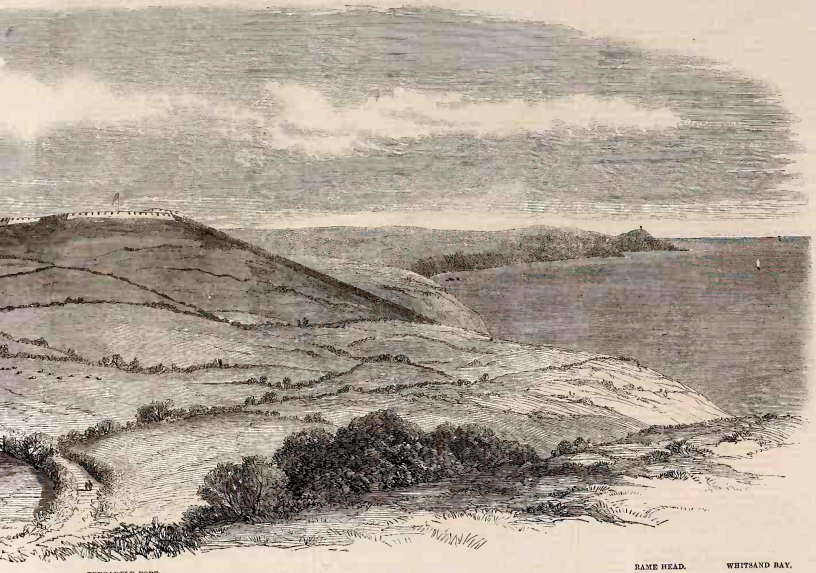


THE FRONT OF THE LINE OF DEFENCE.



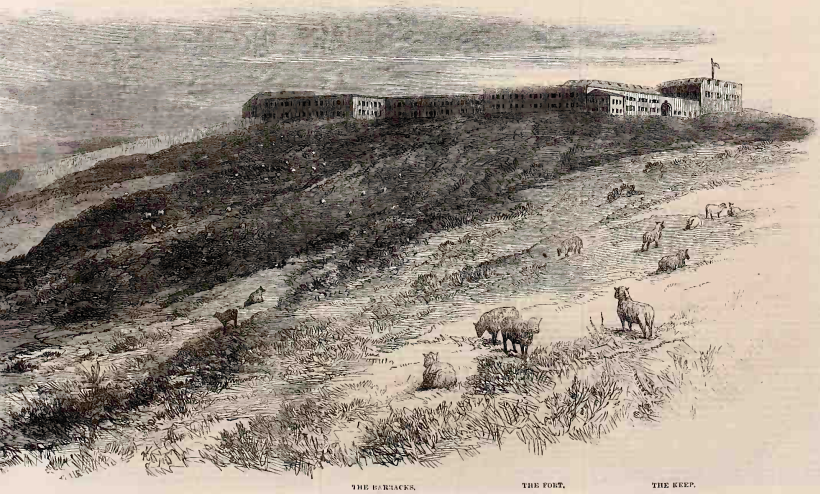
FORT TREGANTLE, FROM THE REAR.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 352.

DEVONPORT AND PLYMOUTH.



TREGANTLE FORT. RAME HEAD. WHITSAND BAY.

NE OF DEFENCE.



THE BARRACKS. THE FORT. THE KEEP.

REAR.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 352.

Relics of the Past.

THE WARD-STAFF OF ONGAR.

Our description of the "Fiery Field Court of Corbey" and the mystic Vehmgerichte of the "Red Earth" recalls to mind a singularly smooth and endless custom which prevailed in parts of Essex almost within the memory of many yet alive. The custom was known as the "Ward-staff," and consisted, as we shall see, in the delivery of a staff of wood to the lord of the manor in certain hundreds of Essex, and after some remarkable formalities, existed it to be transmitted to the lord of the manor at the next hundred, and so on, until having been carried through the towns and hundreds of the county as far as Alte Wade, it was thrown into the sea.

The object of the procession was apparently to have a yearly muster of feudile men, who were appointed to guard the lord and his manorial members and relations, for both of which it was liable to pay a fine; and it is interesting to know that this rude mode of assembling the tenants and landlords was derived, like the famous tribunals just mentioned, from the rites and ceremonials of the early Teutonic worship.*

TALE OF THE WARD-STAFF.†

"Arrange Hundr.—The order of the gathering and yearly making of the Ward-staff of the King there, with the due course and circumstance of the yearly watch, ward, and service-Royal, instituted to the same. That is to say—

"First, the bailiff of the said liberty or hundred shall gather and yearly make the ward-staff of some sessible young tree growing in Abbywell Park, and the Sunday next before Hock Monday, which shall contain in length ill quarettes of a yard and six inches round in the compass, or thereabout, and he shall convey the same artificially made the Manner-place of Rockwood Hall, in Abbanes Rothing, where the lord of the said manor for the time being shall yearly occupy the same receive into his house, and shall reseik it up in a fair linnen cloth or towel, and lay it upon some table or cupboard or else stand it standing in the chief or highest place in the hall of the said manor-place, there to remain until the said bailiffe shall have perfected his office. And when the said bailiffe shall in convenient time to depart he shall convey the same staff by sunne shining unto Warlhambushe, besides Long Barnes, in Rothing, aforesaid. When and where the said Lord of Rockwood Hall, and all and every other tenant and tenants, and landowners, which by reason of their estates do hold their lands likewise by service royal, to watch and ward the said staff there, upon convenient summons and warning to be given unto them yearly by the said Lord of Rockwood Hall or his time being, with their full ordinary number of able men wall furnished with sufficient weapons said allmaid. Whereupon the Lord of Rockwood Hall shall then and there yearly, at his own proper cost and charges, have ready prepared a great ryne, containing in it with a hall haungar of the end of the same, which he shall cause to be extended overthwart the said lowe, as the custom hath been, to stay and arrest such people as would pass by. At the end of which said hall not far from the said bell, shall he hald down reverently the said staff upon a pillow or cushion on the ground, which done, forthwith the said bailiffe shall severally call the names of all the aforesaid tenants and landowners, by their several and said ordinary number of men accordingly. Then shall the said bailiffe, in the King our Sovereign Lord's name, straitly charge and command these and every of them to watch and ward the said staff upon the same, so that the King be harmless and the country seathless, until the same arriving when good time shall be for the said Lord of Rockwood Hall to repaire unto the said staff, who in the presence of the whole Watch shall take the same staff with his hand, and shall make upon the upper end of the same with a knife a new notch, as a mark or token, declaring their loyal service done for that year in this behalf; and so shall deliver the said Staffe into the Bailiffe's hand, to carry into the Lord or landowner of the manour of Fiffield, or unto the Demnan resient, saying this notable ancient of the Ward-Staffe hereafter written, in the Saxon tongue; which done, they may bale up the said bar, and depart at their pleasure."

Then follows the "Tale," of which we can give but a few lines, but in which, corrupted by the errors of the transcribers and modernised by the rustics who repeated it, can still be recognised the tone and the phraseology of the courts of the Eenburgh.§

* * *

We ore rooge yeder knooze,
A never-ceitive as we hogerton for to doo,
And there warren and wahsien
And the Vine wahsien,
That the King wax harmeless,
And the commune acceptess.

* * *

And a morow when ill day was,
And the sun shone bright,
Faire honour waxen on to take
All to honour for to don.

* * *

Fayre on the staffe were scorden,
As we hooten for to don.
Fayre on the staffe
Hether we howver for to sawin.

* * *

Sit, by leave, take this staffe,
This is the tale of the Ward-staffe.

"On Monday following, called Hock Monday, the said staffe shall so presented yearly unto the lord and owner of the manor of Fiffield for the time being, or his resient, who shall immediately upon the receipt thereof, in the presence of the whole company by the more unde thereon how the aforesaid Lord of Rockwood Hall and other tenants, which, by reason of their tenancies of their lands, owe said service to watch the said staff at Abbass Rothing aforesaid, have done their watch and service-royall accordingly for that year before. Then shall he cleike it again, lay it in order, and see it every degree as the Lord of Rockwood Hall hath done," &c.

Then is called Abbass Rothing watch.

* N.B.—The watch is kept at the cross wiek a band at the Tures Wards in Fiffield."

The MS. proceeds to describe how, with the same ceremonies, the staff is carried on the Tuesday following to the Lord of the manor of Mault Hall, in High Ongar, who unfolds it, &c., as before.

On Wednesday it was borne to Navestock, &c., as before.

On Thursday to Stapleford Abbots, &c.

On Friday to Lambure, &c.

On Sunday to Chigwell, &c.

On the Monday following to Theydon Germon.

On the Tuesday to Morton.

On the Wednesday to Mandin-Laver.

And, finally, was borne, as we have noticed, to Alte Wode, and there was cast into the sea.

* The Free Field Court of Corby was, as we have observed, under the supremacy of priests of the Temple which contained the "Irmin cole" or pillar of Irmin. This pillar is supposed to have been the great tree around which rude symbol Thor was likewise worshipped, and the reverence shown to the ward-staff by the East Saxons may be absolutely a vestige of that formerly shown to the great tutelary deity.

† Perhaps one of the scenes of the hundred granted to John Steiner in the 8th of Henry VIII., which are said to have been "done, paid, and observed from time whereof the memorie is not to the contrarie."

‡ This, as we have seen, was in conformity with the olden Teutonic customs, and its observance in the practice of the ward-staff is very interesting.

§ The most forms in civil and criminal proceedings among the Anglo-Saxons were declared in rhythm; and the "Wedding" formula, as adopted in England at the present day, retains evidences of the ancient poetry, when the wife is taken "to have and to hold—from this day forward—for richer, for poorer—for better, for worse—in sickness and health—to love and to cherish—till death us do part." In the older marriage forms the rhythm is more distinctly marked. According to the usage of Salisbury, the bride answered, "I take thee, John, to be my wedded husband—to have and to hold—for this day forward—for richer, for worse—for richer, for poorer—in sickness, in health—to be bonour and buxom [i.e. obedient] in bedde and at bordo—till death us do part—and thereto I plight thee my troth."

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

ELECTRICITY GENERATED BY EVAPORATION.—M. Palmieri, in a note in the Comptes, states that in order to obtain electricity by cool means of evaporation, he took some water in a capsule of platinum not insulated on the hot hold steely. He collected the vapour upon a platinum refrigerator at a height sufficient to avoid the surface of the water, and by means of a delicate gold electroscope soon convinced himself that the vapour manifested positive electricity, while the water from the bottom of the capsule was negative. The quantity of electricity in the capsule of platinum which contained the water in a state of evaporation, was found to be sufficient to charge a Leyden jar in connection with a condensing electroscope. M. Palmieri constructed his apparatus on the dwelling water of a capsule of platinum of 0·050 about a foot in diameter. He then obtained a charge of electricity sufficiently strong to give a spark. The experiment succeeded equally well in the open air and in a closed room. He afterwards varied the mode of experimenting, and operated in different ways.

ATOMIC WEIGHTS OF SIMPLE SUBSTANCES.—The great chemist, M. Dumas, in presenting to the French Academy of Sciences the second edition of his "Lectures on the Philosophy of Chemistry," remarks:—"Between my analysis and those of M. Stas there is this difference—that he has expended his time for greater precision at more than I. Now, I would observe that in these conditions the inevitable imperfection of the chemical substances employed in such researches would not permit any doubt to attach to the atomic weights thus obtained will be necessarily less exact. Thus, when I thought that I had constructed numbers which were true to 1-100, M. Stas saw in repetition. Happily, between him and me, it is only a question of experiment, he shall receive it, and shall certainly receive it to an agreement.

EROSION OF LEAD BY INSECTS.—M. Schlemer-Kestner recently sent to M. Edmond Becquerel a letter containing a result but established by himself, and which deserves to be recorded. He had received from Java a lead cut similar apparatus. These fluminous tubes could be suspended in the air by means of a cord, and were generally broken by the insects who saw the extraction of the light, as the breath from the exposed end of the wire a hole perforated in the lead. The tube was then filled with water, and kept in a dark part of the observation house, where no change of sulphate was observed. But after the water had been poured out, and the tube exposed to the light, M. Taylor also figures and describes an apparatus for obtaining the same result by means of the electricity of the atmosphere of coal mines, and for giving them also the quantity approaches the explosion point.

THE GARDEN RHUBARB (Rheum rhaponticum).—The leaf-stalks of this plant are frequently used in tarts, &c., and they yield by pressure 90 per cent of clear juice, and 10 per cent of cellulose and fibrous matter. The juice contains 2·5 per cent of malic acid, 0·5 per cent of mineral salts (extract; this, burned, leaves 30 grains of ashes, or the saline matters of the juice amount to 0·3 per cent), and water 97 per cent. The juice, 1000 grs. being analysed, yielded potash, 0·717; phosphate of lime, 0·259; lime, 0·023; carbonate acid, 1·217; loss, 0·784. The grains of the ashes of 1000 grs. yielded for the solids, saccharine matter, and mucilage, gave carbon acid, 3·03; malic acid, 7·70; phosphate of lime, 0·259; lime combined with malic acid, 0·023; loss, 0·784. the rhubarb stalks is the best source from which we can obtain malic acid. This acid is also found in the juice of the gooseberry, the currant, and fruits, but the absence of cream of tartar renders it unfit for this purpose, and the malic acid obtained from it is not so pure as that obtained from rhubarb juice.

HUMMINGBIRDS' NESTS.—Two of these have been exhibited at a meeting of the Zoological Society, by Mr. Gould. It has been a matter of doubt as to what is the material of which these nests are built. Mr. Gould has ascertained that hummingbirds build their nests chiefly with lichens; though evidently of vegetable origin, the precise material was not known. The nests are of extraordinary beauty, and are admirably fitted to protect the birds of the cold-tree in spring, and in this instance the rat-tail. The nests are of the size of a walnut, in exterior character, but principally of a similar southern oak.

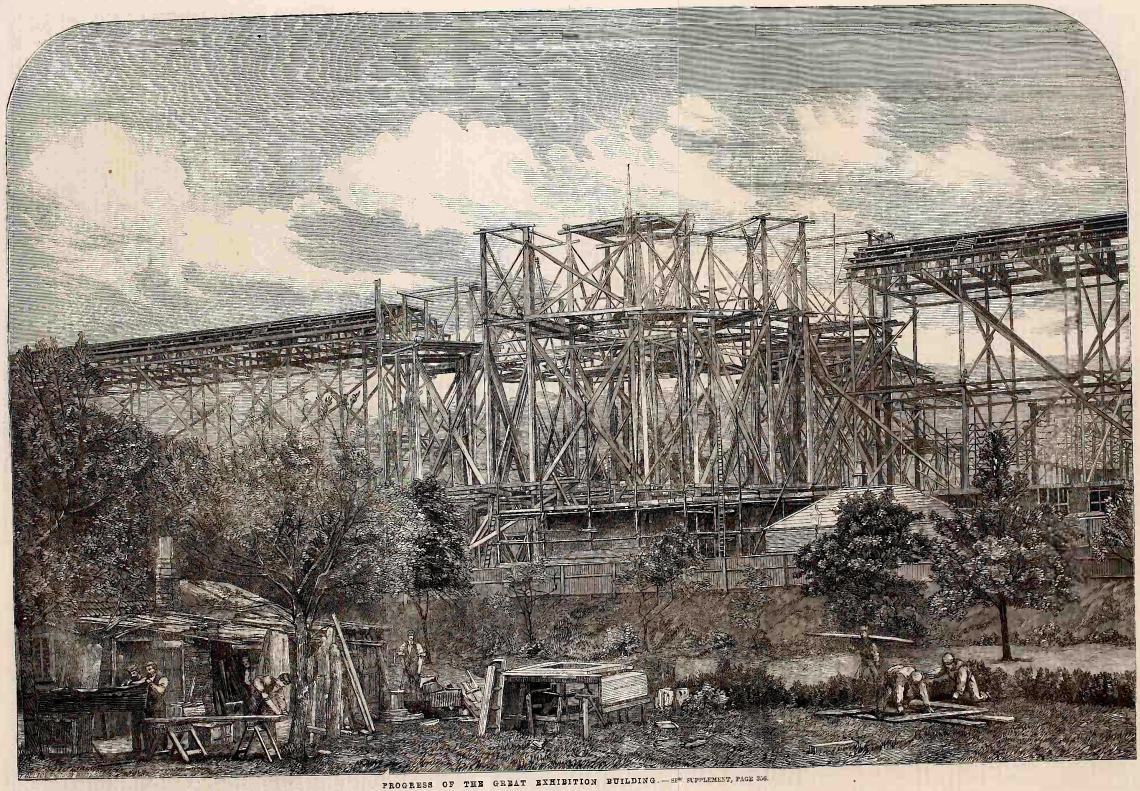
THE GUARD OF HONOUR is generally supposed to owe its fortification and its name to the necessity to surround with and with which it possesses; although it is well known that the unmentioned salt, combined in the proper proportion, is the best of all preservatives. The Guard of Honour at the present Baron Liebig, after investigating different kinds of grass, attributes the nutritive power of the meadow-grass to the salts of potash contained. He says that, in order to know the value of any grass, it is not sufficient to determine the amount of the nitrogen and phosphoric acid, but also the amount of soluble salt.

MEASUREMENT OF ELECTRIC RESISTANCE.—Professor W. Thomson, of Glasgow, in a note sent to the Royal Society and printed in the last number of the Transactions, has investigated the conditions under which the lengths of wire by Wheatstone's balance in other experiment considerable difficulty is found to arise from the unavoidable resistance of the contacts at the ends of the several connected branches. This difficulty he says, may generally be overcome by making the resistance of the wire to be tried to agree with these connections there is some uncertainty relating to the dimensions of the solder used for the connections, and to the fact that it is impossible for the adaptator to obtain results, and has therefore been compelled to plan a new method for the measurement of resistance, by which, to a great extent, these error can be produced by uncertainty of the connections, even though made with an ordinary solder. The method consists in the employment of a battery of two ends of the standard and the tested conductors (or forms good connection with them) and of a galvanometer of any other such kind, with the two electrodes of a galvanic element. We must refer to the paper itself for details of the experiments, which were carried out with great care, and the results on which it is based, and for suggestions for its practical application.

THE INFLUENCE OF ATMOSPHERIC PRESSURE ON COMBUSTION.—The important question of the influence of atmospheric pressure on combustion, whose flames depend upon the volatilization and ignition of gaseous products, has been studied with much skill by M. Bert, who has found by the pressure of the supporting medium, yet this is not true, as we shall see hereafter. The rate of burning of a candle increases in proportion to the rarefaction of the air, depends essentially upon the presence of a certain quantity of oxygen in the atmosphere. This is due, according to the fact by Quetelet and Dulong, that the temperature of flames of wells known to be independent of the pressure under which the level of the sea. Dr. E. Frankland has experimented upon the combustion of coal-gas under diminished pressure, and has demonstrated that the luminosity of the flame is due to the presence of solid carbon, the result showing that such diminution of atmospheric pressure to the extent of one-half does not sensibly diminish the luminosity of coal-gas flames. With regard to the effect of atmospheric pressure upon the light of gas flames the author found that the luminosity of the candle was not affected by the rarefaction of a gas flame burning in air at a pressure of thirty inches of mercury, whereas, when burning in oxygen at the same pressure, the light was diminished

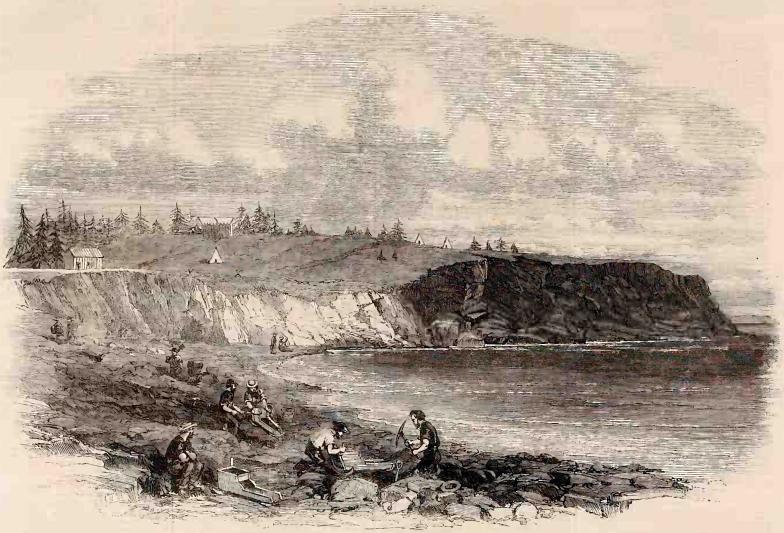
THE FARM.

Agricultural meetings and dinners are still in full swing, and any allusion to "Bull Run" has seldom failed to hold its place in the speech of the gentleman who, in accordance with our dreary toastmaster, returns thanks for the Army or the Volunteers. While farmers have been dining, the clouds have been raining, and the pastures at last seem freshened up for an October summer, and the land yields herbage beautifully to the plough. Less sheep sell well, and have been the raising the rate of a shilling a week for some short time past. The Peterborough Fair produced a fair market for Lincoln ewes. Mr. Kirkham's and Mr. Cannell's lots each averaged about 13 gs. and the highest price, 20gs., was given for one of the former flock by the Messrs. Dudding of Pinxton. There was only a short response to Grove-Messrs. Dudding of Pinxton. There was only a short response to Grove-Messrs. Dudding of Pinxton. There was only a short response to Grove-



PROGRESS OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION BUILDING.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 346.

THE NOVA SCOTIAN GOLDFIELDS.



GOLD-WASHING NEAR LUNENBURG.

VIEW OF LUNENBURG FROM BATTERY POINT.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 352.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each announcement.*

BIRTHS.

Aug. 9, at Grahamstown, Cape of Good Hope, the wife of Wm. L. Hutchinson, Esq., of a daughter.

On the 29th of July, 1865, at Simlaee, Punjaub, the wife of Lieut.-Colonel G. W. G. Green, C.B., Commandant 2nd Punjaub Infantry, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On the 5th of September, at Kensington parish church, Ales. Munro, Esq., of Upper Bagrawa-place, to Mary, daughter of H. Carruthers, Esq., Inverness.

On the 26th ult., at St. John's Church, Newcastle upon-Tyne, by the Rev. H. W. Wright, M.A., uncle of the bride, Edward Joseph Hunt, Esq., Captain H.M. 63rd Regiment, younger son of the late William Henry Hunt, Esq., of Ayrshire House and Kildare, in the county of Kildare, to Marie Theodosia, youngest daughter of the late Richard Grainger, Esq., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

On the 2nd inst., at St. Mary's, Chelsea, by the Right Rev. Dr. Manning, Sir John Simeon, Bart., of Swainston, Isle of Wight, to the Hon. Catherine Dorothea Cubitt, second daughter of the late Gen. the Hon. Sir Charles Cubitt, G.C.B.

On the 1st inst., at St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Rev. R. F. Hodgson, C. Palmer, Esq., to Emily Eden, daughter of W. Vandittart, Esq., M.P.

DEATHS.

On the 26th ult., at South House, Nairnshire, Major-General Alexr. Shirreff, Madras Artillery.

On the 4th ult., suddenly, at St. Leonards-on-Sea, Richard Hindle, Esq., formerly of Richmond and London, aged 73 years.

On Sept. 30, at Seaton House, Aberdeenshire, Elizabeth, wife of Lieutenant-General the Lord James Hay.

On Saturday, August 26, at New Amsterdam, Berbice, John William Murray, cobalt and last surviving son of John Murray, Esq., slipcoalyer magistrate, aged 70 years.

At Tien-Tsin, North of China, Captain George T. H. Ashleon, H.M.'s 67th Regiment, and Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, in his 29th year.

The Liège Journal states that several forged English £10 bank notes have been passed to money-changers at Antwerp. Upwards of 600 francs have been paid in gold for this worthless paper. The person who passed the notes appears to be a Jew. He is described as having crossed the exchange with the most imperturbable coolness, and after receiving the gold in the way of exchange, remained in the office in conversation for some time after the transaction. The notes are stated to be of a rather clumsy manufacture, rendering detection extremely difficult.

BURGLARIOUS SERENADERS.—In the neighbourhood of Toulon a great many country houses have lately been robbed at night during the absence of the owners; and the police, from investigations, have come to the conclusion that the perpetrators of the burglaries were a number of men who adopted the ingenious practice of pretending to be travelling musicians. They were not content with playing their mandolines during the day, and when, after a while, no one appeared they inferred that the houses were unoccupied, and returned to them in an entrance and carried off everything of value they could find. A number of police officers were a few evenings back sent to a house where the musicians had not visited; after they had played for some time they retired and pretended to depart, while a policeman listened without moving, so that the men were induced to enter the house. To their chagrin they were at once secured.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Sept. 30).—Although the supply of English wheat on offer here to-day was only moderate, the demand for all the produce was very limited, and to effect sales prices had to be lowered by 1s. per quarter. Still in many instances no business was effected. The inquiry for France having ceased, the millers were not disposed to purchase any to any extent except in retail quantities. In consequence of the dullness of the trade, prices of foreign wheat were barely supported for the choicest parcels; but cheap qualities were rather cheaper. Barley and peas ruled about stationary, but oats were 6d. per quarter cheaper.

Flour.—Both English and foreign wheat met a dull inquiry to-day, at 1s. to 2s. per barrel lower. Consequently, Spring corn and flour were very inactive and not changed.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 42s. to 48s.; ditto, white, 46s. to 53s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s. to 44s.; ditto, white, 44s. to 50s.; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, red, 40s. to 44s.; ditto, white, 43s. to 50s.; Lincoln and Rutland, red, 40s. to 44s.; ditto, white, 43s. to 50s.; Nigerian and Ware, 44s. to 49s.; Chevalier, 47s. to 52s.; Scotch, 44s. to 48s.; Irish, 40s. to 44s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; barley, 30s. to 34s.; Trinidad and Cork, black, 26s. to 28s.; ditto, grey, 28s. to 30s.; Egyptian, 26s. to 28s.; Odessa, 28s. to 30s.; Taganrog, 28s. to 30s.; white, 30s. to 32s.; oats, 20s. to 22s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 40s. to 43s.; town households, 37s. to 39s.; country marks, 36s. to 38s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, 34s. to 36s. per barrel. Stock, 4lb. to 5lb. per sack.

Foreign.—Wheat, Dantzic and Konigsberg, 46s. to 48s.; Pomeranian, 45s.; Riga, 44s.; Marianopoli, 42s. to 44s.; Taganrog, 42s. to 44s.; Egyptian, 42s. to 44s.; Salonica, 42s. to 44s.; Danubian, 42s. to 44s.; Galatz, 42s. to 44s.; Ghirka, 42s. to 44s.; Polish, 44s. to 46s.; Marianopoli, 42s. to 44s.; Taganrog

NEW MUSIC

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S POPULAR MUSIC.

BRASS BAND MUSIC.—ONE HUNDRED HARMONISED MELODIES, for Two Cornets-à-Pistons, Two Tenor-horns, Two Horns, Alto, Tenor and Bass Trombones and Ophicleide, or Bass Tuba. Arranged by Henry Round, Bandmaster Royal Marine Light Infantry. Published in Two Books, 4to, each 5s.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "WHAT ARE THE WAVES SAYING?" Melody by A. Glover; arranged for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards, 3s. "It will be much admired for its elegance and simplicity, and for its relation to its interesting original."—Scarborough Gazette.

STEPHEN GLOVER'S NEW VOCAL DUETS.—The Rocker Mariella, Angels are Watching Us, Lovely and Lively, Let Music and Song be Our Fortune To-night, Merrily Sweet Bells Ring, Sweetly Flowers Bloom, Sweetly Flows the Fountain, Sweetly Sleep Earth, Sea, and Skies, Sweetly Sleep Nature Sleeping; 3s. 6d. and 4s. each.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

MISS M. LINDSAY (Mrs. J. Worthington) will Sing "The Lass, The Lute I Sued Long," poetry by A. Tennyson, Mus. Bac. Oxford, 3s. 6d. Lady Clara Vere de Vere, Song, 3s.; Maud, Romance, 3s. 6d.; Home (her last), her Warbled Song, 3s.; Angel Voices Ever Singing, Sacred Song, 3s.; Sweetly Sleep, 3s.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE BORDER LANDS. Sacred Song. By Miss M. Lindsay (Mrs. J. Worthington). Sung by her at the Hanover-square Rooms, Mus. Bac. Oxford, 3s. 6d. "Possessed of both pathos and melodious compass, displaying great artistic skill."—Critic.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

MISS M. LINDSAY (Mrs. J. Worthington will Sing "The Old Church on the Shore," Song. Poetry by Tennyson. In the Arrow and the Song, 3s.; Rayburn, Song, 3s.; Lovelier, 3s. 6d.; Home (her last), Warbled Song, 3s.; Maud, The Bridge, 3s.; Maud, Romance, 3s. 6d.; Angel Voices Ever Singing, Sacred Song, 3s.; Sweetly Sleep all Laughter.—3s. Lie of all Mine M. Lindsay's Songs, "Sweetly Sleep," 3s., supplies, 4d. marked, gratis and postage free.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W.

ONLY FOR THEE. Price 2s. 6d. GEORGE LINLEY'S 30th Romance. Song with the most delightful verses of Mr. Melrose's Promised Concerto.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington-street.

OH, HEMLOCK TREE! Price 2s. G. A. MACFARREN'S New Song. Sung by Mr. Sautley.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, Regent-street.

OH, SEND ME BACK TO DREAMLAND! From St. M. W. BALFE'S successful New Ballad.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street. Free for 12 stamps.

GEORGE LINLEY'S JUVENILE ALBUM, 12 Romances, adapted to familiar tunes, with "Original Authors," with four superb Illustrations by BRAGARD and BRANDARD.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., Bishopsgate and Waithe.

OH KEEP ME IN YOUR MEMORY. WALTER MACFARREN'S Romance. Sung by STEPHENS GLOVER. Fourth Edition. Free for 24 stamps.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street.

ELEMENTARY INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. By J. T. STONE. Price 2s. In this publication, which is intended for the use of Schools, the author has endeavoured to render the subject more systematical by simplicity of arrangement and facility of execution.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., Bishopsgate-street Within.

THE AFRICAN QUADRILLES. By STEPHEN GLOVER. Upon the Chiefs Minstrel Popular Songs. "Original and the most approved style."—Bell's Life.

BRAHAM and CO., 18, Bishopsgate-street Within.

HART'S CONGREGATIONAL SINGING, Book, containing the most approved Church Tunes, Ancient and Modern used in the Church of England, with 160 Chants, &c. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

London: ROUTLEDGE and CO., 18, Bishopsgate-street Within.

THE PERFECT CURE'S COMIC SONG. Sung with Great Acceptance at Canada and Colonial Parties. The Cure; price 2s. postage free, 18 stamps. It contains 6 pens and 1 pencil, 1 penknife, 1 pair of scissors, 1 ruler, 1 rubber, 1 pocket-book, 1 Pocket Pen Holder Cloth, Paper Cap, Bell in Fez, and 30 other comic items, by 21 worth of credit for one shilling.—HERCAL CO-OPERATIVE, 191, High Holborn. Order as above.

CHRISTY'S and BUCKLEYS' SONGS, with full Choruses and Pianoforte Accompaniments, in superb volumes, cloth and gilt, price 2s. each, post free 24 stamps, viz.:—1, Christy's Minstrels' 12 songs, new ed., 7s. 6d.; Christy's Songs, in Shilling Books, each 1s.; Buckleys' Songs, in Shilling Books, each 1s. Any two for 1s., or either volume by post, 24 stamps.—Boosey and Sons, 24, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.

BOOSEY and SONS' CHEAP MUSIC, 24, Holles-street.

"THE PIECE NOW MEANT IN EVERY DRAWING-ROOM IS LA PRIERE EXQUISE (The Prayer Exquisite), composed expressly in "La Divina Pastora Valse." The Modern Prayer. Memorise at once, per THEOLA HALSE'S NEW, Original, and Exquisite Valse, "La Divina Pastora," Illustrated Title. Price to be had of the Composer, 14, Portobello-terrace, Notting-hill; London: OETTMANN and CO., 67, Haymarket; and all Musicsellers.

WHEN DO YOU MEAN TO CHANGE YOUR NAME? By Arthur Matthison. "Will be Nominated Encore" and "I Really Don't Think I Shall." Each 24 stamps. Twenty-seven Comic Songs, Beautifully Illustrated in Colours, Farmerish, post-free to any part, on receipt of 1s. 3d. Stockbury, Guildford-street, 27, Russell-square, Brunswick-square, W.

MUSIC HALF-PRICE and Post-free.—All full-priced Music of every publisher forwarded on any part of the kingdom for the published price. The Musical Standard, containing the Contents of the Published Music Catalogues of the Popular New Music of all Publishers, 1d. Subscription for Catalogues for Postage, 1s. 6d. per quarter.—J. ALFRED NOVELLO, 27, Dean-street, Portman-sq., W.

CHEAPEST MUSIC REPOSITORY IN ENGLAND.—All the New Music and prize and penny-a-line. Comic songs published. Lists forwarded on the latest receipt of 2 stamps.—W. MACKONE, 71, Bethlehem-pl., Oxford-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S Great Song, FRESH AS A ROSE. By Miss Sabilla Baillon. Sung by Madame OLIVE THAT ARE SO MORE (Shamrockish), song of Irish Character, and Dance Music, Illustrated with Portrait of the Composer, 24 stamps. Infant, 24, Oxford-street, W.

PIANOFORTES BY THE BEST MAKERS, FOR SALE OR HIRE CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD, 201, Regent-street, have for sale, at the Wholesale Prices, a large assortment of Pianofortes by the following eminent Manufacturers:—BROADWOOD, COLLARD, and ERARD. The Warerooms of Cramer and Co. combine the largest and most opportunity for selection, and the greatest facilities of inspection, at the pianofortes of each maker, placed entirely upon the same floor. Pianofortes are also taken in exchange, enabling purchasers to hear them under the most circumstances in a private residence.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S New Pianoforte Model.—The PIANOFORTE price 35 guineas. Every instrument is warranted, and sent at the lowest cash price. Should any purchaser wish to change the pianoforte for a more expensive one, at any time within three years from the date of purchase, the full price will be returned to Cramer and Co. free of expenses, 201, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD select Pianofortes from the factories of the great makers and forward them to all parts of the world. The best quality of tone guaranteed, and the lowest manufacturer's prices charged.—201, Regent-street.

CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD execute all kinds of REPAIRS in PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS. The most highly-skilled workmen only employed. 201, Regent-st.

HARMONIUMS.—CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S NEW LIST OF PRICES is Now Ready, and may be had on application at 201, Regent-street.

ÆOLIAN HARPS will produce (without fail) a perfect music in the Garden, Conservatory, Summer-house, on the Window-sills, or on board Ship. Illustrations and price post-free.—T. CROSBILL, 48, Oxford-street, W.

MUSICAL-BOX DEPOTS, 56, Cheapside, and 19, Leicester-square, Soho.—MOZART'S celebrated Large MUSICAL BOX, 8 full airs, 30 guineas. Catalogues sent free. Cleaning and Price guide and post-free on application.

LIMOGES CHINA (first imported).—Richard Seveste, from the Manufactory of Limoges, begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry that he has just received from Limoges, and has now on view, Fashionable Dinner, Dessert, and Breakfast Services, Vases, Figures for the dinner table, Busts, Vases, Parian and Biscuit Groups, Fancy Articles, and the largest stock in London of novelties suitable for presents, at Moss, Jones, and Co.'s, 164 and 165, Regent-street, and 61, Lombard-street, Birmingham.

PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Manufacturers, 11 and 12, Cornhill, and 47, Panton-street, beg to call the attention of the Nobility, Clubs, Hotels, and the Public generally, to their Patent Nickel Silver, which is introduced as a substitute for silver, and is not surpassed by any other for its hard wearing qualities, combining lightness and strength. Fiddle pattern, 7s. 6d. per dessert spoon or fork; Queen's pattern, 7s. 6d. per dessert spoon or fork; King's pattern, 8s. per dessert spoon or fork.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
12 Fiddle Spoons	4	10	0	Queen's Pattern, Ditto	5	14	0
12 Dessert Ditto	3	12	0	12 Dessert Ditto	4	16	0
12 Dessert Forks	3	12	0	12 Dessert Forks	4	16	0
12 Table Forks	5	8	0	12 Table Forks	6	16	0
2 Gravy Spoons	1	10	0	2 Gravy Spoons	2	0	0
6 Sauce Ditto	1	10	0	6 Gravy Spoons	2	0	0
6 Fish Ditto	2	0	0	6 Sauce Ditto	2	0	0
1 Soup Ladle	0	10	0	6 Fish Ditto	2	0	0
1 Salt Spoon (gilt)	0	1	0	1 Soup Ladle	0	12	0
1 Pair Fish Carvers	0	12	0	1 Salt Spoon (gilt)	0	1	0
1 Pair Sugar Ditto	0	10	0	1 Pair Fish Carvers	0	12	0
1 Pair Spoons	0	10	0	1 Pair Sugar Ditto	0	12	0
	£	19	0	1 Pair Spoons	0	12	0
					£	19	0

A pamphlet with 300 Illustrations is published as a guide to the stock of silver, electro-silver, and Sheffield plate in the showrooms. Estimates are given for replating the articles sent in, and silver tea and coffee services, and every article required in a family. Cutlery and patent dish-covers. Orders by post.

MAPPIN BROTHERS' ELECTRO-SILVER PLATE.—47 and 48, King William-street, London-bridge, and Queen's Cutlery Works, Sheffield. Fiddle pattern, 12 table-forks and spoons, 50s. Kitchen-table service plate a cheap deposit of 40s. after, according to price chosen.

Londra-bridge	Fiddle.			Threaded.			King's.
	Table Spoons	Dessert Ditto	Tea Spoons	Table Spoons	Dessert Ditto	Tea Spoons	Table Spoons	Dessert Ditto	Tea Spoons
For cream	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Table-spoons	36 0	40 0	54 0	70 0	60 0	78 0	80 0	70 0	90 0
Forks	36 0	40 0	54 0	70 0	60 0	78 0	80 0	70 0	90 0
Dessert Ditto	—	32 0	40 0	—	48 0	60 0	—	56 0	68 0
Ditto Forks	—	32 0	40 0	—	48 0	60 0	—	56 0	68 0
Tea Spoons	18 0	20 0	26 0	30 0	28 0	36 0	36 0	32 0	42 0

A costly book of Engravings, with prices attached, gratis and post-free.

Mappin Brothers, Londra-bridge; Manufactory, Queen's Cutlery Works, Sheffield.

FRENCH MODERATOR LAMPS, the newest pattern for moderating the Flame, are SOLD at the extensive and choice assortment of those Lamps, Rooms, for the Show-rooms, complete, from 10s. to 7l. 7s. each. Pamphlets, with prices, free per post. Pure Colza Oil for the above lamps at the lowest price. Funnels, Wicks, Chimneys, and every Lamp Requisite. Lamps altered to the new method at 1s. each. Oil Cruetts at the Monumental, London-bridge. Established A.D. 1760.

FURNISH your HOUSE with the best ARTICLES, and on the most economical terms. Our CASH PRICE FURNISHING LIST may be had on application, or will be forwarded free into any part of the country. Each of the various departments of their establishment, and it is arranged to show Ironmongery, Stoves, Fenders, Fire-irons, Kitchen Utensils, Cutlery, Bronzes, Japanned Goods, Turnery, Brushes, Mats, Pails, Buckets, Tubs, Bedroom Utensils, Britannia Metal, Copper, Tin, and Bath Goods, Lamps, Lamp Glasses, Oils, Palmer's Candles, Mats, &c.—Deane and Co., London-bridge. Established A.D. 1700.

FURNITURE, CARPETS, and BEDDING.—Purchasers are respectfully solicited to examine the Stock of upholstery, containing prize of every article and estimates for every description of Furniture, at the Manufactory, 34, Charles-street, Manchester-square, W. Established 1810. Cash or Credit. Class 30, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge. Country orders carriage-free.

TO PARTIES ABOUT to FURNISH.—An Illustrated CATALOGUE, containing Designs and Prices of Italian WALNUT WOOD, in perfect condition. FOR SALE, an extensive Stock of Drawing-room Suites, Chiffoniers, Loo and Occasional Tables, Chimney-glasses, Pier-glasses, Cheval-glasses, Chairs, in rich damask or silk; Easy chairs and occasional ditto; Couches, Ottomans, Davenports, Music Stools, Whatnots, Work-tables, Iron and Brass and marble top; two fancy occasional chairs, and a large assortment of Bedroom Furniture, in Mahogany, Rosewood, Walnut, Oak, Spanish Mahogany, and Polished Pine, in the newest patterns. May be seen at LEWIS CHANCELLOR and CO.'S, Upholsterers, 456, Oxford-street, corner of Barrett-street, London.

COSTLY GILT and OTHER FURNITURE.—The complete FURNITURE for a DRAWING-ROOM (style Louis Seize), recently purchased from the Exhibition, 1862, may now be SOLD at considerably less than its cost price. The handsome Gilt Cabinet, Console, and Pier-glass, with Marble Tops, Ormolu Mounts, and Carved Frames, the Gilt Couch and Chairs, Loo Table, and elegant Jardinière from the other portion, together with three extra large Pier-glasses, Mahogany and Rosewood Chairs, Couches, &c., may be viewed by appointment, and an extract of that Gallery from Fire-proof Warehouse, Nos. 1 and 2, Bentinck-street, Manchester-square, Hyde Park.—Apply to Mr. GRAHAM.

LONDON CARPET WAREHOUSE.—WAUGH and SONS, 3 and 4, Goodge-street; and 65 and 66, Tottenham-court-road, W. Carpets, Oilcloths, &c., at first-class manufacturers, for every style of decoration.

WILLIAM S. BURTON'S GENERAL FURNISHING IRONMONGERY CATALOGUE is sent free by post on application. It contains upwards of 500 Illustrations of his Stock of Sterling Silver and Electro-plate, Nickel Silver, Britannia Metal Goods, Dish Covers, Hot-water Dishes, Stoves, Fenders, Marble Chimneypieces, Kitchen-ranges, Lamps, Gasoliers, Tea Trays, Urns, Clocks, Table Cutlery, Turnery, Iron Bedsteads, Bedding, Bedroom Furniture, and Fire-irons and Brasses. Deane and Co. (opening to the Monument), London-bridge. Established A.D. 1700, and 4, Newman-street; 4, 5, and 6, Perry's-place; and 1, Newman-yard, London.

SPANISH PENINSULA WINE COMPANY, Sole Spanish and Portuguese Wines.—Paris: Montero, 60, per bottle. Montilla, Amontillado, 42s. per dozen. Sherries, pale and golden, 30s. per dozen. Port, old and crusted, 36s. per dozen. Sherries, pale and golden, 20s. per dozen and upwards. Price per dozen, exclusive of bottles and packages. Bass, with full particulars, on application.

C. KINDON, Manager.
No. 31, Regent-quadrant, Piccadilly.

ALLSOPS PALE ALE, in Bottle, is recommended by Queen Lindy and all the faculty, sent to any part of London, in 4-dozen cases, 4s. per dozen. PALE ALE, 3s. per dozen; ALES, 2s. per dozen; and 18s. per hogshead.—Wholesale Stores, S.W.

SAUCE.—LEA and PERRINS'
WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE,
Pronounced by Connoisseurs to be
"The Only Good Sauce."

"Lea and Perrins' Sauce will be in Future, by the Proprietors, Worcester, Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell, Soho, London, and by Dealers and Oilmen universally."

CELEBRATED FOR
PATENT CORN FLOUR,
BROWN AND POLSON'S.
All the Accredited and other qualities 24s. These are often re-commended, particularly by Doctors, and charged 3s.
J. A. GO, 123, Cheapside, 198, Oxford-street, Gerrard-street, W.

EXTRAORDINARY MERIT must belong to that which OBTAINED EVERY ONE,
GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

COALS.—COCKERELL'S COALS, price 25s. per ton. Central Office, No. 13, Cornhill.

FOR FAMILY ARMS—the LINCOLN'S-INN HERALDIC OFFICE—and Name of Arms Painted, Inquired, and Quartered. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; or stamp. Fee-paper of Emblems 7s.—6, Cranbourn-alley, Leicester-square.

ENGRAVING, &c., in accordance only with the laws of Heraldry.—The Arms of Sovereigns, Seals of Boroughs, Book Plates, Dies, Diplomas, Pedigrees, Crests, Monograms, Steel Dies, Illuminations, Embossing, Arms painted, Quartered, Impaled, and Quartered. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; or stamp. Fee-paper of Emblems 7s.—At 144, Great Portland-street, Regent-street.

LINCOLN'S-INN HERALDIC OFFICE.—The established office of authority in England for unfolding Arms, Pedigrees, Crests, &c. Fee, Counsel's Opinion of Heraldry, 5s.; or stamps.—H. SALT, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

NEW AUTUMN SILKS.
Rich Millerite Stripe, 27 in. wide, per yard, 1s. 6d. with.
Rich Glace Checks, 27 in. wide, per yard, 1s. 6d. with.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN DRESSES.
Double Widths, 11s. 6d. the Dress.
Tartan Serges from 11s. 6d. to 21s. Full Dress.
Fit Patterns.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN JACKETS,
in cloth, cashmere, and velvet, from 10s. 6d. to 3 guineas.
Illustrations, with prices of every variety, sent free by post.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN RIBBONS.
The Largest Assortment in the country.
The most elegant Designs, 6½d. per yard.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

WATERPROOF CLOAKS.
Of the most approved fabrics, from 10s. 6d.
Sent into the country free—can be returned if not approved of.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' GARIBALDI SHIRTS.
Ladies', commencing at 6d.; Children's, 3s. 6d.; best quality, commencing at 10s. 6d. Gentlemen's, 10s. 6d. the half-dozen.
Specimens, with description and Patterns sent free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

REAL CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS, commencing 3s. 9d.; hemstitched, 3s. 6d.; tucked, 11s. 9d.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' INVISIBLE NETS,
all colours, 9d., 10½d., 1s. 0½d., 1s. 4½d. Free for extra stamp.
New Point Lace Nets, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.
In 6d., 9d., 10½d., 1s. 0½d., and upwards. Post-free for two extra stamps.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

MRS. WASHINGTON MOON has just RETURNED from PARIS with the LATEST AUTUMN FASHIONS, Bonnets, Head-dresses, Caps, Children's Gowns, Mantles, and Millinery.—103, Oxford-street, corner of Hanover-street.

CARTER and MOON, 364, Regent-street, London.

NOVELTIES FOR THE AUTUMN.
MARSHALL and SNELGROVE are now exhibiting in all the departments of their establishment a beautiful collection of NOVELTIES, specially designed and manufactured for the new silks are viewed this morning of especial notice. A large variety of Fancy Silks, in Checks, Stripes, and Figures, at 1s. 6d. per yard. Rich Glace Silks, in all the new colours, at 1s. 6d. per yard. Also a recherché of the Summer Stock remaining on hand in Silks and other Fabrics, which will be offered at greatly reduced prices. Ladies are invited to visit the Establishment, which has been specially prepared for comparison, at all goods throughout the year are sold at one uniform price, and marked in plain figures.—The French Fashion Plate now contains the Full Dress of twenty yards.

Patterns and Plates forwarded freely on application.

COMMERCE HOUSE, 534 to 538, Oxford-street; 3, 4, and 5, Wells-street.

FOREIGN SILK DRESSES
SEWELL and COX have, through their agents at Paris, purchased a large lot of rich Silk Dresses, specially adapted for evening and morning wear.

They are now expressly manufactured for Paris, and will be sold at 42s. 6d. the Dress; usual price 63s.

NOTICE.

THE FANCY DRESS DEPARTMENT of Messrs. SEWELL and COX is replete with every requisite for the Season. Inclusive all the Newest Designs in the Imperial Costumes, Spanish, Italian, Swiss, Polish, Fancy Dress and Ball Dresses, &c., &c.

N.B.—Patterns and prices post-free.
SEWELL and COX, THE BEEHIVE,
15 and 64, Fore-street, London, W.

BRITISH and FOREIGN SILK WAREHOUSE.—Ladies purchasing SILKS will find at this Establishment a choice selection of the newest designs in Striped, Checked, and Figured Silks, at the lowest prices consistent with Fairly bills, which, for genuineness of manufacture, novelty of style, and economical prices, are unsurpassed by any House in the Establishment.

Patterns forwarded to ladies in the country post-free.
PETER ROBINSON and ROBINSON,
THE BEEHIVE,
63 and 64, Fore-street, London, E.C.

FORD'S WINTER MANTLES.—The new patterns just received are now being opened. Illustrations of the same forwarded post-free. Intending purchasers to whom they will be most post-free. Early application is respectfully requested.

FORD'S, 42, Oxford-street, London, W.

FORD'S NEW MATERIALS for MANTLES and JACKETS are now ready. Patterns free by post. Illustrations of the same forwarded post-free.—42, Oxford-street, W.

FORD'S MANTLE ROOMS,
42, Oxford-street, London, W.
Ladies will find here an extensive assortment of fashionable Mantles, Shawls, Scarfs, Jackets, and Crinolines, ready for inspection.

FORD'S MANTLE ROOMS,
42, Oxford-street, London, W.
Some very pretty Jackets for the season, ready, 5s. 6d. each.
Patterns of materials, &c., free.

FORD'S NEW JACKETS for the present Season are now ready for inspection. The "Garibaldi" illustrated in the "Queen's Magazine" for Sept. and "St. James's" Magazine for October.

FORD'S GARIBALDI SHIRTS
Made by Practical Workwomen Only.
Ladies', 6d. each; Children's, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Gentlemen's, 10s. 6d. per dozen.
Illustrations and patterns of materials free. Write "Garibaldi."

GARIBALDI JACKET BODICES, now so much worn, in Cashmere, Flannel and Cashmere of all Colours, some tastefully trimmed for occasional wear; also in rich Velvet, Velveteen, and Cashmere Velvet.—FORD'S, 42, Oxford-street, London.

FORD'S NEW HATS, of superior make and style, Small Hats of fashion, elegant, &c., with patterns, by Ladies' Hatter, Riding Habits, Gentlemen's Hats, Boys' Hats, free, 42, Oxford-street, London (near Newman-street).

SILKS! SILKS!! SILKS!!!
Ladies are invited to visit the Silk Mercers' Establishment, to inspect their Stock of NEW AUTUMN SILKS, which has been selected with the greatest possible care, and is now ready for inspection. Rich Striped Silks, at 1s. 6d. per yard, commencing with great moderation in price.

Rich Striped Silks, 22 in. the Dress.
Rich Striped Silks, 27 in. wide, per yard.
Wide-width Striped Silks, 36 in. wide, per yard—great price 2s. 6d.
Wide-width Striped Silks, 36 in. wide, per yard, 3s. 6d.
Wide-width Black Glacés, from 2s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. per yard.
Rich Figured Glacés, in all the new colours, from 2s. 11½d. per yard.
Patterns free.

Wide-width Black-ground Brocades, from 2l. 10s. the Dress.
Rich Black-ground Brocades, in Alpines, Gros Royals, &c., in extensive variety.
Velvets, Satin de Lyons, and Terrys, in all the new colours.

Drapers, Milliners, and Dressmakers supplied with Cut Lengths at the lowest trade prices.

Hatching Gloves carefully and promptly attended to.

Any Silk purchased at this Establishment may be had in exchange if not actually exchanged—the object aimed at being to suit the gentlemen of purchasers, and thereby extend an already large and highly-increasing connexion.

Shut on Saturday at One o'clock p.m.

James Spence and Co., 77 and 78, Fore-street, London, E.C.

REAL SEALSKIN CLOAKS.
H. ROWELL, JAMES, and CO. respectfully announce that they have prepared for the Winter Season a great number of these beautiful Cloaks in all sizes and in new shapes. An inspection is solicited.—Rowell, James, and Co., Furriers, &c., 3, Regent-street, Pall-mall.

NEW
BLACK SILKS at KING'S.

Rich Glacé Silks	at	1 6 per Full Dress.
Black Figured Ditto	"	1 15 0 "
Black Broché Satin Silks	"	1 19 6 "
Rich Striped Silks	"	2 2 0 "
Widows' Silks and Patent de Soies	"	2 2 0 "

Patterns post-free.—Address to King and Co., Regent-street, London.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE.
The Newest
AUTUMN SILKS at KING'S.
245, Regent-street,
Young Ladies,
45 to 46, The Pall Dress.
Full Dress,
47 to 48, Figured,
48 to 50, Rich,
50 to 52, Broché,
52 to 54, Rich Broché,
55 to 56, Rich,
Gros d'Afrique,
Gros Royal,
Gros de Suez,
Gros de Naples,
Gros d'Alma,
Gros de Rhine,
42 to 60, Rich Brocades,
42 to 60, Rich Velvets,
23 to 36, the Full Dress, Fancy Silks and Velvets.
Patterns sent post-free.—Address to King and Co., Regent-st., London.

BAKER and CRISP'S NEW AUTUMN SILKS are from 36s. to 60s. the Dress.
New Coloured Silks, dress from 24s. 6d. Patterns free.
New Rich Silks, from 2l. 2s. Patterns free.
New Alpine Silk Glaces, 2s. 6d. yard.
New Rich Glaces, 3s. 6d. yard.
New Rich Brocades, 3s. 6d. yard.
New Two-Guinea Moiré Antiques.
New Rich Figured Velvet, 3s. 6d. yard, all the shades.
New Guardsman Shirts, 6s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
Patterns free.
Of all the New Fabrics for Autumn Wear, Patterns, Sets, Sealskins, &c., &c.
211, Regent-street, and 27 and 28, Conduit-street.

OUR NEW FOLDED DRESS, 13s. 9d. The material is new; the designs elegant and peculiarly French; the colours very choice and fashionable. Patterns free.
THE FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 76, Oxford-street.

OUR NEW FOULARD CAMBRICS, 5s. 9d. Our Guinea Black Velvet Jacket, and the Paletot at 30s. Now shown in our celebrated Half-guinea Jackets.
THE FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 76, Oxford-street.

CRINOLINE.—LADIES will find PATENTOMORPH PATENT CROWN SKELETON SKIRTS PERFECTION in Crinoline, Elasticity, Durability, and Economy, on that they bear the Trade Mark in Crown; and the name "Thomson."

CRINOLINE and STAY WAREHOUSE.—The largest Stock in London, and the only manufactory of Movable Crinoline Petticoats. Assorting Waists, quite Stocks, Corsets, Bodices, Petticoats, Skirts, Bustles, Dress Improvers, Hoops, Bags, and Luxury-necessary Petticoats; Riders-does, Co-steels; Algaes, Bones, Cords, Tapes, Gussets, Lastics, Bindings, Trimmings, and Sundries. Wholesale and Retail.—WILLIAM CARTER, 37, Leicester-street, London. N.B. The new Reprise Fluted Petticoat Protectors, 10s. Illustrations and price-lists on application post-free.

SHIRTS.—Morning and Evening SHIRTS of every description and make, at moderate prices.—CAPTAIN and WATKIN, 76, Regent-street, Piccadilly, S.W.

PAPER COLLARS, 6d. per doz., or 5s. per gross. Specimens, 6d. Illustrations free. Sold by Drapers and Cheap Outfitters' Warehouses. Wholesale and Retail, by the Manufacturer, CHARLES ORANGE, Paper Hat and Dressy Depôt, 4, Cheapside, corner of Bow Church-yard, E.C.

VOLUNTEER UMBRELLAS.—HUTTON and SON Reinforced VOLUNTEER STICK, adopted by their Patent SAFETY RIFLE UMBRELLA, and Sold by Hutton and Co.'s and 6, Norgate-street, London, E.C. Retail of all respectable Drapers. Price 21s. Illustrations free.—Address as above.

HAIR RESTORED, PRESERVED, IMPROVED, and BEAUTIFIED by ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, in Wonderful Restorative, is universally sold in high esteem for its wonderfully speedy restoration of Hair to Bald Heads, Thin Hair, Grey Hair, Weak Hair, and Hair Falling Off. Price 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., equal to four small, and 21s. per bot. by Sealed Letter, and Postage-free, 4d. extra.—20, Hatton-garden, London. Ask for "Rowlands' Macassar Oil."

NAPOLEON BALM of a GOLDEN HUE, for restoring the hair. The fact of its being in request in the Court of the Tuileries, and by the Nobility of France, is the surest criterion. 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s., and 21s. per bottle.—3d. New Bond-street (late 24, Hatton-garden), and of all Perfumers.

ED. DE JONGH'S
(Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL, prescribed by the most eminent Medical Men throughout the world as
THE PUREST, MOST EFFICACIOUS, AND MOST AGREEABLE CONSUMPTION, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, INFLUENZA, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, NEURALGIA, and all forms of the SKIN, JACTICE, INFANTILE WASTING, AND GENERAL DEBILITY.
Is thoroughly tasteless and inodorous, and may be taken during the most delicate stomach.
SOLELY MEDICAL GUARANTEE.
BY JOSEPH OLLIVE, M.D., Physician to the British Embassy at the Court of Belgium, Knight of the Order of Leopold, Officer of the Academy, &c., &c., I hereby declare that I have made the analysis of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil, and that I find it to possess the highest medicinal and alimentary efficacy."
DR. LAWRANCE, Physician to H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, "I have prescribed Dr. de Jongh's Oil in preference to any other. I consider it unnecessary to commend a medicine which has received the sanction of the Faculty throughout the continent of Europe."
DR. LANKESTER, F.R.S., Superintendent of the Food Collection, South Kensington Museum, "I have analysed Dr. de Jongh's Oil, and find it to be of the highest purity, and entirely free from the nauseous and disagreeable properties of the ordinary Cod-Liver Oil."
ED. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in Imperial Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; Capsuled and labelled with his stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE CAN POSSIBLY BE GENUINE, by respectable Chemists throughout the World.
ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.
CAUTION.—Beware of pretended Substitutions.

CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, and DISEASES of the CHEST.—Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS. Medical Testimony, Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11 stamps.

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ATTILA QUADRILLE. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S MILANESE POLKA. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." "Its waltz of the season." Beautifully Illustrated. 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW QUADRILLE, MADRID, Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW VALSE, SULTANA, Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NELLY GRAY VALSE, with Donat Accompaniment. Now set just published. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S NEW DRUM and FIFE TUTOR. Just published, with a selection of the most popular tunes. Arranged for the above instruments by a Band Master. Price 4s. Sent post-free.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' FLORENCE, The last original piece by the popular Composer.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' CHRISTY MINSTREL MELODIES, brilliantly arranged for the Pianoforte—

The bowing that he scorned, Annie	...	... 3 0
Beautiful star	...	... 3 0
Come where my love lies dreaming	...	... 3 0
Oh! the hills, Bessie	...	... 3 0
Old folks	...	... 3 0
Old folks at home	...	... 3 0
Gentle Annie	...	... 3 0

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest. All Instruction Books—containing elementary rules, exercises, scales, exercises, and a great variety of the most popular airs, in progressive lessons, from the first rudiments to the most difficult—are now published at HALF-PRICE, and may be had, post free, on application to
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

KUHE'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE—
Kuhe's "Last Meet" Beautiful Hunting Piece. 4s.
Kuhe's "Rose de Sevilla" Capital Espagnola. 4s.
Kuhe's "Les Hirondelles" Morceau Gracieux. 3s.
Kuhe's "Silvery Stream" Caprice Etude. 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S LA PRIERE D'UNE MERE, Beauty pour Harp. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S THE ANGELS' HARP, Dispositio for the Pianoforte. Price 3s. 6d.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S LA VIVANDIERE, Impromptu on the Violin, with Harp Accompaniment. Price 3s. 6d.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF-PRICE.—All Music, and Books Editions, at half the published price, and post-free for postage-stamps or Post-office order.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street, W.

HOWARD PAUL'S GREAT SONG.
MR. GORILLA; or, the Lion of the Season, written by J. STORER, price 2s., Illustrated.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

Recent Novelty at Mallet's Concerts.
COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES, played with immense success. Price 4s. Solo or Duet; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Full Band, 8s.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

The Latest Fashionable Dance.
COOTE'S DIXEY'S LAND GALOP on the celebrated American Walk Round. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Orchestra, 8s. Very popular at Mallet's Concerts.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S "I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY" Just introducing "Oh, if I had two or three to harness!" 3s. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Orchestra, 8s.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S CORNFLOWER VALSE, price 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Orchestra, 8s. Considered to be the gem of the season.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

OH, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME. Song. Price 3s. 6d. "Come when the sombrous linger" Just published. Price 3s. 6d. net (postage paid).
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET, A most splendid Song. The melody is original and beautiful. By FRED. BUCKLEY. In answer to the Daisy. Price 3s. 6d.
HOWARD and CRAY, 42, New Bond-street.

NEW VOCAL DUETS. "HOPEFUL SPRING, JOYOUS SUMMER, PLENTEOUS AUTUMN, DREARY WINTER." The words of these charming Duets are written by EDMUND MALONE, the composer of the music are the Wild Waves Sing it" "Come Merry Minstrels," &c., will be immediately followed by a number of Duets illustrative of the various characters.
London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG, by the Composer of "Will you come to the bower?" &c. "WILL YOU COME?" The first song of the new Illustrated Ballads that has appeared since the renowned success. The melody is so striking that it will soon be upon every street.
DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

UN RALLO IN MASCHERA. Mazurka Brillante. By LANGTON WILLIAMS. From Verdi's New Opera. Price 4s. Also, Quadrille, 4s.; Valse, 4s.; Polka, 3s.; Galop, 3s.; Polka Mazurka, 3s. Solo or Duet. Septet, 5s. 6d.; Full Band, 8s.
W. WILLIAMS and Co., 242, Tottenham-court-road.

THE VOICES OF THE PAST. New Song. By LANGTON WILLIAMS. Sung by Miss Emeline Orger at St. Jude's-hall with the greatest success. Price 3s. 6d.; free for stamps.—W. WILLIAMS and Co., 242, Tottenham-court-road.

MDME. CURY'S BABBIERE DI SEVIGLIA, Great brilliant fantasia, played by the composer at her concert, with immense success. Price 4s. Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d. Most popular piece. Price 4s. ANDERSON and FARLEY, 19, Hanover-square.

KUHE'S "LOGIE" Just published, a most delightful, brilliant and effective arrangement of this favourite Scotch melody. Price 4s.
ANDERSON and FARLEY, 19, Hanover-square.

OSBORNE'S "LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM." Most successful and happy arrangement of that beautiful melody as a Pianoforte Fantasia. Price 3s.
ANDERSON and FARLEY, 19, Hanover-square.

SCHLOSSER'S LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche Brillante. A spirited and dashing piece for the Pianoforte. Price 4s. Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Orchestra, 8s.
ANDERSON and FARLEY, 19, Hanover-square.

A LL MUSIC AT HALF-PRICE. All the full-price Music, and the best Editions supplied upon the above terms at ROSE and COX'S (Oxford) Half-price Music Warehouse, 71, Baker-street, Portman-square, W. Country orders by return of post.

NEW MUSIC.

MELLON'S PATTI POLKA, the great hit of the season. Encored nightly at the Author's Concerts. Price 3s. 6d. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

NANCY'S GALOP, by MUSGRAVE, recently Illustrated in Colours. Price 3s. Published this day.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS by CLARIBEL.—Won't you tell me why, 3s.6d.; Oh! Dearest, do not, 3s.6d.; The Brook, 3s.6d.; The Mariner Farthing, 3s.; Breakland, 3s.6d.; I wonder if you think of me, 3s.6d.; Sweet Spring, 3s.6d.; The Maiden's Farewell, 3s.6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM, published this day, price 2s., contains Twelve Pieces, composed for the Pianoforte by Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Hummel, Rossini, Auber, Meyerbeer, and Marschner, all fingered and a guinea for the purchase performance.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM, Second Edition, each arranged with Preludes, Exercises, Scales, and Studies, and a short accompaniment. Also, arranged for the Pianoforte, in addition to a set of Quadrilles, Valses, Polkas, Galops, and Mazurkas, all fingered and suitable for the youngest performers.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS' QUICK-STEP JOURNAL FOR BRASS BANDS, printed on pseudo-parts. Now ready, 12 Numbers, price 1s. each, or 12 Numbers in 2 vols., 12s. each vol. Each Number contains two quick-steps, all the parts can be had separately. Instrumentation being adapted for the smallest and largest bands. Boosey's Quick-step Journal contains the most popular tunes, arranged by J. A. KLIPPEL, Bandmaster to Her Majesty. A specimen and prospectus for 2 stamps.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS' 20 ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTCH AIRS arranged as Duets for VIOLIN and PIANO, by W. WATSON, in one book, price 5s. Post-free, 5s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS' 12 OPERATIC AIRS arranged as DUETS for CORNOPEAN, in one book (with separate Treble part), price 5s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

KEBLE'S MORNING and EVENING SERVICES.—For the most successful Musical Service of the day, see Keble's Morning and Evening Service, in F, Chants, &c., 12 stamps. Complete work (20 original hymns), 24 of NOVELLO, 80, Dean-street, Soho; or 35, Berners-street, London. Specimens for 6 stamps.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS, from £ to 140 guineas, constructed throughout in England, and in every variety of style. Prize Medal awarded and obtained. The most indulgent testimonials are daily received from purchasers of these instruments. Illustrated Catalogue on application to the manufacturers, BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES.—CHAPPELL and CO. have 100 Cottage, SQUARE, and GRAND PIANOFORTES, by ERARD, COLLARD, BROADWOOD, and other eminent makers, for SALE or HIRE, on the Three Years' System.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW FIVE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, the most effective for its size, with two ranges of four octaves, fitted for its carriage, school, or church. Price Five Guineas.—ALEXANDRE and SON, 104, Bond-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five octaves, two fourthworks, and in addition to the usual stops an octave coupler, and a knee swell to raise harmonium. Descriptive Lists on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of keys, by ALEXANDRE.—No. 1, with double keyboard, CC to F in alt, 5 octaves, 29 stops, and 6 rows of vibrators, in handsome Gothic case, 6 feet high, 4 feet wide, and 2 feet deep, with carved oak front, in which the pipes are arranged, and the organist's seat in a dressing-room. They are especially recommended for the full effects of choir, organ, and congregational singing, and are consequently not liable to derangement. Testimonials to the above Instrument may be seen at the Manufactory, 104, New Bond-street. Harmonium Manufactory and Organ Factory, Rue de Rimbault, St. Gene, Ste Yvette, Hors Barrie, and the most eminent professors and composers, with full descriptive List, will be forwarded on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE, the leading instrument of the kind that remains in tune; from the simplicity of its construction is not easily deranged. Prices from 20 guineas. Lists of sizes and extract for the Queen's Private Chapel, Windsor.
Full descriptive Lists on application.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CORNETS-A-PISTONS.
Manufactured by
ANTOINE COURTOIS.
PRICES.
The Concert-room Model, with rotary motion key, bronze ... £ 5 5 0
The Concert-room Model, with water slide, in silver 6 6 0
The Cavalry Model, in silver 7 7 0
Testimonials from Jullien, Arban, Distin, Koenig, Hall, Reichardt, Dodsworth, Adams, Austen, Barnes, Harper, and other performers on the above instruments, may be seen at the Manufactory, 103, Rue de la Loi and Rue Grande, Beuzit Meuse Grenier (Bleue), Grenelle-St-Honoré, Paris, and at the Depôt for the United Kingdom, 201, Regent-street, W.
Drawings forwarded on application to Mr. S. A. COURTOIS (late Jullien and Co.), sole Agent, 201, Regent-street, W.

PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS.—GETZMANN and PLUMMER, 191, Barrett-street, will be found open inspection the very best manufactures known in London for Hire and Purchase.—12, Regent-street.

PIANOS and HARMONIUMS. CHAPPELL and SONS, 50, New Bond-street, have for sale, selling off the Hire Stock at greatly-reduced prices—from £16 and £20 each. Lists forwarded.—50, New Bond-street.

GETZMANN and PLUMB have Grands of all descriptions at moderate prices, for Hire, from 10s. a month; also Cottage and Square Pianos, Harmoniums, and other kinds of musical instruments.—191, Barrett-street, W.

BRASS BANDS—DRUM-AND-FIFE BANDS.—Cornets, Saxhorns, Circular Vibrating Horns, Bugles, Drums, Fifes, and every requisite for Bands connected with the trade, at prices below French instruments, by GEORGE HEYLER, 84, Rue Neuve des Petits Champs, Manufacturer, and shipper supplied. Price-lists, with drawings, free by post.

ENGLISH CONCERTINA, genuine, full sound, perfect, fairly and honestly made, with the real tone and touch of the instrument, and not a mere imitation, as sold by many organ-grinders. Sole Maker, W. E. Pilcher, 3, Angel-street, Grey's-inn-road.

TOMBOLO.
The new patriotic Round O Game for Ten or Twenty Persons, 6d. and 1s. 6d.—ASCOT and SHERWIN, 91, Strand, W.C. Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Simpkin and Co.

BAGATELLES from 31s. 6d., complete. The largest stock in London at ASCOT and SHERWINS, Makers, 91, Strand, W.C. Illustrated complete catalogue of Parlour Games free on application.

DULL EVENINGS MADE MERRY.—Just published, the Comic Game of Bagatelle, with Rules for Playing, Scoring, and Counting. Complete with apparatus, 1s. 6d. ASCOT and SHERWIN, 91, Strand.

DENT'S CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, and CLOCKS—65, CHEAPSIDE, and 34, Royal Exchange, Watch, Clock, and Chronometer Maker by special appointment to her Majesty the Queen.
65, Cheapside-street (corner of Spring-gardens), London.

TOBODSHAM and BAKER, Chronometer Makers to the Admiralty, Chronometers to the Queen. Tobodsham, Dupuis, and Tobodsham, of the most improved construction, Pocket Chronometers, Watches, and Chronometer Clocks. Address, 31, Cornhill-street, London, E.C. Established 1801.

MR. J. D. HARDING'S Patent LEAD TAGGETS (with his Son, Robert, and stamps complete). Effects can with them be obtained which are not within the compass of the ordinary lead pencil. Sole manufacturers, WINSOR and NEWTON, 37, Rathbone-place, London.

W. F. THOMAS and CO.'S PATENT SEWING-MACHINES.—In these machines are combined the following advantages:—Perfection of stitch, alike on both sides of the work; economy, saving of cotton, beauty and strength of work, they are unrivalled. The stitching produced is alike on both sides of the material, there is no need to cut off the thread ends, and the Lock-stitch Lists of Prices and Specimens of the Work can be had at 66 Newgate-street, and 143 Regent-street, London.

LOCK-STITCH SEWING-MACHINES, for Household and Manufacturing purposes, by WILSON and GIBBS, Patentees, with recent improvements. Crystal Glass-plate Work-Table, Glass Cover, &c. Offices and Show-rooms, 139, Regent-street, W., London (late 69, Oxford-street). Illustrated Prospectus, with Testimonials, Prize Medals, Opinions of Eminent Physicians, Lists and patterns free.

CHUBB'S FIREPROOF and THIEFPROOF SAFES, CHUBB'S PATENT LOCKS and DETECTOR LOCKS. Illustrated Price Lists gratis and post-free.—CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's-churchyard, London.

45, OXFORD-STREET, W.
OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS, for Ball and Supper Rooms, Halls, Staircases, and Out-door Glass Under Services for 12 persons, from £7 15s.
Glass for Dessert, Table, and Bedroom Use.
All articles marked in plain figures.
Ormamental Glass, English and Foreign, suitable for presents
Alum, Fingers, and Decanters Ewers, pyramidal specimens, Lemonade-cisternettes, &c. Oxford-street, W.
Glass Manufactory, Broadbridge-street, Westminster-road, Lambeth.

GARDNERS' £2 2s. DINNER SERVICES.—A large selection of patterns of the choicest description, including the new Registered Designs in the best taste at the lowest possible prices. Table glass of brilliant quality and finish; Chandeliers, for Gas or Candles; Ormolu Clocks, Inkstands, Candlesticks, and ormolu, Clearing-cross. Established 120 years. Illustrated Catalogue post-free.

J. MAPLE and CO.'S FIRST-CLASS FURNITURE.
Subscriber Wire Wove Mattresses; also, with glide-plate frames, 31 guineas. Spring Sofas, in rep, with spring cushions, 6 guineas; Bedsteads of every description, in wood, iron, and brass. Bedding of every description; several tons always in stock. Drawing-room Furniture, from 12 to 20 guineas; Dining-room Furniture, from 10 guineas; Library Furniture, from 6 guineas; Easy chairs, from 2 guineas; Chimney-glasses, from 1 guinea; Pier-glasses, from 3 guineas; very large tables, in cloth, from £12 to £25; Bookcases, from £3 upwards.
Illustrated Catalogues free on application.
MAPLE and CO., Tottenham-court-road.

WALNUT SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM FURNITURE.—A great bargain.—of sterling quality, equal to new, the property of a gentleman declining housekeeping, the walnut oval tea-table, on ormolu claws, a 5-ft. chiffonier with plate-glass back, a handsome cabinet, with plate-glass doors, a capacious sofa and easy chair, in rich figured rep, with ormolu and antique bronze carvings, a walnut whatnot, fancy tables, and two occasional chairs. Also, a handsome mahogany Telescope Dining-Table to seat 16 ft. ORDER and CO.S, Upholsterers, 54, Mortimer-street, three doors from Cavendish-square.

CAUTION.—SMEE'S SPRING MATTRESS, Tucker's, Patent, or Semitic Timber. Counterpanes, sheets, blankets, quilts, and every description of bedding, wholesale and retail, at the lowest possible prices, to which accounts will be the general appearance of the Smee's Spring Mattress is carefully guarded. Sold by all upholsterers in the kingdom.
William Smee and Sons, having now the sanction of the patent right are able to offer the genuine article at the following prices.

Size No. 1 for Bedsteads 3 feet wide	20s.
No. 2	24s.
No. 3	28s.
No. 4	32s.
No. 5	36s.

Other sizes in proportion. To be obtained of all respectable upholsterers and bedding manufacturers.
Deposit notice should be taken that each Spring Mattress bears upon the side the name of WILLIAM SMEE and SONS.

G. M. INNES and CO., Wine Merchants, 22, Strand, W.C., strongly recommend their PALE DRY SHERRIES at 30s., 36s., and 36s. ; Vins de Pâtes, 48s.; Pure Medoc Claret, 36s.

EAU-DE-VIE.—This Pure PALE BRANDY, 20 years in wood, is highly recommended, to be specially free from acidity, and very superior to most importations of genuine Cognac. Price 42s. per gallon. Terms, cash. Carriage paid on Railway carriage paid. No agents, and to be obtained only of HENRY BRETT and CO., 4, Mincing-lane, London.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA is "always good in adds," is supreme in not even accorded pawkeal adore pronounced by connoisseurs to be the finest flavour they have ever met with in the tea. Price 2s. 8d., 3s. and 3s. 4d. per lb. Sold only in packets, by agents in every town, with the Proprietors' Name and Trade Mark (Lion and Unicorn), on the Packets. Horniman and Co., 90, St. Paul's-road, 30, Churchward—Dalston, Islington, 45, Moorgate-street, City, and 216, Piccadilly. Horniman's Agreements supplied in every town in the Kingdom.

A MOST DESIRABLE BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.
EPPS'S COCOA
Is manufactured from Epps's Homœopathic Cocoa.
The delicious aroma, genial comfortness, and invigorating power of this preparation have rendered it the general beverage at a fashionable breakfast hour. Each packet is labelled "James Epps, Homœopathic Chemist, 170, Piccadilly, and 112, London-road, Lower Clapton, and by grocers everywhere.

BROWN AND POLSON'S
PATENT CORN FLOUR
being first of the kind manufactured in the United Kingdom and Prussia, is the ORIGINAL.
but indisputably the most valuable kind which, by its own superior excellence, and the test of 20 years, has been adopted by the best families as an invariable table delicacy. It is prepared by a process to which the Patentees have a right, the peculiar purity, and from grain carefully selected from the choicest European crops, being guaranteed. It is sold by grocers, oilmen, and chandlers in the trade, and is specially recommended by numerous testimonials from all others, and pronounced by "The Lancet" (July 24, 1858) "decidedly superior to any other kind."
Recipes from the "Cook's Guide" by C. E. Francatelli, late Chief Cook to her Majesty the Queen.
Manufactory, Paisley and London.

To ease dessert—pourfull of Brown and Polson mixed with a strawberry jam, raspberry jam, or apricot jam, and cover with a rich custard. Ornament with whipped cream and the top and the base of the dish with a border composed of sponge cakes, the latter of which must be brought up by hand, the first stratum that be placed on the dish. Ornament with fruit, and the whole dessert would be imitation.
Families furnished on their orders.
Families furnished on their orders by the post the genuine article from Brown and Polson's name in full and Trade-mark, could discourage the free action of a trader who misrepresents by which the benefits of inferior kinds are evaded.
Many farmers, dairymen, &c., supply the best quality, in preference to the best-paid articles, and since now Brown and Polson's

FLOUR Warranted, free to Families, in and 12 round Packets, 1s. 6d. Households, 3s. 6d. Rounds, 5s. 6d.; Rounds, 8s. 6d.—HOUSEHOLD and PURVEYORS, Bolton-street, and 91, Sloane-street, S.W.

STILTON CHEESE—FRESH RUTTER. The finest dairies of each are at all times supplied by HALL'S Cheesemongers,
Established 1815, in supply families only.
Cheese sent to all parts.

SWANN and CO.'S STOURPORT MALT SUNDRAS for PICKING. The best brown. Vide "Lancet," Dec. 1, and Aug. 28, 1858. Sold by Grocers, Oilmen, &c., in 1 lb. 2 lb., 3 lb., 5 lb., 10 lb., and 20 lb. packets. Sole Proprietors, SWANN and CO., Stourport, Worcestershire.

THE FINEST TRANSPARENT WAX CANDLES are those made by Hamilton Cousins, Candle Manufacturer, 186, Strand. Every kind of Candle for Home use or for Exportation. Price-list sent free. Wax Candles only at very moderate prices.
Wax Tapers, Wax Lights, Wax Vestas, Wax Tapers, Wax Cornices, Wax Tapers, Wax Candles,

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA: MUNSON'S HILL, WITH THE EARTHWORK THROWN UP BY THE CONFEDERATES IN FRONT OF THE UNION LINES, VIRGINIA.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 357.

FALL OF A BRIDGE AT YORK.

AN accident of a fearful nature occurred at York yesterday week. It will be remembered by visitors to that city that the railway-station stands on the opposite bank of the river to the cathedral, with an inconvenient ferry to cross over at that point. It was proposed to erect an iron bridge there, consisting of four girders of iron, two to support a carriage-way, and two outer and lighter ones to support a footpath on each side. The two carriage girders were in their places; the two footpath girders were also brought to the spot, and one was in the act of being lowered to its proper position, when it toppled over, and fell on the inner girder; that after a few seconds fell on the next, till the whole mass was precipitated like a child's toyhouse on the ground and into the river. Five men were killed and some others were much injured. Our Engraving is from a sketch taken by MR. R. J. MOORE.

VIEW OF THE RUINS OF LENDAL BRIDGE, YORK, TAKEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER ITS FALL.

OUR COAST DEFENCES.

THOSE who take an interest in the proceedings of the Legislature will know, from the wise and determined course pursued by our Prime Minister, and from the discussions during the last two Sessions of Parliament, that our chief statesmen have resolved to place the country in a settled state of defence. The tarpaying public, which may be held broadly to include the whole community, have also long since felt, in one shape or other, the financial arrangements made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in providing the ways and means for accomplishing that object, and thus have learned that, it, in simply a monetary sense, war be a costly means to a desirable end, a far more lasting and benumbing pass—that about "penny-by-penny which arises from a perfect state of defence" is scarcely less costly. If a state of peace is to result from the one course as well as from the other, the advantages must be with the latter. It is evident, from the fact that the wealthy people to protect themselves, their property, and institutions, and so adopt a policy that may at the same time diminish the likelihood of war, with its frightful sacrifice of human life, and all its evil influences on the morality of the world.

The settled purpose of the nation that the country shall be made strong and be power of defence increased has been most unmistakably declared by the organisation of the volunteers. Men of all ranks of society, from the Peer of the realm to the gamekeeper, have freely given their time, and, with the generous aid afforded from the purses of their neighbours and friends, have equipped themselves in battalions and clothed themselves in uniform, inscribing "Defence, not Defiance," on their banners. This force, raised almost entirely without assistance from the Imperial treasury, is animated with one of the instinct of the people and the acts of their rulers accord with each other.

From time to time we have prominently shown and illustrated in these pages the progress that has been made in the reconstruction of that most important—nay, vital—section of our coast defences, the ships of the Royal Navy, which has been so rapidly carried on during the past few years—so rapidly, indeed, that it seems but yesterday when that noble ship the Agincourt, the first of the new class of large wooden sail-of-battle ships, was launched; and yet the steam-engine and the screw-propeller have been so perfected that our naval list of effective ships now contains but few that depend upon the wind as a means of propulsion. Screw steam-ships are certainly the rule, and not the exception.

Scarcely, however, had the strength of the Navy been, through an experiment of vast cost and energy, thus augmented when our ship-wrights and engineers were called upon to design men-of-war with hulls proof, at least, against shells—shells which, though not yet in practicable, against solid shot of a greater weight projected with almost uncarriage precision from far greater distances than hitherto been attained, even thought of. This rapid development of rifled ordnance, and the still more astonishing results obtained from the Armstrong and Whitworth guns, had rendered our means of attack vastly superior to that of defence. To restore in ships as far as possible, an equality of power in these respects, sail-of-the-line armour-plated ships have been constructed; and our illustration of the Warrior and others of her class will have shown what has been achieved in rendering our floating defence (for they are in reality floating forts or wooden walls) strong enough to repel the bolt projected from such a weapon as an Armstrong gun.

This extraordinary increase in the range and power of cannon, and the experience gained during the progress of the late war between Russia and Turkey, caused the Government and the military engineers to look closely into the nature and extent of that other section of our coast defences which comprises the fortifications and works on our coasts and yards and stations.

The defence of the dockyards against attack ought obviously to be a matter of the first consideration. In the time of the Armada we relied almost entirely upon our fleet, and well did it perform its reliance justified. In later times batteries and other consequent works upon the land were judged to be necessary to assist the fleet in protecting the town roadsteads and stations, as well as the coast generally. The citadel of Dover, with its strong casemated barracks and its wide and deep ditches, was constructed; there were formed round the Chatham, Portsmouth, and Plymouth yards; and martello towers sprang up along the south coast. It is, however, evident that works which in the time of William III. were rightly thought to be sufficient to keep an attacking force at bay are now totally inefficient for that purpose. The artillery of the day, when placed on the hills commanding Portsmouth, Plymouth, and perhaps other of our naval stations and roadsteads, would have no power to prevent against them; whilst the long-range (or we might almost say the ordinary) gun of the present day, if similarly planted, could throw shot and shell into the midst of them. If these positions were occupied by even an active and enterprising enemy, our means and facilities for building, repairing, and refitting ships could be totally destroyed.

The whole subject was thoroughly investigated by the Royal Commission as of 1859, which, under her Majesty's gracious command, inquiries might be made into the present state, condition, and sufficiency of the fortifications existing for the defence of the United Kingdom, and especially such works of defence as are intended for the protection of the Royal arsenals and dockyards, in case of any hostile attack being made by foreign enemies, both by land and sea.

From the report of the Royal Commissioners it became evident that, as in the case of our ships of war already mentioned, the whole system to which the Commissioners' attention was directed must be reconstructed, strengthened, and enlarged, and new work of great magnitude must be undertaken; heavier artillery must be provided to meet the increased power of artillery; heights that formerly overlooked but not to be of much importance must now be occupied, and, under cover with batteries and barracks, to prevent an advance occupation, and to keep an enemy who might be ill-posted to reach the Schatorp campaign at a safe distance.

THE WESTERN DEFENCES OF DEVONPORT AND PLYMOUTH.

Many of the works recommended by the Commissioners in their report are already in progress, and we illustrate the defences for the western defences of Devonport and Plymouth. A reference to the map will show that the extension to Plymouth Dockyard includes the domain of Mount Edgcumbe on the west, and by Staddon Heights on the east, the waters of the Sound and communication by Devonport and Keyham through the anchorage of Hamoaze, and then tread round to the west, in the arm known as the St. Germans River, so far as to form a peninsula. Across the neck of this peninsula, which is about two miles in length from the river to the shores of the Channel in Wallsand Bay, a line of fortification is now being constructed, consisting of something like 6000 yards from Devonport dockyard.

The elevation of the land is considerable, standing near the principal and highest work called Tregantle Fort, which is near upon 400ft. above the level of the sea, the dockyard, the ships at anchor in the Sound, and the magnificent breakwater which has already seem to be at one's feet, entirely exposed to the effects of artillery. A single glance across the map and sketch will show that this is the most rigid economist of the value of such a position to an enemy if we were not living rapidly proceeded with, the construction of works in any feasible place further westward. The Fort of Tregantle, which forms the left of the line of defence, is really a most formidable work, and is now being rapidly proceeded with. Its ramparts are being cut, in, of course, to the front, rear upon a very thick and solid parapet of earth-work, and is protected by a deep and wide ditch, having its scarp and counterscarp walled with heavy masonry. Its guns will command every possible line of approach; and where the configuration of the hill does not afford a natural glacis an artificial one is now being formed. In the rear, and upon a lower level, protected by, and indeed quite under, the battery in front, are the barracks, built with stone of cyclopean dimensions, with walls thick enough to withstand any ordinary bombardment, although it is doubtful, from their sheltered situation, if a shell could reach them. These barracks, and indeed every room, down to the immense water-tanks and the stable, are intended to be bomb-proof, to be made so by very thick arches, for which ample provision has been made in the piles of bricks in and around the works. At the gorge, as it were, and between the battery and the barracks, is the Keep, a ponderous mass of seemingly very strong masonry, with two tiers of guns, the lower range in casemates and the upper commanding the fort itself and overlooking the adjacent country. From the higher level of this keep a perp is obtained into the skeleton of the entire work, and one can see the numerous contrivances of military engineers for defending the position; the galleries and loopholes for musketry, the traverses to protect the passages in case of shot or metal, by means of which all the ditches could, in case of an attack, be readily cleared of the enemy. Below the keep is the passage to the covered way, which is afterwards covered up and buried, and, we presume, to be "secret," running like arteries from the various parts of the fortress, communicating with the Keep, as the place to be resorted to in a last extremity.

The fort caps the hill, and, as the highest point of it is at a distance of some two thousand feet from the cliff which overhangs the beautiful bay, it is considered secure from attack in that direction. Hills have, therefore, been thrown down and hollows filled up to form an inclined plane or glacis, which covers many acres, to be hereafter swept by the fire of some six or eight guns hidden in the recesses of the fort. A breastwork of earth has been formed along its entire length—that is, say, from the fort to the sea—in front of which breastwork, and between it and the glacis, is a ditch extending from the main ditch to the scarp of the cliff itself, so that any attempt to pass between the fort and the sea will be rendered impossible.

There is another work at Scraesdon Arm upon the beach so far advanced, which forms the right of the line, and overlooks the inland waters, and commands the main and perhaps only practicable road on this side the country. It is commanded by a casemated battery of forty-six guns, and a ditch and parapet with an intermediate small work.

Why are the Illustrations, one from in front of the entire line, the other from the rear of Fort Tregantle, showing the Barracks and the Keep.

These works, from their magnitude, intricacy, and great strength, are a proof that our Royal Engineers, who designed them, are quite equal to the task entrusted by their country. Some of the works for the purposes of earth to support the batteries, and very strong casemated barracks for the men, have been erected on England's coast, on the side of the light earthworks and flimsy buildings which are to be found in many of the fortifications of the French coast. Captain Scott, Royal Engineer, Lieutenant-Colonel Cunliffe Owen, C.B., is an officer of great experience, gained at home, and abroad—at home as Assistant Inspector-General of Fortifications, and abroad as Chief Engineer in the Crimea. In all this let us hope there is a complete guarantee that the fortifications will be what they contain, fully in the main, be ready dispensed, and that this work of fortification in time of need, should that ever arise, will prove to be all that the nation can wish it shall be.

The eastern defences of the Sound on Staddon Heights have also had been constructed, and consist of a strong fort, with barracks in a chain of forts with connecting lines of ditch and parapet, between the St. Germans River and the Hamoaze, and the Keyham Yard and Basin, opposite to Staddon Heights; and thus, as it were, to insulate the entire arsenal and garrison, and without doubt to ensure its perfect safety against all causes.

THE DEATH OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.

Dost thou call me dead?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?

THE circumstances attending the death of the "famous Baron," as he was proudly called, William I., are replete with painful interest to the thoughtful and Christian reader. Before his last illness overtook him, the Conqueror had crossed over from England to Normandy preparatory to an attack on France, and was sojourning at Rouen, where he had passed several days in the full enjoyment of his usual health and vigour. It seems but a few days since he "by the splendour of God"—his customary oath when strongly moved—that if he ever lying in he would visit his dominions in France, and, giving orders for the burning of many thousand torches. No sooner was he sufficiently recovered than he proceeded to put his threat into execution. Assembling a large armament at his forces and led them into France, ravaging and destroying every village on his route. Upon arriving at the city of Mantes he ordered it to be consumed with fire. It would be tedious to attempt to gratify his insatiate rage for devastation, he rode furiously through the streets, ranging on his horse, and encouraging his men to the work of conflagration. While this cruelty employed his horse chanced to step upon some burning embers, one of which, rising with a sudden spring, threw the King upon the pommel of the saddle. The shock, though violent, would probably have been overcome, but the heat of the season and of the fire within his body, which was corpulent, occasioned him an inflammation and compelled him again to take to his bed. He was carried back to Rouen, and, growing worse, he sent for the clergy to arrange able to bear the noise of the city, caused himself to be borne to St. Gervais, a priory without the walls, and, on the assembling of priests and physicians, he lay for six weeks; and, as his malady increased, he is said to have expressed intense remorse for the many cruelties he had committed, one especially in the North, seeing that his compunction on this point that, although he confirmed the dedication of Normandy to his son Robert, he left the Government of England to any one, lest his Government should inflict the like barbarities on his English subjects. Whether this was expressed in hope that William Rufus, his obedient son, might be allowed to possess it.

After giving many sage directions for the welfare of his dominions, and bequeathing legacies to churches, and the gift of liberty, the King prepared for death.

On the 15th of September, 1087, he was awakened by the bell of St. Mary's Church, which was ringing for the early matin service. He asked what it meant, and being told that the holy Mary Church [Virgin] his hands and said, "I commend myself to that blessed lady, Mary the mother of God, that she, by her merciful intercession, may reconcile me to her Son, our Lord Jesus Christ," and which she has happened in the sixty-fourth year of his age, after reigning fifty-two years in Normandy and twenty-one in England. The manner of his death, when he was dead the courtiers and physicians who had passed the night in attendance broke themselves in haste to their different homes to look after their own interests, each one plundering all he could, seeing the selfishness of those above them, stripped down the costly hangings and bed-clothes, and, upon the floor, left the naked corpse, jewels, plate, and wardrobe, leaving the dead body alone and almost naked upon the floor; and there, in this condition, without a single attendant, it lay for many hours. The conqueror's last property was the matter of two kingdoms, the feeder of a countless host, and the most powerful monarch in Christendom; now he crouched within Ordericus upon this humiliating sight, "O secular pomp! how despicable art thou, how contemptible and wretched! Thou art only compared to the bubbles made by rain, for, like them, thou swellest for an instant, to vanish into nought. Survey the most puissant hero whom lately a thousand knights surrounded, and who, before whom the proudest nations trembled, now lying on the naked ground spoiled and abandoned by every one!"

> "I should greatly desire, if God so please, to advance my noble and gallant son William. He has set his heart upon England, and it may be that he will be able there to find a set upon of retaining power for it. Recognised and fought by strong, and by wrong How many there and killed their heirs; and of the wrong he has done to me, and to which I am not guilty, I can only say to my son: he cannot inherit through my wrong. But I will send him over sea, and will pray the Archbishop Lanfranc to grant him the crown if he can do so justly.—The Chronicle of the Conquest."

THE NOVA SCOTIA GOLDFIELDS.

PARTICULARS of the discovery of gold in Nova Scotia, accompanied by illustrations, have from time to time been given in this Journal. The Engravings of the Lanesborough goldfield on page 347 are from sketches obligingly forwarded to us by Capt. Campbell Hardy, R.A., who supplies us also with the following details respecting the locality illustrated and the mining prospects of Nova Scotia:—

"Every day fresh discoveries of auriferous districts are being made in this province, and new diggings ('yellow fever' has already its appearance within a most alarming propinquity to the city of Halifax—scarcely ten miles distant—at a spot called Lawrence Mill, where superficial quartz rocks have, on being broken, shown rich traces of gold, and directed attention to the whole region from which they have been detached. At Lawrence Town, at Gold River, and at several other places whose names will be recognised by those who have visited this province, goldbearing veins of quartz have been discovered in abundance. These discoveries are most important. The whole of the metamorphic district—which is that of coast—is a large portion of the interior, are, without doubt, auriferous. But, let it be stated for the information of individuals who may contemplate seeking their fortunes in one the nearest of the yet-discovered American gold regions, that they are not in the least likely to repay the man who may embark, without capital, experience, and the use of his golden fortune in large nuggets, and with little labour, from the narrow quartz veins which intersperse the clay-slate of the gold districts. Without doubt quartzmining will repay companies organised to prosecute mining on an extensive scale, with the requisite machinery for crushing the quartz; but I can aver that in the numerous instances of solitary gold-seekers working their narrow claims of some thirty feet square, which are purchased of the Provincial Government for £1 sterling, and on a year's lease, they have not been repaid for leaving their lucrative trades and vocations. Does, however, one catch capital with their shafts, and on an extended base of operation, will do well. Nuggets are found here of the second water, like those of any size, with an exception which was brought to Halifax last week, and where the mass of gold was valued at nearly 900 dollars. This came from the debris of one of the numerous goldfields at Tangier, where mining is being prosecuted with much energy, and, as is usual, with greater results than the same work has broken into from the surface. At Lunenburg, however, there has been a great harvest for some 150 individuals who were in time to secure claims on a rich auriferous seabeach at the head of the bay. The clay-slate, disposed in concordant veins of quartz on its face, called the Over's Head. This headland is above five miles from the town of the same name, and the Lunenburg, of which an illustration is given, and derives its name from a number of caverns which have been hollowed out of the solid rock by the incessant dash of Atlantic waves at an angle to the inclination of the strata. A low-lying plateau of land projecting seaward from the head has evidently been the result of debris of similar beds, and overwashed by the sea, and on its beach the mingled sand and pounded shale are highly charged with gold. This, being carried backwards by the crevices of the shale strata below high-water mark, and as yet each spring and autumn such labour is rewarded by parcels of gold-dust and golden harvest, easily reached with the usual appliances of cradles, tubs, and tin, washers, has necessarily fallen to the lot of the first comers, but it has been most amply remunerative. I believe that 13½m. of fine gold have been taken from 100lb. weight of roughly-crushed sand. The quartz-mining on the land is not to be neglected. The Lunenburg I saw gave good signs of gold, though in very small specks; but this was quite at the surface. The gold-mining at the Gold River has been the cause of her prosperity equally amongst all her children.

Letters of administration to the estate of the Hon. Archibald Macdonald, formerly of Cornwall-place, Hyde Park, but late of Belgrave-terrace, Pimlico, who died on the 16th of August last, at the age of 74, have been granted to his Miss Mary Bridget Macdonald, the daughter of the deceased. The Hon. A. Macdonald died suddenly, having survived his wife, Jane Sinclair, who died only four months. As in all cases of this kind, the estate will have to be sworn under the head of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Hon. Mr. Macdonald, who died at the advanced age of eighty-four, was of a distinguished family—being the son of Lord Macdonald, of Sleat, and after his deceased to the testator's niece, Elizabeth, daughter of his brother, James George Macdonald, and the late Lady Louisa Macdonald. By his will the personalty, after the payment of legacies, &c., is directed to pass in a similar manner to the heirs-at-law of the testator's brother, James George Macdonald, deceased, the unfortunate father of the late Duchess of Hamilton. The testator bequeaths his estate at Sleat to his nephew, Lord Macdonald, and to the heirs-at-law of his servants. To his godson, Frankum Martin Morris, he leaves all his printed books, with the exception of those relating to genealogy, which the testator has bequeathed some pictures to the University College, Gower street, and to the Scottish Institution, Regent-street; but he cannot find that they can be bestowed on the National Gallery. The power of the selection of the paintings and works of art is vested in the executors and trustees.

THE NISHAN OSMANIEH.—His Majesty the Sultan has created a new Order of Ottoman Knighthood under the title of the Nishan O'manieh, the decoration of which is of the most brilliant description, and will only be worn by the highest civil or military services, or on personages of exalted rank. The order is to be worn by the sovereign princes of the house of which will be a grand cordon of green with longitudinal red stripes. The star of the order is to be worn on the left breast, and the badge on the left side. The badge consists of a circular centrepiece of about the size of an English shilling, surrounded by a wreath of brilliants, and of crimson enamel, and will bear the following: epigraph:—"El mudellu bi inayeti rabbihi," which is translated as "He who is assisted by the favour of God." The star of the order of the Sultan Abd-ul-Aziz Khan, Sovereign of the Ottoman dominions." The star of the order is composed of eight rays of silver, the nearer from the ribbon of the order, and that of the left side of the badge of the order. The statutes of the order have been drawn up by Fuad Effendi and the Viceroy of Egypt has received the insignia of the order, and the Grand Cordon and star from the hands of Sir Henry Bulwer, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, who has received the first class of the order.—Levant Herald.

A GERMAN BARONESS CHARGED WITH POISONING HER HUSBAND.—The trial of Baroness Von Imhoff, at Munich, last summer was tried, has just been thrown into excitement nearly equal to that of the Becker case by the trial of Baroness Von Imhoff-Dachsberg, on a charge of having to poison her husband. The trial occupied the sittings of the Assize Court at Bernhard during the last three days. The wife of Baron Von Imhoff is a lady of forty-two years of age, and is described as of a distinguished and noble family, with rich connections. She has been received at the court by her daughter. The charge against the Baroness was that she had attempted to take the life of her husband by mingling quantities of arsenic with the sugar usually put into warmed beer which he was in the habit of having served to him. A singular peculiarity in the case was that only some of the servants of the Baroness had set suspicion on foot, and that the whole of the family, including the children of the Baron, never believed the charge, and in his examination before the Court, Baron Imhoff all of a repulsion of his wife's innocence with the utmost confidence. Some trifling quarrels between the married pair appeared to have first given rise to any suspicion. The jury only remained absent a few minutes, and then returned a verdict of "Not guilty," which was received with loud applause in a densely-packed court. The Baron on his bench immediately rushed to his wife and embraced her, and the scene which took place is described as having been singularly affecting.

LITERATURE.

It might be supposed that at this season the fountain of publication would have ceased playing altogether; but this is not quite the case. Books drop in, certainly, with something of the infrequency of other visitors at this time of the year; but still they do come, and it is necessary to do what in us lies to give notice of their existence.

We have just received the second volume of Mr. Moy Thomas's edition of "The Letters and Works of Lady Wortley Montagu" (Henry G. Bohn). As will probably be remembered, this is the third edition of the work, and is founded on that which we published under the auspices of Lord Wharncliffe, the great-grandson of Lady Mary. The present editor, Mr. Moy Thomas, as we have before had occasion to observe, has with great industry collected many additions to the subject-matter, has made many corrections derived from original manuscript, and has added to the text numerous illustrative notes. The same care, accuracy, and taste which characterised the first volume is evident in this issue. It contains 18 volume range from 1718 to 1762), and the list of correspondents is so long that it is not desirable to attempt to give any thing of it beyond a few of the most noticeable names. As in the first volume, many of the letters are addressed to Lady Mary, and among her correspondents we find Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, Mr. James Stuart Mackenzie, Lord Pembroke, Lord John Hervey, Henry Fielding, Lord Peterborough, Lady Rich, Lord Bute, Mr. Wortley, the Prince of Wales, Mr. Pomfret, the Countess of Bute, Sir James and Lady Frances Steuart, &c. More letters are written from the Continent, many of them from Venice; and some of them refer to the painful episode in her life which was connected with the name of Count Rosi, ever spoken of by Lady Mary but with a sneer. The characteristic of these epistles; and it is not the least amusing part of the book to read the list of enquiries and observe the way in which each hits the tattle of the writer takes. The appendix contains, in the first place, that which is a Funeral Sermon preached on the occasion, by Archdeacon Richardson of Spitalsermon," by Lady Mary, executed by her when she was scarcely twenty years old. This she presented to a friend, desiring to asking his alterations and corrections, which was granted. The alterations of the Preacher are here printed in italics. Even though the superficial and hasty reader contains but little more than a curiosity than of the Greek original he just, yet even that would suffice to give her Ladyship a place among the learned English ladies of the end of the period. Some essays in English and French, and several poems, some of them written in 1710, are subjoined; and, altogether, the volume is remarkably sound, and in some respects very interesting, one. It should be said that the volume is embellished with several portraits.

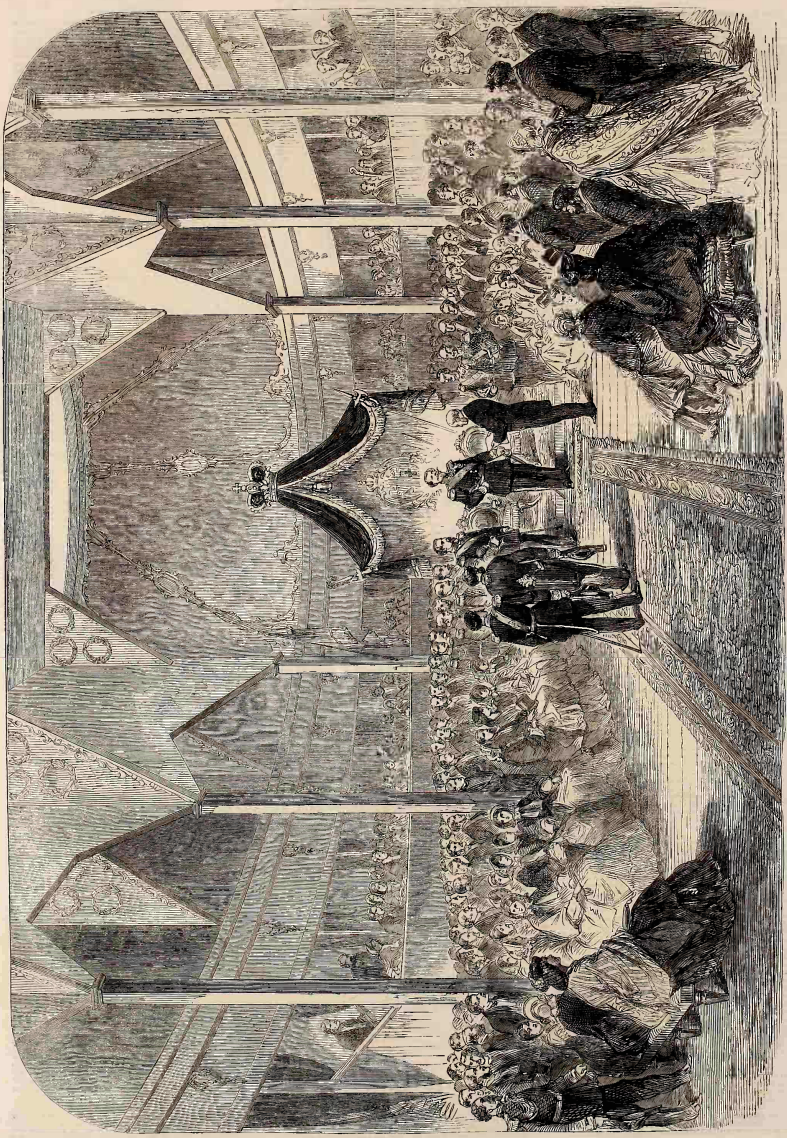
The system of reprinting popular and approved works in a condensed form and at a moderate price appears to be growing in favour with us. Among others before us may mention Miss Fearer's "Life of Jeanne D'Albret, Queen of Navarre and France" (Hurst and Blackett), which has been published in a very neat and convenient form. It is hardly necessary at this time to dwell on the acknowledged merits of this book, as we have said, on a former occasion, that it contains an adequate test of popularity. But it may not be superfluous to say that Miss Pearer has been modest in not adding to the title "and Times" after that word "Life" in her title, for the book is an admirable epitome of history which can never be referred to without bringing up hosts of associations connected with personages and events which made great impressions on the times, many of both, unhappily, being more connected with evil than with good, and with the triumph of good deeds, and beneficial effects. The life of Queen Jeanne is a study of the age, while her own character was so marked as to make her one of the most illustrious existence interesting is no common degree. Among other reprints we have one of a series issued by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, which embraces popular works by Messrs. Trollope, Mrs. Gaskell, Thackeray, Miss Mulock, &c. The work before us is "Barchester Towers," by Miss Trollope, and, without indeed a broadness, of view in part of the plot which made it rather of the bunch-and-straw kind, on the whole the book will maintain its popularity, and the result has been that it has been released in a cheaper form, with some revisions, and an illustration by Phiz. Another reprint, in two novels, we take the opportunity of stating that a new aspirant to fame in that department of literature has appeared, and, under the initials "C. M.," puts forth a tale in two volumes entitled "The Rival Crees" (Tinsley Brothers). There is some power of description, and not a little command of character, developed by the author, more in the sides of incident wanting; but there is a crudeness of arrangement and a pressing together somewhat too much of matter into too little space, altogether to prevent the imagination of the writer, which a little training and discipline may correct in any future publication.

A revised Account of the Country Seats of Great Britain is not to be despised. So much historical interest clusters to and so much political importance still attaches to this little rock in the Mediterranean that any one seeking to render its local and general annals familiar to the British public deserves a welcome. Such is the task undertaken by Mr. William Tallack in a book designated "Malta under the Phœnicians, Knights, and English" (A. W. Bennett). Though not nominally or intentionally a guide book, this volume will serve as well as any other the purpose of an itinerary, although of course is embellished with sketches of the general aspect of the islands, their harbours, forts, and dockyards; dilates on its Christian and Phœnician antiquities, its natural history, and especially its geology, ornithology, and conchology. It devotes a view of certain of the more curious Maltese ceremonials which are customary, especially those on St. Paul's Day and the Festival of the Assumption, and concludes with a brief but clear has a narrative of its successive possessors, including, of course, the famous Knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, to which a good deal to say of the scriptural associations of Malta; and in an appendix gives a bit of the marine shells and of the fish peculiar to the country. This catalogue leads for the book, and is a pleasant way of the merit in containing a good deal of matter which cannot but be of interest.

The subject of freemasonry has been so much before the public, both of the outside world, and half-and-thirty years have often made peace with their curiosity by declaring that there was no secret at all. Any one who in late years there has been a disposition to draw back the veil from the mystery, and, or supposed, even by professors of the craft, and we believe that the body is divided into two great sections, to be severally entitled "Old" and "Young Freemasonry." However, here we have published by Brother Matthew Cooke, 33, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields—close to the High Temple of the Craft in Bagbuilder—"The History and Articles of Masonry," by Brother Cooke, and dedicated by permission to the Worshipful Brother John Havers, P.S.G.D., Assistant Clerk of the Board of General Purposes. There is a long list of subscribers to the work, at the head of which stands the name of the Earl of Zetland, the Grand Master of the order, and all the others are brothers of the craft. So far, then, the revelation, if it be one, bears the stamp of legitimacy. It is published from a MS. in the British Museum, the original of which is to be found in that national collection, and is numbered 23,198. The present editor says that, judging from the character of the handwriting and the form of the contractions employed by the scribe, it was most probably written in the latter portion of the fifteenth century, and may be considered a very clear specimen of the penmanship of the period. By whom or for whom it was originally penned there is no means of ascertaining; but from the style it may be conjectured to have belonged to some master of the craft, and to have been used in assemblies of Masons as a textbook of the traditional history and laws of the fraternity. It is written on vellum, is in a good state of preservation, and is protected by its original binding of two oak covers, at a former period secured by a pair of brass clasps, of which only remain. Its height is 4¾ inches by 3½ inches in width. On the first folio, which is fastened down to the inside of the wood cover, are three portions of writing by modern hands. The first has been considerably obliterated, but the word "war" is still visible. The second, quite legible, is "William K." The third, in the hand of Sir Frederick Madden, the Keeper of the MSS. in the Museum, shows how it came into the library of that institution, in a memorandum stating that it was "Purchased of Mrs. Caroline Baker, Oct. 14, 1839." On folio 1 is written, in a large bold hand, "Jno. Fenn, 1726," and engrossed on the back of the leaf is "Fenn's Manuscript." Folio 2 is headed "Robert Crowe." There are numerous other peculiarities about the MS., which extends over thirty-four folio or sixty-eight pages, which are stated in the preface to the work. To keep as near the MS. as possible, the editor has printed it exactly as it is found, with the old spelling; and, although in prose, the lines have been numbered, as in poetry, for facility of reference. The subject-matter, it is scarcely necessary to say, is of the most curious character, the editor wishes it to be understood that he is not in any way responsible for his view of Masonic history which he gives. He must, however, in fairness to the work of such antiquity that none other of the like subject and of equal remoteness is known to exist, and that it is a most curious relic. We may add that no doubt that to the initiated it will prove very interesting; as regards the uninitiated we can say nothing beyond that it is a work which will be read by the latest of the curious in the Masonic part proper looks awfully mysterious.

Dr. Andrew Ure, junior is favourably known to the public by a book, entitled "Curiosities of Civilisation," and he again claims their favour in a volume headed "Our Social Bees." This is, as was to previous publication, a collection of papers which have appeared in various periodicals, and the compiler treats on various subjects, some of present interest, others of a more permanent character, a large share of the matter which are little known, and some to questions or facts which, though obvious enough when pointed out, are yet such as would not occur on amusing or a useful point of view. They are written in a pleasing easy style, and, though professing only to entertain, they are full of information which must be of service to the reader. Dr. Ure evidently a steady and industrious collector of things not generally known, and he has put his knowledge to good account in these lively thoughts, and works them with philosophical intent. The papers contain among others a historical one on "Gunpowder and the Tyne Valley," a curious one, as early as the reign of Henry VIII., a semi-humorous disquisition on London smoke; some pointed remarks on "Gunpowder Explosions;" and a paper on "Coal Fuel" is several phases, &c. The sketch relating to St. George's Hospital is interesting, and contains some facts which will be new to many. Dr. Ure's character and career, and on account of his museum, are treated with a purpose which seems to us to be more remarkable for its kindness than for its discrimination, since which have for their object the alleviation of human suffering and the extension of knowledge. Indeed the philanthropic spirit of the book is one of its most pleasing features. English manufactures, on the telegraph, and many modern social improvements, as well as the Moth and Mildew Question, are dealing whatever that need be avoided in these agreeable essays.

Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. have just published the first volume of "The Annual Register," but which, as far as it has gone, appears to be equal to its precursor. It is entitled "A History of American Affairs, and of Events Abroad, during the Year 1860," and contains all of the principal mechanics arts and manufactures from the earliest period to the present time. The Colonial Governments, the financial annals of the industry of the United States in machinery, manufactures, and useful arts, as well as notices of important inventions, earths, and scientific discoveries. The commercial progress of the States, the principal manufacturing centres and remarkable manufactories at the period of the Exhibition of 1851, and the Industrial Progress, which may connect themselves with the rise and progress of the present state of the arts in the United States. From these abstracts it appears that Europe is one nearly of dry statistical record. On the contrary, its subjects are treated in a way which is not only full of interest, but of a wonderful sense of the term, is agreeable. As a specimen, we may mention the chapter on "Printing in the Colonies," which reads very pleasantly. It is interesting to learn that the art of printing and the paper-making industry before the establishment of American independence will be considered a record of facts which have marked the progress of the Union in literature, science, the arts, and manufactures, and ascertained relations and causes; and there is no doubt that the discussion of abstract principles and questions in legislation, is much facilitated by the full and accurate statistical records



OPENING OF THE ITALIAN EXPOSITION AT FLORENCE BY VICTOR EMMANUEL.—SEE PAGE 353.

HOP-GARDEN NEAR FARNHAM, SURREY.

Of all the tattered groups that move along our picturesque country roads in autumn, none bring before us so vividly the light, tripping lines of Shakspeare as a party of hop-pickers going out or returning home after their healthy labour. It is a pleasant sight to see them—

> Jog on, jog on, the footpath way,
> And merrily "hale" the stile-a;
> A merry heart goes all the day,
> Your sad tires in a mile-a!

and all the merrier do they seem through their "looped and windowed raggedness," having nothing on but what is already spoiled, putting one in mind, somehow, of old Culpepper's description of the hop, which, he says, goes "romping upon trees or hedges, with rough branches." What contrast, what action, what freedom and enjoyment of life, have we witnessed among these laughing and lighthearted wayfarers, as they wended their way between our old English hedgerows which are hung with jewels of amethyst, coral, ruby, topaz, and emerald—berries more beautiful in hue than the gems set in queenly tiaras, and which richly-clad Autumn ever wears! And over these garlanded hypaths we have seen well-formed women step along, with bed and baby at their backs, no more incumbered by the burden than a butterfly is with the silvery down of its wings; barefooted girls, with such a pretty turn of the instep as makes the fame of an artist when transferred to turn of the instep as makes the fame of an artist when transferred to his canvas, with long hair showering about their eyes which the sunshine steeped in gold as it dropped the outpeeping roses of their summer-tanned cheeks. Some happy lad, with no other covering for his head than the saucepan he wore like the pointed helmet of old, while he ran tilting at his merry companions with the projecting hardly; even the little cradle, which, though never festooned with lace, was carried along as carefully as a gunshot treasure, to be overhung with a rich canopy of green and gold, when the poor mother's daring step scarcely beneath the swaying hop-binds, while she, with ever-watchful eyes, half-turned to where it slumbers, will keep filling the fragrant bin. What an army of laughing children march towards the great hop-grounds from every winding by-way and open highroad at this hop harvesting! We see long strings of them threading their way through the old borough of Southwark, and wonder how ever they will get there; but those sturdy bare feet will carry them safely through as they merrily jog on the footpath way with their bedding, pots, pans, kettles, hats, and all.

Bearing in mind that it is by no means effortless, and not by Nature's "gentlemanly rule," the eye dwells upon few prettier pictures in an Englishlandscape than that of a well-managed hop-plantation. Where we think we discovered large palsy gaps the graceful overhanging shadows of broad vine-shaped leaves, and nodding tendrils that twine around or how to our feet as they shake their green spangled pendants in the breeze?

There is nothing like it for clean beauty, unless it be some wild wood walk between one luxuriant bank, where hedges become tall wooded walls, and one bushy scrub forms an entangling lookout bramble, armed gorse, or busy brush forms an entangling underwood. Then the arcana of the hops floats around with its sweet perfume, bringing before the half-closed eyes another picture of lotus-eaters' Castles of Indolence tucked in the clouds; swaying to and fro of heavy-hung hair with its own peculiar rhythm; while no more of the fever and the fret of the far away work-a-day world, where men sell "and buy and get gain," until the pleasing dream is broken by the shrill whistle of the railway.

The hop is a perennial-rooted plant with an annual stem, which grows from 12 to 16ft. high, and covers a space of ground as wide in thousands of places on our island, where it has grown through forgotten centuries. It begins to appear in June and ripens in September, when the cones are gathered. The young shoots of the wild hop were the cones are gathered. The young shoots of the wild hop were plucked in spring by our forefathers and cooked and eaten as greens long before that was cultivated and used in brewing. Nor was it uncommon for cultivated hop-tops to be sold in our markets a few years ago, when they were dressed and eaten like asparagus. Amongst the many varieties of the hop are grown, as the red, green, white-bind, and others, they all belong to one species. The wild bind, though small, is a very hardy plant, growing in exposed places, and resisting the attacks of insects, and often standing when all the others wither. The green-bind is very productive in the seasons is favourable, and grows in poorer soil than the white-bind, as the latter is a very delicate plant, and fetches the highest price in the markets. Hops are also distinguished by our planters as the Goldings, Flemish, Canterbury, and other names, but Farnham has the highest reputation, having been sorted and cleaned, and generally picked before they are quite ripe, which gives them a delicate flavour. They are mostly bought by dealers at a very high price, and retailed by private families, being preferred on account of their pale colour and the superior flavour they are believed to give to malt liquors. Hops are usually very uncertain in every way, though they do not realise such prices; and had Shakspeare's Allen been a hop-merchant's daughter she would have replied differently to her own question when she asked—"What's in a name?" These pockets are marked with a peculiar stamp, which is never used for more than one year, that enables the hop-growers are bound to pay a heavy penalty if any other than Farnham hops are put into these pockets. Hops growing on poor land, divided only by a hedge, will not sell so high in the market—though superior—through not bearing this Farnham brand.

Hop-plantations are very expensive, the cost for new ground being from £30 to £100 per acre, and then requiring some three or four years to come to perfection, unless bedded more per acre from the roots of cuttings. A plantation in good soil will last from fifteen to thirty years, though the plants generally begin to decline after the first twelve years' bearing. In very favourable seasons an acre will produce from twenty hundredweight of hops, and at other times perhaps not two hundredweight; sometimes none at all, as the blighted crop will not pay for picking, as was the case in many places last year (1860).

In spring, after the plantation has been hoed, weeded, stirred, and manured, and the earth gathered up around the young shoots, or "hills" as they are called, the poles are placed in the ground; for in April, or early in May, the bines will be three or four feet high, unless the season is very backward. A horse is generally the number of poles placed in each hillock, though some use more. The poles are put in a good depth, and well rammed down, so that they may not shake, and which often makes them bend again, as they are frequently from fifteen to eighteen feet high. Sometimes they are placed so as to admit of sun and light that can be got from a southern aspect, and are made to lean outward. As the bines get higher, many hands are employed in tying them lightly to the poles. The fastening to right the climbing of the bine would be checked, or it would decay where bound and send out fresh shoots below it. As the bines grow they twine round one of the poles steps are used to reach them for the tying.

The time for hop-picking is known from the cones throwing out a sweet scent, as well as changing to a light brown colour; and some grower go more by the smell than the looks of the hops.

Farnham, like other places, is surrounded by hops as far as the ground, where the cones are soonest ripe, and are of the simplest construction, consisting of the pockets or bags, to which are added the poles, bins, tentchooks, and on those the cloth is hung into which the pickers throw the hops. A man brings the poles in bundles and after disarranging the poles set them, or two "hills" as they are called. These rest on the frame, and great care is taken by the pickers not to throw the leaves into the bin along with the hops. Children are employed at this delicate work at the same bin, and few earn more than a shilling or eighteen pence a day, as a "tally" is sometimes given to them at the end, according to the crop, and a shilling a tally is, we believe, the average price paid; and to pick eight or ten bushels per day is a very good day's work for one person. The hops are collected from the bins two or three times a day, and carried at once to the kiln to be dried, as exposure to the air causes the colour, and in some cases the cones will begin to fall in a few hours, especially if it has been damp overnight. A "tally" of eight or ten bushels of good hops, when sorted, will fill a pocket, which averages about a hundredweight. After drying, the hops are bowelled into the storage-room, where they are trodden down by men whose

MONUMENT TO CAPTAIN BOYD.

IT was our pleasing duty to give in the Number of this Journal for the 7th ult. a full-sized illustration of the silver medal presented by the Board of Trade to the widow of Captain Boyd, of the Ajax, for his gallant, though unsuccessful, attempt to save the crew of the Neptune in Kingstown harbour on the 9th of February last. Our present Number contains an Engraving (from a photograph by E. D. Brown, of Lower George's-street, Kingstown) of a monument erected by public subscription in Monkstown Churchyard, near Kingstown, to the memory of Capt. Boyd and five seamen who perished with him. This monument, which is 8ft. 2in. high, bears on its sides the following inscriptions:—

In memory of Captain John M'Neill Boyd, R.N.; John Carey, able seaman; Thomas Murry, able seaman; John Mooney, ordinary seaman; James Johnson, ordinary seaman; Alexander Forsythe, ordinary seaman; who lost their lives on the outside of the east pier at Kingstown, in noble efforts to rescue the crew of the wrecked brig Neptune, during a fearful gale from the E.N.E., on the 9th of February, 1861.

To commemorate the death of six brave sailors of H.M.S. Ajax this monument is raised. The providence of God ordained that they should die, not on board their ship defending their country, but as Christian men seeking to save their fellow-creatures. They glorified God, whose waves went over them, by a death not unmeet for sailors of Christian Britain. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John iv. 13.

Erected by Commodore Hastings R. Yelverton, C.B., Controller-General of the Coast Guard, the officers and ship's company (including tenders) of H.M.S. Ajax, and by soldiers and men of the Kingstown district of Coast Guard.

MONUMENT TO THE MEMORY OF CAPT. BOYD AND SIX SEAMEN OF H.M.S. AJAX, IN MONKSTOWN CHURCHYARD, NEAR KINGSTOWN.

THE PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY'S FARM SCHOOL, REDHILL, FOR THE REFORMATION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS.

THIS institution is quietly and successfully carrying on its operations at Redhill, Surrey. The Philanthropic Society was established so far back as the year 1788. In 1849, under the guidance of the Rev. Sydney Turner (the present Inspector of Reformatories), the committee founded the farm school, consisting of a very complete establishment. Year by year its influence has been extended and its usefulness acknowledged, efforts being spared by the committee to promote its efficiency and good working. Since the year 1849, 1193 boys have been received, of whom more than 600 have emigrated. A large majority of those who have left its walls are now filling situations with credit to themselves and the good report of their employers. There are now 300 inmates, who are lodged in six separate houses, or "homes," the last erected being named Gurney's, after its generous founder, Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P. The building was erected from the designs of Mr. Richard Bell, and the whole cost amounted to £4000. On Wednesday, the 11th ult., the harvest home was celebrated with the usual sports and festivities, in the presence of a large gathering of the neighbouring gentry and gentry. To those who would learn more of the society's work we would recommend a visit to the farm and a perusal of the last report of the excellent Chaplain, the Rev. Charles Walker, M.A.

THE CAVALLI CANNON.

INAUGURATED at a moment when the struggle for Italian unity leaves great deeds yet to be accomplished, it is natural to grasp than otherwise with the peculiar circumstances attending the first Italian National Exhibition than an important portion of the building has been set apart for the reception of firearms and military and naval appliances. Among the most remarkable of the latter is the much-talked-of Cavalli cannon, which, from its size, weight, proportions, and extensive range, is called upon to play a part in the future essentially different to the tranquil and almost peaceful aspect it affects at this national reunion of the art, science, and industry of the newly-emancipated portions of Italy in the "Etrurian Athens"—

> where smiles Arno sweeps
> Was modern Luxury of Commerce born,
> And buried Learning's fairest germs.

The breech-loading cannon introduced by Jean Cavalli is not altogether a very recent invention, although the various improvements brought to bear on its construction and manipulation fully entitle it to a place in the Florentine Exhibition, especially on the score of its origin. The great object sought to be attained by the employment of breech-loading cannon is, as is generally known, the suppression of the recoil usually attending the discharge of an ordinary piece of artillery. This result being obtained, a very small space and a few artificers suffice for the service of cannon loaded at the breech, thus affording all the facilities desirable for its use in casemates or fortresses, whilst in the case of such heavy ordnance are specially destined. The strength of a fortified place thoroughly manned by a host of its artillery and as in days of peace sufficient time can be devoted to the installation of the most approved ordnance, irrespective of its weight and other difficulties, each cannon in number invented by Cavalli, Armstrong, and others, can be placed in fortifications without the embarrassing circumstances attending the discharge of a besieger army, and with the preliminary advantages to the defence. The Cavali cannon will, no doubt, be turned to good account for the armament of the frontier fortresses of the United Italian Kingdom, so soon as Victor Emmanuel's great task shall be thoroughly accomplished.

The Cavali cannon represented in our Engraving is a 32-pounder. The cannon itself, as well as the stand, is of a black metallic alloy. The form of the stand and the peculiar disposition of the platform are combined in such a manner as to prevent the recoil from being felt in any way whatever, as the piece of white metal which serves to close the breech after the conical projectile (a) has been introduced into the cannon. The weight of this bullet or projectile, including the charge, is sixty-four pounds. When the stand (which is of one piece of cast iron, weighing about a ton) is placed on a horizontal platform the piece may be pointed to an elevation of fifteen degrees. To obtain a higher degree of elevation inclined platforms become necessary. The instruments of precision for pointing the cannon and for supporting the breech in the requisite position are also shown in our illustration. They are in bronze, and very highly finished. The full range of the Cavalli cannon is considerably over 4000 yards; but at that distance its fire is most effective, as has been frequently proved by the experiments made with it ur the Scarse of the Sardinian Government.

A brochure containing a full scientific and technical description of this cannon has been written by its inventor, and published, with a complete analytical Atlas, by M. Garnier, military, naval, and polytechnic bookseller, of Paris. Signor Jean Cavalli has long been known as an engineer of distinction in military circles. He is a superior artillery officer in the Italian army, Knight of the order of Merit of Savoy, of the Vladimir of Russia, of the Red Eagle of Prussia, &c., and member of the Academies of Science of Turin and Stockholm.

A letter from Biarritz in the Memorial des Pyrenées states that a commission, consisting of engineers and naval men, having been charged to ascertain whether a harbour of refuge can be formed in that place, has decided that one could be constructed opposite L'Atalaye large enough to contain twenty-five vessels, or even a greater number, with a depth of twelve feet at low water, and at an expense of 4,000,000f.

ILLUSTRATION OF THE WAR IN AMERICA.

MUNSON'S HILL, WITH THE EARTHWORK THROWN UP BY THE CONFEDERATES IN FRONT OF THE UNION LINES, VIRGINIA.

THIS is the point in Virginia at which the Unionists and Confederates are nearest to each other, and whilst our Artist was making his sketch, some of those which originally existed have no doubt been felled while the intrenchments were in progress. At present an immense Confederate flag—the red, white, and blue stripes in which are at least five feet wide each—is the most prominent object upon the top of the eminence. Two of the trees which have been allowed to remain will be used as an observatory. The Confederate defences are constructed entirely of earth, fifteen feet being the highest elevation. The sloping hillside in front of the fort is clear of underbrush or trees, and is sufficiently cleared to allow 9000 men to parade. The distance from the cover of the woods to the summit of the hill is not so great but that a quick movement would drive the enemy from their position with very little loss of life. The flank defences of the fort consist of three batteries. It is believed that earthworks have been thrown up on another portion of the hill commanding the road to Fairfax Court-house. The fort is intended more particularly to command the road leading from Alexandria to Falls Church, the road from Washington to Fairfax, just mentioned, the railroad from Alexandria to Vienna, and the position of Bailey's Cross-roads.

MUNSON'S HILL, WITH THE EARTHWORK THROWN UP BY THE CONFEDERATES IN FRONT OF THE UNION LINES, VIRGINIA.

INAUGURATION OF THE ITALIAN EXPOSITION.

ENGLISHMEN felt that the day which, some ten years ago, witnessed the opening of the world's fair in Hyde Park was a memorable one, and calculated to make an epoch in the lives of most of those who were present at it. Yet the occasion was of small moment and importance as the national history as compared with the opening-day of the first Italian Exposition of Industry and Art. For Italy this exposition has been not only the first thing of the kind, but the first thing of any kind that the nation has ever accomplished by its united efforts. For Italy the exposition is not only a great fact and milestone in the path of social progress, but also in that of political history. Indeed, its significance in the latter aspect overrules, in the opinion and feeling of the Italians, its purely social and industrial importance. The yearning longing for union which has spurring out of the countless, accursed during long years of degradation and misery, that all the woes of Italy have more or less directly been occasioned by disunion, has become a national passion of so engrossing a kind that any means of assuring fraternity and proving to others that this union is at last a real, living, operating fact is infinitely precious to them. This meeting has for them all the solemn character of a religious character of the Christmas gathering of a numerous and long-divided family. The people have also considered than the thought that "here we are all once more together." It is not so much that the machines from Milan, the plates from Naples, the carvings from Sienna, the wines from Sicily, the silks from Turin, the earthenware from Florence are encouragingly placed in their several kinds, so much as that Milanese, Neapolitans, Sicilians, Turinese, Florentines, together with those of a hundred other cities, are here engaged in one object, and every man of them more eager to honour and credit to Italy in the eyes of Europe than to vie in the race of rivalry with each other. This is the secret of the immense enthusiasm with which this gathering has been hailed forward to, and of the manifestation on the morning of the 11th of September.

Nothing could go off better than the ceremony of inauguration has done. Ten o'clock was the hour at which all those invited to the ceremony, as well as the holders of season tickets, which at the price of thirty francs gave the right to admission to the exposition for a month, were required to be in the building. The doors were then shut, and the patiently-expecting crowd got all the more eager to be admitted the sight of the arrival of the King. This had been fixed for eleven, but his Majesty did not make his appearance till half an hour later. Already a quarter before the assembled thousands were of the softer but less easily close-packed sex—for every ticket gave the bearer the privilege of taking in a lady on his arm; and there were seats for all the women as well as for a large portion of the men. The chamber destined for the reception of the King, and for the ceremony of the opening, is a very large semicircular building, situated at the extreme end of the entire edifice, so as to occupy a position analogous to that of the high altar of a cathedral, to which we on a former occasion compared it. All around the semicircular wall of the saloon was raised an orchestra, sufficiently capacious to contain a powerful band and a very strong chorus of voices. A little in front of this, so as to be nearly in the centre of the chamber, a platform of some height was raised, with two chairs, intended for the King and his cousin, the Prince of Carignan. Then all around and in front of this, and some few feet of the orchestra, were rows of seats for the spectators. The hall itself was tastefully decorated with hangings of the three sacred colours—the green, the white, and the red—and a profusion of garlands and wreaths.

As soon as the "Re galantuomo" had entered, and, declining to seat himself on his throne, taken up his position, standing in front of and almost among the crowd of spectators, the burst of vivas, the waving of pocket-handkerchiefs, and the shouts of "Vittorio Emmanuele, Re d'Italia" were such as to show that the colossal King of united Italy has lost not a jot of the popularity he enjoyed when first he visited and assumed the reins of his new States. For several minutes the band did not venture to contend with this tumultuous body of sound. But gradually the lungs of the boys, deprived of their enthusiasm, became wearied, the musicians, supported by an immense choir of male and female voices, performed a hymn, composed for the occasion by Professor Gatti.

When this was finished the Marchese Cosimo Ridolfi, an old Liberal of the days when Italy was in the first moments of her regeneration, one of the leading promoters of the exposition, addressed the King in an excellently short and to-the-purpose speech. He spoke of the business on hand as "a splendid testimony that henceforward, from the slopes of the Alps to the extremity of Sicily, there is one people, which now gathers itself into one sole family." "And it is the great work of time," he went on to say, "if not yet completed, your Majesty will see here this day a renewal of the fables which you that is about to be. For all Italy has willed to be represented here to-day, and to testify that she is born to be, not will be, one sole nation. Look around, your Majesty," he continued, "and let the consideration gladden you that if Italy in the first moments of her regeneration has been able to accomplish thus much, she will be able to achieve far more when her commerce shall have felt all the effects of free trade and the heart of her industry shall have been diluted with the breath of liberty."

The King spoke a few words in return, alluding to the progress he was selecting that exposition at the seat of the first industrial festival which had been the cradle of the arts and sciences.

Then La Piccolomini, accompanied by the band and chorus, sang the celebrated national song by Cardinal, with music by Romani, "La Croce di Savoia." The animation and enthusiasm of the singer, as well as her well-known strong patriotic sentiments, obtained for her the unbounded applause of her audience; but her voice, such as it ever was, has now left her. It was observed, however, that when she sang of the sorrows and hopes of Venice the face of the King very remarkably expressed his sympathy with the sentiments the singer was uttering; and as soon as her performance was concluded he had her called down to him from the orchestra and remained for a minute or two in conversation with her.

And then the ceremony of the opening was over.

THE CAVALLI CANNON AT THE FLORENCE EXHIBITION.

CHALLENGE CUP PRESENTED TO THE ROYAL CANADIAN YACHT CLUB BY THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The King passed down the main hall with his suite, and left it; and the crowd were at liberty to disperse themselves through the different parts of the building and amuse themselves as they chose; and the more leisurely examination which then became possible soon showed that a good deal remained to be done before the exposition could be said to be complete.

It should be especially mentioned that on the occasion of the opening ceremony there were no military present. There was the King, and there were the thousands of his assembled subjects, including any man of any nation who might choose to purchase the right of being there for thirty francs. But there were no soldiers. And it must be remembered that the people were thus trusted and left to themselves infinitely more than we law-abiding Englishmen ever venture on doing; for Italy has as yet no police except military. This fact is by no means the least—nay, perhaps it is the most important of all connected with this occasion. It is the first time such an experiment was ever made in Italy, or probably on the Continent at all. We all know how such an assembly would have bristled with every description of military "force publique" in Imperial France; and Englishmen, who know all that is meant by, and is involved in, the display of military power for the restraining of the people, will hail this initiative of the Italian Government with all the congratulations and good auguries that it so well merits.

FULLER (BAPTIST) CHAPEL, KETTERING.

THIS new and commodious place of worship was opened on Tuesday, the 24th ult. It is erected on the site of the old chapel, which is closely associated with the names of Robert Hall, Fuller, Carey, and other celebrated members of the Baptist community. The first stone was laid by Sir Morton Peto, in 1850.

The chapel is of Lombardic design, with a little Gothic feeling in the details. The front is built entirely of Ancaster stone, ornamented by a pediment with a moulded porch, the whole enriched with coloured tiles and bold, vigorous stone carving. The interior is chaste and beautiful. The minister stands on a convenient platform of richly-carved oak, with rails to correspond, and with panels from a profusely-decorated Caen stone recess. All the approaches are paved with Minton's encaustic tiles, and the whole of the woodwork is varnished instead of being painted. Warming apparatus and every possible requisite are provided, and the place is lighted by twelve large chasteners, each giving forth twelve jets of light.

The chapel will hold about 850 persons, and has cost about £4000, the whole of which has been raised by voluntary contributions. The minister is the Rev. James Murrell. The architect is Mr. Sharman, of Wellingborough; and the builder Mr. Henson, of Kettering.

Our Engraving is from a photograph by Mr. Farey, of Kettering.

ROYAL CANADIAN YACHT CLUB.

THIS well-managed and spirited club, whose flag is carried by a numerous fleet of handsome yachts throughout the great lakes of Canada, held their grand regatta of the year on Friday, the 6th of September. During the recent visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to British North America he was graciously pleased to become the patron of the club; and, indicative of the gratification he experienced at the warm-hearted and loyal welcome accorded to him by Commodore Durie and the other officers and members at Toronto, upon his return to England he signified his intention of presenting a cup to be sailed for annually on Lake Ontario by the vessels belonging to members of the club, and in commemoration of his visit thereto.

The execution of this splendid trophy was intrusted to the well-known house of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, and it is a triumph of the silversmith's art. It consists of a vase in frosted silver, partly burnished. Two principal medallions, in low relief, illustrate an incident in the life of Columbus, in which the great discoverer quells his mutinous sailors, and the cession of a tract of land (afterwards called Pennsylvania) to William Penn. Two graceful female figures form the handles of the cup, the cover of which is surmounted by a figure of Britannia. The base is of ebony, bearing two shields engraved with the badge of the Prince and the inscription. The vase was designed and modelled by Mr. Archibald J. Barrett, a promising young artist, who also designed the Queen's Cup contested at the Cowes Regatta in August last. Upon its arrival at Toronto it was exhibited to the public at the establishment of Mr. J. E. Ellis, jeweller, King-street, and upon the day of the eventful contest it occupied a prominent position upon the starter-deck of the club yacht.

As the hour for starting approached, and the various competitors took up their stations at the starting-buoys and gave their fighting flags to the breeze, the greatest excitement was displayed. A general jubilee appeared to be held in Toronto, and, with the visitors that thronged from the other parts upon the lake, there never had been seen so large an assemblage upon any previous occasion. Shortly after ten o'clock a.m. the following vessels took up their respective numbers:—

1. Wide Awake, centre board	..	C. Elliott, Coborg.
2. Rivet, keel	..	E. Rhodes, Toronto.
3. Waterfly, do.	..	Commodore Durie, do.
4. Cygnet, do.	..	E. M. Hodder, do.
5. Arrow, do.	..	V. C. Wallace, Coborg.
6. Irene, do.	..	George Hawke, Toronto.
7. Dart, centre board	..	Captain T. J. Robertson, do.

The Wide Awake is a beautiful specimen of her class—i.e., centre board; and, as nothing on the lake can touch her in light winds, she became first favourite at the start.

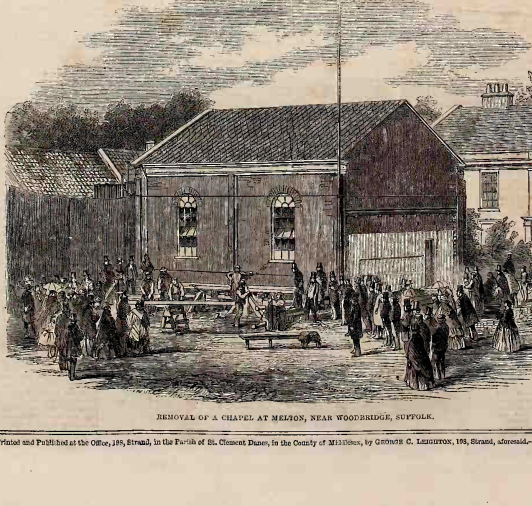
At half-past ten the start-gun was fired, and, with a very gentle air from the north, the little fleet got under way in beautiful style. The Wide Awake at once took the lead, closely followed by the Dart, Cygnet, Waterfly, Irene, and Arrow. Just as the Rivet cast off her spring she was caught with baffling flaws, and it was some time before her crew could get her to settle down to her work; she soon, however, made up for the loss at starting by running cleverly through the body of the fleet, and placing herself third vessel. The Wide Awake, however kept ahead, and was hailed the winner with enthusiastic cheers. She took the lead, and maintained it from start to finish in beautiful style, and was admirably handled; as were also the Dart and Rivet, and the performance of the latter vessel against such light wind-fliers fully proved her to be a yacht of undeniable speed. Thus the Prince of Wales's noble prize goes to Coborg for the year 1861-2, and the Wide Awake becomes the champion of the lakes for that period.

The course was from mooring-buoys laid down abreast of the club yacht round the harbour buoys at the western entrance, leaving them on the port hand, thence to a buoy in Humber Bay opposite Gibraltar Point, away to the eastward, pass Gibraltar Point Lighthouse, down by the back of the island, round a buoy moored in the eastern gap, back round the lighthouse, and home through the western channel—a distance of twenty-two miles.

FULLER (BAPTIST) CHAPEL, KETTERING, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

REMOVAL OF A CHAPEL AT MELTON.

A MECHANICAL operation of considerable interest took place at Melton, near Woodbridge, Suffolk, on the 18th ult., when the Primitive Methodist Chapel was removed, in a mass, 15ft. from its original foundation. The removal was rendered necessary by the verdict of a jury, who, as it originally stood, pronounced it a nuisance to a gentleman's house standing on adjoining ground. The chapel, a neat and unpretending structure, is of red and white bricks. Its size is 30ft. 6in. long by 31ft. 6in. wide, and the height to the eaves 17ft. A schoolroom and vestry adjoined the chapel, but these had been pulled down to afford greater facility for the removal, and are to be rebuilt. The removal was accomplished as follows:—The base course around the chapel was entirely cut away, and beam 15 by 7, were inserted longitudinally, and firmly wedged to the underside of the walls with iron wedges, whilst support was further gained by transverse beams placed at intervals. The former beams rested immediately upon seven flat sips 12in. by 7in., which formed the way upon which the structure was to travel, and which were laid to a rise of 1 in 180, so that the building had not only to be moved in a horizontal direction, but uphill also. The walls were firmly bolted together with two sets of 1¼ bar iron running round the outside of the building, and one 1¼ bolt through the chapel from side to side. The removal was effected by the application of two screw-jacks to one side of the building (pushing it forward) and three pairs of double screws to the other side (pulling it), the "ways" or beams on which the building travelled being well greased to prevent friction, and to ensure greater ease in transit. In three hours after commencing, the chapel was safely lodged on its new foundations, and presenting not even a scratch or the appearance of a crack; and a good deal of credit is due to Messrs. Collins, millwrights, for the easy and successful apparatus by which the building was removed. Our Engraving is from a photograph by Mr. Cobb, of Ipswich.



REMOVAL OF A CHAPEL AT MELTON, NEAR WOODBRIDGE, SUFFOLK.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1112.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1861. [TWO SHEETS, FIVEPENCE

THE KING OF PRUSSIA'S VISIT TO COMPIEGNE.

THE King of Prussia's return visit to the Emperor of France puts the journalism as well as the diplomacy of Europe on the qui vive of speculation. "What's in the wind now?" is being asked and answered with a good deal more frequency than satisfaction. Vienna is agitated by sinister forebodings, and mutters suspicions at which the minor Courts of Germany prick up their ears. "The Rhine," "the Confederation," "the Nationalities," "the Treaties of 1815," loom ever and anon through the mist which settles over the event; and, could one but trust the appearances which are most prominent in this haze of general conjecture, he would be warranted in supposing that Europe is about to enter upon a new political epoch. We cannot say that we share this expectation. The interview between the King and the Emperor may, possibly, conduce to an earlier settlement of a political question or two now held in suspense; but we fancy that King William's departure from Compiègne will be found to have left "the situation," as our neighbours phrase it, very much as it was on his arrival.

The loud flourish of trumpets with which the French journals have welcomed the Royal visit, and the immense political importance they have persisted in attaching to it, when contrasted with the cold intimation from Berlin that nothing more is meant by it than a reciprocation of courtesy, certainly suggest the thought that the Government of France was desirous of turning the interchange of compliments between the two Sovereigns to some definite political account. Such pains to render the atmosphere of public opinion redolent of flattery to his Prussian Majesty can hardly have been taken without some meaning. It seemed, we confess, like an elaborate attempt to relax the King's judgment, and to prepare it for the reception of new political impressions. But experience has shown that it would be unsafe to place much reliance on these prognostics. Between the Emperor's wishes and the Emperor's intentions there is often a very wide interval. The press of Paris has not unfrequently been employed by him, or perhaps, to speak more accurately, by his Ministers, as some insects use their antennæ, to ascertain in advance surrounding possibilities. In the present case, advantage seems to have been taken of the King of Prussia's visit to feel the pulse of Germany, and to discover what probable effect certain eventualities might produce upon the public mind in that country. Even this hypothesis, however, must be entertained with considerable caution; for the tone of the French press, even while representing the general direction in which the policy of the Emperor's Government would prefer to move, occasionally exaggerates and distorts the idées Napoléonnes which it aims to enforce, in consequence of inspiration from the Bourse rather than the Tuileries.

Turning from Paris journalism and the bright hues in which it has contrived to envelop the Royal visit, and fixing attention upon the guest himself, we find nothing whatever to warrant an expectation that Compiègne has been the scene of a conspiracy to shift the balance of power in Europe. William of Prussia is hardly the Sovereign to whom any such enterprise might be expected to commend itself. In the first place, he is religiously loyal to Germany, and may be trusted to repudiate even the aggrandisement of Prussia, if proposed to be effected at the expense of Fatherland. He is not young enough to be taken captive by a grand political imagination, and he has no such imagination to tempt him from the paths of international integrity. He is not weak enough to be imposed upon by garish attractions, and in firmness of will he is a match even for Napoleon III. His habits, too, are such as to make a tortuous and underhand policy utterly distasteful to him; and to his frank, transparent, and soldierly character a secret compact would be abhorrent. No doubt there are many respects in which the Liberalism of Europe is compelled to mourn over his deficiencies; but there is one conclusion relating to him at which, we should suppose, all parties have by this time arrived—to wit, that no mere schemer would regard him as a safe card to play with.

But, did the character of the King of Prussia offer us a less trustworthy guarantee than we think it does against any secret tampering with European interests, we should still be indisposed to look at his visit to Compiègne with serious apprehension. The interviews of Sovereigns are not fraught with such consequences in the present day as they may have been fifty years ago. Public opinion overrides the decisions of the most absolute Monarchs, and even when they join arm in arm they are not strong enough to breast the ever-flowing current. The rapidity of communication between country and country has placed both Dynasties and Governments under a watchful eye, and no man knows better than the Emperor of France, for no man has more emphatically acknowledged it, that the public opinion of Europe, whenever may affect it will avenge itself upon him by the last blow. . . Neither the Emperor nor the King are personally free from an external political control—neither the one nor the other wants the sagacity necessary to discern or to respect the limitations which Europe draws around a dynastic policy; and, even if both were intent upon adjusting schemes detrimental to the peace or liberty of Europe, we should have no fear that they would be able to carry them into effect. But we have no proof that any such design was entertained; and the very fact that this visit to Compiègne has been so suddenly made and decided upon is our conviction that it was not intended to cover a disloyal compact.

THE BURNING OF CAPESTHORNE HALL, CHESHIRE: THE SOUTH FRONT.—SEE PAGE 362.

"What, then, is it all about?" our politicians will ask. Well, we feel inclined to reply, perhaps it is really what it professes to be. Such sometimes is stranger than fiction. Diplomatists and journalists are occasionally betrayed into the abundest errors by their obstinate unbelief in political simplicity. An event of mark, such as an interview between Sovereigns, is inseparably associated in their minds with some political mystery. Yet, it is certainly possible that the arrangements made by the Berlin Government, and received, we have reason to think, by our own, that the visit of the King of Prussia to Napoleon at Compiègne was one of courtesy only, may be true—so far true, at any rate, as to have considered its main significance. The visit of the Emperor to Baden had to be returned; etiquette required it; and the present time offered, it may be, the quietest moment for the polite formality. It may be excessively stupid and prosaic to accept any such interpretation of the event; but we are disposed to accept it, nevertheless. It converts a brilliant political romance into a comparatively commonplace incident. But it really seems to us very likely to be true, particularly in so far as the intentions of Prussia are concerned. And, taking into consideration the character of the King, and the circumstances by which he is placed, we venture to suggest that the reason assigned for the visit by the Berlin Cabinet is not only true, but, what is more to the present purpose, is credible also.

Of course, we do not mean to assert that the two days' sojourn of King William, as Napoleon's guest, at Compiègne, was an affair of banquets, shows, stag hunts, and fireworks, exclusively. Doubtless, it will be followed, and was expected to be followed, by political results. But such results, we fancy, may be more reasonably and safely looked for in the light of private and confidential mutual suspicions, the melting away of inveterate prejudices, and the frank explanation of ominous appearances, than in treaties intended to alter the face of Europe. That France and Prussia should better understand each other after the interview between their respective Sovereigns than they did before—that causes of mistrust may have been removed from betwixt them—is likely enough. But if, besides this, commercial interests have been passed in review, with the object of facilitating trade between the two countries; if as we are assured, "the most active negotiations have been carried on between Potsdam and the Tuileries to obtain the lowering of the barriers of the Zollverein, and to open respectively the German markets to French productions, and French markets to German productions," and if the event upon which we have been commenting had an economic as well as a social character, we see no necessity for hunting in the regions of conjecture for further explanations of the meaning of this visit. It may be a sign of freedom in the intercourse of the nations which lie on the surface, but it may be also a most superfluous expenditure of ingenuity to ransack the realms of imagination for a solution of what is equally soluble by the facts which lie close under your eyes. Your supremely clever people often overshoot the mark.

To tell the honest truth, we cannot go with the alarmists on this occasion. We do not believe "the map of Europe" has been touched with a view to rectification. We give no great heed to the magnificent programme which the Moniteur has heralded the event. Above all, we feel confident that there was very little mystery in the affair from beginning to end. Such being the character of our convictions, we can see no reason for taking this interchange of courtesy between Sovereign and Sovereign out of the category of ordinary occurrences. If it has been our wont to regard with greater hope than fear. Should the page of history present evidence at some no very remote hereafter that the peace of Europe was snatched and confirmed rather than signalled by the visit of the King of Prussia to Compiègne, it would not overwhelm us with surprise, for, sooth to say, we have less mistrust of the common sense of Monarchs than we have of the fantasies of the diplomatists who surround them. The contingencies which are given out to the world as big with mischief are generally the most the birth any but insignificant consequences. The most ominous sidereal conjunctions usher in as often as not the quietest times

---

One of our floating-batteries—the Meteor—has been ordered to be broken up. Her frame, it is stated, has been found so defective that part of repairing her would exceed any value she could possess when complete.

The total number of collieries in Great Britain at present is estimated at 2634; of these 1845 are in England, 316 in Wales, 469 in Scotland, and 71 in Ireland. In 1847 the coal produce of the United Kingdom exceeded 65,000,000 tons. The value at the pit's mouth of the quantity annually raised is estimated at £16,250,000, and the mean annual value when scattered is about £20,000,000. Besides this sum it is estimated that the love extracted yearly from the soils raised is worth at the mouth of the furnace, £14,250,000 sterling. The total capital invested in the trade is supposed to exceed £18,500,000 sterling. In 1851 the number of persons employed in our coal mines was 219,000; at present there are at least 240,000.—Mechanics' Magazine.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The rise in the price of bread in France has caused so much alarm that the Moniteur has been directed to aid in the work—begun by the Constitutionnel, the Patrie, and other newspapers—of removing the apprehensions and allaying the discontent of the Parisian working classes. On Tuesday, accordingly, the official journal, in an article on the subject, informs the people that, owing to the large importations from corn from abroad, there is every probability that the present prices will not only not be maintained, but that a fall may be looked for. In case, however, this expression of opinion should not be deemed sufficiently assuring, they are informed that, in any case, the price of bread will not exceed 50 centimes the kilogramme, as the Chisse de Compiègne will cover the difference.

The vintage is terminating favourably in all parts of France. The quality will be good, the quantity average, and the quality under the influence for beyond its ordinary value. The weather continues to be unsettled, and wet weather July much near than October.

A private correspondence of the Patrie gives some details of the organisation of the French naval force to be dispatched to the coast of Mexico. The ships of war destined for the expedition are the steam frigates Guerriere (flitting at Brest), L'Astrée (from Lorient), and L'Andiet (from Brest); a steam-corvette (from Rochefort), and the cutter Marsouin (from Cherbarg). Admiral Jurien de Lagravière, who will command the squadron, will hoist his flag on board the Guerriere, which is being prepared for sea as quickly as possible.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA AT COMPIEGNE.

The Emperor and Empress left Paris on Saturday last for Compiègne, whither they were followed on Sunday by a large number of guests invited from the 8th to the 9th to meet the King of Prussia. His Majesty, accompanied by Count Von Bismarck, the Prussian Minister to Paris, and attended by General Fresard and other officers of the Emperor's household, who met him at the frontier, arrived at the railway-station of Compiègne at six o'clock on Sunday evening, and was received there by the Emperor in person. Five open carriages, each with four horses and postilions, were in the centre of the station. When the train stopped the Emperor advanced, and, when the King of Prussia had descended from the saloon-carriage, the military band, which had been in attendance, struck up the Prussian national air, interchanging friendly expressions relative to their meeting. The Emperor and the King then entered the carriages, one of the carriages, the gentlemen of their Majesties' suites occupying the others. A compact crowd filled the streets leading to the palace, but, generally speaking, the vicinity of the railway-station. The two Sovereigns as they passed along were greeted with enthusiastic acclamations. In the courtyard of the palace the Guards were drawn up at each side, and on the arrival of the King the band and drums played the Prussian anthem, succeeded by the French Imperial, was waiting for the King at the foot of the grand staircase. On her Majesty were the Princes and Princesses Murat, and behind the Ladies and Gentlemen of the suite of the Prince Imperial; the Ministers of State, Foreign Affairs, Public Works, and the several personages who had been invited to Compiègne. The Empress wore a purple dress, with a white lace flounce, and a white lace head-dress, but neither diamonds nor jewels. The Prince Imperial wore a Scotch dress, with a jacket of black velvet. When the King of Prussia was alighting from his carriage the Empress advanced a few steps to meet him, bowed to him, and, as he then hastened to her Majesty and graciously kissed her hand. His Majesty the King of Prussia then invited Count Walewski to offer his arm to conduct the Empress to the staircase. The Emperor gave his arm to Princess Mural, who then proceeded to the drawing-room, the staircase being lined by Cent-Gardes.

In the evening there was a select dinner party, and at half-past eight there was, by command, a performance of the play of Athalie, at the stage filled by the Imperial bounds in the centre of the play.

Among the persons invited to dinner on the occasion were Count Walewski, Minister of State; Count de Persigny, Minister of the Imperial Household; Count de Morny, President of the Corps Législatif; Count Vaillant, Minister of the Imperial Household; Marshal Magnan, Commander-in-Chief of the 1st Corps d'Armée; Marshal de M'Mahon, Duke of Magenta, Commander-in-Chief of the 2nd Corps; and the Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne.

The Emperor on Monday was:—A grand breakfast of seventy-five covers, shooting in the preserves, promenade to Pierrefonds and Royallieu, dinner of seventy-six covers with a dinner of eighty covers, and a performance in the theatre of the Palace.

The King of Prussia left Compiègne on Tuesday, after having witnessed the Emperor and Empress occupying his two carriages with the "The parting of the two Sovereigns," says the telegram, "was most cordial."

A letter from Compiègne gives an animated description of the amusements which continued the festivities of Monday. On that day the whole party went shooting, and 702 head of game were bagged, the Emperor bringing down 160, the King 190, and the Prince de Hesse 100. The dinner and seventy-six covers were at 7 o'clock, and was magnificent. In the afternoon everybody went to a forest picnic, the Emperor and the King occupying the same carriage as in the morning. The Empress, we are told, was attired in the style of Louis XV., in a grey dress, with a small hat but ornamented feather. The picnic took place at Pierrefonds, at the ancient Fleury, by way of a surprise, had placed the hand of the Guides among the ruins, and the effect produced by the music among the ruins of Pierrefonds was prodigious. The Court returned to a seven o'clock dinner at Compiègne, attended by a theatre performance, which was followed by a concert in the evening. The Emperor and his guests, by-the-by, took their evening dress, took their places in the centre of the Imperial box. The Empress, who sat on the left of the King, wore a white Pompadour dress with bouquets of roses, a magnificent diamond necklace, and an aigrette of the same kind.

Another letter describes the King's departure:—"The King, having been loaded with distinctions, presents, and attentions of every kind during the Emperor, to the railway station, the suites of their Majesties descended from their vehicles. At the station the Emperor took leave of each other in the most friendly manner, and at the last moment the King said to the Emperor, 'Embrace your son for me.' The officers of the suite of the King bidding adieu to the Prince Imperial kissed his Majesty's hand. The King, before quitting the palace, conferred three decorations of the Order of the Black Eagle on the Grand Duke."

Prior to the Compiègne meeting the Constitutionnel published an article signed by its chief editor, M. Grandguillot, entitled "The Visit of the King of Prussia." This commentary was considered to fall in the course of the last ten years almost all the Sovereigns of Europe have visited Napoleon III., and that each time the meeting of the Sovereigns will lead the peoples to esteem and understand each other. France (it continues) sees nothing else in the visit of the King of Prussia. Replying to the construction put upon the visit by the German press, which considers it as a mere act of courtesy in exchange for the visit of the Emperor to Baden, the writer in the Constitutionnel says:—"It is, we think, difficult to admit that the Sovereign of the most powerful, the most solidly-established Continental Power should meet solely to exchange a few commonplace courtesies." M. Grandguillot considers the Treaty of Commerce now negotiated between the two countries to be of immense importance, "because political treaties only reconcile Sovereigns, while commercial treaties reconcile nations." The writer concludes by observing that King William of Prussia is one of those Princes who are able to understand their country and the age. The firmness and the uprightness of his character are proverbial. He comes of the race of those Princes who, boldly dealing up to their people that they trample underfoot unjust prejudices and blind hatreds, and that they disdain the favour of an ephemeral popularity, only seek the impartial approbation of posterity."

The Moniteur, in its bulletin of Thursday, says:—"The visit of the King of Prussia, which has given rise to so many commentaries, cannot but exercise a happy influence on the relations of the two Governments. Everything leads it to be presumed that it has left an impression equally favourable in the minds of both Sovereigns."

SPAIN.

The Government, according to the Correspondencia of Madrid, is about to enter on the path of reform. The Speech from the Throne on the opening of the Cortes, it is said, will recommend a constitutional reform of a perfectly liberal and parliamentary spirit, and the Government will be supported in their course by the majority of the Progressist members.

A telegram from Madrid reports that the state of the Infanta Dona Maria de la Concepcion leaves no hope of her recovery.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch journals publish the text of a bill for facing the import and export duties in the East Indian colonies, which has just been sent to the chambers of commerce of Holland by the Government, with a request that they will give their opinions on it before it is presented to the Chambers. As the bill establishes a uniform tariff, it presents a great improvement compared with the existing system, by which there are about ten different scales of charges on merchandises according to the ports by which it enters or leaves.

The meeting of the Italian Parliament is fixed for the 15th of next month. The Session is expected to be a long and laborious one, as the administrative reforms, and the financial organisation of Italy, will have to be definitively settled.

On Tuesday Victor Emmanuel reviewed the garrison and the National Guard of Bologna. His reception was most enthusiastic. His Majesty left the same evening for Turin.

Letters from Genoa state that Garibaldi has quitted Caprera. His destination is unknown.

The Society of Workmen at Turin has determined upon convening another congress of all the workmen's societies at Asti, in November next, in order to declare the resolutions of the congress lately held at Florence to be illegal.

The anniversary of the battle of the Volturno has been celebrated with great enthusiasm at Sicily. Perfect tranquillity prevailed.

The journals of Naples announce that Borges has been taken, tried, and shot. They also state that it was rumoured that the Neapolitan confederates had been made prisoners. Orders have been given to pursue without the least delay the remainder of the insurgents of Nola. Many troops have already left for that destination.

ROME.

The Paris Union publishes the following as being, if not the exact text of the Papal Allocution in the Secret Consistory, at least very nearly the ipsissima verba of his Holiness :—

In these times of sore trial for the Church it is not rare to see certain Christians, certain Catholics—there are some of them even among the sacred clergy and in monastic orders—who, carried away by their zeal, commit many imprudences. Well I do not hesitate to declare these one by one, and I do not fear to say that they are the least dangerous enemies of the Church. We live in a corrupt and pestilential atmosphere; it is our endeavour to preserve ourselves pure; let us not run the risk of becoming accomplices by false doctrines which destroy everything under pretence of saving everything. Let us consider that a real separation between God and Belial, as it is impossible between the just and the unjust, between the Church and those who would corrupt or destroy it. Accordingly, it is necessary that no concessions should be blended with prudence; but it is equally necessary that no false prudence should be mixed with any concession. Beware lest Rome (into which we have been by a sad) and perceive it from the poison of error and impiety!

The Slumber of Abdul Aziz in the presence of the Pope on the 4th. In reply to their assurance that the Roman Catholic religion would always be respected in Islam, his Holiness expressed his satisfaction at the reported progress of the Catholic mission in Persia.

The heroism of seven Irish Catholic soldiers who fell last year fighting against the Garibaldians and the Sardinians. The Queen of Naples was present.

PRUSSIA.

The King started from Berlin last Saturday, on his visit to the Emperor of the French. His Majesty arrived at Compiègne on Sunday afternoon, and was met by Marshal Forenzan de Tascheloup.

Some of the German journals talk of an arrangement being on the eve of completion between the Governments of Austria and Prussia which is to bring about a close and intimate political relationship. According to the report, which is widely circulated, this relationship means nothing less than a Prussian guarantee of Venetia to Austria, in consideration of which Austria would concede to Prussia certain advantages in the way of the supremacy of the Federal Diet, the command of the Federal army, and the garrisoning of the fortresses of the Rhine. Some of the German papers are indignant at the idea of such an arrangement, and the Kreuz Zeitung expresses a doubt whether, according to the terms of the Constitution, it could be carried out without the assent of the Chambers.

The following are represented to be the chief points of the projected convention between Prussia and Bremen:—1. Bremen undertakes to pay to Prussia, for the construction and keeping of a fleet, a sum to be hereafter determined. 2. Bremen authorises Prussia to recruit her seamen in the territory of the Free City. On the other hand Prussia contracts the obligation to protect and defend Bremen in the event of war, shouldthe Senate of the Free City not be able to do so. It is expected that the citizens of Bremen serving in the fleet shall enjoy the same rights as Prussian subjects.

THE CORONATION.

As many as 235 members of the Chamber of Deputies of Prussia out of 352 have, in addition to the Ministers and public functionaries, announced their intention to attend the coronation. The presence of the Chamber, except that of the Pope, will be represented at the ceremony. The Pope, it is believed, have either sent his excuses, and or have not answered the invitations sent them.

It having been reported that the ex-Mayor Francis II. would send a representative to Königsberg to attend the coronation of the King of Prussia, and that he would be received at Court there, explanations have taken place between the Courts of Berlin and Vienna, and it is stated to be that Francis II. will not be represented at the coronation, and that an Italian representative will be received only in the capacity of a representative of King Victor Emmanuel.

Great preparations are being made in Berlin for the solemn entry of the King and Queen. Many of the windows of the houses in the streets by which the procession is to pass have been hired by speculators, who are demanding for places whence they can best see the King as Königsberg the hiring of a carriage for all the duration of the ceremonies. The Berlin Chamber is in Saxe. In 24. Thursday's Gazette states that the Chamber has asked 900 thalers for the use of four or five rooms. Several of the Ministers have offered to let their residences in the houses of the Consuls of their respective nations.

A large dining-hall is now being built in the garden of the French Embassy at Berlin capable of containing 250 persons. From this room will communicate with the new dining-room on the first floor by means of a wide staircase. In addition to the present kitchen another is now in course of erection large enough to prepare a dinner for 500 persons. The object of these preparations is a grand fête to be given, after the coronation, to the King and Queen by the Duke of Magenta, in the name of the Emperor of the French.

The Corporation of Breslau, which is to figure in the procession on the solemn entrance of the King into Berlin, will be preceded, not by a herald, but by a bear-leader. The bear will display all his art of immense size, and breath it will be as many little hats as there are States. This all Germany will be under one hat, if not under one crown.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The Archduke Charles Louis, brother of the Emperor of Austria, will represent his Imperial Majesty at the coronation of the King of Prussia at Königsberg.

The deputation with the Address of the Croatian Diet was received on Wednesday by the Emperor, who said he would consider the claims of the Croatians and afterwards give his decision.

We learn from Pesth that the Assemblies and Municipal Councils of the Comitats of Arad and Bues have been dissolved by the Government in consequence of the numerous petitions in the project of the Comitat of Pesth against the dissolution of the Hungarian Diet. The dissolution of the Assembly of the Comitat of Arad has been decreed. A Royal commissioner has already been appointed. The Assembly of the Comitat of Zala has resolved to ignore any illegal ordinance of the Government. It also protests against the nomination of a commissioner, and the proposed new organisation of the Hungarian Diet, and declares that it will only yield to force.

A funeral service has been solemnised in Pesth in memory of the Hungarian Generals who were executed by order of the Austrian Government on Oct. 5, 1849.

At Lemberg, capital of Austrian Poland, on the day of the celebration of the Emperor of Austria's name fete, the scholars of the preparatory colleges and universities walked through the national Polish church, and celebrated after that with chants the organ was playing the Austrian national anthem. A commissioner of police was present during the student's National Anthem. A commissioner of police was present during the service for their patron saint, Stanislaus. Some of the scholars were then arrested, but, in consequence of a popular demonstration, were afterwards set at liberty.

The editor of the Gross at Lemberg, having been found guilty of high treason and inciting the people to sedition, has been sentenced to five years' hard labour, loss of nobility, forfeiture of half his cautionmoney, and deprivation of the faculty of exercising the editorial profession.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

The commercial reports from the mouth fair of Novgorod state that, in consequence of the high price of American cotton, an unusually large quantity of that material, the produce of Bokhara and Khiva, was brought into the market. Not less than 60,000 poods were purchased for Russian manufacturers, by whom it is readily used; the thread it makes is said to be of a very superior quality. A further supply of 100,000 poods, from the same source, will be imported into Russia before the end of the year.

The Russian corvette Novik, carrying the flag of Admiral Popoff, and commanded by Captain Skryplieff, has sailed from Cronstadt for an exploring voyage on the eastern coasts of Siberia.

At Warsaw, on the 1st, Count Lambert opened the sittings of the Council of Ministers which has been instituted for the Kingdom of Poland. He delivered a brief speech, in which he announced the presentation of the Budget for 1862, as well as some bills submitted by the Government. He only made a slight allusion to the agitation prevailing in the city, and maintained complete silence respecting the views of the Russian Government on the principles of the constitutional Act.

Disturbances, which a Theron telegram calls an "insurrection," occurred on the night of the 3rd inst. in Warsaw. The population tore down the Russian eagle from the public buildings and replaced it by the insignia of Poland. In the course of the affray the Mayor of the place was killed.

TURKEY AND MONTENEGRO.

A Vienna despatch announces a victory achieved by the Montenegrins over the Turks. The latter having left on the field upwards of a hundred men killed and wounded.

A telegram from Constantinople says the Porte has consented to the return of the Montenegrin Archimandrite, Prince Nicholas and his senators, having for their object the overthrow of the present Turkish authority.

Gentlemen,—I have received and considered with the greatest attention the memorial you have addressed to me.

You have drawn a striking picture of the evils which Mexico—the richness and the bloodshed, the impunity of crime, and the absence of any controlling influence. That picture I called the Government.

Her Majesty's Government have a right by treaty, and by all the laws which govern international relations, to require security for the persons and property of British subjects, and the performance of specific engagements on the part of Mexico.

Her Majesty's Government will exercise this right.

But her Majesty's Government cannot think it wise to interfere in the internal government of Mexico. You seem to think that a protecting force thrown into Mexico for the single purpose of the payment of the bondholders would succeed in attaining that object, and that even a small force might suffice for that purpose.

I am sorry to say that I think a very large force would be insufficient to restore public tranquillity.

This is a task which the Mexicans must accomplish for themselves. There are very few among the leading interference can be beneficial, and in those few cases there must be a large and numerous party in the country prepared to avail themselves of foreign aid.

I am convinced to say that I see no proof of the existence of such a party in Mexico.

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, must confine their action to the clear and indisputable rights of the bondholders from the de facto Government of Mexico, however constituted, respect for the persons and property of British subjects, and the fulfilment of such specific engagements as have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your most obedient humble servant,

To Messrs. Dent, Palmer, and Sons, Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co., and others.

The Moniteur des Arts states that there is some intention to place statues of Talma and Rachel in the new peristyle of the Théâtre Français at Paris.

Among the pilgrims to the city of Mecca this year was Hadji Mirza Hussein Khan, Persian Minister at Constantinople. He was the lion of the gathering.

The Prussian Minister of Commerce has addressed a circular to the chambers of commerce, inviting them to institute a fourth class of trains, in order to render railways accessible to a greater number of travellers.

It appears from some recent statistical returns that the average of the number of human life in France is 39 years 9 months. Twelve years ago the average was declaring ever since, and is now scarcely more than thirty-nine.

The grand festival of the Palais de l'Industrie in Paris, in which 4000 performers take part, will take place on Sunday next, the 9th inst. Sunday, the 30th; and Tuesday, the 32nd of the month. There is also to be a grand equestrian festival on the 15th, and the distribution of prizes to the competitors will be effected on the 22nd.

The Paris Academy proposes to give a special prize of 2000f. for the best essay on the following subject:—"The necessity of establishing, in the natural history of literature, the important connection of man and the principles of tradition with the learned researches and historic intelligence of the present and the different epochs." It will not be necessary that the public shall be accuse of the involved "subject" that expressed will be entitled to a reward of 2000f.

The excavations which are being made for the canal for the Isthmus of Suez have led to the discovery at Ghizh of a religious edifice of vast size and beauty, which now constituted more than two thousand years ago. At Karnac, also, a temple, the circuit of which is stated to be four kilometres (2½ miles), has been discovered; and another has been unearthed in Nubia, at Gerf-Hussein. The walls of these latter edifices are decorated with sculptures, hieroglyphics, and historical bas-relief.

COTTON IN INDIA.—The following extract from a Rurrackee circular of the 7th ult. is interesting, as showing how the movement for the production of cotton is spreading in the Punjaub. It is understood that a considerable breadth of land is now being sown with this staple, for the growth of which that region is exceedingly well adapted:—"Cotton.—A stimulus has been imparted to this article by the news received from England by last mail, and the further intelligence by telegraph via Galle to the 20th ult. of an engagement having been fought between the contending forces in America, attended with disastrous results to the Federalists. The consequence has been an increased inquiry for cotton, and kind qualities have changed hands in considerable quantities, whilst a rise of eight rupees per candy is noticeable in the prices above those ruling a fortnight ago."

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

By the Canadian steamer Anglo-Saxon we have advices from NEW YORK to the 24th ult.

THE WAR IN MISSOURI.

On the 20th ult. General Mulligan surrendered Lexington to the besieging force of the Confederates. The men had fought for fifty-nine hours without water, and had only three barrels of vinegar to quench their thirst. Previous to the surrender Colonel Mulligan offered to take a position on a level spot of ground and give General Price the choice of four to one in a fair and open fight, but no attention was paid to the challenge. About 250,000 dollars in gold fell into the possession of the victors. The morning after the surrender the men were all released on parole not to serve again during the war, and forried across the river. The officers were retained. General Mulligan's loss was about 100, while that of General Price was not more than 300. Much dissatisfaction is felt by the Administration and the public that General Fremont did not march to the relief of Lexington. General M'Culloch, at the head of 15,000 Confederates, was within fifteen miles of Lexington on the 21st. A night engagement had also taken place at Papinsville, in the same State, to the advantage of the Federals, under General Lane.

The complaints against General Fremont multiply on all sides. He is accused of extravagance in the expenditure of public money, supercilliousness of demeanour, and of living in too much state, while surrounded, moreover, by a body guard. The German of the north-west are stanch partisans of Fremont, and it is doubtful if the Administration will think it expedient to remove him.

THE NAVAL EXPEDITION.

Sherman's naval expedition against the Southern coast will sail in three weeks' time from our latest dates at the farthest.

KENTUCKY.

The neutrality of this State was created so. General Buckner of the Confederate army, occupies Bowling Green, in Southern Kentucky, and will hold it until driven out or until the Federals retire. General Anderson is at Fort Sumter Virginia, will consist of all the Federalists at Louisville. Both Generals are Kentuckians. The war in Kentucky will be a guerilla warfare. Virginia will partake of all the repulsive features of a truly civil war, opinion in that State being very equally divided between the two parties.

FOREIGN OPINION.

The Comte de Paris and Duc de Chartres have been added to General M'Clellan's Staff. The young Comte de Penthièvre, son of Prince de Joinville, was to enter the United States service. Count Lichenhoff, of Russia; Lieutenant Oscar Brendauer, of Prussia; Major Hammerstein, Aide-de-Camp to Prince Charles of Prussia; Lord Lindsay, of England; Captains Vegesackand Holtman, of Sweden; and Major Kirk, of Canada, have taken service in the Federal Army.

Mr. Russell, who has refused to accede to the terms of a memorial that he would prevent the continuance of Mr. Russell's letters to the Times. In a correspondent's letter, he says it has not been the practice of the United States' Government to concern itself with the representations made by the press of foreign countries. The Times's letters, he says, "are widely read. Moreover, there are only circulates about fifty copies in the United States. For the offence of republication American editors and the English correspondents of the London and Liverpool are intelligent, virtuous, and respectable as Mr. Russell is are, says Mr. Seward, duly appointed Swiss Minister to the Federal Army. The consul can, therefore, afford to tolerate the heresies of one man.

Secretary Seward grants passports to coloured men who are desirous of proceeding to Europe. Since the Civil War broke out, however, passports had been refused to this class. Secretary Cameron has forbidden coloured men to appear in the uniform of the United States Army. The opinion of the 2000 slaves who had fled to Fort Monroe have been sent to Washington and the matter is under there by the Department of War.

Mr. Seward has issued a circular in explanation of the Confiscation Act, in which he states that the law only contemplates a seizure of such property as may be used to or from the contemplated rebellion, or as may for the promotion of the rebellion; and that real estate, houses, personal property, and slaves are not the subjects to confiscation in the absence of evidence of such unlawful uses.

THE NORTHERN STATES.

On the 23rd ult. the observance of a national fast and humiliation took place.

Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clotilde had left New York for Boston and the Princess Clotilde had been presented with a watch, which they expressed themselves much pleased.

Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, one of the slave trade are being taken in New York. Two vessels have been condemned in that city for participating therein.

The New York Herald publishes the following list of "peace party" newspapers suspended since the commencement of the war:—"Papers suppressed by the Government, 17; altered their politics, 5; died naturally, 9; denied the mails, 5; changed their politics, 7; whose editors are in prison, 2."

The Boston correspondent of the Springfield Republican gives an account of the way in which the President was reluctantly persuaded to sign the Emancipation Act. He said it was "contraband," and "rebellion." He says:—

"It was with much difficulty when President Lincoln was prevailed by Hughes, Wade, Wilson, and Sumner to sign the Confiscation Bill, against the words of which he had taken special exception. Before doing so, the President has set out the main facts, but there are some details. The bill was brought to the White House by Senator Harlan, of Iowa, and Secretary Chase, on Sunday last. It was in the last half hour of the session, and the signers had only time to read the first section, which declared that the slaves were to set what did Abe would do with it. The President looked it over carefully and laid it down. 'Harlan,' said Abe, 'I don't like this.' 'Why, Mr. President?' inquiringly. 'No; I am not going to sign it.' "Well, Chase, will you at least read it, and look it over, so we can get it before them?' 'Yes, I shall do that.' 'What are your objections, Mr. President?' 'It will lose us Kentucky.' 'I—I—Senator Harlan stammered, and Secretary Chase looked up good-humouredly and retorted, "Then d—n you!" Bingham, it seems to me, has always been a temporary visitor during this session, and Everett's character, to him, at least, of the President's course; and old Abe may be persuaded to sign the bill. Sumner, Wade, and Hughes have been to the White House and called the Senator whose name I have mentioned, and perhaps others, and they promised to see the President, and to-day Wade, Hughes, and Sumner are the good work.

"Under the influence of Western orders and war expenditure, business is reviving in the Atlantic States, and many factories which had closed their doors in the spring have resumed operations on full time.

THE NATIONAL LOAN.

A great number of agencies for receiving subscriptions have been opened in different parts of the country, and small amounts are subscribed. The Bank of the Republic, recently opened at New York, and the aggregate subscription from the whole country has not during the week ending last Saturday exceeded 100,000 dollars. In Cincinnati, however, there is no doubt the banks will furnish the second 50,000,000 dollars, on the 15th inst., although they will not have disposed of the whole of the first instalment of the loan to the public.

CALIFORNIA.

In the State election the Republican ticket has prevailed by a large majority. The Union party has also carried the State Congressional ticket, polled the next largest number of votes.

There are a large number of Secessionists arriving in California by the overland route. They are mostly of Unionist sympathies, and represent the state of things in Texas as deplorable.

The Federal troops have crossed the Rio Grande, the boundary between British and American territory have completed their work.

The Moniteur publishes an Imperial decree opening a credit of 272,000f. for the improvement of the navigation of the River Bretagne, between the lock of Bergenet and the point where it falls into the Charente. The rest of the estimated cost of the work—41,000f.—is to be paid by the town ships especially benefited by the improvement.

A Frankfort journal states that a convention has been concluded between the States along the banks of the Rhine, the result of which is that all tolls for passing under the bridges are to be suppressed from Jan. 1, 1862. It is further stated that the Baden Ploughenstamp proposed, in one of the last sittings of the Committee on the Navigation of the Rhine, that a special conference should be held at Coblentz, in order to take measures for the organisation of the customs arrangements all along the river.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegram was received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday) :—

AMERICA.—New York, Sept 28.—It is reported from Washington that the Confederates have erected a long line of batteries on the Lower Potomac. Several Federal steamers passing up and down have been fired into. A considerable force of Confederates is assembled between Occoquan and Acquia Creek. It is rumoured that they will endeavour to cross the river at this point. General Fremont and his Staff have left for Jefferson city. It is estimated that the Confederates captured at Lexington a million and a half of dollars, seven cannon, and 4000 rifles. The Federal troops have stormed and captured Romney, Western Virginia. The Confederates retreated to the mountains.

ITALY.—Turin, October 10.—The Opinione of to-day says :—"It is impossible to accept the statement of the Correspondencia Autografica, that the archives of the Neapolitan Consulate would be given up on account of Francis II. having given his consent. That would exclude the mediation of Russia. M. Thouvenel is said to have signified to M. Mon, the Spanish Ambassador at Paris, that, should Spain not accept the proposition of France, it became an interruption of diplomatic relations between France and Spain."

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

Dr. Jeune has been reappointed Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

Trinity Church, Weston-super-Mare, was consecrated on Thursday week by the Bishop of Bath and Wells.

The Temple Church, which has been closed since the commencement of the long vacation, was reopened on Sunday for Divine service.

The Bishop of Peterborough has given a second donation of £40 for the restoration and enlargement of the Church of St. Sepulchre, Northampton.

On Sunday the Church of England and the Dissenters commenced their autumnal and winter campaign of religious services in theatres and halls for the benefit of the working classes.

The village church of Whitchurch, near Ross, was reopened on Tuesday week, after a restoration chiefly at the cost of Mr. A. Todd Pratt, the Registrar of Friendly Societies, a native of the place.

The Guardian states that the Rev. W. M. Hitchcock, late Incumbent of Broome, Carmarthenshire, and the Rev. E. Chosen, has been appointed Domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Durham.

The Rev. J. W. Cunningham, Vicar of Harrow, died on Sunday week, aged eighty-two. He was ordained in the year of George IV. He was one of four successive Vicars who had held the living for 100 years.

On Sunday the Church of Ascension of Hazlehythe Edwards, of Hazlehythe, Norfolk, parochial school buildingsare in course of erection at that place. The cost, which is estimated at £600, will be defrayed by the family alone.

The Bishop of Durham (elect) proposes holding a special confirmation at Auckland Castle on Sunday, Nov. 10. The next general confirmation for the diocese of Durham will be held in the month of May.

The first stone of a new church was laid at Shipton Gorge, Dorsetshire, on Tuesday, by the Bishop of Dorchester. Sir Ivo Bligh, the Earl of Ilchester, lord of the manor, presented £200 to the building fund.

Two gentlemen, who have already contributed largely to the Lambeth Sanatorium Fund, have offered to the Dean £100 each towards the £400 still wanted to complete the works immediately required, provided that the same can be found to give £500 in addition to their own.

Ruthington Church, Sussex, was reopened on the 18th ult. for Divine service by the Bishop of Chichester, having been entirely restored, under the superintendence of Mr. W. Slater, architect. The sermon was preached by the Vicar, the Rev. C. J. Ross.

The parish church of St. Mary, West Creeting, Suffolk, was reopened on Friday, the 4th inst., after considerable alterations had been made in the interior. The chancel screen and pews were defaced by Oliver the Rev. Edw. Parker, who also contributed to the general improvements which were effected by subscription. The pulpit is of stone,handsomely carved, and coloured made on the day of opening.

Testimonials have been presented to the following clergymen:—To the Rev. W. F. Reynolds, B.A., on his leaving the curacy of St. Peter's, Bournemouth, a handsome and an illuminated address, signed by the churchwardens, trustees, and teachers of the St. Peter's parish schools. To the Rev. J. Jones, for many years curate of Ince and Poulton, Cheshire, a silver salver and inkstand by his parishioners. To the Rev. S. Wood, on his leaving the lodgings of Preston, Rutland, from the farmers, the poor, the children, and parishioners of that parish.—To the Rev. Hamilton E. Butler, Chaplain to H.M. Constabulary, a purse of sovereigns from classic lamps, from the members of his class for the late confirmation of the Lord Bishop of London.

The Rev. Mr. Macnaught, Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's Church, Everton, Liverpool, has, in a letter to his congregation, briefly given his reasons for resigning his office in the Communion of the Established Church. Mr. Macnaught says his opinions have undergone a great change since he entered on his incumbency, and consequently he feels that he can no longer in conscience give his "unfeigned assent and consent." Those are "the clergyman's supposed answers to them or certain, that are required to be made by him in the subject of confession, as contained in the service for the ministration of the sick, the doctrine of purgatory, the invocation of saints, and the power of absolution." Mr. Macnaught says he knows of no other way in which he can honestly leave the Church of England, and he resigns his incumbency, he knows not what is to follow. He has a wife and "is the only stay of a widowed mother and two fatherless sisters." The congregation of St. Chrysostom's Church, Everton, have presented Mr. Macnaught with a purse containing the incumbency resigned also the half-year's seat-rents "which he has been paid to the pew-holders in the church."

The annual Synod of the Bishops of the Scottish Episcopal Church was held at Edinburgh on Thursday week. There were present the Bishops of Brechin and Moray and Ross, the Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, and Ross, St. Andrew's, and Glasgow. The Bishops proceeded to take into consideration a memorial from the clergy and laity of the diocese of Aberdeen, which had been transmitted by the Bishop of that diocese to be held upon the Articles and Formularies of the Church as received by the Primitive Church and Ross, that the clergy be instructed to communicate, through the Bishop of Aberdeen, the following views of the Synod upon the points of doctrine and discipline referred to in the memorial:—"The Synod is of opinion that the Bishops have the right to determine what amount of theological and judicial knowledge they require in candidates for holy orders. The Synod is also unanimous in the feeling of the Episcopal synod held in Edinburgh on the 6th of November, 1857, that the Communion Office of the Church of England is the best and most suitable for the use of the Church, and that in the opinion in question the same weight which is generally ascribed to the Articles and Formularies of the Church is due under all circumstances. With the view of meeting such scruples as may have surprised the inquiry contained in this memorial, the Bishops direct the attention of the clergy to the fact that the Articles and Formularies of the Church are the sole standards by which the Bishops and the clergy of that Church are tested and judged. The Synod also agreed to by all the Bishops present, with the exception of the Bishop of Brechin, who protested that the Synod had no power to make such a declaration. "The Bishops beg to acknowledge, with all courtesy, the receipt of the memorial, but should be excluded upon to enter upon its merits."

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. W. Harrison, Rector of Birch, Essex, to be Rural Dean of Dengie.—The Rev. C. Cole to be Chaplain to the Forces.—Bromley, in Kent Cathedral. Stationer: The Rev. A. J. Coleridge to Sidmouth, Devonshire; Rev. W. Cotton to Bicker, Rev. T. Fowler to Croft, Lincolnshire; Rev. F. Gaynor to Ashwell, Rev. T. Gibbons to Bromley, Kent; Rev. J. Hewlett to Ilminster, Somerset; Rev. W. Hill to Tiverton, Devon; Rev. H. Lee to Wardhill, near York; Rev. J. Lowndes to Buckbridge, Devon; Rev. R. Taylor to Warthill, near York; Rev. J. Taylor to Kimble; Rev. W. Wood to Ilminster, Somerset.—Lay Appointments: The Rev. T. H. Flynn to Berkhamstead, Yorkshire; Rev. J. Gibbons to Bishop's Lydeard, Somerset; Rev. A. Godson to Stanton Mallet, Somerset; Rev. F. B. Hoyd to Holham, near Beverly, Yorkshire; Rev. G. S. Parry to St. John, Bedlam, Yetorin, New South Wales; Rev. G. Snow to Pimpleton, Dorset; Rev. J. G. Sydenham to Bridgwater-cum-Chilton, Somerset; Rev. E. Trees to Gedington, Notts; Rev. D. J. Wilkens to Wing, Bucks; Rev. J. Wild to East Drayton, with Stockham and Askham, Notts. The Rev. C. J. Whitby to be Missionary to Calcutta.—Marriage.

The Zeit of Frankfort states that a duel has just been fought near that city between Major von der Tann, Chamberlain to the King of Bavaria, and an Austrian officer, whose name is not given. The Major was hit in the abdomen, and soon after died.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE MR. SAMUEL GURNEY.

STRATFORD-LE-BOW was the scene last week of an interesting ceremony — the inauguration of a handsome monument to the memory of the late Mr. Samuel Gurney, who was for many years an inhabitant of the neighbourhood, where his munificent liberality will be long held in grateful remembrance by all classes of the inhabitants. The memorial consists of a beautifully-proportioned obelisk in grey granite, 42ft. in height, executed by the Chesowing Granite Company, from the designs of Mr. John Bell. Two sides of the base form drinking-fountains, the water flowing from groups of water-lilies, boldly sculptured in white marble. The front of the base is of polished slab of granite, with the following inscription in gold letters :—"In remembrance of Samuel Gurney, who died the 6th of June, 1856. Erected by his fellow-parishioners and friends, 1861. 'When the ear heard him, then it blessed him.'" Several thousand persons assembled on Monday week to witness the opening ceremony, which was conducted by Mr. John Jarvis, J.P., of Cranbrook Park, the Vicar and many of the neighbouring clergy taking part in the proceedings. Several members of the Gurney family were also present.

THE GURNEY MEMORIAL AT STRATFORD.

LARGE SWING-BRIDGE AT BREST.

ANY one looking at the map of France will see how advantageously placed for a naval arsenal is Brest: at the end of a great promontory stretching out into the Atlantic between the Channel and the Bay of Biscay. But this is not all; the internal advantages are equal. Its roadstead, unlike that of Cherbourg (which depends on an artificial breakwater), is formed by a natural inclosure of hills, shutting it out from the sea and forming a shelter for all the navies of France. Its narrow opening is protected outside and in with forts and batteries—for ever there—threatening all intruders like the open jaws of a shark. A winding creek, the Penfeld, running inland from this expanding basin, contains the dockyard and town of Brest. Along its shores lie the great workshops, dock basins, seamen's barracks, furnaces, smitheries, &c. It is very deep, and, hitherto, the town of Brest on the left bank was accessible from the suburb La Recouvrance on the right only by ferry-boats. To remedy this inconvenience, and not to interrupt the passage of great-masted ships of war up and down the creek, the great iron swing-bridge of which we give an Engraving at page 366 was constructed, and opened in June last.

The width between the buttresses is no less than 342ft., and its height above the walls is 65ft. It opens in the centre to allow ships to pass, each valve turning on a colossal pier of granite, moved by ingenious machinery, held in place by a counterpoise of ironwork, on the land side of the pier. The engineer is M. Oudry, of the "Ponts et Chaussées."

The interests of the British public are admirably represented at Brest by our excellent Consul, Anthony Sir Perrier, a gentleman of French descent and of an old Huguenot family.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF CAPESTHORNE HALL.

THIS stately mansion of Capesthorne Hall, Cheshire, was on Saturday se'nnight the scene of a terrible fire, which completely gutted the spacious and handsome building, and resulted in damage amounting to several thousand pounds. The hall was occupied by the owner, Arthur Henry Davenport, Esq.; and the only inmates of the hall when the catastrophe occurred on Saturday night were Mr. Davenport and a groom, and the usual servants. The fire first made its appearance on the top of the building, and must have been in existence some time before discovered by the footman, who first saw flames in the staircase leading to the bell-turret. He raised the alarm, and every person on the premises was soon rendering what assistance he could; but the fire continued to make headway, till within an hour or two the flames issued forth from almost every window in front of the mansion and from the roof. The greatest consternation seized the inmates. Engines from Macclesfield and Congleton were procured. It was soon perceived, however, that the only hope left was to concentrate every effort upon preventing the spread of the fire beyond the body of the hall, the interior of which began to fill with smoke. Daylight on the following morning revealed a sad scene. The interior of the building from the right wing to the left presented one mass of burning debris, the external walls only remaining, while a pile of furniture of all descriptions lay on the ground in front of the entrance. Nearly all the articles of virtù so profusely scattered through the mansion have been preserved. The dining-room on the left of the corridor, which was floored with scagliola, and contained an elaborately-carved sideboard and a suite of furniture of immense value, was destroyed—the more portable articles being saved. The drawing-room was denuded of its furniture, glasses, paintings, carpet, and ornaments before the flames burst through the door connecting it with the ante-room. So great was the heat in this place that the oil paint on the walls was one mass of blisters. The ante-room, the library, and Mr. Davenport's study are entirely gutted, nothing now remaining in them but charred beams, and the demolished remains of the beds, bedding, and furniture for the rooms that were above. The treasures of foreign, and especially of Italian, literature were, however, preserved in safety. The conservatory (25ft. high, 156ft. long, and 40ft. broad), built under the superintendence of Sir Joseph Paxton, and stocked with a valuable collection of English and foreign plants, has escaped; also the vaulted wine-cellars under the corridor, and the pantries and offices under the dining, drawing, and ante rooms and library. The silver plate has been saved. Colonel Peel, who had been a guest of Mr. Davenport, and left Capesthorne for Manchester on Saturday morning, has lost a considerable amount of luggage, and many of the inmates have been sufferers by the sad catastrophe.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR IN AMERICA.

THE two great armies still stand at bay on the lines of the Potomac, and the chain-bridge across that river, above Georgetown, of which an Illustration by our Special Artist is given below, is a position of great interest just now, as the Confederates are continually making threatening movements in the neighbourhood, either with the intention of destroying the bridge or of crossing by it into Maryland. On the heights on the Virginian shore are seen the tents of the Federal advance, which thrown out pickets to a distance of two miles beyond. The Maryland end of the bridge is commanded by an upper and a lower battery, both of them very strong positions.

On the opposite page we give an Illustration, from a Sketch by our Special Artist, of the bringing in the Federal wounded after the skirmish at Lewinsville, Virginia. Just as the wounded were being brought in General M'Clellan reached the ground with an Aide-de-Camp and an escort of dragoons. He raised his hat as each poor fellow was borne from the ambulance to the hospital; and many whose eyes were fast glazing in death raised themselves in the arms of those who bore them and smiled a last smile at their young and beloved General.

Our Special Artist writes from Washington on the 23rd ult. as follows:—

"I have just come from a cruise down the Potomac, and while away I fell in with the officer who was bringing the news of the Ocracoke affair to the Navy department. The Sketch I forward is done over his own lines on the paper. There will, in all probability, be more details by next mail. I have got some river subjects, which will come on in a day or two. In the meantime I send these two. I expect to go out west, to Rosecrantz and Fremont; but yet we may have an attack here from hour to hour, and I dare scarcely leave. Both sides are now awfully close together, and very, very strong. I am waiting to get some definite notion of the next move on the cards, and shall then act promptly."

THE WAR IN AMERICA: THE CHAIN-BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC ABOVE GEORGETOWN, LOOKING TOWARDS THE VIRGINIAN SHORE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE WAR IN AMERICA.—THE LATEST SPECIAL NEWS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.—A NORTH-FACING VIEW OF THE CAMP AT BIRD'S POINT, MISSOURI, AS SEEN FROM A COLD SPRING ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, October 13.—20th Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 14.—Battle of Jena, 1806.
TUESDAY, 15.—Battle of Leipzig, 1813.
WEDNESDAY, 16.—House of Parliament burnt, 1834.
THURSDAY, 17.—Etrusbrada.
FRIDAY, 18.—St. Luke. Full Moon, 6h. 38m., p.m.
SATURDAY, 19.—Bonaparte defeated at Moscow, 1812.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 19, 1861.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.
0 34	1 12	1 50	2 29	3 11	3 57	4 51

Will shortly be ready,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1862, price 1s., containing GROUPS OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS (printed in Colours), from Drawings by HARRISON WEIR, and Interesting Illustrated Descriptions of the above by THOMAS & MILLER; Twelve Fine-Art Engravings; also, Astronomical Diagrams (printed in Colours), &c., of Remarkable Phenomena, with Explanatory Notes by J. RUSH; together with Illustrations of the Seasons, by A. HUGH. Office, 198, Strand.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—
Whole Page, £20. Half Page, £10. Quarter Page, £5.
Any smaller Advertisement, 2s. 6d. per line (double column).
 ILLUSTRATED ADVERTISEMENTS will be received.
CIRCULATION, 100,000.
Orders and Advertisements must be sent in early to ensure attention.

OUR CONTINENTAL SUBSCRIBERS.—To suit the convenience of residents in Germany, Russia, and the eastern portion of Europe, we have appointed Mr. Ludwig Denicke, of Leipzig, Special Agent for that Journal. Terms of subscription:—One Year, 19 thalers Half-year, 5 thalers.

The Annual Subscription for the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS including the Four Double Numbers and the Christmas Number, will be—unstamped, £1 4s.; stamped, £1 8s. 8d.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1861.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

REJOICING at the abolition of the Tax upon Paper, now practically accomplished, and proud in the recollection of the share taken by them in the advocacy of that important and salutary measure, the Proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS have the pleasure to announce that they are making arrangements by which the full amount of advantage to be derived from its operation shall be secured to their subscribers. To effect this (the actual saving being a fractional sum too small to be appreciable in the price) the Proprietors have come to the conclusion that the amount rescued from the hands of the exciseman might be most advantageously employed in throwing new talent and additional elements of interest into their Paper, and in occasionally extending its dimensions.

High and satisfactory as has always been the character of the Illustrations in this Journal, the Proprietors are determined to use every exertion to give additional variety and value to this important feature—sparing no expense to obtain from all parts of the world interesting subjects for illustration, and to secure the services of artists and engravers to produce them in a style of excellence worthy of the advancing intelligence and taste of the age.

The numerous and efficient staff of special correspondents and artists attached to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be in constant readiness to proceed with dispatch to all parts of the globe in which events of public interest—WARS, State ceremonials, artistic or industrial meetings, or national festivities—may be going forward or likely to occur; the result of their combined labours being AN ILLUSTRATED CURRENT HISTORY, as well as a compendium of local scenery, costume, and character, of unique and enduring interest.

Ever desirous to extend the field of their operations in proportion to the increasing demands upon their attention, artistic butable to the numerous additional interests daily claiming graphic illustration, the Proprietors propose, whenever occasion may occur, publishing an additional half-sheet, thus making the Supplement sixteen instead of eight pages or the whole publication one of thirty-two pages. Such is the case this week—the ample double sheet now issued containing a mass of information and comment on all subjects of interest, foreign and domestic, and a number and variety of engravings, constituting it at once complete as a newspaper and as an artistic presentment of passing events.

The addit ional scope thus given to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will prove most opportune, and serve most useful purpose in connection with the history and contents of which will be treated with amplitude in the columns of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. The action of this Journal in promoting the GREAT EXHIBITION OF ALL NATIONS, 1851, when it was yet an experiment, tended in no small degree to its success, giving it from the outset a world-wide renown; whilst the full descriptions which it published of the various objects exhibited, illustrated by several thousand Engravings, and the able disquisitions which it presented upon the important industrial interests mixed up with them, constitute the volumes of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for 1851 the most complete record of that great congress of art and industry that has been or ever will be published.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862,

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will deal with the INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION of 1862 as it did with the famed Hyde Park Exhibition of 1851, only with an important improvement in this respect—that, as experience has taught method to the managers of the former, so a more systematic arrangement will be found in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS than was sometimes practicable in 1851.

A remarkable difference between the two Exhibitions will be found in the fact that works of painting will be included in that of 1862—a field so especially adapted to the exercise of the ample artistic resources at the command of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Already arrangements have been made to secure copies of the most important Pictures and Sculptures to be contributed from all parts of Europe, in order that sufficient time may be obtained to engrave them in a suitable manner.

Exhibitors of objects, whether in Fine or Industrial Art, or of natural products, susceptible of engraved representation are invited to communicate particulars thereof at their earliest convenience to the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, who will pay every attention to the subject.

The Proprietors take this opportunity to announce that the future scheme of publication of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will comprise, in the course of each year, besides the regular weekly issue, Four Double Numbers, in addition to the old-established Christmas Number. The Double Numbers will be strictly limited to the purpose of issuing to subscribers large and important Engravings in various branches of art, as copies of Paintings by Eminent Masters, Panoramic Views, &c., in the production of some of which colour and chiaro-scuro printing and other appliances will be employed—works which could not possibly be made available to purchasers throughout the four quarters of the globe, at so trifling a cost, by any other means.

THE entire stagnation of home politics makes the record of the English week a very easy task. A few meetings, chiefly of a bucolic character, but at which political gentlemen, when they have exhausted the agricultural commonplaces which they have conscientiously got up, are compelled for "lack of amusement" to review the affairs of mankind from China to Peru, furnish some little local excitement. Lucky, we might almost say, is the man who contrives like Mr. Newdegate the other day to blunder upon some phrase which makes a sensation, and procures for him unwonted attention from the metropolitan press. We have nothing of the kind to notice this week. No gentleman has explained that the prosperity of England depends on "family," and no Mr. Wegwdin has had his antagonism to such theory booted down by a crowd of auditors, who, being nobodies, are of course painfully alive to the importance of somebodies. The metropolitan struggle for the Chief Magistrate's chair was virtually over when we last wrote, but the Aldermen have since confirmed the decision of the Livery, and Mr. Cubitt will be the dispenser of civic hospitalities to the notabilities who will attend the International Exhibition. City eulogy may be thought to have attained its sublime in the exulting address of a Mr. Jones, who, on the declaration of the result of the contest, likened the duties at the Mansion House during the past year to those of "the noble house of Medici." This is a tribute to the new statuary which must almost have tempted the statues themselves to break silence and applaud Cubitt. A sort of inauguration of another part of the new sewer as is complete has taken place, and seemed called for, in order to convince London that something had been done underground; and if the subterranean railway people would evince a similar desire for appreciation it might tend to allay the bad opinion of travellers who are sent miles out of their way to avoid the chasms and stony deserts which have been created in our principal thoroughfares. It will be seen that neither in London nor in the provinces is there much matter for the chronicler; and the feast which is about to be given to Earl Russell at Newcastle-on-Tyne affords the only promise of political oratory. The nation, however, manages to exist in the absence of the article.

We hear of the deaths of two Potentates at distant parts of the world. The old Queen of Madagascar, who was a kind of Lady Bomba in her way, and behaved as little scrupulously at all improvements, has died. If the resumé of Madagascan politics is to be relied upon, it would appear that there had been an intention to place upon the vacated throne a successor of similar views to those of the deceased Sovereign, and the clergy of the island offered the Pretender as warm support as the Neapolitan priests gave to Francis II. But constitutionalism and progress triumphed, though the means resorted to were of the roughest; the Pretender and his Premier were set upon by the adherents of the rightful heir, and destroyed in the mêlée, and the new King, Rakoto, or Rahoto (the Gotha Almanack has not yet got his titles accurately), has been finally seated, and promises to govern in accordance with the spirit of the age. Madagascar is one of the countries which may be pronounced happy, as "having no annals," and indeed has come late into the history of the world, having been "discovered" in 1506: but it will probably make up for lost time if it is thrown fairly open to adventurers. We also hear that the Emperor of China has not long survived the humiliation of his tyranny, and it is to be hoped that his successor will be as wise as King Rakoto is said to be.

There can be no doubt that the armies of the Northern States of America are preparing for grand and various action, and now that the weather permits them to move freely we shall hear of simultaneous attacks upon Southern positions. The enormous size of the "seat of war" is a condition of the contest not sufficiently taken into consideration here, and it is, indeed, difficult to realise it. Without careful study of the map and due regard to the vast distances between the points at which hostilities are carried on or threatened, justice will not be done to the obstacles in the way of the chiefs on either side, and the fabulous-seeming exertions of the forces which are being brought up appear reasonable only when the extent of territory is taken into account. We repeat that the Old World may now look to hear of actions on a larger scale than war has yet exhibited. Meantime, the only demonstration calling for special notice is one against an Englishman. The letters of Mr. William Russell have given so much offence to persons who dislike plain statements of disasters that application has actually been made to Mr. Seward to prevent the publication of these despatches. Mr. Seward, however, perceives the absurdity of the demand to fight, as some vestries debate, "with closed doors and the exclusion of reporters," and he has declined to interfere, giving his refusal in a grave document, for the solemnity of which the Minister must have indemnified himself by official smiles at the enforced rotundity of his periods. Two of the Orleanist Princes have placed themselves on General M'Lellan's staff, but have declined to receive pay for their services, a decision which may evince on honesty of estimate of their value. The New York Herald, awful, has proposed to be really in the pay of the South, as heretofore and until its weathercock conversion, does its best to generate ill-feeling between the North and England, by a renewal of the ridiculous threat that as soon as the "rebellion" is put down English rule in America shall be swept away. But our American brethren may rest assured that we distinguish between the feeling of a great and glorious nation and the malicious nonsense of an insincere and hireling scribbler.

Pepe Pius has had an affecting leave-taking. The Siamese Ambassadors have received the Papal blessing, and thanks for the protection afforded to Catholic missionaries in Siam. In one of Gay's fables, undeservedly forgotten, there is a story of an elephant who walked into a haberdasher's shop and began turning over some pieces and making remarks. The bibliopole, always ready for business, addresses him—

> Learned Sir, if you'd employ your pen
> Against the senseless sons of men,
> Or write the history of Siam,
> No man is better pay than I am.

The elephant received the proposition unfavourably; but if his descendants are the historiographers to LL. MM. the Kings of Siam, a strange narrative will be put on record touching the interview between the head of the Catholic world and his dusky visitors, and it is far from impossible that "the senseless sons of men" may come in for some caustic criticism from the trunk of the accomplished elephant, who may have to give some reason why the Pope is in a position to bless visitors—or brigands.

THE COURT.

The sojourn of the Court in the Highlands is rapidly drawing to a close. Her Majesty purposes returning to Edinburgh on Tuesday next, and will probably arrive at Osborne on the 21st of October. The late fine weather in the north has been favourable for mountain excursions, and the Queen has availed herself of it almost daily.

On Wednesday se'nnight her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, and attended by Lady Churchill, drove to Alt-na-Guibseach, where ponies were in waiting. The Royal party rode thence to Glen Clova, returning home by the same route in the evening. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deerstalking.

On Thursday se'nnight the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Hohenlohe, Princess Louise, and Prince Leopold, drove to the Lion of Quoich. Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Arthur, went out deerstalking. The Prince of Wales and Prince Louis of Hesse also stalked on the hills.

On Friday se'nnight the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, and attended by Lady Churchill and Lady Augusta Bruce, drove to Loch Calder. The Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Louis of Hesse, went to the Balloch Buie Woods, which were driven for deer.

On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, Prince Louis of Hesse, and Prince Arthur, and attended by Lady Augusta Bruce, drove to Alt-na-Guithasach, and then proceeded on ponies to Loch Lochnagar, returning by the same route in the evening. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deerstalking.

On Sunday the Queen and the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, the Princess Hohenlohe, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Louis of Hesse, attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Mr. Stuart officiated.

On Monday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Hohenlohe and Princesses Helena and Louise, drove out. The Prince Consort and Prince Louis of Hesse went out deerstalking. The Prince of Wales, attended by Captain Grey, went out grouse-shooting.

Yesterday (Friday) the Queen held a Privy Council at Balmoral, at which Parliament was further prorogued.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cumbridge and Princess Mary returned to Kew on Wednesday last from Germany.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has left town on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Glasgow at Bredy Park, near Brentwood.

The Duchess of Wellington and Lady Susan Ramsay left Apsley House last week for Scotland. His Grace is passing the season at his seat in Norfolk.

The Duke and Duchess of Manchester are visiting the Duchess's relatives in Germany. The noble Duke and Duchess will attend the coronation of the King of Prussia at Konigsberg.

The Marquis of Clanricarde has taken a residence in Stratton-street, Piccadilly, for a term of years.

The Earl of Clarendon, K.G., Ambassador Extraordinary at the coronation of the King of Prussia, left town, accompanied by a numerous suite, on Tuesday last, for Berlin.

Earl Granville returned to town on Saturday last.

The marriage of Viscount Sandon, eldest son of the Earl of Harrowby, with Lady Mary Cecil, eldest daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, was solemnised on the 3rd inst. at St. George's, Hanover-square.

LITERATURE AND ART.

NATURALLY speaking, this ought to be the dead season of the year. Cold, dank, moist, gusty weather should prevail; people should begin to talk about the autumnal equinox, and the consequent increase of coincidences among returning tourists per South-Eastern Company's mail-packets between Dover and Calais. Dense fogs should usher in the equinox, and heavy showers close up the evenings, while every garden path should be strewn with sere and yellow leaves. Instead of these premonitory symptoms of coming winter, the green trees are waving in a soft, warm breeze; the sky by noonday is as clear as the eyes of Dolcissima; only a summer sun gilds the dingy chimney-pots of the Inns of Court; and little boys are bathing in the river at Putney.

Bad weather or good weather, however, this present month of October is the among those and the opening day for all reviewers, the season of the writers, the publishing, printing, and the selling of books. The newspapers, daily and weekly, are still suffering under a grievous dearth of literary matter, and compelled to fill their columns with the long-winded oratory of agricultural meetings and the spasmodic jerkings of penny-a-liner "dodgers;" but in the publishing world all is life and activity, and the "dreadful note of preparation" resounds on all sides.

We are delighted to see signs of animation and enterprise among the illustrated publishers, and are especially pleased to learn that the gloomy reports that there would be no illustrated gift-books this winter are unfounded. The change in the cost of paper would, we can well imagine, be a great drawback to the heavy, ornamented paper necessary to "bring up" illustrations in sequence; but we are glad to believe that the more adventurous among our publishers have been content to risk a little money in an expensive season rather than deprive an expectant public of their beloved Christmas books. Messrs. Sampson Low and Son seem to have pursued this gift-book line for the ensuing season. We are to have an illustrated edition of Longfellow's "Hiawatha," with numerous woodcuts and coloured drawings by John Gilbert—truly an ambitious volume, but one full of promise; next, a closely-illustrated collection of Lamb's "Songs and Ballads of the Reign of James the First," and a richly-ornamented volume of the "Salons," with decorative borders and illuminated initials, by John Leighton.

We are fierce any picture-dealers during the heyday of the Renaissance, the sacred subject in Art. Of course, we are not speaking of modern times, mostly with long hards and longer gabardines, who deal chiefly in the Gothic of Rome and on the Ponte Vecchio at Florence, and deal in pictures by the square foot, and in the style of majolica, for embossed salvers and glowing tapestry. Mr. Maclise has, in one of his early pictures, illustrated one of those mediæval dealers (he had always pretty daughters, by-the-way) bargaining with a young painter. But the picture-dealer among the Italian merchant princes, the Florentine farmer, who had lived three centuries since, would have gone short, from the Alps to the Adriatic, with a "winter exhibition," of Hogbush, Covergrin, Jaggers, and Van Verdrugen, Cockle, Pinkie, Pinkie, and Tinsoe. Has that wonderful Mr. Fitzon, for example, had any portofolio? If so, we see by advertisement, to exhibit at the fascinating portico of his gallery at British art, "prior to his return home from the continent." Has the public ever had the chance of paying attention to the forthcoming important work by W. P. Frith, R.A.; "Life at a Railway Station," which will be completed in Mr. Ernest Gambart's rooms in the commercial Babel? It perishes us, however, to discern how the painter's progressing work can engage the "undue attention" of the picture-dealer. Don't Mr. A. Morton, the grinding Mr. Frith's colours for him, or does he propose standing as the sole subject for a grand, a comprehensive picture of a railway, among the dramatis personæ of the picture, or will his "entire attention" be devoted to the task of staring until March next at the canvas on the other side an Asiatic devotee wrapt in the perpetual contemplation of Buddha. These are wonderful times, and Patouisan is one of the most wonderful—a very healthy one, we opine.

Dr. Charles Mackay's bibliomaniacal journal, Robin Goodfellow, has, we regret to learn, come to a very untimely end. Its publication has been suspended since; advisions of powerfully-written fiction will no doubt be temporary interruption of a very powerful romance called "Lady Audley's Secret" by commercial men, who have not been initiated. These "commercials," however, will be but of short duration, as "Lady Audley's Secret" is to be published in three volumes at the French say, in three weeks' time, by Mr. Skeet.

The "petit Homme Rouge," or "little Red Man," who is superstitiously supposed to haunt the Tuileries, to have appeared to Louis XIV., to Charles X., to Louis Philippe, on the eve of the respective catastrophes which closed their reigns, and especially arrayed in his scarlet jerkin, hose, and bonnet, and bearing his fatal broom, to have hopped down the Great with his presence in Moscow, at Leipsic, at Fontainebleau just before his abdication, and at Mont St. Jean on the eve of Waterloo, always chuckling over the dire words "St. Helena!"—this terrible "little Red Man" has recently turned up again, by implication at least, in his favourite palace, the Pavilion de Flore. Palaces in which the "petit Homme Rouge" and in stripping the successive layers of paint off the walls of one of the apartments in the window, found a dreadful picture of the goddess of liberty, doubtless stamped there when the "little Red Man" was in that unlucky month, Messidor. Republican caps, fasces, and other emblems were speedily defaced, and the "petit Homme Rouge" is said for a time to have fled from Elysium.

Visitors to the South Kensington Museum have been justly scandalised to find that a portrait of the infamous Tom Paine—"atyrmaker, revolutionist, and atheist"—has been admitted into the museums of protests. We are willing to believe that the appearance of a portrait of the blasphemer in the museum was a mistake on the part of those who have charge of the museum, and who were ignorant that the picture was plagiarised from Volaire—was due to a mere pictorial hieroglyphic blundering. Paine was, however, the inventor of "a malleable iron arch for a bridge," and so his effigy has been deemed worthy of exhibition in a gallery of virtually national characters. Entertaining as freedom of religion is a most laudable thing, but, if we are to tolerate a portrait of Tom Paine anywhere but in a corridor of Bedlam, we may as well go ahead, and set up statues to Colonel Despard and Jack the Painter, and notably to Messrs. Bradlaugh, Holyoake, and Jaggs, the Sadducean Inspirators, who avowed themselves on the scaffold to be stanch believers in the delectable doctrines of one of the vilest fellows that ever disgraced humanity.

John Locke, the Christian philosopher, is to have, at last, his memorial, his statue, in Oxford. Dr. Pusey is one of those who are raising a monument to the great writer on the Human Understanding erected in the Shire Hall, Oxford. A subscription list has been opened, and the honorary secretary to the "Locke Fund" is the very active, Mr. R. A. Kingdon, brother to "Bishop Kingdon," and who honourably distinguished himself some years since by his powerful appeal for British sympathy in favour of the famous anglo-Turco-Hungarian refugee, Kossuth, the Sadducean Inspirator.

Surely Alexandre Dumas père is the most astounding litterateur of the age! He writes, in three novels, plays, and feuilletons than any other living author; he built the Château de Monte Cristo; he bought a yacht and patronised Garibaldi; and the last thing we hear of the versatile Alexandre is that he has been presiding at the ball at Naples between two angry Italian politicians, MM. Petruccli and Nicotera. What will he send next?

The engagement of Mr. John Hollingshead on the Exhibition Catalogue does not seem to have been from empire to the better work. We hear that there will be published from this pen in December, not a story, on the model of "The Christmas Carol," called "Joseph Diamond;" but Mr. Walter Thornbury, who is sure to write a book every week, and to have three volumes published on Shetland Moody in a day in Persia," and he have published publishing an account of his travels in polite form. Mr. Laurence Oliphant, the British Secretary of Legation at Jeddo, might write a melancholy instructive work to be entitled "A Week in Japan, and What Come of It." This unfortunate literary diplomate had been but seven short days in the great Japanese city of tobbing, tombless, two-hundred swords, and exhilarated trapper, when he escaped almost by a miracle from what the Japanese might regard as justification of the "happy despatch," but you or me, in England, call distantly midnight assassination. Mr. Oliphant, we learn, comes home invalided, and seriously suffering from the effects of the atrocious onslaught made upon him. It is something, however, to be proud of that an English gentleman was for a long time enabled to keep his bloodthirsty assailants at bay with no more formidable a weapon than a stout hunting-whip.

Temple Bar, now verging on the twelfth month of its existence—it is not, consequently, a good-natured friends, to last two—promises plausibly for the new year. The conductor's story of "The Seven Sons of Mammon"—We are seven," he said Sons may cry, "but when two-thirds of four or one number 7"—will be completed in the December number; and simultaneously will be given the first instalment of a new serial entitled by the publishers "An autobiography of a cause perilous and picturesque, bearing the title of "The Strange Adventures of Captain Dangerous, who was a soldier, a pirate, a merchant, a slave among the Sallee rovers, a poet, a spy, a bashaw in the service of the Great Turk, and died at last in his own house in Hanover-square." While promising in great fear and trembling, the new periodical of miscellany, let us mention that the admirable and appreciative article on "Thunder, Poetry and the Thunderer" in the September "Temple" in the October number is from the practised pen of Mr. J. A. Heraud.

FINE ARTS.

In the course of the repairs now taking place at Marlborough House, preparatory for the occupation by the Prince of Wales, the cartoons of Raphael paintings have come to light on the grand staircase and saloon, illustrating the Acts of the Apostles of the great Duke of Urbino, and executed by his pupils. They are to be removed to Hampton Court, and paper, and to have been brought during a whole century or more, to a state of unsuspected fire. Perhaps political jealousy—which led Walpole to cast off the Pallas and Venus from the Palace of Whitehall—prevented their being placed at the bottom of it. However this may be, the pictures, now being removed to Hampton Court, by Mr. Scharf, the accomplished Keeper of Mr. Henry Merritt, assisted by Signor Pinti, will prove of interest in an historical point of view, whatever may be their value as works of art. The first exhibition of Mr. Merritt of Marlborough and Hampton Court of his Allied Army, Views of Cities, Battles, Sieges, &c.

Mr. Ernest Gambart has opened, in addition to his other Leggatt's gallery, Change-alley, Cornhill, an exhibition of the remaining portion of his collection of the works of Madame Rosa Bonheur, now no more productions, and need no remark. "The Hunted Stag" is a large sporting picture, replete with characteristic merit, and very powerful. The most interesting work in the room is "The Interior of Sir Francis Chantrey's Study," which was painted about twenty years or so ago, and presented by the painter to Lady Chantrey, who bequeathed it to her Majesty." The objects represented are few, but full of meaning—the bust of Sir Walter Scott, the sculptor's chair, and a tartar dog, seated on the table, and looking down with sidelong glances at a cat which is perched on the floor. Chantrey has bequeathed to his executive is conscientious and solid, and in the highest degree telling.

Messrs. Day and Haghe have published a coloured print, after a picture by Rhegnolt of the 37th Middlesex Volunteers on Parade at their headquarters, the Foundling Hospital. They have also published a capital view, in the same style, of the Caledonian Asylum, Islington, in commemoration of the visit of the Scottish Volunteers to London.

The will of Thomas Horsman Higgin, Esq., formerly of New Lodge, Bayswater, and late of Gilston Park, Harlow, Essex, who died on the 26th ult. The executors appointed are Edward Higgin and Thomas Higgin, Esqrs., of Gilston Park, and Bayswater, and the Rev. Canon William Higgin, D.D., Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, are also nominated executors. The testator bequeaths to his executors all his real estates, and the Ballymore and Portrush, Railways, died possessed of property which he left to his executors in trust for sale and conversion, and to pay over the interest in the whole of his property is bequeathed, and he takes all the funeral expenses, and debts, and legacies thereout. The testator directs the property is directed to pass to the testator's unmarried daughters; but, in the event of any of them having previously died, then leaving issue amongst all his sons and daughters, share and share alike. The will is dated the 21st day of June, 1859, and was proved in the Prerogative Court on the 27th of March last.

The will of Joseph Pacifico, Esq., of The Lodge, Brook Green, Hammersmith, was proved last month in the London Court, and probate granted to Mrs. Pacifico, the widow, and Mr. Solomon Pacifico, Esq., who are nominated executors and trustees; the personal property being sworn under £20,000. The deceased died possessed of real estate, principally consisting of both real and personal property. He was a member of the Reform Club, and bequeaths £100 to the Royal Literary Fund and all its charitable institutions, societies, schools, and charity; indeed, so much so that we have not room to enter into the list of all the charities he has bequeathed upon them. We can only mention a few, our limit precludes us from doing more. To the Jews' Hospital, Mile-end, "Proposition or the Faith," of which Cardinal Wiseman is patron, the sum of £2000; to the Jews' Orphan Asylum, £1000; to the Jews' Free School, £2000; to Alhallows, Dublin, £2000. There are numerous minor legacies to the servants, friends, and relatives, amounting to £10,000. The testator has bequeathed to his relict a life interest in his real estate and to the residue of his personal estate, after the payment of legacies, to his children equally between them, and on the decease of his relict, the whole of the property is directed to be distributed in certain proportions amongst numerous legatees, of whom many are relatives.

The storm against Mr. Lowe's "revised code of regulations" which appears to be gathering strength every day, and to be spreading in every part of the country are up in arms against this alleged attack on their vested interests, and the college have taken steps to make a deputation a decree on the part of the Committee of Privy Council to strike at the very root of religious instruction.

A FRENCH PRODIGAL AND HIS CREDITORS.—The Imperial Court of Paris has just given an important decision to the effect that creditors of an undischarged bankrupt are debarred by the bankrupt's subsequent to the appointment of a judicial counsel which deprives him of the management of his property, and that such decision on the part of the judicial counsel have been final and deception on the part of the creditor. The following are the circumstances which have given rise to the decision. The prodigal, George Belgian, the possessor of a considerable fortune, came to reside in Paris in the year 1855, and in the month of May, 1856, he married Mdlle. Lacaze. In 1859, contracted a debt with MM. Crémieux and Bernheim for horses purchased of them to the amount of 20,000f., for which he gave bills to the 2,000f. on account. On September, 1859, this account was presented to M. Belgian, who refused to pay it, on the ground that he had been induced to purchase the horses by deceit and fraudulent representations. Judgment was given in favour of M. Belgian by the Civil Tribunal of the Seine. M. Coppens and his partner carried their appeal against the judgment obtained by his creditors, and in January, 1861, the Civil Tribunal of the Seine gave judgment, declaring that the prices charged by Crémieux and Bernheim were extravagant, and that Coppens really owed them only 19,188f. Against that judgment MM. Crémieux and Bernheim appealed to the Imperial Court, which confirmed Coppens to pay the balance of 46,727f., claimed by his creditors, on the ground that he was of age and in the full enjoyment of his fortune when he contracted the debts, and that no fraud had been proved against the creditors.—Galignani.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Sowerby's Museum (in the Strand) was destroyed by fire on Monday. The house was filled with valuable books and objects connected with mineralogy, geology, and natural history, all of which were destroyed.

The united evenings of the London shoeblacks for the last financial year amounted to £4588—a sum representing the building and exhibition of no less than 1,110,112 pairs of boots.

Mr. Thomas Jefferson Hodd, the deputy of Farrin don Within ward, suddenly expired yesterday at night. The deceased gentleman was an active member of the Court of Common Council, and had been a member of the Corporation for twenty-six years.

Lady Gillie received in the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House, on Monday, about eighty of the Chief Corps of the London Rifle Brigade, and was presented by them with a photograph of seven of the boys of the Chief Corps.

A lamentable accident was occasioned in the Thames on Tuesday morning by the loss of a boat which, shrouded the morning, at boat containing a coal-whipper and eleven coal-whippers came in collision with two barges at Rotherhithe and was upsetting. Six of the men were drowned.

A large batch of London thieves were brought before the Middlesex magistrates charged with various petty offences, and the streets of the metropolis were for a time relieved of their presence by their being sentenced to different terms of imprisonment.

M. Blondin took his benefit on Monday at the Crystal Palace, when he went through an unusually extensive programme, giving two distant performances, one on the tightrope, and the second in the evening on the terrace, surrounded with fireworks and fountains.

The opening of the classes for the Middlesex Mechanics session in connection with the City of London College, hitherto known as the Metropolitan Evening Classes, was inaugurated on Monday evening by a public meeting at Pinner Hall, Leadenhall-street, which was presided over by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, and was largely attended by the trade.

Monday being the opening of the session at the Royal Veterinary College, an introductory address was delivered to the students by Professor Spooner, M.R.C.V.S. The discussion was attended by many of the noblest and chief friends, who manifested their approval of the learned professor's observations by frequent applause.

The quarterly returns of the health of the metropolis have just been published. There is an unsatisfactory increase in the number of deaths in the quarter as compared with the summer quarter of last year, which the Registrar-General attributes to the prevalence of cholera in the autumn months. As a proof of the extraordinary state of the present season, we may point to the fact recorded in the above report—on a given day of last month no fewer than 1,110,112 pairs of boots were cleaned.

An application under the extradition treaty with the United States was made at the Bow-street Police Court on Tuesday. The application had reference to one Hamilton Gray, a native of the American ship the Lamaraine, who is charged with having murdered his captain; and was rendered necessary by the fact that the vessel had proceeded to sea with a crew of more than one miles from the coast, the English authorities possessed no power to detain him. He was remanded for a week.

A benevolent gentleman, who has already given the National Life-boat Institution the sum of £1000, has, at a recent meeting of the committee, given to contribute an additional £100, provided nine other persons can be found to give a similar sum. The object in the inducement is apparent, to enable it to meet the present heavy demand on its funds for new life-boat stations just completed on the coasts of Ireland and the west of England, and which have compelled the committee to sell out £500 from the small funded capital of the society.

The births of 1918 children—923 boys and 855 girls—were registered in London last week, which is the corresponding week of last year 1851-60 the average number was 1706.—In the week that ended last Saturday 1247 deaths were registered in London, which is an average number of corresponding weeks in ten previous years, corrected, is 1167; but if 411 deaths from cholera in the first week of October be deducted from the total number which the calculation is made, it will be found that the rate of mortality that prevailed last week was 1 in 45 of the living.

The valuable collection of pictures and works of art bequeathed to the nation by Mr. Turner, R.A., have been removed from South Kensington to Marlborough House, and have been handed over to the National Gallery, under the superintendence of Mr. Worsaae. The collection consists of about one hundred and twenty-five pictures, numerous water-colour drawings and unfinished studies, of which there is a large number. Alterations are now in course of formation in the National Gallery with the view of providing a fitting permanent depository for the pictures, in accordance with the will of the eminent testator.

The Court of Aldermen has accepted the decision of the Livery, and Mr. Orlitt was on Tuesday re-elected Lord Mayor of London. Sir Henry Muggridge expressed a hope that there would be no contest in the approach in his status to the civic chair. A correspondence has passed between the Lord Mayor and Alderman Sir Lucas Pepys on the subject of his civic contest. The committee consolidate the Lord Mayor upon the result, and intimated that a subscription would be opened for the benefit of the widow and family of Sir John Key, Bart. The Lord Mayor, in his reply, expresses the gratitude which he feels for the successful efforts of his friends in his behalf.

The Orphan Working School, which was founded in 1758, celebrated its anniversary on Thursday week at the school, Haverstock-hill, when last year's subscriptions amounted to £1,200. There were made in the building, which now accommodates 160 boys and 87 girls, and is capable of receiving 200 pupils whenever sufficient funds are forthcoming to enable the extension and education of that number. Improvements have been introduced into the management of the institution with a view to increase the comfort of the children in every respect, and amongst the measures adopted to promote the health of the inmates, as well as to lessen the contagion of disease in the case of sickness, is that of providing baths for the boys.

The Registration Courts are now in full operation. A new obstacle has been put in the way of the objector, and a new shield thrown over those who have once succeeded in getting on the register. It is the decision that notice served on the vestry clerk instead of the parish clerk is not valid. A Mr. Hall, of Bethnal-green, objected to the barrister's decision, which have fallen on account of these technical points were frivolous and vexatious, though their validity was not denied. Costs to the amount of £5 were awarded costs. The whole of these new practises and orders of court will be brought, in one form or other, before the Court of Common Pleas for ultimate decision.

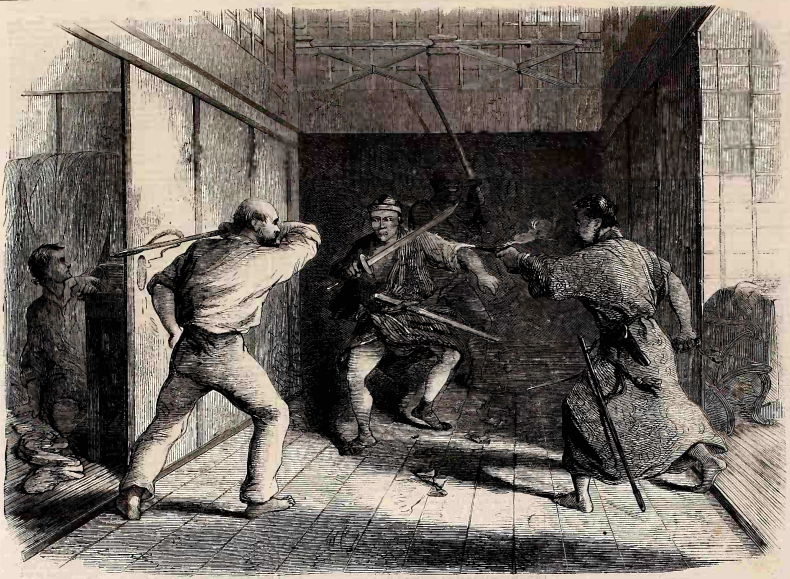
A fire occurred on the morning of Thursday week in a tavern at Limehouse, which was destroyed. At the fire Captain Alexander Brady undigged his first-floor ladder, mounted, and brought down a girl about five years of age. He ascended again, and in the midst of smoke and choke of vapour. He then ascended for the third time, and rescued a girl about nine years of age, and descended with her in safety. He must be now the father of the children, and eventually he saved the father, who refused to leave the burning premises until he was satisfied that his children were safe. For these gallant deeds he again ascended, and having entered the rooms, already filled with smoke, he saved the deed-box and books.

Mr. Walkley on Saturday last took the opportunity of attending an inquest at Paddington, in order to state publicly that he was in a fair way to recover from the illness which for three or four months past almost incapable of attending to his duties as Coroner for the western division of Middlesex. He had been ill, he said, for nearly the whole of the time since the summer assizes, and had been confined to his bed for about two months. In the meantime his worthy colleague, Mr. Humphreys, the Coroner for the eastern division of Middlesex, had kindly undertaken, himself, to act for the whole county, had kindly entered into an arrangement with him to assist his deputy, Mr. Bent, in the due performance of that part of the county with which he had the honour to be conducted.

A beautiful fountain has been, within the last few days, erected on the site of the old and picturesque Temple Bar, Temple Gardens. It is about twelve feet high, being crowned on the top of a stone which fresh water is supplied. The basin is composed of a pyramidal form three basins or cups raised one above the other, with carved Corinthian and Composite pillars, the upper cup is the largest, and is richly ornamented by carved figures of children, and altogether the design is exceedingly chaste and pleasing. The water from the lion's mouth is very fine and falls into the lower basin. On Monday morning the fountain was completed and placed in action, the water from the lion's mouth being thrown to a height of 20 feet, falling into the lower cups to the main basin.

A fire broke out on Tuesday evening from the yard of the Nine Elms station of the South-Western Railway. A scene of great confusion and terror was for a time created, and the flames, which were fanned through the fair-sized animal passed thirty men, women, and children were wounded, some of them severely. On attacked the bridge, and taking the direction of Cremorne, several luckless and others, armed with poisons, cleavers, and other weapons, endeavoured to impede the further progress of the infuriated beast. At this juncture one of the South Middlesex Volunteers succeeded in stabbing him with his bayonet. Soon after receiving this wound the bull seemed to get into a greater state of madness, and, as it passed along Little Chelsea, looked, gored, and trampled upon a great number of persons. As length the butcher, and about three hundred persons who had joined in the pursuit, having hemmed in the ferocious beast in Park-road, near Park-villas, Little Chelsea, managed temporarily to secure him by ropes fastened to the railings, which resulted in the rails being torn down by the bull, when he again escaped into the fields, and it was not until past nine o'clock that he was slaughtered by a butcher.

MONSTER SWING-BRIDGE AT BREST



THE OUTRAGE ON THE BRITISH EMBASSY AT JEDDO, JAPAN: ATTACK ON MESSRS. OLIPHANT AND MORRISON.

THE OUTRAGE ON THE BRITISH EMBASSY AT JEDDO, JAPAN: NIGHT BIVOUAC OF THE YACUNINS IN THE GARDEN OF THE LEGATION, JEDDO,—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST. SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 378.

THE THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.—On Monday Mr. Booth attempted the character of Sir Giles Overreach, and won much deserved applause. We think, however, that characters that do less violence to convention will better suit his peculiar powers. The part of Sir Giles is one of those ideals of Elizabethan poetry which command attention by a purposed outrage on nature—a bold bad man, who overcomes consistency and follows his own inner wretchedness, with a species of demoniac cruelty in his disposition. Such a character as this demands a certain reckless faith, without which it exhibits phases which are not only shocking but absurd. The actor must, therefore, throw himself into it with an unreserved confidence, and trust to the poet's art to make him overcome those difficulties that must be boldly met, in order to be promptly subdued. Mr. Booth is evidently a very judicious actor, and is therefore intent on the exercise of the sense than the passion. Except, therefore, in moments of great excitement, his Sir Giles is a shrewd, perplexed man of the world, who behaves himself remarkably well. But when he begins to rage it is with searching sullenness and calculating prudence. Mr. Booth stood his fourth act encounter with a burst of exultation, which brought down the house. The fifth act was, as it ought to be, all violence; and the cruelty of the character, unmasked in the monster's death was sustained with adequate power. Mr. Chippendale was Justice Greedy, and Mr. Compton, Marall; both performed with their usual judgment, and brought out the well-known effects. In other respects the drama was not so carefully placed on the stage as piece generally are on the boards of the establishment. We trust that this error—for it is a serious one—will be corrected in the future, if it is meant to continue the reputation of setting the legitimate drama at this house. Mr. C. Mathews now performs an alternative nights, and has introduced a new piece into the bill, entitled "What Will the Neighbours Say?" It is the old Paul Pry in the old costume, but now the husband of Phoebe; happy, but that his eternal interference in neighbours' affairs will engage him in perpetual hops him in a state of constant irritation. Other full performances of such a fabrication of a Mr. Prosy, with the old and the tricks of a sly servant, serve as ballast to the piece, when it brought suddenly to a conclusion by Pry coming forward and addressing the audience in mitigation of the circumstances that should not have pleased them. The affair is, of course, slight enough, but is received with much humour.

SADLER'S WELLS.—On Saturday "William Tell" was revived. The house was full. Miss Atkinson made her first appearance for the season, in front of Easton, and was received with applause. Mr. Phelps's Tell maintains its usual power, and is a piece of good rugged acting, with flashes of tenderness that impress the character strongly as a man and a patriot. The part of Michael was undertaken by Mr. Edmund Phelps, and performed with considerable vivacity.

OLYMPIC.—A farce called "Jack of All Trades," adapted from the French "Le Rasoureur," is well supported at this theatre by Miss Oliver, Miss Fanny Wells, J. W. Ray, Mr. H. Neville, and Mr. Hayden. The first, as Mr. Stapleton, a rich merchant, is tempted to forfeit his integrity from a desire to raise his family to wealth by marrying his daughter to his partner's son. Mr. Hayden, as Dalrymple, however, is drowned in his voyage home from India, and Mr. Ray, under cover of his assumed character, appears as a travelling tinker, Toby Crank (Mr. Neville), who, having a certain resemblance to the lost youth, proposes to personate him. He does not, however, does not take place immediately. Five years elapse, and the supposed Fergus Dalrymple takes such advantage of his opportunities that he has now all the qualifications required for the accomplishment. Violet (Miss Hayden), the daughter, however, loves another, the right heir to the property, Jack Dalrymple (Miss Fanny Wells), and the trial arc fat fromth; Jack even saves his rival's life at the risk of his own. Gratitude and remorse do their work, and Jack receives that which Mr. Crank gives admirable expression. Leaving Mr. Stapleton to believe that he has committed suicide, Toby Crank resumes his old habiliments, resigns his daughter to his mother's hands, is tempted, almost fallen, but still an honest man. The piece is quite successful.

MR. Vandenhoff died yesterday week at his residence, North-Bank, Regent's Park, in his seventy-ninth year.

We are requested to contradict a report which has been current to the effect that the Haymarket Theatre is to be closed and dwelling houses erected on their site. It is the intention of the proprietor, his widow and the heirs of the late proprietor, to repair and improve the rooms for the use of concerts, balls, and public meetings. The Haymarket-square Concert-room is distinguished for its excellent acoustic properties.

Lieutenant-Colonel M'Murdo, O.B., received about £600 of the Liverpool subscription last Saturday in the Mount Vernon grounds.

The whaler Alert arrived at Peterhead last week, from Cumberland Straits, where she had been frozen up during the last winter, and had lain for a time with cold and starvation as well to contend against her crew.

The riflemen of France, having conveyed a hint through the secretary of their Tir National, that they would like to try their skill against the riflemen of England, Mr. Edward Ross, the secretary of the Wimbledon, has at once come forward, and has challenged the best shot in France to a match at various distances.—Manchester Guardian.

Advices from Baden state that the vintage has commenced in the neighbourhood of that town, both in the plain and on the mountains. The grapes are in general unusually ripe and the wine is expected to be, in consequence of the great number of insects which attack them, they could not be left on the vines for days together.

The Hamburg journals announce the death in that city of a native of Revel, one of the most aged of the human family, at the extreme age of eight-per. In 1770 he was present at the masked ball in the Opera House in Stockholm at which Gustavus III., was assassinated, and the following year he arrived in Paris the day after the execution of Louis XVI.

The Irish Law Journal states that a number of Irish students who have arrived in that town to attend the winter course of lectures at the University are a great many Poles, about thirty of whom are natives of Lithuania. Some of these poor fellows, coming to preserve their liberty, as though, torn sent by their parents to learn the science of medicine.

THE ARMY REGULATION ACT.—The amended warrant relative to the Army Hospital Corps has just been promulgated at Woolwich, revised from that of the 1st inst. According to the amended warrant the corps will be recruited from the rank; and will receive rate of pay according to—Sergeant-Major, 4s. per day; 4 sergeants, 3s. 6d. per day; 4 corporals, 2s. 9d.; and privates, 2s. Increased pay for good conduct and long service is to be granted on the principles of the regulations for the general good conduct warrant for the line, subject to the usual forfeiture for each entry in the defaulter-book. All non-commissioned officers and privates of the corps will be liable to be employed in any way that may be required in the performance of any duties in the medical and general service of the army, whether at home or on army in the field they will be liable to be attached to the field ambulances, and to obey all the orders of the officers serving them on the field. Non-commissioned officers are to take rank with those of the other corps of the army of the same relative standing, according to the date of their warrant. The corps is to be under the control of the principal medical officer of the army or district by special authority. All non-commissioned officers and privates of the corps will be liable to be discharged at any time from the corps and from the army within it, without any claim to compensation beyond the sum of pensions, and they may be reduced to the ranks for any misconduct rendering them inefficient, undutiful, or otherwise, to the corps of the Army from which they were transferred.

THE EXPENSES OF PUBLIC WORSHIP IN FRANCE.—The expenses of public worship have considerably increased since the Restoration. They were £2,000,000 in 1815, £3,000,000 in 1830, £4,000,000 in 1848, and for 1862 they are estimated at £6,880,000. All forms of worship are tolerated in France, and only three are paid by the state—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish. The Catholic, and the latter not only from 20 since 1831. In the Roman Catholic Church there are 14,000 priests, of whom 1,000 are bishops, of whom one, that of Paris, receives 150,000 f., and the rest 15,000 f. each. An addition of 10,000f. is given to each of the prelates, on account of their being cardinals; and so in the quality of cardinals they are senators ex officio, they receive a further sum of 30,000 f. a year. The chapters and parochial clergy consist of 178 vicars-general, who receive from 2500f. to 4000f., 600 canons receiving from 1600f. to 2000f., 3638 cures from 1200f. to 1600f., and 30,245 other priests who receive from 900f. to 1200f., according to their age. The total expense for Roman Catholic worship amounts to 47,000,000f. The Protestant clergy consist of 814 ministers, who receive from 1500f. to 6000f. each, and 7 assistant ministers, who are paid 900f. to 1200f. The total outlay for Protestant worship is 1,400,000f. In the Jewish community there are 10 ban chief rabbis, paid from 3500f. to 5000f.; 51 consistorial rabbis, from 800f. to 1500f.; and 62 officiating priests, from 600f. to 2000f.—Gentleman.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MR. Blake, one of the members for Waterford, had a narrow escape from drowning while bathing a few days ago at Tramore.

The Aberdeen memorial is to take the form of a square to-wwe to be erected on the hill of Tillum, and to view of Hatlo House, Aberdeen-shire.

The Prince of Wales has given a donation of £50 to the fund for the purchase of works of art for the National Gallery of Ireland, in course of erection on the Leinster Lawn.

The Queen has appointed David Hector, Esq., Advocate, to be Sheriff of the Shire of Stirling and Dumbarton, vice Kirkcaldy, in the room of Archibald Dennistoun Sandford, Esq., deceased.

Mr. Kennard, the Conservative M.P. for Newport, in the Isle of Wight, gave a Banquet on Tuesday to the whole constituency of Newport, on Gatcombe, about three miles from the former place.

The tenth session of the Royal Dublin Society commenced on Monday. The number of students, exclusive of season-ticket holders and members of the society, were in the building on Tuesday.

Last Saturday evening the extensive works of Messrs. Laidlaw and Son, ferrashmongers, Stamm square, Edinburgh, were gutted by fire. The premises were insured for £10,000, and nearly the whole is said to be lost.

The rag-warehouse of Basted Paper-mills, in Kent, was burnt down on Thursday night. The destruction of machinery and rags of which there was a much larger store than usual, in anticipation of the abolition of duty) is very great.

Mr. Lindsay, M.P., delivered a lecture last Saturday evening in the Mechanics' Institute, North Shields, his subject being "America and the Americans." Mr. Lindsay has been absent from his constituency, and was welcomed by his old constituents.

Lord Brougham has consented, at the request of the committee of the Wilberforce School for the Blind, to visit York at the close of the present month, and to preside at the public meeting to be held in aid of the funds of the above institution.

Yesterday week Mr. John Tasker, of Angel-street, Sheffield, received by post from Paris on envelope inclosing £20, consisting of one £10 and two £5 notes on a Dublin bank. There was no indication as to who sent the money, and the envelope bore the Paris post-mark of the previous day.

The Great Eastern arrived on Sunday morning at Milford Haven, the gale which prevailed during most of the passage moderating as it neared land. She was piloted without difficulty into the harbour. During the day 20,000 persons visited the vessel, including the Prince of Wales and the neighbourhood.

At the close of the inquest held upon the unfortunate persons who lost their lives by the falling of the bridge at York, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," and appended to it a rider, expressing their sympathy with the widows and families of the deceased, and their opinion that the owners of the bridge, but they had not had sufficient evidence to satisfy them of the cause of the falling of the suspension chains.

At a meeting of the proceeding at Leeds parish church last Sunday morning (according to a paragraph in the daily papers) a woman ran up to a minister, and presented a pistol within a few inches of his head. Happily it missed fire, and no husband. The man attempted to bravo it out by the bluster, but falling down by the ears, due to his wife's interference.

The banquet to Earl Russell at Newcastle-on-Tyne will be given in the Town Hall, on Wednesday next. Mr. Joseph Cowen, jun., is chairman, and among the names of the stewards published are those of Sir Matthew White Ridley, Bart., M.P., Colonel Bell, M.P., Mr. Headlam, M.P., nearly all the local Liberal members of Parliament, the Dean of Durham, all the chief of the Tyneside clergy, and a considerable list of the neighbouring gentries.

The other day a boy at Carmarthen was about to fire a pistol at a sparrow, when, turning accidentally from his intended object, the contents entered the head of a child named Joseph Jordan, aged six months, who was in the arms of a girl of seven years of age. Both the boy and the girl, who received wounds the discharge in her left eye, and a child named Jordan, who was also in the arms, received a slight scratch. The youngest child is not likely to recover, but the others are getting on well.

A half-yearly Report of the Bank of Ireland, 1861, was given in because of the Earl of Carlisle at Killarney, on Tuesday evening, at the Ballinglen Hotel. It was opened by the Earl of Kenmare, and speeches and dancing continued till an advanced hour. On Wednesday there was to be a magnificent display of fireworks on the Lawney's estate on the Lower Lake. Among the visitors expecting at Ross Castle are the Marquis and Marchioness of Ailsbury, the Earl and Countess of Bath, Lord and Lady Ebrington, the Earl and Countess of Shannon, Lord Dufferin, Mr. and Mrs. John Townley, &c.

The autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union were opened at Manchester on Tuesday. The Rev. Dr. Wale, as chairman, delivered the inaugural address. A resolution expressing the feelings of sympathy with the American people in the conflict in which they are at the founder of the union, was adopted. The flourishing state of the Pastors' Retiring Fund was also reported, and a strong sympathy manifested for special designs to the union from various parts of the world were sent read. On the 1st of January next the Rev. Newman Hall will commence as the union pressure to be of considerable public interest.

A PENDULUM EXPERIMENT.—On Thursday James Matthews, a carpenter in the employ of Mr. E. B. Fisher, of Salisbury, builder, performed an interesting experiment in the parish church of Alderbury, with the purpose of ascertaining what repairs and painting were necessary to be done. A light and slender rope, to which he tied a piece of wood, was passed over the lead cross above the vane, and, having his cap to the spectators, stood upon the top of the tower, and then descended by the rope. The rope so recovered Rimsh himself might possibly hesitate to attempt. The sexton of the parish, Mr. Hall, has also performed the same feat by means of small iron handles fixed to the masonry. He height is about 140ft.

At the annual agricultural meeting, held on Tuesday at Tewkesbury, Mr. Lee, of Upton, in the chair, Mr. Acton, who came to the Ironmonde Fee Bill, the state of labourers' dwellings, and the education of the agricultural labourer. In the latter he had taken a deep interest. He said, would cause England to become a corn-exporting country. Another agricultural grievance was the Game Laws. Mr. Bellamy, Q.C., M.P., was present. On Wednesday the Rocks Agricultural Society dined at Aylesbury—Lord Carington in the chair. The Duke of Cambridge, Lord Chief Baron Sir S. Smith, all members of Parliament, were present, but not Mr. Disraeli. The chairman regretted that the Duke of Buckingham, K.G., was not present. He regretted still more to find that they had not the honour of the company of Lord Derby, who was to have been present, but who had been called to the repertory of knowledge." He believed that circumstances of an urgent nature prevented his lordship from being present.

EARL DE GREY AT RIPON.—In acknowledging the toast of his health at the banquet given to him at Ripon on the 1st inst. and Tuesday night, Earl De Grey spoke with particular pride of the foreign policy of the Government, and the position in which it placed England as the arbiter in a state of security. He put a warm tribute of praise to his late chief—Lord Palmerston—whose death they had to deplore. Lord Russell had, by his memorable statesman, the wise and benevolent principles upon which he had acted guided and governed the policy of the country. He had been, he alluded tricky to the American War, and to its probable consequences to the cotton manufacture of this country, and the distress of the operatives, and the people of England to resort to any course which might seem likely to them, but he (Earl De Grey) was glad to find that they were not at present forming their way by any illegitimate or unfair means, to the attainment of objects which might appear to them desirable or of great interest.

A CLERICAL VOLUNTEER.—At the anniversary of the Oxford 18th Essex) Volunteer Corps, last week, the Rev. Mr. Pain, who is an Baptist, and a clergyman for appearing in volunteer costume; but supposing he were not a clergyman, he should appear in it, because he was a soldier, and on certain place, would they blame him for providing himself with a complete suit of armour? He was a Volunteer, and proud of it. He had not yet got a good Queen and Country's service. Some people had thought that he had better have preached a sermon on the occasion. Mr. Pain would say, "Stop a bit. You've got a pair of pistols." (Laughter.) "Oh," he would say, "but you don't know how to use them;" and he should reply, "Oh, yes, I do." I belong to the Queen's Volunteers, and I've learned how to use them, and I'd defend defend my Victoria against your Napoleon, I'm sure if I don't, sell follow" (Loud laughter). Because he was a parson he was told he mustn't defend himself. They were to set upon him, knock him down, pick his pocket, rob him of his sovereign, and give him a "Napoleon" instead, and to take possession of his house, and run away with his wives (wives, sir, Mr. Pain's and children, and all that sort of thing, and he was to stand by and be smiling (Laughter). He said "No;" for though he was a parson he was also a man; he was an Englishman, and he was determined that no man, whoever he might be, should take away his good Queen Victoria sovereign and give him a Napoleon instead.

A DEVONSHIRE NUNNERY.—On Wednesday week (says the Western Morning News) the village of Abbotskerswell, near Newton Abbot, received an addition to the population by the arrival of twenty-eight nuns belonging to the order of the Canonesses of St. Augustine. They originally lived in Belgium, but left at the time of the French Revolution, and came to England, and resided at Amesbury, in Wiltshire, for about seven years. They then bought an estate at Spettisbury, near Blandford, in Dorsetshire, where they went there. Last year they purchased the estate occupied by Mr. G. J. Parker, containing about 100 acres, and situate on the north side of the village of Abbotskerswell, consisting of the most beautiful views in the neighbourhood, the foundation-stone of which was laid on the 15th inst. by Lord Arundell of Wardour, assisted by Mr. Scott, the architect employed by the Rev. Mother, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Plymouth, and other clergymen of his Church, and were accompanied by their pupils and a large number of the gentry and others from the neighbourhood. The ceremony was performed in the usual style of

THE FARM.

OCTOBER is quite vindicating its claim to the title of "the sweet o' the year." The recent wet has made everything propitious for sowing, and the ground works so free and springlike that it seems more like the barley than the wheat season. Autumn keep is very plentiful, rape especially so, and turnips are doing well. Mangels, on the contrary, have never wholly recovered from that caterpillar blight which set each fresh, and during days of cool the most eccentric manœuvres on record inflicted on them. France has been an excellent customer for second-class wheat, and it is said that from Wisbeach alone 20,000 quarters have been shipped within a comparatively short period. Three quarters to the acre will be quite the top average of the wheat harvest in the north, but oats and barley will be a good yield. The latter will fit the maltsters better as the weather has been favourable to secure a sample of unusual brightness, while the home-grown supplies of fair barley become scarcer than Danish.

Lincolnshire has brought up the rear shows of the year, and although there have been at least twenty per cent more oxen in the market than in any previous year, the prices have been really high. The best Shorthorn fatting was at the top of the tree, as 120 averaged £14 17s. 9d., and four of them made as much as £21 5s. The highest of the four went for £71 to Mr. Gott, of Ashby. Mr. Grantham sold his thirty last week at an average of £15 12s. 6d., and got £40 for his highest; and he is in his own land the highest rent payer at Tadwell for 30s. per acre, ordinary demand for long staple fleeces, both in the French and English markets, has caused the extensive sowing of Highlanders and Cheviots to cut their native coverup, but the midlands as well. In Ireland "the Shrops" are taking a strong lead, as their more impervious fleece is especially suited to that humid atmosphere.

Mr. Stratford once more makes his appearance as the Dobbin of the shorthorn world, with his fourteenth winner of "The Red Rose." A very large number of cows and heifers have been rejected in consequence of failure to serve bears, but still about 1,000 of the best have been registered, and some 1,000 young bulls are entered with a number. The entries which must all have four pure crosses, except in the Scotland and Ireland, and Channel Islands as well, under certain restrictions. The bull names make up a most motley list, from Mr. Bates's Second Duke of Hillsdale and White Rose, Lord Dunmore's No. 2, number 44, the Dukes 77, the Earls 23, the Kings 29, the Lords 76 Gunthing and Brandsby, and the Princes, with 4 Dukes of York, and a Rifle Prince amongst them, about 70. There are no less than 83 Garibaldis, and, as might have been expected, 13 Victors and 13 Victorines, the redoubled almost entirely to the exhibition. In point of eccentric concomitance a Cumberland breeder seems pre-eminent. Twice over we meet with Duchess Rose of Oak Hill, and Rose Sayers, who, by-the-by, is said to be going into the circus-propeller line. Here, too, we find the Red of Oak Hill, the Lightning Arch, and The Badger find their place; among the more fire-and-away ones we have Ruby Bob, Roan Bumper, Silly Plumper, Cora per Cent, Bit of Beauty, and Little-by, while Ardithus, Archduke, and Archduchess deacon, all fourish in a clerical household. Amongst the cows and heifers there is a great run, as of 300 entries, 5 of the Duchess of Moss Rose does not lose its popularity. Lord Rosebery has called many of his herd after the Derby and Stewards, Rabbit, and Wellington are among the other names which caught our eye. Messrs. Stratton, Welsh, Cruickshank, and Torr seem to have sent in the largest numbers. Among new contributors we note the Dukes of Rutherford and Richmond, the Duchess of Gordon, and the Earls of Aylesford, Airlie, and Dartmouth, Lord Berners, and Mr. Gowan, Mr. Cruickshank, Mr. Leonard, G. Phillips, C. Russell, R. Kerrison, R. Peel, and W. C. Trevelyan, and a specimen of labour and economy in connection with the volume takes a very high place among books of its class; but the pictures are quite unworthy of it, and seem executed by a sort of "rule of three," with scarcely any regard to likeness.

The shorthorn shows are pretty nearly at an end, but it has been a less continuous one than usual, owing to the wet. Some of the best have lot from the Royal, and the cayness with which many of the leading herds have kept aloof from each other. The sum total of Mr. and Lady Pigou one first and one second; and Captain Gunter kept up his Royal average by winning the cup and first for the best bull, first and a couple of Duchess yearlings, when the picked quintets of the four herds were marshalled into the ring. Mr. Adam's Second Duchess of Talisman, Great Eastern, Windsor Augustus, Wee Rose, and Gunester; Colonel Townley was represented by Royal Hero, and two of his sons and Mr. Saunders, and Victoria 5th, Second Duchess of Gloucester, Pride of Southdown, Little Hilfride and White Rose, Second Duchess Hilfride, Grand Duchess 5th has added another Grand Duke to Mr. Bolden's herd, a present duplicate both in colour and blood of the Grand Duke of Oxford, which we described in our Paper about a month since. They are both by Third Grand Duke, and from sisters in blood. Mr. Bolden's bull was the youngest calf at a show, and off to an English tenant-farmer for a very large sum.

A roughish and not sale-going Yorkshire audience, a kind welcome, and thorough confidence in the local fide character of the herd, to say nothing of the desire among the higher-class buyers to secure a few Faudiffs, made Mr. Sanday's average of 453 8s. 8d. for sixty-five a remarkably good one. Messrs. Ha dy, Pawlett, Waldo, and Torr were the three principal bidders for the four females of the Faudiffe tribe, and the whole six averaged £183 17s. 6d. The bulls were generally considered to be the worst part of the sale, but they did not pull it down as was expected. The five-year-old Faith (225), was the best bull among the females, and Lyddas, by Sir James from Lucilla (86gs.), held the same position among the bulls. The Earls of Radnor and Dartmouth, Lords Braybrooke and Walsingham, the Hon. E. Cole, Messrs. Mc. Vavasour, Sir H. Cotes, Messrs. Sir A. de Rothschild, and Messrs. Beasley, Sips, Barclay, Fowlers, Waldo, Hales, Allgoods, were all purchasers; and the Duke of Cleveland, for a bit of Booth's Necrasine Blossom" stimulated many a tenant-farmer whose name we have not seen on sale lists for a while to bid up. Six names held a numerous levée, and his rare, lusty frame and mellow handling were much admired; while George and his sons and tups made up a most effective background.

The Algiers journals state that the crops of wheat have been good in the circle of Orleansville and Teniet-el-Hasd, and indifferent in those of Medeah, Milianah, and Blidah.

The Courrier de Lyon states that M. Bernard, the head of a weaving establishment, had found among some old family papers an address to the People, on the heightening of Charles Edward's head, dated 6th October last arrest. It is one of the five or six or her autographs which exist.

The first trial of the new steamer the Orontes, constructed for the line given by the Emperor Napoleon, took place at Annery on the 3rd inst. The vessel left the quay of the town about noon, passed the Fort de l'Eperon, and was tested with the same acclamations as she passed along by the rural population assembled on the banks.

According to the new regulations respecting marriages which have just been established in the Austrian army, officers up to the grade of Lieutenant-Colonel inclusive, and civil functionaries up to the corresponding grade, must on marrying deposit a caution money of 12,000 florins instead of 6,000 florins as heretofore. The staff are not to be allowed to marry unless they attain the age of thirty; officers of other corps marrying before that age must deposit a caution money to the extent of 24,000 florins. The Austrian officers, like the old, declare that the number of married officers in any corps is not to exceed one-fifth of the whole.

FIFTY YEARS SINCE.—Half a century ago all the great centres of commerce were not the vast hive of industry they are now, the residences to their honest inhabitants, and unmanageable in regard to police supervision, owing to the difficulty of identifying each of the busy figures in the long dark nights of winter. The growth of population that has since taken place, and the development of the resources of our own and other countries, would probably have been impossible without the discovery and rapid introduction of some means of economically and effectually lighting the streets and alleys, which had long served as the haunts of thieves and dangerous characters of all kinds. It is not too much to say that, in this matter alone, the introduction of artificial light has been the main agent employed in effecting a social improvement, compared with which all others are secondary. The millions of entire feet of gas now burnt nightly in our streets are, beyond competition, the best, the most permanent, and the least expensive source of security that could have been introduced, and have served, more than anything else, to check those deeds of wrong and violence that darkness cannot fail to shelter, and invariably fosters.—Popular Science Review.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

NATIONAL SPORTS.

LAST week witnessed the most successful Newmarket First October on record, for to the concluding day, Friday, there was the same unflagging spirit of enthusiasm manifested on all sides. The weather was charming, and the various accessories in the shape of a numerous and fashionable gathering, &c., were there to the full. Racing in England this week has been confined to Doncaster, which pleasant town during the week has been confined to Doncaster, which pleasant town during the week has been crowded to excess. The Yorkshire Stakes having drawn seven to the post, while fourteen contested the Town Stakes. Brown Duchess seems invincible; in the Queen's Guineas the Brownlow himself could not frighten her out of her place, and old Blue Jacket, though he made a splendid effort, failed to overhaul her, as she won by a head, the strides just as like liked. The Royal Caledonian Hunt inaugurated their grand annual meeting on Wednesday on the links at Musselburgh. Although the fields were by no means large, some of the contests were invested with no ordinary interest. The Lothian Handicap brought out the whole strength of the Caledonian Hunt, and after a difference of 3lbs. Mr. Anson's mare had little difficulty in disposing of Mr. Cunningham's Cremorne. Steeplechasing in Scotland and in England was confirmed by his easy defeat of Caller Ou in the Caledonian Cup, although the latter gave him 5lbs. Oats were tested on the same day, and he won by six lengths. The Newmarket Second October commences on Monday next. Betting on the Cesarewitch has been spread over a number of days, and probably, as time gets considerably nearer, it will only be just before the rising of the curtain the "intended" candidate will be definitely known. The betting at present is 5 to 1 against Barabbas and Golden Pippin, who divided the spoil in the betting, until the Belford meeting, when Blackhall's "cross" and display of form on the Northumbrian in the betting "hits." With a full programme, and the prospect of fine weather, the Newmarket heath will witness such a gathering of sportive and brave of the national sport as has not been witnessed for years, if ever, at head-quarters, notwithstanding the absence of many who usually are to be found in the neighbourhood of Doncaster and loch.

Caledonian and Dickens Joint St. Leger is fixed for Tuesday, &c.; Duke Cup, Cremorne) for Tuesday and Wednesday; South Lancashire and Warrant Weighton for Tuesday, &c.; Cock Southern Club (Leyton) for Tuesday; Hurst Park Autumn Meeting for Tuesday and Wednesday and Thursday.

Malkonny, the Irish Corbet, is the portrait of the month in the Sporting Magazine; but we think it rather exaggerates the sobriness of the original. Uncle Scribble continues his "Sketches of the Pavement of Cremorne," and Mr. Lance has made the Pytchley men look out pretty sharp, month after month, for these pen-and-ink photographs. Mr. Keightley's "Hints to Horse-buyers" is continued, and Stephen, as an agricultural dunner lately, against their ex-master, the Hon. Mr. Villiers, by Mr. Gaudry, who is the owner of the horse. The Field and Bell's Life Magazine, which has a nice likeness and biography of General Peel, and a "run" well freighted with racing "fun" at Baden-Baden.

Although the Doncaster autumn turned out best for nearly six seasons absent from the race cards, every hostile fell the news of Lord Robert and Barabbas as well as the Duke of Beaufort and Prince of Wales's Diomed, and Mr. Merry's Ellington. He began, we believe, almost before he was of age, hunting the Heythrop, and has since had the Pytchley, the Quorn, and the Oakley pull right to elevate him into one of its special heroes. The Knightley Hounds, which he has since established themselves, as an agricultural dinner lately, against their ex-master, the Hon. Mr. Villiers, by Mr. Gaudry, who is the owner of the horse. The Field and Bell's Life Magazine, which has a nice likeness and biography of General Peel, and a "run" well freighted with racing "fun" at Baden-Baden.

Although the Doncaster autumn turned out best for nearly six seasons absent from the race cards, every hostile fell the news of Lord Robert and Barabbas as well as the Duke of Beaufort and Prince of Wales's Diomed, and Mr. Merry's Ellington. He began, we believe, almost before he was of age, hunting the Heythrop, and has since had the Pytchley, the Quorn, and the Oakley pull right to elevate him into one of its special heroes. The Knightley Hounds, which he has since established themselves, as an agricultural dinner lately, against their ex-master, the Hon. Mr. Villiers, by Mr. Gaudry, who is the owner of the horse. The Field and Bell's Life Magazine, which has a nice likeness and biography of General Peel, and a "run" well freighted with racing "fun" at Baden-Baden.

Although the Doncaster autumn turned out best for nearly six seasons absent from the race cards, every hostile fell the news of Lord Robert and Barabbas as well as the Duke of Beaufort and Prince of Wales's Diomed, and Mr. Merry's Ellington. He began, we believe, almost before he was of age, hunting the Heythrop, and has since had the Pytchley, the Quorn, and the Oakley pull right to elevate him into one of its special heroes. The Knightley Hounds, which he has since established themselves, as an agricultural dinner lately, against their ex-master, the Hon. Mr. Villiers, by Mr. Gaudry, who is the owner of the horse. The Field and Bell's Life Magazine, which has a nice likeness and biography of General Peel, and a "run" well freighted with racing "fun" at Baden-Baden.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE NEW OBSERVATORY OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

Lat. 51° 28′ 6″ N. Long. 0° 1′ 47″ W.; Height above sea, 34 feet

DAY.	BARO. READ.	THERMOMETERS.						WIND.		RAIN in inches
	Corrected to 32°	Dew Point.	Humidity	Amount of Cloud	Minimum on Grass	Maximum in Shade	Mean Temp.	General Direction	Velocity
1	29·710	49·8	0·10		47·1	59·2	53·2			Inches 0·000
2	29·705	49·9	0·09	·71	45·0	57·3	54·0	WSW. WNW.	10	0·101
3	29·719	49·1	52·8	·83	9	67·0	64·6	E. NNE.	157	·001
4	29·883	49·9	52·0	·74	9	67·8	64·6	E. NNE.	157	·000
5	30·016	50·4	57·5	·96	8	68·4	63·4	NE. N.	82	·000
6	30·000	50·1	57·5	·96	8	68·4	63·4		82	·000
7	29·936	49·2	61·3	·97	7	64·9	59·9	ENE. E.	132	·000
8	29·928	49·3	61·3	·97	7	64·9	59·9	ENE. E.	132	·000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at half-past nine a.m.:—

Barometer at 32°	29·710	29·705	29·719	29·883	30·016	30·000	29·936
Temperature of Air	49·8°	49·9°	49·1°	49·9°	50·4°	50·1°	49·2°
Temperature of Evaporation	49·1°	49·0°	48·8°	49·5°	50·0°	49·8°	49·0°
Direction of Wind	W.S.W.	W.N.W.	E.	E.	N.E.	N.E.	E.N.E.

The Aberdeen Journal says that by her Majesty's command a distinguished author has presented a history of Balmoral. No more appropriate gift could be made to beautifully get up, and contains illustrations of the surrounding scenery, mingled up with the account of its historical associations and of its geological and botanical features.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent)

In order to meet the recent heavy drain of bullion to pay for foreign grain, and effect additional accommodation to the commercial community, the Directors of the Bank of France have made arrangements with several leading firms in Paris for the purchase of Rentes, Rothschild and Sons having taken £4,000,000 sterling. The bills will be drawn at three months' date, and, doubtless, will pass into the Bank of England in the same way as Baring's and Hope's did. This anticipates a reduction in the stock of bullion held by the institution, and a slight advance in the rate of discount may be looked for. It was rumoured that a large amount of the amount required will be taken in silver—the sum of £500,000 having already been purchased; but it does not appear that any portion will be returned to us in the period specified. Looking at the exchanges, it appears to us that the Bank of France will be a heavy purchaser of gold for some time to come; and our operations, more especially as gold is still flowing towards us from the Continent in rather large quantities, will have to be watched. Of the £1,500,000 on the Paris Bourse, the directors of the Bank of France are now selling Rentes in the open market.

The demand for money has been very moderate at the Bank of England this week; and, as has been moderately active this week, and in the open market a good business has been transacted. The following is the official return:—

Stock in Bullion	£16,961,277	Rest	£3,194,000
Three Months' Bills	21,975,000	Six Months' Bills	3,000
Other Securities	14,000,000	Deposits	21,000,000
Notes	21,000,000

On the Continent money is becoming dearer, except in Paris, and not in Paris, except in Paris, is not to say active. We annex the rates in the principal cities:—

	Bank Rate per cent.	Open Market per cent.		Bank Rate per cent.	Open Market per cent.
Paris	3	2½	Turin	6	5½
Vienna	6	5½	Brussels	4	3½
Berlin	5	4½	Hamburg	5	4½
Frankfort	5	4½	St. Petersburg	5	4½
Amsterdam	4	3½

A fresh £500,000 in bullion has arrived, chiefly from the Continent, and nearly that amount has been sold to the Bank of England.

Business in the Stock Exchange generally on Change on Monday last declined to 103¾ for bankers' bills, and that the total subscriptions to the first loan of £16,000,000 had not exceeded £12,000,000 sterling. Subsequently business was done on the 1st inst. The steamer, however, has brought a small parcel of specie, valued at £120,000, which was sorted to Messrs. Baring's order.

The silver market has become active, at 59¾d. per ounce for dollars, and 5s. 9¾d. for bars.

The dealings in the market for most National Securities have been on a very moderate scale, and the fluctuations in prices rather unfavourable. Consols were well supported. On Monday Consols for Money were done at 92⅝; Ditto for Account, 92 to 92⅛; Reduced, 92⅛; New 3 per Cents, 92⅜; and 92⅝; Exchequer Bills, March, par to 2s. prem.; Ditto, June, 6s. to 8s. prem.; Indian Secured, 101 to 101½; Ditto, Stock, Old, 101 to 101½; Ditto, Loans Paper, 98½ to 100½. The Bonds were steady, at 11s. to 14s. prem. The transactions on the Bourse de Commerce were unimportant. Rentes were realised 92¾ for Account, 50 to 93½; Redeemed and New 3 per Cents, 92 to 92½; Perpetuals, 92 to 92½; Amortisable, 1853, 91½; Ditto, 1855, 91¼; Ditto, 1858, 91¼; and the Rapee 91⅜ to 91½. On Tuesday, on Wednesday, at 92¾ for Consols for Money, and 92¾ for Account; New Reduced, 92¾; New 3 per Cents, 92⅝; Exchequer Bills, March, par to 2s. prem.; Ditto, June, 6s. to 8s. prem.; India Stock closed at 228; Ditto Bonds, 98½ to 100½; India Bonds, 98½ to 100½; Ditto, Loans Paper, 98½ to 100½. The market was much depressed to-day. Consols, for Transfer, were done at 92⅝ to 92¾; Ditto for Account, 92⅝; Reduced, 92⅛; New 3 per Cents, 92⅜; Exchequer Bills, March, 2s. prem.; and Long Annuities, 14¾; Bank Stock, 228; India Stock, 228.

The dividends on Bank Stock have now become payable. These on Reduced and New Three per Cents will be paid on and after Monday next.

The amount of business doing in Foreign Bonds has been only moderate. The annexed prices, however, will show that, speaking, very little change has taken place in the quotations compared with last week. Brazilian Five per Cents have realised 99¾; and Ditto, Small, 99¾; Buenos Ayres 6s. per Cents, 86; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 86; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 84½; Mexican Three per Cents, 20½; Portuguese Four per Cents, 44; Russian Five per Cents, 109½; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 94½; Russian Three per Cents, 84; Spanish Three per Cents, 42; Ditto, Passive, 5; Ditto, Deferred, 21; Ditto Certificates, 5; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 94½; Ditto New, 94½; Ditto Four per Cents, 72; Turkish Four per Cents of 1855, 72; Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64; Dutch Four per Cents, 99¼; and Italian Five per Cents, 94¼.

For Joint-stock Bank Shares there has been a fair demand, and prices have been generally supported. The following are the quotations:—Australasian, 92½ per Share; British North America, 35½; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 24½; English, Scottish, and Australian, 21½; London Joint-stock, 17½; Chartered of Australia, 24½; Ditto, New, 18; London and Country, 35½; London and Westminster, 8½; London Chartered, 8½; Ditto, New, 4½; National Provincial, 68; Oriental, 51; Ottoman, 17½; and Union of London, 27½.

The leading quotations for Miscellaneous Shares are as follow:—Australian Royal Mail Steam Navigation, 4 to 4½ prem.; Thames and Mersey Steam Navigation, 1 to 1½ prem.; Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation, 1 to 1½ prem.; Royal Mail Steam Navigation, 1 to 1½ prem.; Crystal Palace, 8 to 8½; Commercial Union, 6½ to 7; Crystal Palace Debentures, 4 to 4½ prem.; Crystal Palace Preference, 3 to 3½ prem.; Electric Telegraph, 4 to 4½ prem.; Montevideo and Provincial Bank, 2 to 2½ prem.

The Railway Share and Government Securities have been somewhat neglected. The prices for new Lines, however, have sold as follow:—Caledonian, 101; Cape Six per Cents, 1860, 108 ex div.; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1860 and upwards, 104 ex div.; Victoria Six per Cents, 1875, 104; Victoria Six per Cents, 1861 ex div.

The Mincing-lane Market has been quiet inactive.—Australian Agricultural have been done at 28½; Crystal Palace, Preference, 101; Great Shipu, Seven per Cents, 1860, 1st Quad Preference, 1; Colonial Land Assets, 2½; Port River Land and Mineral, 4½; English and Australian Copper, 3½; Moldavia, 1½; Nile Navigation, 1½; Scinde Railway, 1; Colonial Discount, 1; Continental and Oriental Steam, 6¾; South Australian Land, 3¼; United Kingdom Telegraph, 1½; London Joint-stock Bank, 17½; Ditto, Limited Bank Warrants, 16½.

Considerable inactivity has prevailed in the market for Railway Shares, and prices have shown a tendency to give way. The following are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 101; Eastern Counties, 8½; Great Northern, 101½; Ditto, A, 120; Ditto, B, 120; Ditto, D, 101; Great Western, 69; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 103½; London and Blackwall, 6¼; London and Brighton, 111; London and North-Western, 97½; London and South-Western, 94; Midland, 76½; North British, 62 ex div.; North-Eastern—Berwick, 100½; Ditto, Leeds, 77½; Ditto, York, 80; North Staffordshire, 7½; Oxford and Rugby and Cowal, 88½; South-Eastern, 79½.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Eastern Counties Five per Cent, No. 1, 107½; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 79½; Great Northern Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 103½; Ditto, Five per Cent, 110½; Great Western Four per Cent, 1892-97; Ditto, Birmingham Stock, 94; London, Chatham, and Dover, 9¾ ex div.; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln, 51; Ditto, New Six per Cents, 1865, 7½; Midland, 103½; Great Southern of India, 98; Great Western of Canada, 9½; Madras Five per Cents, 94.

FOREIGN.—Great Luxembourg, 8½; San Paulo, 5½; South Australia and Leeward Islands Five, 17; Sardinia, 2; France, 2½.

The returns of the Bank of England for the week ending Oct. 9 show the following results, when compared with the previous week:—

A decrease of circulation of	£68,000	An increase of bullion of	£5,232
A decrease of public deposits of	20,000	An increase of rest of	1,000
A decrease of other deposits of	97,167	An increase of reserve of	17,232
A decrease of securities of	87,000

The total circulation is now £21,184,560. Public deposits amount to £4,287,911, and private deposits to £17,025,465. Securities are £24,370,486; and the stock of bullion to £21,141,219.

THE OUTRAGE ON THE BRITISH EMBASSY AT JAPAN: MIDNIGHT SCENE IN MR. ALCOCK'S ROOM AT TO-SEN-JI, JEDDO,—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.
SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 376.

THE SABLE ANTELOPE (AIGOCERUS NIGER).

The Zoological Society of London have just added to their unique collection a fine specimen of the sable antelope. This animal, which is very rare, is supposed to have its home in the mountains lying to the north and east of Southern Africa, and the present one is the only living example that has ever been seen alive in Europe. The existence of this species of antelope was first discovered by Sir Cornwallis Harris in 1836, who while pursuing an elephant he had wounded unexpectedly came upon a small herd of nine does and two bucks near the Cashan range. Convinced that the animals before him were unknown to science, he determined upon obtaining a specimen, and after a toilsome pursuit of three days succeeded in killing one of the bucks, which was eventually placed in the collection of the British Museum. The appearance of this animal in its adult stage is very remarkable. From between the horns there rises a bushy black mane which extends to the middle of the back; the greater portion of the coat is of a glossy jet-black hue, forming a most vivid and remarkable contrast with the snowy whiteness of the lower parts; the tail is tasselled and fringed, resembling that of no other known antelope; and the horns, upwards of 3ft. in length, are perfectly flat, sweeping gracefully over the back in the form of a crescent.

In the second volume of the "Transactions of the Zoological Society" is a letter from Sir Cornwallis Harris containing a description, illustrated by a figure, of this very rare and interesting animal.

SABLE ANTELOPE FROM SOUTHERN AFRICA, RECENTLY ADDED TO THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, REGENT'S PARK.

PROGRESS OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION BUILDING.—THE TRANSEPT FLATTENED UP IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE NAVE.

PROGRESS OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION BUILDING.—DESIGNED BY JOSEPH PAXTON, ESQ., F.R.S.—SEE ILLUSTRATED PAGE 375.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each Announcement.

BIRTHS.

On the 5th inst., at the Manor House, Chiswick, the wife of Harrington Tuke, M.P., of a son.

On the 4th inst., at Uddens, near Wimborne, the wife of Cornwall Bonham, Esq., of a daughter.

On the 11th of September, at Montreal, the wife of Frederick Desmond Tinsford, Esq., of a son.

On the 26th of August, at Windsor, Bartholomew, West Indies, the wife of William Bramford Griffith, Esq., M.A., of a son.

On the 16th ult., at Quebec, Canada, the wife of Captain J. D. Travers, 17th Regiment, of a daughter.

On the 7th inst., at Euxton Cottage, Norton, Isle of Wight, Mrs. Julius Goodeye, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On the 2nd inst., at the parish church of Walton-on-Thames, by the Rev. A. F. Pettigrew, of Leamington, assisted by the Rev. C. Lushington, Vicar of Walton, Mr. William Henry, of Wennington, Essex, only son of Mr. Charles Webster, of Barrville-street, to Elizabeth Blount, only daughter of Mr. Henry Cobbett, of Sackville-street, Piccadilly, and Walton.

On the 1st inst., at Buhrenwesserwerk, Bremen, by the Rev. D. R. Falconer, M.A., Bremen, only son of Thomas Wood, Esq., of Hill House, Bromsden, and Forest-common, Windsor Forest, Berks, to Adelaide, youngest daughter of William Briggs, Esq., of Sunderland.

On the 5th inst., at the British Embassy at Berne, Charles Brown, Esq., eldest son of Mr. Charles Brown, Old Burlington, to Catherine Eugenia, second daughter of James Hope, Esq., Winchester, Switzerland.

On the 8th inst., at Holy Trinity, Westminster, by the Rev. Charles F. Sorenson, M.A., Surrey, youngest son of Francis Beadle, Esq., of Peterborough, to Edith, fifth daughter of John Black, Esq., of Victoria Grove, West Brompton.

At Trinity Church, Colombo, Ceylon, by the Rev. J. Thirstan, the Rev. Barcroft Boake, B.A., Principal of Queen's College, Colombo, to Agnes Anne, only daughter of the late Rev. Joseph Marsh.

DEATHS.

On the 4th inst., at Portobello, N.B., Anne, widow of Lieut.-Col. Andrew Hamilton, 16th Regiment, and sister of the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart., of Killerton, Devonshire, aged 78.

On the 5th inst., Emily, the beloved wife of Richard Davies, Esq., of Crowe-street, South Hackney, and Old Broad-street, in her 51st year.

On the 1st inst., at Milbet Cottage, Aspgrleaze, Colonel Campbell, of Milbet, aged 63.

On the 4th inst., of diphtheria, John, the beloved son of John Morris, Esq., of the Old Ferry, London, suddenly, aged 6 years and 3 months.

On the 6th inst., aged 69, Edward Thomas Spencer, late of Billiter street, London, departed to be with Christ.

On the 29th ult., at Hannah Cottage, Bayaria, William, third Lord Foxmouth, of Imaulby, aged 47.

On the 2nd inst., at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope, Mary, the wife of Sir Thomas Maclear, K.C., aged 50.

On the 19th of August, at St. Kitt's, West Indies, the Venerable Archdeacon Fearn, aged 45.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Oct. 7.—Our market to-day was but moderately supplied with English wheat, and the trade was dull at a decline of 1s. per quarter. Foreign was without alteration of importance. Barley, malting and distilling sorts, and in some instances grinding, were in request for foreign wheat, and, in some instances, prices had a slight upward tendency. Fresh arrivals of malting barley. The barley trade was somewhat heavy, and the currencies were rather in favour of buyers. Malt was in good request, and the trade paid rather more for it. Beans and peas were in limited request, and prices were well supported. The flour trade was tolerably healthy, at late rates.

Oct. 9.—The demand for wheat was by no means active to-day; but, owing to the limited supply on sale, the trade was firm, at the full currency of last week. Grinding barley, for which the inquiry for both distilling and malting was somewhat restricted.

English Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s. to 43s.; white ditto, 38s. to 43s.; North-and-South-Lincoln, red, 38s. to 42s.; ryes, 26s. to 28s.; grinding barley, 20s. to 22s.; distilling ditto, 23s. to 25s.; malting ditto, 27s. to 30s.; Kingston and Ware, 30s. to 34s.; Chevalier, 32s. to 36s.; Hertford and Ware, 34s. to 36s.; Scotch, 30s. to 34s.; Canterbury, 30s. to 34s.; Yorshed and Cork, 30s. to 32s.; oats, 17s. to 24s.; Poland ditto, 22s. to 24s.; beans, 32s. to 36s.; Harrow, 34s. to 36s.; maple, 34s. to 36s.; pigeon, 34s. to 36s.; harlots, 40s. to 42s.; and tic quarter. Town-made flour, 45s. to 51s.; town households, 37s. to 39s.; Essex and Suffolk, 36s. to 38s. per sack. Foreign wheat, 38s. to 42s. per barrel; French, 42s. to 46s. per sack.

Oct. 11.—Our trade was very dull, and somewhat drooping. In all other articles little change. Oats were almost unsaleable.

Linseed, English crushing, 56s. to 60s.; Calcutta, 57s. to 58s.; rapeseed, 39s. to 40s. per last; cakes, 6l. 10s. to 6l. 15s. per ton. Linseed-cakes were in request, but prices were within 10s. to 15s. per ton lower than last week. English rapeseed, 37s. to 38s. per quarter; Essex, Ware, English, 47s. 6d. to 48s. 6d.; Hertford, 47s. 6d. to 48s. 6d.; rape cakes, 6l. to 6l. per ton; cotton, 6s. to 6s. per cwt.; hempseed, 40s. to 42s.; tares, 40s. to 42s.; white, 42s. to 44s. per quarter.

Wheat—The primest wheats found in the metropolis are from 40s. to 43s.; fine, 38s. to 40s.; fair, 36s. to 38s.; inferior, 34s. to 36s.

Imperial Bushy Average.—Wheat, 38s.; barley, 32s. 4d.; oats, 22s. 8d.; rye, 28s. 4d.; beans, 34s. 8d.; peas, 34s. 8d.

The Gazette Average.—Wheat, 38s. 8d.; barley, 32s. 4d.; oats, 22s. 8d.; rye, 28s. 8d.; beans, 34s. 8d.; peas, 34s.

English Corn and Flour Imported.—Wheat, 1,277; barley, 37,297; oats, 17,646; rye, 239; beans, 3,027; peas, 66 quarters.

Foreign Corn and Flour Imported.—The whole of the warrants quantity has been disposed of at full prices.

Sugar.—Good and fine sugars have maintained a fair request, at, however, barely previous quotations for the generality of all sorts. Other kinds have moved off slowly, but at very full prices. Refined goods have been in fair demand, and the quotations for lumps have ruled 1s. per cwt. higher than last week.

Coffee.—Fine qualities have been paid for all kinds, and the general amount of business has been large.

Tea.—The public sales have been very moderate in their extent, prices have had an upward tendency. White Bengal has sold as from 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d. per lb.

Provisions.—We have very little change to notice in the value of any description of provisions. The demand for Irish butter has been to a fair extent, and quotations are fully supported.

Tallow.—Our market is very inactive, at 44s. to 44s. 6d. for P.Y.C. on the spot, and 44s. for all the year.

Oils.—Linseed oil, on the spot, is quoted at 34s. per cwt. Palm is selling at 4l. 5s. per ton. Cocoa-nut, 4l. 5s. to 4l. 10s. Olive, 4l. 10s. Colonial spirits are cheap; brandy at 1s. 4d. to 1s. 5d. per gallon; Geneva, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d.; and rum, 1s. 2d. to 1s. 3d.

Hops.—There is a steady demand for all kinds, and the trade is firm, at full prices. Sussex pockets, 5l. 5s. to 6l. 6s.; Weald of Kent, 5l. 5s. to 6l. 6s.; Mid ditto, 5l. 5s. to 6l. 6s.; East ditto, 5l. 5s. to 6l. 6s.; Farnham, 10l. 10s. to 14l. 14s.; Bavarian, 10l. 10s. to 14l. 14s.; Wurtemburg, 10l. 10s. to 14l. 14s.; and Belgian, 4l. 4s. to 5l. 5s. per cwt.

Potatoes.—The supplies are tolerably good, and the demand is for most kinds steady, at full prices.

Metropolitan Cattle Market.—Monday, Oct. 7.—Trade in this market was but moderately supplied with beasts, the quality of which was by no means considerable. Prime heads commanded steady sale, as fully Monday's currency; otherwise, the beef trade was dull, at a decline of 2d. per 8lbs. Sheep were in fair supply, and the mutton trade was heavy, and in good part 2d. per 8lbs. lower than last week. Prime new Downs were in demand, and realised full prices. Calves moved off slowly, at 4s. per 8lbs. Pigs were dull at 4s. per 8lbs. Not much more than a dull sale. Per 8lb. to sink the offal—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 2d. to 3s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d.; prime large oxen, 3s. 10d. to 4s.; prime small ditto, 4s. to 4s. 2d.; large coarse-woolled sheep, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 3s. 8d. to 3s. 10d.; prime Southdown ditto, 4s. to 4s. 2d.; large lambs, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 6d.; prime small ditto, 4s. to 4s. 2d.; large pigs, 4s. to 4s. 2d.; small ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 4d.; suckling calves, 18s. to 24s. each; and milch cows, 14l. to 18l. each. Total supply, 6,000 beasts, 30,000 sheep, 400 calves, 200 pigs, 200 cows.

Newgate and Leadenhall Markets.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the trade is generally quiet, at late rates, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 4d. to 4s. per 8lbs.; mutton, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 2d.; veal, 3s. 8d. to 4s.; pork, 4s. to 4s. 2d. per 8lb. by the carcase.

ROGERS HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.

E. F. ROBERTSON, Gloucester, bookseller and victualler.—W. G. MANN, Leominster, lower, shopkeeper, and grocer.—J. BELLAMY, Bishop-

BANKRUPTS.

J. PETTERS, Lee, Kent, builder.—R. MANDER, Exeter, tailor.—H. REILLY, Pole-place, Wandsworth, builder and contractor.—J. WITT, Cowpole, Liverpool, ship provider.—S. BUTTERLY, Bath, Somerset.—W. E. LEE, Leeds, tea-dealer.—W. WILLIS, Horsell, Surrey, grocer.—C. DUFF, Fulbrook, Bedfordshire, and Cornwall, Finsbury-street, grocer.—C. W. BANKS, Chapter House-court, City, and Deverell-street, provision merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

D. ADAMS, Aberdeen, saddler.—A. ROBERTSON, Glasgow, builder.—D. NEIL, Rothesay, shopkeeper.—J. ROBERTSON, Glasgow, merchant.—J. MACKENZIE, Glasgow, merchant.—D. ELLIS, Bank, Ayrshire, farmer.—J. SCOTT, Govan, grocer.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8.

3rd Dragoon Guards: Capt. W. Ellsworth to be Captain.

4th Light Dragoons: Cornet Hon. C. Bruce to be Lieutenant.

6th Foot: Lieut.-Col. G. Sydenham, C.B., to be Lieutenant-Colonel. 8th: Lieut. J. M. Biddle to be Captain. 14th: Lieut.-Col. H. W. Burroughs to be Lieutenant-Colonel. 16th: Ens. H. Gregory to be Lieut.

17th: Lieut. J. S. Jeffreys to be Instructor of Musketry.

19th: Lieut.-Col. J. Hall to be Lieutenant-Colonel. 21st: Lieut. R. Scott to be Captain. 24th: Lieut. J. M. Biddle to be Captain. 31st: Lieut. R. Hall to be Captain. 34th: Lieut. M. Hall to be Captain. 35th: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain. 38th: Lieut. J. B. MacKenzie to be Lieutenant; W. F. E. Grant to be Ensign. 39th: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain. 40th: Lieut. Hon. Hale Brabazon: Lieut. C. G. Slade to be Captain: Ensign G. B. Boyle to be Lieutenant. 41st: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain.

42nd: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain: Ensign H. L. Mackenzie to be Lieutenant; Ensign W. S. Kerr and R. M'Gregor to be Ensigns. 51st: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain. 53rd: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain.

Cape Mounted Rifleman: Major and Brevet Col. T. Bowcher to be Lieutenant-Colonel. Royal Artillery: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain: Lieut. C. J. Forster to be Adjutant. Royal Engineers: Lieut. J. Hall to be Lieutenant.

Commissariat Staff: Assistant Commissary-General to be Deputy Commissary-General: Commissary-in-Chief to be Assistant Commissary-General: Commissary to be Deputy Assistant Commissary-General: Assistant Commissary to be Commissary.

Royal Marines: Lieut. J. Hall to be Captain.

Memorial Department.—Assist. Surg. M. J. Jones to be Staff Assistant Surgeon.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.

W. RONALD, Manchester, merchant.

BANKRUPTS.

J. N. DAVIS, Pembroke-dock, Pembroke, builder.—T. PAICE, Pembroke-street, Old Kent-road, builder.—R. Bowden, Bow, Middlesex, builder.—J. CASE, Bethnal-green, builder.—J. HOLLOWAY, Bethnal-green, builder.—J. HOLLOWAY, Bethnal-green, builder.—E. NELSON, Birmingham, wine-merchant, and dealer.—W. HOLLINGSWORTH, Birmingham, builder.—J. HOLLINGSWORTH, Birmingham, builder.—J. HOLLINGSWORTH, Birmingham, builder.—J. JONES, Wrexham, Denbighshire, draper.—W. JONES, Wrexham, Denbighshire, draper.—W. HOLLINGSWORTH, Birmingham, builder.—J. HOLLINGSWORTH, Birmingham, builder.—T. TAYLOR, Manchester, grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

D. M'INTYRE, Glasgow, grocer.—D. HARDIE and A. LEES, Glasgow, merchants.—J. MACKENZIE, Glasgow, merchant.—J. SKEN, Aberdeen, merchant.—J. CAIRD, Dundee, merchant.—A. MACDONALD, Inverness, merchant.—J. PARNELL, Dumbarton, joiner.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Under the Management of Mrs. LOUISA PYNE and Mr. HAMILTON BRAEHAM. This (Saturday) Evening, Benedict's new opera, THE LILY OF KILLARNEY. Principal characters by Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Susan Pyne, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Aynsley Cook, and Mr. Swift. Conductor, Mr. Benedict. To conclude with BALFE'S BOHEMIAN GIRL. Doors open at half-past Six; the Opera commences at Seven. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 7s.; Upper Boxes, 4s.; Pit, 3s.; Gallery, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten to Five. Acting-Manager, Mr. Augustus Harris.

THEATRE ROYAL, HAYMARKET.—Mr. EDWIN BOOTH, continuing to be received with enthusiasm, will appear This Evening, and on Saturday, Oct. 12, in the Tragedy of RICHELIEU. Next week, on Monday, Oct. 14, the Comedy of FITZGINTHE HALL—Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Wilkins, and Mr. Edwin Booth. On Tuesday, Oct. 15, the Comedy of THE SPY and PAUL PRY MASKED AND BEFFLED.

ROYAL LYCEUM THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. Charles Dillon. This (Saturday) Evening, a Drama, in one act, entitled THE NEW PATRON. Mr. Charles Dillon, Mr. Addison, Mr. Ryder, Mr. Lyon, Mr. Ashley, Mr. Lee, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Bennett, Miss Fanny Wallis, Miss Rose Leclercq, and Miss Kate Terry. After which, an UNPRECEDENTED TRAGEDY, in which Mr. Charles Dillon will appear. To conclude with the Comedy of A NOTED FIRM. Doors open at Seven; Commence at Half-past Seven. Private Boxes, £1 1s.; Dress Circle, 5s.; Upper Boxes, 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Box-office open from Ten to Five. Acting-Manager, Mr. Augustus Harris.

NEW THEATRE ROYAL, ADELPHI.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Webster. This (Saturday) Evening, at the COTTAGE BANKS. On Monday, Oct. 14, MUSES MADE MERRY. On Tuesday, Oct. 15, THE WIFE'S MOTHER. On Wednesday, and LOVE AND RUSSIA. Seven Stalls can be had.

ROYAL LYCEUM THEATRE.—Grand Concert, This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 12, and on SATURDAY, Oct. 19. Vocalists: Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Rudersdorff, Mr. Charles Tilbury, Herr Reichardt, Signor Ferni, and Herr Reichardt. Pianoforte: Mr. Charles Hallé. Violin: Herr Ernst. Harp: Mr. Oscar Beringer. Violoncello: Signor Piatti. Conductor: Mr. Benedict. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 7s.; Upper Boxes, 4s.; Pit, 3s.; Gallery, 2s. Tickets to be secured by admission the Secretary, Stage-door, Exeter, Theatre, Strand, and at the Box-office of the Lyceum. Doors open at Seven; Concert, Half-past Seven. Acting-Manager, Mr. Augustus Harris.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Arrangements for This Day (Saturday).

Monday: Display of the Upper Series of Fountains at Three o'clock.

Tuesday: Tuesday: GRAND CONCERT OF SACRED MUSIC, at Three o'clock.

Wednesday: GRAND ITALIAN OPERATIC SCENE. The Band of the Coldstream Guards.

Thursday: Display of the Fountains and Silver Rapids to the London Rifle Brigade by the Lady Mayoress. Military Sports and Pantomime Performances. Band of the Rifle Brigade.

Open on Monday at Ten, other days at Ten.

Admission to the Crystal Palace, Monday to Friday days, One Shilling; on Saturdays, Half-a-Crown.

Orchestral Band, Grand Organ Performances, and Machinery in Motion Daily. Handel Festival Performances, Grand Operatic Performances, Exhibition and Sale in the Picture Gallery.

Season Tickets admitting to all Days and Performances in Hall and Picture Gallery, Two Guineas.

Nurses'-Field-Garden Season Tickets, available till April 30, 1862, Half-a-Guinea. Crystal Palace, 3, Exeter Hall, and the usual Agents of the Company.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—POPULAR OPERA CONCERTS.—Conductor, Mr. Manns. Commencement of THURSDAY NEXT, Oct. 17, and 31, at which Miss Talbot, Miss Poole, and Mr. Weiss will appear. Admission, One Shilling.

The Concerts will commence at Three o'clock each day.

Season Tickets, admitting to the Concerts, Children Half-price. Tickets free. Doors Open at Ten o'Clock.

THEATRES and GIUGLINI at the CRYSTAL PALACE.—Commencement of GIUGLINI'S LAST ENGAGEMENT TUESDAY and THURSDAY NEXT.—Concert at Three, but Orchestral Performances commence at Half-past Two. Admission, One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—BLONDIN will make his CORTON CONCERT at Three o'clock precisely. On the same day, at Half-past Three o'clock precisely. On the same day, the Concerts will commence at Three o'clock each day. The engagement of this extraordinary performer drawing to a close, Blondin will appear on Tuesday, Oct. 15, Thursday, Oct. 17, and every Evening (except Saturday), at Eight. Admission, One Shilling. Children under Twelve half-price. Any further attendance to all the other attractions of the palace and grounds.

MR. and Mrs. GERMAN REED, with Mr. JOHN PARRY, will RESUME for the Season their ROYAL ENTERTAINMENT, at 8, on MONDAY NEXT, Oct. 14, and every Evening (except Saturday), at Eight. Stalls, 3s.; Admission, 1s. Half-past Three o'clock prelude. On the same day, at Half-past Three o'clock, a Morning Performance. The engagement of this extraordinary performer drawing to a close, Blondin will appear on Tuesday, Oct. 15, Thursday, Oct. 17, and every Evening (except Saturday), at Eight. Admission, One Shilling. Children under Twelve half-price. Any further attendance to all the other attractions of the palace and grounds.

THE SISTERS SOPHIA and ANNIE, in their original and highly-successful Entertainment, entitled SKETCHES FROM NATURE, will appear at Exeter Hall, Oct. 14; Wellington-road, 15; Hanover-square, 16; Hall, 17; Hall, 18.

NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and CO.'S NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, in 3 vols.

THE OLD ROMAN WELL. A Romance of Dark Stairs and Queer Lodgers. By Mrs. GREY.

ASHCOMBE CHURCHYARD. A Novel. 3 vols. Just ready.

GREAT CATCHES and GLEE and MADRIGAL SOCIETY SONGS. Edited by LEO LEMON.

MY DAUGHTER'S HUSBAND. A Tale of the 17th Century. Just ready.

JOSEPH THE BROTHER. By the Author of "Our Father in Heaven" and "Come to Me Happy." 3 vols. Just ready.

ASHBY CHURCH. A Novel. 2 vols. just 9vo. 21s.

CROWNSNEST FARM. A Novel. By the Author of "Sir Victor's Choice." 3 vols.

THE OLD MANOR-HOUSE. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

WHEAT AND TARES. Originally published in "Fraser's Magazine." 2 vols.

CECILY HAMILTON. By the Author of "Miriam May." Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Saunders, Otley, and Co., Publishers, Conduit-street.

A FACSIMILE of the Original Autograph MANUSCRIPT of GRAY'S ELEGY. Photographed by Cundall, Downes, and Co., from the same process as employed by Lovs, Day, and Son, for the Queen. Price 5s.

Second Edition, price 1s., or post-free for 13 stamps,

A GUIDE TO INDIAN INVESTMENTS. By a Shareholder. Containing the Last Authentication exposing the ballooned statements of Indian Guarantees.

Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange.

Just published, New Edition, with Additions, price 5s., cloth,

FALLACIES OF THE FACULTY. By Dr. LANKESTER.

"Almost as entertaining as novel."—Westminster Review.

Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., Stationers'-hall-court, and Bookseller to the Queen.

FIELD'S NEW GUINEA FAMILY BIBLE. A large handsome volume, bound to last memory with elegance, containing the Authorised Version, with Apocrypha, Notes, &c. Only to be had of the Publishers, 164, Piccadilly, Waterloo-place. The largest stock of Family Bibles in the World.

50,000 BIBLES, Prayer-books, and Church Services, in every variety of binding, at very reduced prices, and Standard Authors in every variety of binding, at very reduced prices. Catalogues sent free on application. Bagster and Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, and 76, Strand.

Just published, with Illustrations, and may be had by all lovers of Gardens, price 1s., post-free for 13 stamps,

THE FLORAL GUIDE to WINDOW, CONSERVATORY, and OUTDOOR GARDENING, showing how to obtain the greatest amount of Floral Beauty at the least cost. By JOSEPH HARRISON. Published by HOULSTON and SONS, 12, King-street opposite the Garrick Club, Covent-garden, W.C.

A appropriate Drawing-room Presents for October.

THE "VICTORIA" "EUGENIE," and "PRINCESS ROYAL" Illuminated Heraldic Cards complete with Pyrotints and supports, each set sent carriage-paid for 13 stamps. Also, the "Victoria" Illuminated Heraldic Cards, in Case, with Pyrotints and Supports, 5s. 6d. Illuminated Heraldic Cards, 10s. 6d. and SUDDEN, 15, King-street opposite the Garrick Club, Covent-garden, W.C.

DUTCH FLOWER-ROOTS, sent carriage-free, collected "D," &c., for Conservatory and outdoor Amateurs, Amaryllis, Ixias, Sparaxis, Tritonias, Gladiolus, Anemones, Ranunculus, Narcissus, Iris, Scilla, Lilies, Tuberoses, and Crocus, 12 sorts, 2s.; 24 sorts, 4s.; 50 sorts, 8s.; 100 sorts, 15s. Descriptive Catalogues free. Address, Messrs. Barr and Sugden, Seedsmen and Florists, 12, King-street opposite the Garrick Club, Covent-garden, W.C.

HYACINTHS, TULIPS, CROCUS, &c.—J. BOYLES and M'CULLOCH confidently recommend their fine mixed Hyacinths, Tulips, and Crocus, for the open borders, 1s. per dozen; 7s. per 100; 60s. per 1,000. Also their choice mixed Hyacinths, for glasses, 1s. per dozen. A choice selection of Narcissus, Ixias, Scilla, Crocus, &c., for pots, 1s. per dozen. Catalogues sent post-paid.

All orders executed by J. Boyles and M'Culloch, W.C. Butler and M'Culloch, Seedsmen, Covent-garden.

VOLUNTEER and RIFLE SHOOTING PRIZES.—VOLUNTEER GLASSES are the most popular. Sent post-free, with Instructions, by Dr. Kahn, Optician, 48, Strand, next to Arundel-street, W.C.

OPERA, RACE, FIELD, and general out-door GLASSES, of unrivalled excellence, by SOLOMONS, the RIFLE GLASSES, each combining 12 and 18 lenses, will show the object's person distinctly at 1,000 yards. The Field Glasses of the Prussian Army are supplied by SOLOMONS. They have been tested at the School of Musketry, Hythe, and a number of officers present at the trial pronounced the Glasses to be the most effective and powerful they had ever seen. Are brilliant and defining, and show objects at a great distance. Also Telescopes, Compasses, Barometers, Thermometers, Microscopes, Pocket-books, Pocket-knives, Scissors, Razors, Strops, and Pocket-cases. Solomons, Optician and Mathematical Instrument Maker, 39, Cornhill, E.C., and 59, Strand, W.C.

DEAFNESS.—A newly-invented Instrument for extreme cases of Deafness, called the Sound Magnifier, through which the faintest sound is heard distinctly and without pain, so as not to be the least perceptible; the unpleasant sensation of singing noises in the head entirely removed. It is so small as to be quite concealed, and can be used by the most delicate lady or gentleman without the slightest inconvenience. Sent by other kind of hearing instrument. Sound Magnifier Company, 4, Argyll-place, Regent-street, W.

MAGIC LANTERNS, Dissolving Views, and all Rides of the highest character, lent out and sent into the country. Catalogues of Slides, Lanterns, &c., sent free.—Marion and Co., Stationers of Artists, 22, 23, 24, Admiralty-arcade, Piccadilly.

SPANISH PENINSULA WINE COMPANY. Sherries, Montilla, Manzanilla, Moutero, Ry, Pedro Ximenes, Paxarete, Malaga, Tent, Rota, Alicante, Valdepenas, Carlowitz, Hock, Moselle, Burgundy, Claret, Champagne, Port, Madeira, Cognac, Liqueurs, &c. Wholesale and for Exportation, 1, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

SPANISH PENINSULA WINE COMPANY. Sherries, Montilla, Manzanilla, Moutero, Ry, Pedro Ximenes, Paxarete, Malaga, Tent, Rota, Alicante, Valdepenas, Carlowitz, Hock, Moselle, Burgundy, Claret, Champagne, Port, Madeira, Cognac, Liqueurs, &c. Wholesale and for Exportation, 1, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

No 14, Bangor-pad Chambers, Baskinsbury.

ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE.—FINDLATER, MACKIE, and STEUART, Wine and Spirit Merchants, by appointment to supply, at the Palaces, ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE in Bottle. Offices, 1, Great Tower-street, E.C. Bottling Stores, Cooperage, and Export Department, Burton-upon-Trent. Railway-station, Burton, 115; Tooley-street, S.E.

Sold by Grocers, Confectioners, &c.

FRY'S PEARL CHOCOLATE.

Fry's Pearl Chocolate, for Eating, in Sticks and Drops.

Fry's Chocolate Creams.

Fry's French Chocolate in Cakes.

J. S. Fry and Sons, Bristol and London.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

SEE THAT YOU GET IT,

as inferior kinds are often substituted.

WOTHERSPOON and CO., Glasgow and London.

COALS.—COCKERELL'S COALS, price 25s. per ton. Central Office, No. 8, Cornhill.

TRELOAR'S KAMPTULICON FLOOR-CLOTH, Crescent Matting and Mats, and a variety of useful floor-coverings. T. Treloar, Manufacturer, 69, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

NEW MUSIC.

"THE" PIECE NOW HEARD IN EVERY DRAWING-ROOM IS LA FRIERE ENADORE (The Prayer Granted), the Song by "La Petite Fanny Vivier" 2/ Fanny Vivier, Nouveau Salon, par FRANCIS BATHAZAR CRAMER. "Admirably adapted for the drawing-room." "Very effective." "Will become a favourite." Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street, London. CRAMER'S and Co., 201, Regent-street, Portland-square, W.

MAGDALENA, CRASE, THY WEEPING, Sacred Song, by FRANCESCO BERGAMI, 24 stamps. A pretty present given to all customers of Mr. Lee, Saint-post-free for 18 stamps. Lee, 18, Old Bond-street, W.

NEW DANCES Now in Public Rehearsals. THE MAGNETIC POLKA. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by THOMAS BADARZEWSKA. Composer of "La Baronne Polka," "Les Fleurs Polka," and "La petite Compositeur Polonez." Sent post-free for 18 st.

Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street, W. Robert-street.

WAVES OF THE OCEAN WALTZ, by D'ALBERMET, with Cornet Accom. ad libitum. Beautiful illustrated. Original waltz, the time is well marked." Sent post-free for 18 stamps.

GUTMANN and Co., 17, Baker-street.

HOPE IS SHINING STILL. Miss Augusta Thompson's New Song. By ALFRED B. BURNESTON. "The words are pleasing and well-suited to the melody of these Sent post-free for 18 stamps.

GUTMANN and Co., 17, Baker-street.

WHEN DO YOU MEAN TO CHANGE YOUR NAME? By the Author of "Sir Patrick's Knock." Price 2s. Sent post-free for 13 stamps. "Will be a great favourite." Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street, W.

REALLY DON'T THINK I SHALL MARRY. Newest Song of the Season. Sung by Miss Rose Hersee. Beautifully illustrated. Sent post-free for 18 stamps.

GUTMANN and Co., 17, Baker-street.

MUSIC HALF-PRICE and Post-free.—All Published Music at every publisher forwarded to any part of the United Kingdom at half the published price, postage-free, by all Stationers and Booksellers. Special Catalogue of Popular New Music of all Publishers, Post-free.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, Portman-sq., W.

SPRING MORN, SUMMER NOON, SUTUMN EVE, WINTER NIGHT.—Four new Songs, composed by GEORGE GLOVER. Illustrated by BRANDARD. Published by Duncan and Co., 33, Bishopsgate-street Within.

THE AFRICAN QUADRILLES. By GEORGE GLOVER. Beautifully illustrated by Brandard. Played by the Queen's private band. Published by Duncan and Co., 33, Bishopsgate-street Within.

J. HATTON'S NEW BALLAD, "As I'M ALONE." Madame Rietz-Dey supremely charmed when sang at the Monday Popular Concerts.

Boosey and Sons, 24, Holles-street.

COLDSTREAM GUARDS' MARCH, performed by the Band of the Coldstream Regiment of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales by BRANDARD. Price 2s., post-free.

Duncan and Co., 33, Bishopsgate-street Within.

HIGHLAND ECHOES, Quick March of the Scottish Rifles. Composed by STEPHEN GLOVER. Beautifully illustrated by BRANDARD.

Duncan and Co., 33, Bishopsgate-street Within.

HARMONIUM DIVINA.—A Collection of Standard Psalm and Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Sacred Songs, and Chants; Original Compositions; and Arrangements from the Oratorios, for the Harmonium, by J. C. STONE. In three vols., 7s. 6d. each.

London: BOOSEY and SONS, 24, Holles-street-West Within.

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S LIST, containing the Compositions of Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Balfe, Wallace, &c., Post-free on application. STUDENTS' EDITION OF MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS. Second Series. 21. Chopin's Mazurkas, Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, Post 12mo, 2s. each. 22. Handel's Lessons and Suites, Post 12mo, 2s. each. 23. Rossini Soirée's Quartetts, Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 24. Mozart's Quartetts, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 25. Mozart's Quintetts, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 26. Mozart's Quintetts, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 27. Beethoven's Quartetts, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 28. Beethoven's Quintetts, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 29. Beethoven's Grand Trios, 7s. 6d. 30. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, 7s. 6d. CLASSICAL PIANIST'S MUSIC. SECOND SERIES. 1. Handel's Lessons, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 2. Mozart's Sonatas, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 3. Mozart's Sonatas, Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 7s. 6d. 4. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7s. 6d. 5. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 7s. 6d. 6. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 7s. 6d. 7. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 7s. 6d. 8. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 7s. 6d. 9. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 7s. 6d. 10. Beethoven's Sonatas, Nos. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 7s. 6d. 11. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 7s. 6d. 12. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 7s. 6d. 13. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 7s. 6d. 14. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 7s. 6d. 15. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 7s. 6d. 16. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 7s. 6d. 17. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 7s. 6d. 18. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 7s. 6d. 19. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 7s. 6d. 20. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 7s. 6d. 21. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 7s. 6d. 22. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 7s. 6d. 23. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 7s. 6d. 24. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 7s. 6d. 25. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 7s. 6d. 26. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 7s. 6d. 27. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 7s. 6d. 28. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 7s. 6d. 29. Beethoven's Grand Sonatas, Nos. 151, 152, KINGS COLLEGE, LONDON.—The EVENING CLASSES will COMMENCE on MONDAY, Oct. 14, in Greek, Latin, French, Italian, German, Hebrew, Sanscrit, Arabic, Persian, Hindustanee, Bengalee, Turkish, Spanish, or if several other subjects. A prospectus will be sent on application to A.W. Hamilton-Gray, Kings College, London, and a detailed Outline on receipt of Six Postage-stamps. By Order, DAN. TYERMAN, Secretary.

NATAL BANK.—Instituted 1854.

Incorporated by Charter 1861. The agency of this Bank having been established in Durban, Port of Natal, a Connection between London and Natal has been established. Until further notice the daily remittances on account of and grant Letters of Credit upon the Bank's Agency in Durban, Natal, may be obtained at the Office, 60, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C. GEO. MACKENZIE, Manager. Head Office, 60, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

INTENDING PATENTEES should PROCURE the HANDY-BOOK about PATENTS, and the Mode of Obtaining them at small Cost. Gratis on application to the GENERAL PATENT COMPANY (Limited), 70, Fleet-street, London.
H. MARSHALL LAURENCE, Sec.

MALACA.—A GENTLEMAN well acquainted with the Malacca Settlements, and a Resident for many years, is desirous of meeting with a Partner in the above, or Agency for Manufactures. Address Q. B., care of Messrs. Dawson and Sons, 74, Cannon-street, E.C.

SMART'S WRITING INSTITUTION, Open from Ten till Nine daily. Esteemed all unprecedented, gradually, yet taught at any time visiting their own convenience. Lessons also any hour. Numerous Testimonials guaranteed. Also Ladies' Writing Classes, Separate rooms for Ladies, to which Gentlemen are not admitted. Terms, Private Lessons, Prospectus, Specimens, &c., Post-free, at the Sole premises (not in Establishment), 337, Strand, at the Corner of Somerset-street, Quadrant, Regent-street.

KING and CO., SILKMERCERS, &c., 243, Regent-street, beg respectfully respectfully respectfully to attempt to announce inquiries, both at home and abroad, that the reason why they can still the same splendid goods 15 per cent less than other houses is because they do a larger house and foreign trade to our Establishment than any other house in the trade, and as they have no bad debts, and a moderate, unlimited commerce expenses of which must be paid for by the most exorbitant profits being marked on every article.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE.
No. 243, Regent-street.

AUTUMN DRESSES at KING'S, 243, Regent-street.
Prepared, Weavers, Silk Mercers, and Linen Drapers, &c., to the Royal Family, &c.
Address to King and Co., Regent-street, London.

The New CACHMERE SHAWL at KING'S
243, Regent-street.
Rope, and Cachmere Shawls, trimmed with Velvet, 17s. each.
243, Regent-street, London.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE.
No. 243, Regent-street.

BLACK SILKS at KING'S,
243, Regent-street.
Black Colour, Durapes, Gros de Suez, Moire Antiques, &c.,
243, Regent-street.
Address to King and Co., Regent-street, London.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE.
No. 243, Regent-street.

AUTUMN SILKS at KING'S,
243, Regent-street.
Checked, 1½ Yard Wide, Full Dress, 17s. 6d. the Full Dress.
Striped, 1½ Yard Wide, Full Dress, 17s. 6d. the Full Dress.
Address to King and Co., Regent-street, London.

BAKER and CRISP'S marvellously cheap
Autumn Dress Fabrics,
Rich and Coloured Silks,
27 per cent less than any house in London.
Patterns sent free.—198, Regent-street, corner, Hanover-street.
N.B. The Royal Court Mantle, 2 guineas, worth 4l.

THE NEW PARISIAN NEEDLEWORK SETS of CUFFS, in rich silk cuffs, worth 5s. 6d., Collar free for 5s—extra stamp.
BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent-street, (corner of Maddox-street).

MANTLE CLOTHS.
PETER ROBINSON and CO.,
101, Holborn-hill (corner of Hatton garden), are selling a large lot of new and beautiful goods, adapted for autumn and winter wear, at very low prices, also every description of Mantle Cloth, suitable adapted for Dressmakers and Ship wear. Patterns free.

AUTUMN NOVELTIES at COMPTON BOURNE,
JOWELL and COMPANY respectfully invite Ladies' attention to a Superb Collection of Autumn Goods, which they are now receiving daily, from the Leading Houses in the Trade, New Patterns in Fashionable Dress Fabrics,
Moire Antiques, the Richest Qualities,
Mourning Goods,
Manufactured Expressly for the Empress's, Princess, and Nobility's Wear Fabrics and Designs.
Chenille, Brocade, and Satin Trimmings.
All the New Patterns from the best Parisian Houses.
Compton Bourne, Post-street, Soho.

HOUSEHOLD LINEN DEPARTMENT.—
JOHN HARVEY, SON, and Co., of 6, Ludgate-hill, establish, beyond any of their rivals, all good patterns and materials for the manufacture, of their rich DOUBLE DAMASK TABLECLOTH, which they have now in stock, and which they are selling at 2s. 11d. per yard, of pure white cleanings in widths from 1 to 2 yards; patterns showing from 2 to yards wide; handkerchiefs, medium, Bath-towels, Huckaback towels, glass and kitchen cloths, dusters, &c., made up and marked upon the shortest notice. Carriage paid upon amounts above 20s. Patterns washed upon at their London Establishment.

SILKS, Rich, Plain, Striped, and Checked SILKS, 27 Glace, at 2s. 6d. per Dress of 12 yards, well worth the attention of Ladies requiring a Rich Silk Dress. Patterns and prices of these and other Silks sent free by JOHN HARVEY, SON, and Co., of Ludgate-hill. Established upwards of fifty years. Carriage paid upon amounts above 20s.

MESSRS. SWAN and EDGAR respectfully announce that their new Stock for the Autumn and Winter Season is now complete in every Department.
The varied and rich Stock of rich Silk and other fancy Dresses now quite new continues to be sold at a great reduction in price.
Promptly and Regularly.

NOVELTIES FOR THE AUTUMN.
GRANT AND GASK
are now exhibiting a selection of the choicest productions of their establishment a beautiful collection of NEW GOODS adapted to the Season. Amongst the new fabrics are many worthy of special notice. In these purchases at very rich Irish and coloured ground Brocade Silks, Moire Antiques, Glace Poplins, Velvet Cords, and Satin Cords, in the new shades of colour. Also a large assortment of Black Silks, of every texture, Mantles, &c., will be sold at greatly-reduced prices. Ladies in the country are informed that patterns can be sent free to any part of the kingdom. Ladies visiting London are solicited to call and inspect the new goods, which are marked in plain figures, at the Paul Pierre Dress and Shawl Warehouse, 134 and 135, Grand Junction-street, Hyde-park-corner.

Gowns Manufactured and Dressmaking complete.
COMMERCIAL-ROAD, EAST, and CHURCH-street, 1, 4, and 5, KINGSLAND.

NEW AUTUMN MANTLES of NOVEL DESIGN, costly in appearance, truly rich in quality, and fleecy as a cloud in point of good taste, can now be seen and had from at the Establishment of ANGEL BOUCICAUT, 381 and 382, Regent-street, corner of Argyll-place. Also a large assortment of Silks, Shawls in the greatest fashion, Ladies may depend upon having secured the most distinct styles to their cause with within two hours of the manufacturer.
Non-fashionable Mantles.
Cloth, Velvet, and Silk Mantles, in all the newest styles,
at the most moderate prices.
The Rambouillet Cloth Cloak,
Woven from good cloth,
recommended for wear,
well made and expressly lessened,
with full flowing hood,
will be found unbreakable.
Patterns of cloth post free.
ANGEL BOUCICAUT, 381 and 382, Regent-street, London.

NEW AUTUMN SILKS.
The Millinery Regent, 21 to 26, corner to the Silks with.
T. K.'s temporary Silk Warehouse, 21 to 26, Oxford-street.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN DRESSES.
Double Melanie, 11½ 9d. Full Dress.
Thick Poplin, 11½ 9d. 12 to 24 Full Dress.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN JACKETS,
in cloth, cachemere, and velvet, from 30s. 6d. to 5 guineas.
Illustrations, with patterns of quality, sent free by post.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN RIBBONS.
To Ladies resident in the country.
The present season's Ribbons are now in very part.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

WATER PROOF CLOAKS.
A few of the original Guinea Cloaks, now 15s. 6d.
Illustrations, with patterns of quality, sent free by post.
Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' GARIBALDI SHIRTS.
T. Ledger invites attention to his Garibaldi Shirts, specially Nutty Ground Silk Ties, to wear with the same, free for 21 stamps.
Patterns (with self-measure) free by post on application.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

REAL CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS, Ladies', 1s. 3d. hem-stitched, 7s. 6d.; Gentlemen's, 10s. 6d. per dozen; sample on receipt of stamps.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' INVISIBLE NETS,
1 and silicate, 9d., 10d., 11d. Free for stamps.
Also New Satin Bands, two pencils, all sizes, in 6d., 7d., 8d., 9d., 10d., 11d., 12d., 13d., 14d., 15d., 16d., 17d., 18d., 19d., 20d., 21d., 22d., 23d., 24d., 25d., 26d., 27d., 28d., 29d., 30d., 31d., 32d., 33d., 34d., 35d., 36d., 37d., 38d., 39d., 40d., 41d., 42d., 43d., 44d., 45d., 46d., 47d., 48d., 49d., 50d., 51d., 52d., 53d., 54d., 55d., 56d., 57d., 58d., 59d., 60d., 61d., 62d., 63d., 64d., 65d., 66d., 67d., 68d., 69d., 70d., 71d., 72d., 73d., 74d., 75d., 76d., 77d., 78d., 79d., 80d., 81d., 82d., 83d., 84d., 85d., 86d., 87d., 88d., 89d., 90d., 91d., 92d., 93d., 94d., 95d., 96d., 97d., 98d., 99d., 100d., 101d., 102d., 103d., 104d., 105d., 106d., 107d., 108d., 109d., 110d., 111d., 112d., 113d., 114d., 115d., 116d., 117d., 118d., 119d., 120d., 121d., 122d., 123d., 124d., 125d., 126d., 127d., 128d., 129d., 130d., 131d., 132d., 133d., 134d., 135d., 136d., 137d., 138d., 139d., 140d., 141d., 142d., 143d., 144d., 145d., 146d., 147d., 148d., 149d., 150d., 151d., 152d., 153d., 154d., 155d., 156d., 157d., 158d., 159d., 160d., 161d., 162d., 163d., 164d., 165d., 166d., 167d., 168d., 169d., 170d., 171d., 172d., 173d., 174d., 175d., 176d., 177d., 178d., 179d., 180d., 181d., 182d., 183d., 184d., 185d., 186d., 187d., 188d., 189d., 190d., 191d., 192d., 193d., 194d., 195d., 196d., 197d., 198d., 199d., 200d., 201d., 202d., 203d., 204d., 205d., 206d., 207d., 208d., 209d., 210d., 211d., 212d., 213d., 214d., 215d., 216d., 217d., 218d., 219d., 220d., 221d., 222d., 223d., 224d., 225d., 226d., 227d., 228d., 229d., 230d., 231d., 232d., 233d., 234d., 235d., 236d., 237d., 238d., 239d., 240d., 241d., 242d., 243d., 244d., 245d., 246d., 247d., 248d., 249d., 250d., 251d., 252d., 253d., 254d., 255d., 256d., 257d., 258d., 259d., 260d., 261d., 262d., 263d., 264d., 265d., 266d., 267d., 268d., 269d., 270d., 271d., 272d., 273d., 274d., 275d., 276d., 277d., 278d., 279d., 280d., 281d., 282d., 283d., 284d., 285d., 286d., 287d., 288d., 289d., 290d., 291d., 292d., 293d., 294d., 295d., 296d., 297d., 298d., 299d., 300d., 301d., 302d., 303d., 304d., 305d., 306d., 307d., 308d., 309d., 310d., 311d., 312d., 313d., 314d., 315d., 316d., 317d., 318d., 319d., 320d., 321d., 322d., 323d., 324d., 325d., 326d., 327d., 328d., 329d., 330d., 331d., 332d., 333d., 334d., 335d., 336d., 337d., 338d., 339d., 340d., 341d., 342d., 343d., 344d., 345d., 346d., 347d., 348d., 349d., 350d., 351d., 352d., 353d., 354d., 355d., 356d., 357d., 358d., 359d., 360d., 361d., 362d., 363d., 364d., 365d., 366d., 367d., 368d., 369d., 370d., 371d., 372d., 373d., 374d., 375d., 376d., 377d., 378d., 379d., 380d., 381d., 382d., 383d., 384d., 385d., 386d., 387d., 388d., 389d., 390d., 391d., 392d., 393d., 394d., 395d., 396d., 397d., 398d., 399d., 400d., 401d., 402d., 403d., 404d., 405d., 406d., 407d., 408d., 409d., 410d., 411d., 412d., 413d., 414d., 415d., 416d., 417d., 418d., 419d., 420d., 421d., 422d., 423d., 424d., 425d., 426d., 427d., 428d., 429d., 430d., 431d., 432d., 433d., 434d., 435d., 436d., 437d., 438d., 439d., 440d., 441d., 442d., 443d., 444d., 445d., 446d., 447d., 448d., 449d., 450d., 451d., 452d., 453d., 454d., 455d., 456d., 457d., 458d., 459d., 460d., 461d., 462d., 463d., 464d., 465d., 466d., 467d., 468d., 469d., 470d., 471d., 472d., 473d., 474d., 475d., 476d., 477d., 478d., 479d., 480d., 481d., 482d., 483d., 484d., 485d., 486d., 487d., 488d., 489d., 490d., 491d., 492d., 493d., 494d., 495d., 496d., 497d., 498d., 499d., 500d., 501d., 502d., 503d., 504d., 505d., 506d., 507d., 508d., 509d., 510d., 511d., 512d., 513d., 514d., 515d., 516d., 517d., 518d., 519d., 520d., 521d., 522d., 523d., 524d., 525d., 526d., 527d., 528d., 529d., 530d., 531d., 532d., 533d., 534d., 535d., 536d., 537d., 538d., 539d., 540d., 541d., 542d., 543d., 544d., 545d., 546d., 547d., 548d., 549d., 550d., 551d., 552d., 553d., 554d., 555d., 556d., 557d., 558d., 559d., 560d., 561d., 562d., 563d., 564d., 565d., 566d., 567d., 568d., 569d., 570d., 571d., 572d., 573d., 574d., 575d., 576d., 577d., 578d., 579d., 580d., 581d., 582d., 583d., 584d., 585d., 586d., 587d., 588d., 589d., 590d., 591d., 592d., 593d., 594d., 595d., 596d., 597d., 598d., 599d., 600d., 601d., 602d., 603d., 604d., 605d., 606d., 607d., 608d., 609d., 610d., 611d., 612d., 613d., 614d., 615d., 616d., 617d., 618d., 619d., 620d., 621d., 622d., 623d., 624d., 625d., 626d., 627d., 628d., 629d., 630d., 631d., 632d., 633d., 634d., 635d., 636d., 637d., 638d., 639d., 640d., 641d., 642d., 643d., 644d., 645d., 646d., 647d., 648d., 649d., 650d., 651d., 652d., 653d., 654d., 655d., 656d., 657d., 658d., 659d., 660d., 661d., 662d., 663d., 664d., 665d., 666d., 667d., 668d., 669d., 670d., 671d., 672d., 673d., 674d., 675d., 676d., 677d., 678d., 679d., 680d., 681d., 682d., 683d., 684d., 685d., 686d., 687d., 688d., 689d., 690d., 691d., 692d., 693d., 694d., 695d., 696d., 697d., 698d., 699d., 700d., 701d., 702d., 703d., 704d., 705d., 706d., 707d., 708d., 709d., 710d., 711d., 712d., 713d., 714d., 715d., 716d., 717d., 718d., 719d., 720d., 721d., 722d., 723d., 724d., 725d., 726d., 727d., 728d., 729d., 730d., 731d., 732d., 733d., 734d., 735d., 736d., 737d., 738d., 739d., 740d., 741d., 742d., 743d., 744d., 745d., 746d., 747d., 748d., 749d., 750d., 751d., 752d., 753d., 754d., 755d., 756d., 757d., 758d., 759d., 760d., 761d., 762d., 763d., 764d., 765d., 766d., 767d., 768d., 769d., 770d., 771d., 772d., 773d., 774d., 775d., 776d., 777d., 778d., 779d., 780d., 781d., 782d., 783d., 784d., 785d., 786d., 787d., 788d., 789d., 790d., 791d., 792d., 793d., 794d., 795d., 796d., 797d., 798d., 799d., 800d., 801d., 802d., 803d., 804d., 805d., 806d., 807d., 808d., 809d., 810d., 811d., 812d., 813d., 814d., 815d., 816d., 817d., 818d., 819d., 820d., 821d., 822d., 823d., 824d., 825d., 826d., 827d., 828d., 829d., 830d., 831d., 832d., 833d., 834d., 835d., 836d., 837d., 838d., 839d., 840d., 841d., 842d., 843d., 844d., 845d., 846d., 847d., 848d., 849d., 850d., 851d., 852d., 853d., 854d., 855d., 856d., 857d., 858d., 859d., 860d., 861d., 862d., 863d., 864d., 865d., 866d., 867d., 868d., 869d., 870d., 871d., 872d., 873d., 874d., 875d., 876d., 877d., 878d., 879d., 880d., 881d., 882d., 883d., 884d., 885d., 886d., 887d., 888d., 889d., 890d., 891d., 892d., 893d., 894d., 895d., 896d., 897d., 898d., 899d., 900d., 901d., 902d., 903d., 904d., 905d., 906d., 907d., 908d., 909d., 910d., 911d., 912d., 913d., 914d., 915d., 916d., 917d., 918d., 919d., 920d., 921d., 922d., 923d., 924d., 925d., 926d., 927d., 928d., 929d., 930d., 931d., 932d., 933d., 934d., 935d., 936d., 937d., 938d., 939d., 940d., 941d., 942d., 943d., 944d., 945d., 946d., 947d., 948d., 949d., 950d., 951d., 952d., 953d., 954d., 955d., 956d., 957d., 958d., 959d., 960d., 961d., 962d., 963d., 964d., 965d., 966d., 967d., 968d., 969d., 970d., 971d., 972d., 973d., 974d., 975d., 976d., 977d., 978d., 979d., 980d., 981d., 982d., 983d., 984d., 985d., 986d., 987d., 988d., 989d., 990d., 991d., 992d., 993d., 994d., 995d., 996d., 997d., 998d., 999d., 1000d.

LADIES TREBLE-SOLED BOOTS FOR THE AUTUMN. Elastic Home Boots, 8s. 6d.
JOHN D. MARSHALL, 37, Wellington-street, Strand.

THE LARGEST STOCK in the WORLD and the greatest variety of Bonnets Crocodile Petticoats are to be had of WILLIAM CARTER'S, 29, Ludgate-street, E.C.

EVERY NOVELTY in Watch-spring Pens and Pencil-cases, Gold and Silver Pens, Steel, Magnets, 2d. each; Pencil-cases, 1s. each.
JOHN D. MARSHALL, 37, Wellington-street, Strand.

AN ENDLESS VARIETY of Quilted A Petticoats in Linen Wool, Silk, Satin, and Ribbon-ware, also a great Novelty in Quilted Skirts, Dressing Gowns, &c.
WILLIAM CARTER'S,
29, Ludgate-street, E.C.

NEW DESIGNS in Front-fastening Elastic Boots, Ladies, 8s. 6d. to 16s. 6d. Family and Nursing Boots, Belts, &c. Illustrations sent free by post.
WHITE, 153, Long-acre.

REAL SEALSKIN GLOAKS, Handsomely Trimmed and Lined throughout, have been prepared for the Winter season at great reduction in price. Also Sable Tails, Muffs, Boas, and Capes. Inspection is solicited. Sketch, Jones, and Co., Furriers, &c., 3, Berners-street, Fitzroy-square.

REAL FUR SEAL CLOAKS, for Carriage Wrappers and Boas.
G. FULLAND and SON, Fur Manufacturers,
63, Oxford-street. Established 1770.

LADIES' UNDER-CLOTHING.—A large Stock of Chemises, Night-dresses, Dressing Gowns, Morning Robes, &c., in the Latest Seasonable Materials, WHITTLOCK and SON, Outfitters, 168, Fleet-st. Opposite the Church near Somerset House. Books of prices free by post on application.

FEATHER-DOWN PETTICOATS.—These Petticoats, for many years patronised by Royal and distinguished personages, are not to be surpassed for elasticity, lightness, and comfort.—List of prices may be had of W. H. BATSON and CO., 5, Maiden-street, Regent's-park.

SILKS! SILKS!! SILKS!!! SILKS!!!!
JAMES SPENCE and Co. are now selling a very large and choice PURCHASE of RICH AUTUMN SILKS, which has been selected with the greatest attention to superiority of quality and originality of design and colour, combined with great moderation in price.
Wide width Striped Silk, for the Dress ... 1s. 6d. per yard.
Wide width Checked Silk, for the Dress ... 1s. 6d. per yard.
Wide width Check Poplins, from 1s. 3d. to 2s. per yard.
Wide width Black Glacés, from 1s. 6d. to 2s. per yard.
Wide width Black-ground Silks with coloured stripes, 2s. 11½d. per yard.
Wide width Moirés, from 21 9½. the Dress.
Rich Lyons' Brocade, Moirés, Gros de Africas, Gros Royals, &c., &c., at equally low prices.
Velvets, Gros de Venise, and Satins, in all the new colours.
Patterns post-free.
Dresses, Mantles, and Bonnets supplied with Gal Trimmings at the lowest trade prices.
Parcels forwarded carefully and promptly addressed.
All goods bought of JAMES SPENCE and Co. are taken and approved of will be readily exchanged—if not object aimed at before up from the conference of purchase. Ladies in the country are strongly urged to apply—assuring customer trade.
JAMES SPENCE and Co., 76, 77, and 78, Friar-street, Doctors' Commons, London, E.C.

INDIA SHAWLS and SCARFS, at greatly-reduced prices.—PAISLEY and ROCHDALE invite attention to the recent large fall of PRICES in CASHMERE, recently imported, which they are selling at nearly half the usual prices. The new Paris Fashions for Autumn and Winter Wear in Cloaks, Mantles, and Jackets, are now ready. Also many elegant novelties designed expressly for the Season. PAISLEY and ROCHDALE, 49, Regent-street, W.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SILK WAREHOUSE.—Ladies purchasing SILKS will find all the established Makers' Goods at this Warehouse, viz., Lyons, Genoa, Crepuel, Checked, Striped, Figured Brocade, and other new Fancy Silks, which for genuineness, novelty of design, and moderate prices, cannot be surpassed by any other Establishment.

NOTICE
THE FANCY DRESS DEPARTMENT combines every novelty of the season, including all the newest designs in the Costumes of Spain, Italy, Denmark, Naples, Circle, Holstein, Russia, Poland, Turkey, Greece, &c.
N.B.—Patterns of all the above sent post-paid.
THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN SILK WAREHOUSE,
63 and 64, Holborn-hill, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

MRS. WASHINGTON MOON has just RETURNED from PARIS with the LATEST AUTUMN FASHIONS for Dresses and Mantles, in Rich Checked Silks, Moirés, and Satins, Velvets, Velveteens, &c.
CARPETS and RUGS, 194, Regent-street, London.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT.
LADIES' WEDDING OUTFITS
CARPETS, QUILTS, and BLANKETS.
Descriptive Lists, with prices, sent free by post.
JAMES SPENCE and Co., Manufacturers, London, E.C.

Sent post-free, Descriptive Lists of COMPLETE SETS OF BABY LINEN,
for Ladies
Throughout the kingdom free of carriage.
UNDERCLOTHING for LADIES, GENTLEMEN, and CHILDREN, for Letter and Children of all ages.
LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT.
Established in 1778.

BABIES' BASSINETS,
Trimmed and Furnished
ready for use, with Lace and Fine Linen free of carriage.
BABIES' BASSINETS,
Trimmed and Furnished ready for use, with Lace and Fine Linen free of carriage.
CARPETS, QUILTS, and BLANKETS, 194, Regent-street, London, E.C.
Descriptive Lists, with Prices, sent free by post.

LADIES' WATERPROOF TWEED CLOAKS
and RIDING HABITS, Gentlemen's Overcoats and Inverness Capes. Patterns of materials and prices cost post-free.
J. E. and J. BEDFORD, 33, Cornhill, corner, Sweetapy.

CRINOLINE.—LADIES will find THOMSON'S PATENT CROWN PEDESTON SKIRTS PERFECTION in Quality, Elasticity, Durability, and Shape, the only one that bear the Trade Mark (a Crown) and the name "Thomson."

THE NEW COVENTRY CAMBRIC
is sold by all Drapers in the United Kingdom.

CLARK'S
CLARK'S
AUTUMNAL and WINTER OVERCOATS and CAPES,
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 113, Regent-street.

CLARK'S
CLARK'S
ROCCO TWEED AUTUMNAL and WINTER TROUSERS, 10s.
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 113, Regent-street.

CLARK'S
CLARK'S
WATERPROOF INVERNESS WRAPPERS, and Shooting Jackets.
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 113, Regent-street.

CLARK'S
CLARK'S
LIVERPOOL CLOTHING,
for Quality and Style unequalled—
Hunting Coats ... 2 guineas. Dress Coats ... 3 guineas.
Frock Coats ... 2 guineas. Morning Coats ... 1 guinea.
Inverness Wraps ... 1 guinea.
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 113, Regent-street.

CLARK'S
CLARK'S
TWEED RIDING-HABITS, and
SUPERFINE CLOTH DITTO,
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 113, Regent-street.

DO YOUR BOYS WELL DRESSED?—Tube them to RICHARDSON'S, and 22, Poultry, Cheapside, where they will find a good assortment suits, 10s. 6d. Useful school suits from 12s. 6d. Patterns of the cloths, with measurement and prices, sent free. Also a choice selection for children of both sexes, just received.
RICHARDSON and SON, 22, St. Paul's-churchyard.

FLANNEL SHIRTS.—BOWRING and ARUNDEL respectfully solicit an inspection of their Stock of Flannel Shirts, which they are selling at 3s. 6d. each, or 3 for 10s. 6d. Patterns and self-measure forwarded free by post on application. No. 11, 004 Strand.—N.B. Hosiery of all kinds. Patterns free. 4, Wandsworth-street, City.

WHITE and SOUND TEETH are indispensable to personal attraction, and to health and longevity by the use of ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or, Pearl Dentifrice.
preserves and imparts to the teeth whiteness to the Teeth, eradicates Tartar and Specks of Incipient Decay, Strengthens the Gums, and gives a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box. Sold by all Perfumers, and by Chemists and Hairdressers.

DOUCHE OF THE LUNGS—
Sufferers from any affections in the organs of respiration are recommended to try this unrivalled remedy, that without the aid of Respirators, safely employed, it is not possible that justice can be done to the lungs, which, when the air is breathed through the mouth and nose, are not properly exercised, hence those diseases of the lungs which are so fatal to the human race. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, by the use of these pills, which, when they have any effect, act mainly by sanitizing the blood, the lungs are relieved from the necessity of performing their office, and the blood, thus purified, is enabled to perform its duty properly to every other part of the body. Holloway's Pills are recommended to all who are suffering from any affection of the lungs, as they will be found to act as a powerful auxiliary to the respiratory organs, and will, in a short time, restore them to healthy action.

DIGESTIVE BISCUITS.

NEW BOOKS,

THE BIOGRAPHIES OF ENGLAND'S LITERARY WOMEN.
Now ready everywhere, two, 12s.

THE LITERARY WOMEN OF ENGLAND
from the Earliest Times.
SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and CO., 66, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

On Oct. 16, will be published in 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 24s.
TOM BROWN AT OXFORD.
By the Author of "Tom Brown's School-Days."
London and Cambridge:
MACMILLAN and CO.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
Price Five Shillings, elegantly bound in a Gilt-book,
HOME INFLUENCE: a Tale for Mothers and Daughters. By GRACE AGUILAR.
Groombridge and Sons, 5, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, in 12mo size, price 6s. 6d., cloth,
A SCHOOL EDITION OF
DR. OLLENDORFF'S FRENCH METHOD.
London: WHITTAKER and Co., and DULAU and Co.

ILLUMINATION.—LAING'S EDITION OF MANUAL OF ILLUMINATING. Woodcut Illustrations.
LAING'S COMPANION TO MANUAL OF ILLUMINATION. Numerous Woodcut Illustrations. Price 5s.
The two foregoing, complete in cloth, red edges, price 2s. 6d.
London: WINSOR and NEWTON, 38, Rathbone-place; and all Booksellers and Artists' Colourmen.

Second Edition, Revision, with 62 Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 10s.
CORRIGAN'S DISEASES OF THE EYE.
By HAYNES WALTON, Surgeon to the Central London Ophthalmic Hospital and to St. Mary's.
JOHN CHURCHILL, New Burlington-street.

Just published, 12th Edition, price 2s. 6d., free by post 32 stamps,
DISEASES OF THE SKIN: a Guide to their Treatment and Prevention, illustrated by Cases. By THOS. BUDDY, F.R.C.S., Surgeon to the Victoria Dispensary for Diseases of the Skin, 34, Charlotte-st., Fitzroy-sq. This new edition contains a chapter on Eczema, and the Author's Views on Constitutional Skin diseases from London: J. CHURCHILL, 11, Great Queen-street.

New Edition, cloth, bound 1s.
MESSRS. GABRIEL'S New Improved
Selected Process of supplying ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which, for the perfect flexible Gum, fine texture, the principle of self-adhesion, without pivots, ensures their success for articulating and mastication, even when all other methods fail. They are on tradings, rules, not any operation required. The pamphlet explains the system, and contains Testimonials of Nobility, &c., unsolicited and without the usual cost by Messrs. Gabriel, the old-established Dentists (Diploma 1815), 56, Ludgate-hill, Corner of Ludgate-square, and 33, Cranbourn-street, Leicester-square;
68, New-street, Birmingham;
134, Duke-street, Liverpool.
For an explanation of the various improvements, opinions of the Press, and Testimonials, see the Gabriel's Practical Essay on the Teeth, sent post-free on application.

1862 ALMANACKS, Pocket-books, Diaries, &c.—Messrs. ADAMS, having produced the whole of the Almanacks for 1862, beg to inform their friends, Law firms, &c., that any other obtained, not supplied at the sale of Messrs. Adams, will be sold strictly at 10 per cent. below the English publishing, book of the Bank of England, D.C. Please copy the address.

In a few days will be published,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO.'S RED LETTER DIARIES and CALENDARS for 1862. Edited by JAMES GLAISHER, F.R.S. A variety of sizes for the Pocket of the Desk. Ordered through the Trade.
Lists of the Issue of 81 Booksellers and Stationers.

GRATIS and POSTAGE-FREE, a CLEARANCE-SALE CATALOGUE of new and popular BOOKS, including about 2,000 volumes of Messrs. Longman's Stock, now reduced in price, commencing at 4d. up to 22s 6d. All new, and warranted perfect in every particular. Applications for the same, if the full prices are enclosed, will be promptly attended to, by Orphan-hall-buildings, back of Bank of England, Red Lion-square, W.C.

THE CANADIAN NEWS every THURSDAY, price 3d.; post-free, 4d.
FALCON, Colonial Newspaper Agent, 11, Clement's-lane, E.C.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS at PARKINS and GOTTO'S. A very handsome one, bound in real morocco, lined with silk, and gilt edges, 12s. 6d. Also a Cheaper Kind, with a large variety of a peculiar make for Parties taking Photos, 21s. Carriage-paid, London.
Parkins and Gotto, 24, Oxford-street.

WEDDING STATIONERY.—Pattern free by post. At Elkins, Programmes, &c.
Elegant Note and Envelope Embossable Dies, 10s.
PARKINS and GOTTO, 24 and 25, Oxford-street.

EVERY COUNTRY RESIDENT should send two stamps to PARKINS and GOTTO, 24, Oxford-street, for their Sample Packet of STATIONERY. Best post-free. Carriage-paid on orders over 20s. by post of England.

OS. PRIZE WRITING-CASE, fitted with Jar Paper, Envelopes, Blotting-book, Pen-case, &c., sent to any part of England for 20 stamps. Catalogues of Writing-cases and Envelopes in PARKINS and GOTTO'S, 24 and 25, Oxford-street, London.

NO CHARGE at PARKINS and GOTTO'S for Plain Superfine Writing-paper and Envelopes. Colored Envelopes, 1s. per 100. Best Pens, 1s. per gross. Ivory Paper-knife, 1s. Steel, 1s.6d. Address Dies cut at half price. The public supplied with every kind of stationery at trade prices.
Parkins and Gotto, 24, Oxford-street, London.

TRODSHAM and BAKER, Chronometer Makers to the Admiralty, Goldsmiths to the Queen, Presidency, and Government of India, Manufacturers of Chronometers, Watches, Clocks, Astronomical and other Compensation, Balances, Detached Lever, &c., Established 1749.
Address, 34, Clerkenwell-close, City.

DENT'S CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, and CLOCKS.—E. DENT, 33, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, Watch, Clock, and Chronometer Maker by special appointment to her Majesty the Queen.
33, Cockspur-street, corner of Spring-gardens, London.

DENT, Chronometer, Watch, and Clock Maker to the Queen and Prince Consort, and maker of the Great Clock for the Clock Tower of Parliament, 34, Strand, and 61, Royal Exchange.

NAPOLEON PRICE and CO.'S GOLDEN OIL, for restoring the hair. The fact of its being in constant use in the Royal Nursery, and in the families of the Nobility, is its superior excellence. 3s. 6d., 5s., 7s., and 10s. per bottle.—24, New Bond-street; and 66rd, and 4, George-street, Hanover-square.

PIESSE and LUBIN,
2, NEW BOND-ST.,
from every Flower that breathes a fragrance,
9, New Bond-street, London.

FOR DEAFNESS ARISING FROM THE INFLAMMATION OF CATARRH, SORE and NOISES in the EARS, PATENT EAR DOUCHE, as recommended by Sir CHARLES LOCOCK, Dr. TAYLOR, and other eminent Physicians and the possibility of failure in the interior of the ear, and the speaking and conversation attending the use of syringes are entirely obviated.—Sawery and Moore, Chemists to the Queen, 143, New Bond-street, London.

SIR J. MURRAY'S PATENT FLUID MAGNESIA, CAMPHOR, and SYRUP, at 66, Strand, and all Patent Medicine Vendors.

YOUNG'S IMPROVED ARNICATED WHITE FREE CORN and BUNION PLASTERS. Introduced by H. YOUNG, 17, Southampton-place, Addington-street, W.C. Price 1s. per box.

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ATTILA QUADRILLE. Just published, beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S MILANESE POLKA. Just published, beautifully illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." "The waltz of the season." Beautifully illustrated. Chappell's edition, 3s., New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW QUADRILLE, MADRID. Just out. Beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW VALSE, SULTANA. Just out. Beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NELLY GRAY VALSE, with Comet Accompaniment. Now out just published. Beautifully illustrated in Colours. Price 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S NEW DRUM and FIFE TUTOR, containing the whole of the most popular pieces. Arranged for the above instruments by a Band Master. Price 1s. 6d., post-free.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' FLORENCE. The last original piece by this popular Composer. Just published. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' CHRISTY MINSTREL MELODIES, splendidly arranged for the Pianoforte. Price 3s. each.
Nos. 1 and 2 now ready.
No. 1 contains Camptown Races, Ring de Banjo, Old Folks at Home, Buffalo Gals, Nelly Bly, Old Dog Tray, Old Folks at Home, Quaker Meeting.
No. 2 contains Old Uncle Ned, Oh! Susanna, Gwine to Alabama, Grandfather Gamin, Sable Serenade, Dandy Jim of Caroline, Root Artillery, &c.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street. Order Christy Minstrel Melodies (Nos. 1 and 2).

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest of the Pianoforte Tutors. Contains every requisite, practice, exercises, scales, and a great variety of the most popular pieces as progress is made. Price 4s., post-free, 24 stamps.
N.B. A List of Brinley Richard's Popular Pieces will be sent on application.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

KUHE'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.
Kuhe's "Bal Masqué" Barcarole. Price 3s.
Kuhe's "Le Rêve" Nocturne. Price 3s.
Kuhe's "Le Carnaval de Venise" Fantasia. Price 4s.
Kuhe's "Silvery Stream" Caprice Study. 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKKEL'S LA PRIERE D'UNE MERE. Recently post-Free. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKKEL'S THE ANGELS' HARP. Rhapsody for the Pianoforte. Price 3s. 6d.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKKEL'S LA VIVANDIERE. Impromptu for the Pianoforte. Price 3s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF-PRICE.—All Music, and Musical Instruments, Second-hand, and post-free for postage-stamps or Post-office order.
Brewer and Co., 23, New Bond-street, W.

Will be ready next week,
COOTE'S "SIMON BOCCANEGRA" VALSE. Illustrated by Brandard.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

EDWARD PAULO'S GREAT SONG.
MR. GODFREY, the Son of the Swan, written by H. J. BYRON, price 3s. Illustrated.
EDWARD PAULO, 84, New Bond-street.

Issued Nightly at Mallen's Concerts.
COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES, played with immense success at Mallen's Concerts. Splendidly illustrated. Price 4s. Full Band, 5s.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

The Latest Excitement.
COOTE'S DIXEY'S LAND GALOP on the celebrated American War Song. Illustrated. Price 4s.; Septet, 3s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s. Very popular at Mallen's Concerts.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S CORNFLOWER VALSE, price 4s.; Septet 3s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s. Considered to be the gem of the season.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

OH, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME! Ballad by FRED. BOSCOVITZ. The most successful ballad published by FRED. BOSCOVITZ. Price 2s. 6d. Encored nightly.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET. A most pleasing Song. The melody is simple and beautiful. By FRED. BOSCOVITZ. Price 2s. 6d. Encored nightly.
HOWSON and CREW, 67, New Bond-street.

UN BALLO IN MASCHERA. Maurika Rocco's Fantasia on the favourite Airs in Verdi's Grand Opera. Price 3s. Also, the 4th Edition of the SANTA LUCIA MAZURKA. By the same Composer. Price 3s.
W. WILLIAMS and Co., 123, Tottenham-court-road.

THE VOICES OF THE PAST. New Ballad. By EDWARD WILLIAMS. Sung by Mr. Lawler at St. Jove's Hall with the greatest success. Price 2s. 6d.; free for 15 stamps. WILLIAMS and Co., 123, Tottenham-court-road.

MDME. OURY'S BABBIRRE DI SEVIGLIA. Grand brilliant fantasia, played by the composer at her own concerts, with overwhelming success; founded on the most popular airs. Price 3s. ADDISON and PARKY, 16, Hanover-square.

KUHE'S "LOGIE O' BUCHAN."—A beautiful Fantasia on the favourite Melody. Effective arrangement of the favourite Scotch melody for the pianos. Price 3s.
ADDISON and PARKY, 16, Hanover-square.

O SBORNE'S "LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM." A most successful and happy arrangement of this beautiful melody on a Pianoforte Duet. Price 4s.
ADDISON and PARKY, 16, Hanover-square.

SCHLOESSER'S LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche Brillante. A spirited and fashionable piece for the Piano; the best work by this popular composer. Price 4s.
ADDISON and PARKY, 16, Hanover-square.

ALL MUSIC HALF PRICE.—All full-price music, and the best editions, supplied on the above terms; at 6d. each 6d., 7d., 8d. 9d. 10d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 4d., 1s. 6d., 1s. 8d., 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s., 5s., 6s., 7s., 8s., 9s., 10s., 12s., 15s., 16s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 40s., 48s., 50s., 60s.
Other class of Importation. To be obtained of all respectable Publishers and Selling Warehousemen.
Catalogues of Second-hand Music, and Sixty Mezzo Scenes post-free for 6 stamps.
Country Orders punctually attended to.
CHURCH'S FIREPROOF and THEFFROOF SAFES. Chubb's Detector Locks and Street-door Latches. Illustrated Price Lists gratis and post-free.
Chubb and Son, 57, St. Paul's-churchyard, London.

WANTED, LEFT-OFF CLOTHES, Uniforms, Furniture, Miscellaneous Property, &c. The highest price, cash. Ladies or Gentlemen waited on by attending Mr. or Mrs. Lyon, 6, Bow-street, Covent-garden. Mr. and Mrs. Lyon will be at the Strand Union to-day (Saturday) from 10 to 4.

NEW MUSIC.

NEW VOCAL DUETS, HOPEFUL SPRING, JOYOUS SUMMER, PLENTEOUS AUTUMN, and WINTRY HOME, the companion pieces to the ladies' songs, by GEORGE GLOVER, the composers of the popular duet, "The Wind Waves, and the Billows Roll." "Fairy Dreams," "Home for Ever," duet, &c., will be immense favourites; both words and music are of the most attractive character.
London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG, by the Composer of "Will you love me then as now?" &c., YES, I LOVE THEE, is the title, and that is not forgotten. This is one of the best unpublished ballads that has been offered to the public for many years. Its melody is so striking that it will become a favourite.
Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street.

MDLLE. LANOIA'S New Song, A WINTER'S TALE, composed by the popular SOLOMON, with great success in the Crystal Palace, is published this day. Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street.

SIMS REEVES'S Great Song, FRESH AS A ROSE (Sultan), and Miss Scheller-Lodge's popular DAYS THAT ARE NO MORE, illustrated, sung at the Birmingham and Hereford Musical Festivals with immense success, are published, each, by DUNCAN DAVISON and Co., 244, Regent-street.

COMETS-A-PISTONS.
Manufactured by
ANTOINE COURTOIS,
The Convent-room Model, with double water key, in case ... £9 9 0
The Convent-room Model, with double water key, in case ... 8 8 0
The Convent Model, in case ... 6 6 0
The Convent Model, in case, as adopted by M. Levy, Boosey & Distin, and Godfrey ... 5 5 0 Drawings, testimonials, lists of prices, and other valuable information, by the principal cornetopistons in the Kingdom (Mr. Distin and Mr. Godfrey, Band-masters, Coldstream Guards, Grenadier Guards, Scots Fusilier Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., &c.
Sole Agents for the Sale, Messrs. DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street (late Julien and Co., 214, Regent-street, London.

SECOND HAND PIANOFORTES.
E. CHUDLEIGH has the largest stock of SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES for Sale, by BROADWOOD, COLLARD, ERARD, CHAPPELL, and other eminent makers, in every variety of description.—CHUDLEIGH and CO., 30, New Bond-street.

NEW FIFE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, in Oak case, 2 rows of keys, with extra octave of four octaves. Perfect for the cottage, school, or church. Testimonials to the above. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five octaves, two footboards, and in oak case. Testimonials to the above. Descriptive lists of the Alexandre Harmoniums, with the new Lists of Prices in application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of keys, CC to F in alt, 30 notes, with metal keyboard, 4 stops, and 2 pairs of bellows, in rosewood case, 40 guineas. No. 2, with metal keyboard, 4 stops, and 2 rows of vibrators, in rosewood or polished oak case, price 50 guineas. These instruments are the result of the most recent improvements introduced by the Alexandre Harmoniums, and have been manufactured to secure the ill effects of damp, which is sometimes troublesome, and to produce a more perfect quality of tone. Testimonials to the great superiority of the Alexandre Harmoniums from Professor Sir G. A. Macfarren, Dr. Gauntlett, Dr. Wesley, Dr. Hopkins, Rimbault, and others, may be applied to, and the most eminent professors and organists, with full descriptive Lists, will be forwarded on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only instrument of its kind that can possess the quality and sympathy of the human voice, and is not slightly affected by changes of weather, and is also educated for the display of the highest powers of musical genius.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TOMBOLA.
The new popular Round Game of large number of shares, 10s. 6d. and 7s. 6d.—ASHS and BILLSWAY, 81, Strand, and 4, Royal Exchange-buildings.

BAGATELLES from 21s. 6d., complete. The largest stock in London at ASHS and BILLSWAY, 81, Strand, and 4, Royal Exchange-buildings. An illustrated descriptive catalogue of Parlour Games free on application.

DULL EVENINGS MADE MERRY.—Every description of Parlour Games and Evening Amusements at ASHS and BILLSWAY, 81, Strand. An illustrated Descriptive Catalogue free on application.

46, OXFORD-STREET, W.
OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS, Wall Lights, and Ornamental Glass for Lighting.
Osler's Crystal Reflector for Candles.
Table Dinner Services for 12 persons, from 27 Gs.
Glass Dessert Services for 12 persons, from 4 Gs.
All articles marked in plain figures.
Ornamental Glass for Presents, suitable for presents.
Rose, Engraved, and Cut Glass Shades, greatly reduced.
London-Showroom, 45, Oxford-street, W.
Birmingham—Manufactory and Showroom, 20, Broad-street.
Established 1807.

MAPPIN BROTHERS' TABLE KNIVES.
KING WILLIAM-STREET, LONDON-BRIDGE.
ESTABLISHED IN SHEFFIELD A.D. 1810.
Messrs. Mappin Brothers beg to call attention to their unrivalled Table Cutlery, all their Goods being of their own manufacture, and of the very best quality, with secure ivory tenons, which do not come loose in hot water.

	Ordinary Handles.	Riveted Handles.	Extra Ivory Handles.
	per doz.	per doz.	per doz.
Two-bone full-size Table Knives	£1 4 0	£1 8 0	£1 12 0
Two-bone Dessert	1 0 0	1 4 0	1 8 0
One-inch-and-three-quarter full size	0 18 0	1 0 0	1 4 0
One-inch-and-a-half Dessert	0 14 0	0 16 0	1 0 0
One pair extra-size Carvers	0 3 6	0 4 0	0 6 0
One pair Carvers to match	0 3 6	0 4 0	0 5 0
One Steel for sharpening	0 2 6	0 3 6	0 5 0
Complete	£4 14 6	£5 10 6	£7 0 0

A costly book of Engravings, with prices attached, free by post on application, or may be seen in the Show-rooms. Orders by post are executed in rotation as received.
King William-street, London-bridge.

GARDNERS' £2 2s. DINNER SERVICES.
A large assortment of patterns of the richest description. Goldfish, Japan, Fruit, Flowers, and Arabesque, in all the latest pseudo prizes. Table glass of brilliant quality and finish. Glass Dessert Services, 4 Gs. Ornamental Glass for Presents.
Corner Bank. Established 10 years. Illustrated Catalogue free by post.
GARDNERS, 453, Strand.

BEDSTEADS in Wood, Iron, and Brass, fitted with Furniture and Bedding complete. The largest assortment in the World.
HEAL and SON, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

CARPETS! CARPETS!
At an enormous sacrifice, in consequence of the Australian packet.
Brussel Remnants ... ... at 1s. 6d. yd.
Tapestry Brussels (best quality) ... ... at 1s. 9d. yd.
Fifty Dozen patterned Kidderminster ... ... at 1s. 11d.
Fifty Pieces Scotch Carpeting ... ... at 1s. 1d.
Rich Velvet Pile, 27 inches wide ... ... at 2s. 6d.
HOWELL, JAMES, and CO., 4, Conduit-street, London.

CAUTION.—SMEE'S SPRING MATTRESS, Quilters, Palliasse, or Sommier Tucker. Comfortable, cooling, wholesome, and inexpensive. Purchasers are respectfully warned against infringements and imitations, in which some shadow of the genuine appears to be attempted. Sold by all respectable upholsterers throughout the kingdom.
Prevented, but all the essential advantages secured, by the patent rights are alike infringements. Sole Manufactory of the patent rights and sole manufacturer for the trade:
REDUCED SCALE OF PRICES.
Spring Mattress, 3 feet wide ... ... 30s.
Ditto, 4 feet wide ... ... 40s.
Ditto, 6 feet ... ... 60s.
Other sizes in proportion. To be obtained of almost all respectable Upholsterers and Bedding Warehousemen.
Sole Manufactory, 3, Bridge-road, South Lambeth, near Vauxhall Bridge, Surrey. Observe the name SMEE upon the side of the Mattress.

CHUBB'S FIREPROOF and THEFFROOF SAFES. Chubb's Detector Locks and Street-door Latches. Illustrated Price Lists gratis and post-free.
Chubb and Son, 57, St. Paul's-churchyard, London.

EXTRAORDINARY MERIT must Endure to their value
Established Reputation.
And such is the case with CLARKE'S EYE OIL,
A Specific for all purulent Ophthalmia.
GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.
Sold by all Grocers and Oilmen.

FOR CALCUTTA, calling at Madras.—The well-known Clipper-ship, the ANNA JASON, 900 tons, Captain Hall, will be despatched from the Victoria Docks, London, will leave on the 15th of NOVEMBER. A limited number of Passengers are taking Command in the 13th of Trade, has been thoroughly refitted, and has unsurpassed accommodation for Passengers, and will carry an experienced surgeon. The service will be continued every six weeks by one of the following first-class sailing Ships—

Ships.	Tons.	Commanders.	To Sail.
Golden Fleece	1789	Geo. Watters ...	Jan. 1, 1862
Indiana	1200	J. Wm. Hall ...	Feb. 15
Hydaspes	1210	G. H. Fenwick ...	April 1
Hydaspes	1210	G. H. Fenwick ...	July 15
Queen of the South ...	1021	T. Thornhill ...	Aug. 15

Apply to Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co., Parliament-street, Westminster; or to Messrs. GRINDLAY, MACKILLOP, and Co., 55, Parliament-street, London. Agents for Bombay, Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; for Madras, Messrs. BINNY and Co.; for Galle and London Shipping Company (Limited), 3, Mincing-lane, London. Agents for Galle, Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co. For freight or passage apply to the owners, or to the Agents.
RICHARD DREW, Secretary.

NATAL.—The LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK, (LIMITED), ACTS AS CONSIGNING AGENTS TO THE COLONIAL BANK OF NATAL, HENRY OTTE, Esq., Manager, and are prepared to receive Bullion on account of that Bank, for which they will issue Letters of Credit free of charge, payable at Durban, Pietermaritzburg, or Verulam.
E. HEWETT, Manager.
London, October, 1861.

LONDON HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL, GOWER-STREET, BEDFORD-SQUARE.
The next LECTURE—Chairman—
ADDITIONAL FUNDS ARE REQUIRED for this the only Homœopathic Hospital in the metropolis.
Bankers—The Union Bank, Argyll-place, Regent-street.
By order, RALPH CORRIE, Secretary.

SOUTHSEA is the most attractive Watering Place in England: two hours from London, and by the New Route via Brighton, twenty minutes quicker. It has also the best Bathing on the South Coast; Grand Esplanade, with Terrace Walk, Sea Wall, and Public Gardens, fronting the Sea. Sea-water baths, Infirmary, Military Hospital, Dispensary, Good Hotels, Assembly Rooms, Libraries, Fine-clay Soil, Excellent Drainage, &c.

EDUCATION, £22 per annum, at BRUGES, Belgium, where there is a Classical College, Commercial and Civil Engineering School, and Academy of Painting and Design. Also a Ladies' School, together with liberal board, with the most distinguished Professors. Address to Mr. Hampsey, Director, Abbaye Royale, Bruges, Belgium.

TURNER, R.A., Sir E. LANDSEER, and a host of other Artists, HOLLOWAY'S COLOURS, 2, St. James's-street, Pimlico. Retreat of Exchequer. Pictures sold.

P. P. RUBENS.—A very choice Example of the Master at Auction, by Messrs. Jones, Jones, and Jones, Dec. 4, Conduit-street.

SALMON-FISHING TO LET.—The Angling Rights of the Rivers Tees and Skerne, with the Fishing of RIVERSES. For full particulars apply to Mr. H. Stevens, Gurney-street, or to James M'Corquodale, Esq., Baydon, Yarm, Yorkshire.

NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS, Printers, and Publishers.—Wrought-iron Machine Bed, to suit PATENTED ROTARY PRINTING-MACHINES, and other articles of Wrought-iron Work, manufactured by Messrs. Bissell and Co., Iron Works, late of Mr. Edward Lloyd, 74, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, London.

W. P. THOMAS and CO.'S PATENT PERFECTED SAFETY LAMPS.—The only lamps that combine the most approved construction, as shown by fourteen years' experience, with the most perfect safety, combined with the highest degree of economy, accuracy of finish, beauty and strength of work; they are manufactured by W. P. Thomas and Co., Swansea, and may be had of all the principal dealers in lamps, and wholesale of the patentees, at the Works, Swansea, and the showroom at the south end of the Strand, London.

FAU-DE-VIE.—This Pure PALE BRANDY, 10s. per gallon, is demonstrated, upon analysis, to be peculiarly free from acidity, and very superior to many imported at a much higher price. In Pint bottles, 2s. per doz.; or in a case for the country, 30s. Sherry, 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s. per doz. Sold only at the Old Establishment of BERRY BROTHERS and CO., Old Fermoy Distillery, Holborn, E.C.

ALE.—PALE ALE, in Bottle, is recommended by Medical Men as a most wholesome beverage for Dinner and Invalids.—Messrs. HARRISON, PARKE, and CO., 24, Pall-mall, and 149, Regent-street, Wholesale Agents, S.W.

SAUCE.—LEA and PERRINS' WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE, pronounced by Connoisseurs
"The only Good Sauce."
"Sir,—Will Whitehead, Esq., Mayor of Worcester, Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell, London, &c., &c., and by Grocers and Oilmen.

FLOUR Warranted, free to Families, in and round London, at per bushel:—White, 10s.; Households, 9s. 6d.; Wholesome, 9s.; Brown, 8s. 6d. Address, HEAL and CATCHPOOL, Resident Miller, Essex; and 97, Gower-road, E.C.

The Cheapest and Best Medicine ever known.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
HOMŒOPATHIC MEDICINES.
OSWEGO PREPARED COCOA,
Manufactured by JAMES EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, and sold only in packets, labelled JAMES EPPS and CO., Homœopathic Chemists, 170, Piccadilly, London, and 114, Bishopsgate-street, Within, E.C.

FLOUR.—The FINEST TRANSPARENT WAX CANDLES, 1d. per dozen lb.
Also the Finest Wax Candles, 1d. per dozen lb.
Every kind of Candles, Soap, Oils, and Night-Lights of best quality only, at very moderate prices.
Goods and Price List sent to all parts of the Kingdom.
Country Orders carefully executed.
WHITMORE and CHALDECOTT,
Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. London
(opposite "The Rainbow").
Price-lists sent free on application.

ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY
for the making quickly and at small cost superior Barley Water for Invalids and Children, and for Thickening Soups, Gravies, and Puddings, and eminently nutritious for Infants' Food.
ROBINSON'S PATENT GROATS for most delicious Porridge, Gruel, Puddings, &c. For making your Cream, Persons of weak digestion or constipative habits would derive great benefit from the use of ROBINSON, BELLVILLE, and CO., Purveyors to the Queen,
Patentees of the Steam Mills, Bellville, London.

PATENT CORN FLOUR,
BROWN and POLSON'S
CELEBRATED FOR
PATENT CORN FLOUR,
BROWN and POLSON'S.
All the American and other qualities, 7d. These are often retailed as genuine at 1s. per lb. Observe the name.
2, Q. GOULD, Chemist, 198, Oxford-street, Orchard-street, W.

SWANN and CO.'S STOURPORT MALT VINEGAR. The best known. The best flavour, 1845, 1846, 1848, 1851, 1857, 1858, 1859.—WHITMORE and CHALDECOTT, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C., London, Exporters and Dealers, and Grocers and Oilmen, to whom it is sent direct.

STILTON CHEESE FRESH BUTTER.
The finest dairies of each sort at all times
Packed for the use of DRAPE,
Dairyman and Cheesemonger,
Established 1815. Families only.
Delivered in town or sent to all parts regularly.

THE EXHIBITION OF SPORTING AND OTHER DOGS AT THE HORSE REPOSITORY, HOLBORN: PRIZE ANIMALS.—SEE PAGE 383.

THE ATTACK ON THE BRITISH EMBASSY AT JEDDO, JAPAN.

FULL details of the murderous and evidently premeditated attack on the members of the British Legation at Jeddo, on the 5th of July last, have been received. The details of the assault are dramatic and interesting. The party in the Legation had dined, Mr. Alcock had retired to rest, but some of the young gentlemen walked into the garden to look at that corner which paid us a visit in the summer. Hence they went to find a little later than usual, and some of them did not fall asleep at once. Their house was a temple, having a great door under a portico, but easily entered from the garden in almost any part, full of intricate passages partially lighted, and roomy divided by paper screens sliding in grooves. Suddenly a furious noise was heard at the great door. A servant of Mr. Consul Morrison saw a man clad in armour enter, and stealthily unroad his musket, reaching him a revolver. Then a band was heard. Mr. Morrison ran from Oliphant, who, carrying a heavy hunting-whip, had leaped forth to chastise the midnight disturbers of the peace, and had overtaken a man who had run under one shoulder with a sword, and who was seconded by another scoundrel. While Mr. Oliphant beat them at bay with his whip, Mr. Morrison came up and shot one of the assassins dead; but his second ball glanced from the cuirass of the other, and he, after firing, playing their swords, wounded Mr. Morrison in the head and Mr. Oliphant in the wrist. At this crisis Mr. Russell and Mr. Wingman (the Special Artist of the Journal) arrived, and the Japanese fell back into the darkness, cutting and slashing at posts and screens as they retired. In the mean time Mr. Alcock's room had been entered by one of the assassins, but, though these entered every other room in the place, they missed their way to his apartment. Mr. Alcock joined the other gentlemen in the verandah. They were six in all, one disabled, and they mustered among them two revolvers and three swords. Not for of they heard the crash of glass: it was the door of Mr. Alcock's room. Mr. Alcock—and every moment they expected to see the assassins rushing on. Not so; the assassins had mistaken their way: time was gained; the yunonin, or Japanese guard, arrived, and, falling upon the assassins, killed five and drove the others away. There was a brief combat in the garden, and then all was still; but the servants of the house did not retire again to rest. They watched all night with the Japanese soldiers, and only discovered in the grey of the morning how many of their assailants had been destroyed. Measures were taken to prevent a second surprise by calling in the Rinzhi or guard who keep the premises a guard of Frenchmen and marines. Mr. Alcock summoned the members of the other legations to meet him and take measures for their common security; and the Japanese Government sent a guard to the house of Consul Vyse, at Kanagawa. The assault upon this unprotected abode of the representative of the Queen shows that it seems to have been well planned, and the whole of the occupants had a narrow escape.

Our Special Artist and Correspondent, several of whose Sketches of short time ago the household of the British Consul-General at Jeddo appear in this week's Impression, gives his version of the outrage as follows:—

Yokahama, July 11.

I thought to have been enabled to send you by this mail some interesting sketches from the interior of Japan, having come to this place overland from Nagasaki. But, alas! my plans were arrested at Jeddo, and I therefore hasten to send you a slight account of what took place.

We had only been in Jeddo two days, fatigued with our months trip, when, having retired to rest at about one o'clock, we were awoke by loud and repeated knockings at the front door. Thinking there was a fire, or some slight disturbance, we at first took no notice of the noise, but in a short time the knocks became so violent as to resemble discharges of musketry, and the shouting of feet and rushing about accurate the firing. Presently two pistol shots were heard, and Messrs. Oliphant and Morrison appeared deluged with blood. The assailants were in the house, and had attacked Mr. Alcock's room; no one of us had firearms ready. After a brief pause there was a renewal of the uproar, accompanied by smashing of glass and breaking of wood. The assailants were in the verandah, and had entered Mr. Alcock's room. By this time our guns were loaded. The yacunins now fell upon the assailants, a great Kelpie place at the door, an extensive garden and avenue leading to the river, the watchmen striking their iron staff of wood in rapid time, and numerous people from our apartment with lanterns and drawn swords, saying, "Nipon yacuna!" to let us know them. Japanese soldiers with muskets and loaded bayonets also entered into the fray, and the fight was pitched pell mell. Lanterns appeared in all directions, and bonfires were made. The garden path looked like a scene in a play. The fine, soldierlike Japanese guard being seen in dim outline grouped in different attitudes, before us a sheet of water reflecting the lanterns, and men, was a scene never to be forgotten, and even at the moment filled me with admiration. There was another alarm, and at the sound of the watchman's rattle the whole neighbourhood rose up, and we stood to our arms. A yacunin and several soldiers rushed in out of breath, panting with blood; another assailant had been just caught; five of them were dead, and seven severely wounded. We labored under the same disadvantage in every room. We could only find four or five yacunins following us to protection. Search was made round the house for hidden assassins. Mr. Alcock was just going to sit in his easy chair when a pool of blood on the seat was perceived by him; Mr. Oliphant lay on the floor, with a mosquito-net over him, faint, and weltering in a pool of blood; Mr. Morrison was cut in the sight—a cut in the forehead; he stood with his sword in one hand, and a revolver in the other. So great was the fray, that the gentlemen lived in a little house further up the hill; we were very anxious about them, but gratified by seeing them join us safe and sound: they had been attacked in the road very probably as we found to see the grounds; they were filled with troops and the wicked-looking Japanese gentlemen I never saw in such a variety of groups, on the grass; whilst here and there lay a ghastly mangled human corpse, one or two with their heads nearly cut off. The yacunins fought like tigers for us, and deserve all praise. Mr. Alcock and M. de Bellecour went round to see the wounded yacunins. One had cut off his fingers very cleverly in parrying a sword stroke, and gracefully bowed to Mr. Alcock and M. de Bellecour in return for his thanks. They deserve all their wounds got in defending their swords, a sign that it was no child's play. One of them had a chisel-shaped cut in his arm, on his back. The assassins had evidently come scientifically attending them, binding and bathing their wounds. How proudly the unwounded walked—in regular swash-buckler style, hand on the hilt of the sword, head erect, and eye regarding all. The wounded wear knickerbockers on these occasions. Early in the morning a courier was despatched to the Kingdono, which would arrive in time with a guard of marines and Frenchmen. The Ministers (Japanese) came at five in the morning, but did not get an audience till twelve o'clock at noon. Seven or eight of our yacunins were wounded. Three of the loonins committed suicide as dangerous next day, and another has been caught, but will nothing confess. The house in which the Russian Prince Mito is reported to be man, and the reason for their attacking only the Legation is said to be, that they are not so partial to foreigners, but to involve the present Japanese Government in a war with England. The Prince Mito is one of the two great present rulers, even before foreigners came. I have sent several Sketches with this letter. I hope next mail to send you an account of our journey through the interior.

In the French markets on Thursday week the annual ceremony took place of opening the "Foire de Pain d'Epice," which is generally offered for sale. It weighed 116 kilogs. (242lb.), and was 3 metres 16c. (10ft. 6in.) in circumference. A market-gardener of Orleans had the honour of growing the monster.

MADAGASCAR.—Despatches have been received in Paris from Reunion, to the 7th of September, bringing later intelligence from Madagascar. Since the death of the Queen on the 16th of August, and the short struggle in which her nephew was killed, the utmost tranquillity has prevailed in the Island. The foreigners established in the country intended to wear mourning for a month, and the ships in the harbour of Tamatave hoisted their flags at half-mast for three days. The body of the late Queen was embalmed, and the King, her son, continued by it in prayer for six days, according to custom. The King, since he began to attend to public business, has received numerous deputations of Europeans, whom he addressed in the most liberal and reassuring manner. Since the death of the Queen the intercourse between Reunion and Madagascar has revived, and at the date of the despatches was very active.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, 1862.

We this week give two Illustrations of the ingenious contrivances adopted in the construction of the building for the International Exhibition, 1862.

The steam-hoist for lifting and placing the ironwork is the invention of Mr. Ashton, and is remarkable no less for its simplicity than for its efficiency. Its operation is thus described:—The main feature consists in a grooved cone or barrel, upon which rope may be wound without any possibility of its "running," or getting out of place, as in the common arry undue wear and tear to the ropes. From this small machine motion is communicated to all parts of the building, passing through pipes, under the tramways, to some places level or ordinary and garden, and spreading abroad like a gigantic system of nerves. A single rope is seen to wave at some two or three hundred yards distance; the engineer press the lever of the steam-engine, and forthwith the motion is felt at the rope's end. The rope is seen to rise to the same length, and each weighing something like a ton and a half, is seen to approach the spot in the air. Then a great flag is waved, the speed is slackened, and, finally, at the sight of a red signal, the machine is instantly stopped. In the next moment the engineer observes a similar signal, but women are required, and he sees the rope descend, and the heavy load is rising from the ground, and you find it at the other end of the building, this time it is perhaps a heavy bundle of timber or a bundle of a dozen thick flooring-boards, each, probably, half a dozen men staging or seated upon it. Close by where one is standing an iron column is seen at last to rise from the ground and stand bolt upright, and a thoughtless laborer on the first flat himself being rapidly elevated to the first or second floor in the building before he had time to inquire into the cause. The simple process which would take fifty men a quarter of an hour to raise fifty feet is lifted by the "hoist" in two minutes, with only two men to superintend it. Moreover, the judicious distribution of the power of the steam-hoist is made to do the work of ten men in one hour and as many men. In Hyde Park each heavy piece of iron was raised by horse and manual power, and those who had the opportunity of seeing that building in progress will remember what difficulties had to be encountered in the early part of the work. On one day as many twenty-five columns and girders were hoisted and fixed; and at such a rate it is calculated that the time necessary to complete the building it the whole were as simple in construction as the part of the transept. This, however, is by no means the case. The great domes involve an amount of constructive skill and science not to be found in other portions of the building sink into insignificance when compared with it. The scaffolding for the dome, which would take fifty men a month or more to raise is lifted by the "hoist" in two minutes, with only two men to superintend it. Moreover, the judicious distribution of the power of the steam-hoist is made to do the work of ten men in one hour and as many men. In Hyde Park each heavy piece of iron was raised by horse and manual power, and those who had the opportunity of seeing that building in progress will remember what difficulties had to be encountered in the early part of the work. On one day as many twenty-five columns and girders were hoisted and fixed; and at such a rate it is calculated that the time necessary to complete the building if

THE LATE CENSUS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

This enumeration abstracts of the late Census, published by order of Parliament, in so far as they relate to England and Wales, reveal the steady, normal, and harmless progress of a solid, well-established, homogeneous nation. They offer no startling illustration of any economical law; they tell of no deep disturbance of the well-worn courses of our uninterrupted national life. The nation of shopkeepers has stuck perseveringly to the gainful routine of its daily and yearly existence, and as the end of the past decade finds it richer, so it has increased by 2,167,556, a larger absolute increase than in any of the five preceding decennial periods which have elapsed since the first British Census was taken. The actual increase in these periods is as follows:—1801-11, 1,256,310; 1811-21, 1,718,345; 1821-31, 1,872,812; 1831-41, 1,963,212; 1841-51, 2,018,972; 1851-61, 2,169,576. These figures, at least, do not tell of that decadence into which kind friends on other continental lands are ambitious to have begun to show itself in us; we, however, to add that the percentage of increase in each period is on the decline, bearing those in the successive periods of 11, 16, 5, 4, 5, and 12 per cent. This may be taken as proof that a greater proportion of Englishmen must be single than at the commencement of this century, or that the number of children to each marriage must be on the decrease. But if we take into account the increase of emigration from England of late years (an occurrence in somewhat modified. A larger proportion of the issue of English marriages seeks a home outside of England than at the commencement of this century, when we have had hundreds and thousands more of native Englishmen and women living abroad than in 1801-11, when the decennial increase of the English at home was 14 per cent. The number of English and Welsh emigrants during the last decade is returned at 610,291. This is exclusive of the small stream of emigration from England and Wales to other parts of the United Kingdom. Unfortunately, we have no statistics of immigration. We conclude that the Irish exodus has not been counterbalanced, as it is the first time entailed to our shores. Why we should be so curious about the former and so unmindful of the latter we are at a loss to know. The Scotch figure is specially returned as having been unaffected than the raw, uninvolved, moody emigrant. The natural increase of the people of England and Wales during the last decade, as ascertained by the Registrar of Births and Deaths, is 2,305,576; but the increase ascertained by the Census is only 2,169,576, i.e., 136,000 of the difference would represent the excess of emigration over immigration. However, the Registrar-General warns us not to rely on the figures giving the natural increase of the population, bearing in mind that the whole of the births are not registered. No birth can be recorded after six months, and registration is also compulsory as to the present state of the law many births are not entered in the registers, especially in London and the large towns. It is therefore impossible to estimate what proportion our importation of the human race bears to our exportation of the same.

The movements of population within South Britain itself obeys the general law of seeking the principal centres of trade and the seats of mining and manufacturing industry. London has increased during the 3,632,236 to 2,803,034; Liverpool, from 376,000 to 444,000; Manchester, from 303,000 to 338,000; Birmingham, from 233,000 to 296,000; Leeds, from 172,000 to 202,000; and Sheffield from 135,000 to 185,000. On the other hand, the shire of Cambridge has fallen from 190,000 to 176,000; and six other counties—Dorset, Hereford, Salop, Stafford, Wilts, Anglesea, and Montgomery—have been unable to maintain their inhabitants at the level of 1851. In Huntingdonshire, Rutlandshire, Brecon, and Merionethshire the population is stationary. In the manufacturing north-western, north-eastern, and south-eastern parts of the kingdom the ascertained increase exceeds the natural increase; into these population pours from the other districts. In the south-western, south-eastern, south-midland, and Welsh districts the Welsh division—including the counties of Gloucester, Hereford, Salop, Stafford, Worcester, and Warwick—there is little difference between the ascertained and natural increase.

The decrease of the Islands in the British Seas is attached to that of England and Wales. They have a population of 1,029,807, against 915,126 in 1851. The Isle of Man contributes 52,239, the Island of Jersey 56,031, the Island of the Channel Isles 32,558, and Scilly 2,703, aggregate. In Jersey there are 30,774 females to 25,305 males.

The Census returns are less capable than those of England and Wales, but are not subject to those great vicissitudes which characterise those of Ireland. This glorious little nation (sensus virûm nostri) is, while man played no important part in the movements of the steady population, in the history of modern civilisation, has crept up from a total of 1,568,420 people in 1801 to 2,888,742 in 1861. Its actual increase in the six decennial periods is respectively 197,000, 288,000, 324,000, 256,000, 267,000, and 173,000. Thus, while England, Scotia has increased less between 1851-61 than in any preceding decade. If we regard the rate of increase the falling off is still more visible. In the decennial periods it was 11, 16, 5, 4, 5, and 12 per cent, respectively 12, 16, 18, 11, 10, and 5·9. But of the Scots it may be said, as of the Irish, that a large number of them and their descendants are out of their fatherland than in it. Scotland, which receives no immigration of any moment except from Ireland, sent to parts outside of the United Kingdom 184,000 persons in 1851-61, a number equivalent by 11,000 the amount of its actual increase. The numbers which left it for England and Ireland can only be conjectured at. It has been stated that as a man-exporting country Scotland stands about midway between the two sister kingdoms. Twelve counties show a decrease, namely, Sutherland, Ross, Inverness, Kincardine, Perth, Kinnan, Cackburn, Ayr, Argyle, Bute, Dumbarton, Edinburgh, and Wigtown. Berwick, Fife, and Nairn are stationary. The largest increase is found in the counties of Haddington, Lanark, Dumbarton, Renfrew, Elgin, and Banff. In the burghs of 30,000 and upwards, 229,000 live in Glasgow, Edinburgh, 168,000 against 160,000 in 1851; Dundee, 90,000 against 79,000 in 1851. The female sex appears to be in excess of males in Scotland than, probably, in any other country in the world. England and Ireland there are eight females to every 100 males, and this is an abnormal proportion, considering that about 100 male children are born to every 100 female. But in Scotland there are no less than 104 females to every 100 males. This is due, not so naturally more prone to emigrate than the female; but in Scotland the males seem to be more apparently cut off by violent death. While British Columbia, California, and Australia are suffering from an undercurrent of the fair sex, Caledonia is embarrassed with a surplus of blue-eyed northern beauty. What appearance it will make in the cosmopolitan or politic tendency of emigrant Scotchmen—a tendency which has been remarked by the Census Commissioners—is a question of both Old and New England—to seek matrimonial alliances with the women of the country. Hence has arisen a cry from the working jobs against North Britons for their want of gallantry towards their countrywomen.

In a previous article we have dwelt on the leading features of the Irish population returns, but there is one speciality of the Irish Census which deserves the most considered study. This speciality is the light it is setting forth the religious profession of the Irish people. The Irish follow a peculiar system in relation to their Census enumeration. The first general census which was proposed to be taken of Ireland was defeated by a popular hostility on the indifference of the landowners. For a quarter of a century Irish public opinion was also opposed to all the attempts made to establish a general registration of births, deaths, and marriages in Ireland. Yet, this Irish agricultural class of people had refused to make returns relating to the culture of the soil, the Irish people had accepted the proffered boon. More recently, when the English Dissenters caused Sir G. C. Lewis to abandon the idea of taking a religious census in the United Kingdom, all denominations in Ireland concurred in expressing their willingness to answer without reserve the queries which seemed so obnoxious to a portion of the English public. The result is seen before us:

	Leinster.	Munster.	Ulster.	Connaught.	Total.
Roman Catholics	1,785,274	1,181,171	707,837	854,412	4,400,253
Established Church	171,594	76,622	209,150	46,926	678,691
Protestant Dissenters	19,889	9,558	239,093	6,201	265,241
All other persuasions	1,962	778	5,442	210	8,414
Jews	226	149	64	107	546

The Protestant Dissenters consist of 338,992 Presbyterians, 41,532 Methodists, 5062 Independents, 4165 Baptists, and 8412 Friends. The Roman Catholics constitute 78 per cent of the whole nation, and, it will be seen, have the majority even in Ulster. In other words, there is not quite 1 Protestant to 3½ Roman Catholics. The members of the Established Church are between an eighth and a ninth of the whole community. If we follow the returns into the several counties we learn that in only four counties of Ulster are the Roman Catholics in a minority. Those four are Antrim, Down, Londonderry, and Armagh. In the last-named county the numerical ascendancy of the Protestants is very precarious, being 97,288 against 92,116 Roman Catholics. Clare is the most Roman Catholic county of Ireland. Here there are 162,576 Roman Catholics out of a total of 175,961 inhabitants. In Galway town and county there are 261,501 Roman Catholics out of a total of 271,042 inhabitants; and, indeed, all the counties of Connaught show a similar preponderance of the Romanist element. The county of Antrim is the most Protestant county in Ireland. Out of 257,000 souls there are 239,000 Protestants. The Roman Catholics of Dublin number 200,000 out of an aggregate of 344,000 souls, and those of Belfast 37,000 out of 102,000. Cork city out of 76,500; of Limerick, 50,000 out of 55,000; and even in the hitherto Protestant city of Londonderry they have risen to 16,000 out of 30,000.

These "dessicated" figures breathe a different spirit from those of the average English and Scottish abstracts. They tell of the inveterate rivalries of hostile creeds, of hostile races dwelling side by side in the same soil, yet living a life apart in mutual estrangement and suspicion. One Census tells of the fact that the Irish of the Celtic race will be superseded on Irish soil by the Saxon. If we extend our survey beyond the limits of the last twenty years we observe that the drift of things is rather the other way. Sir William Petty, in 1672, computed the Irish race as 1 Protestant to 8 Roman Catholics in Ireland, or 1 to 2 2-3rds. The hearth-money returns, in 1733, place the proportion as 1 to 2½. Putting their tables in juxtaposition with those of 1861, we observe that symptoms that the Celtic race has increased on the Saxon during the last 130 years:—

PROPORTION OF PROTESTANTS TO ROMAN CATHOLICS.
	1672.	1733.	1861.
In Ulster, as	2 to 3	1 to 2	1 to 3
In Munster, as	1 to 8	1 to 5	1 to 16
In Leinster, as	1 to 3 2-3rds	1 to 3	1 to 11
In Connaught, as	1 to 19	1 to 5	1 to 6.

Since 1834, however, when the first and only previous religious census was taken, the Irish Protestants have increased 2·7 per cent, while against the Roman Catholics. The figures of that census are as follows:—

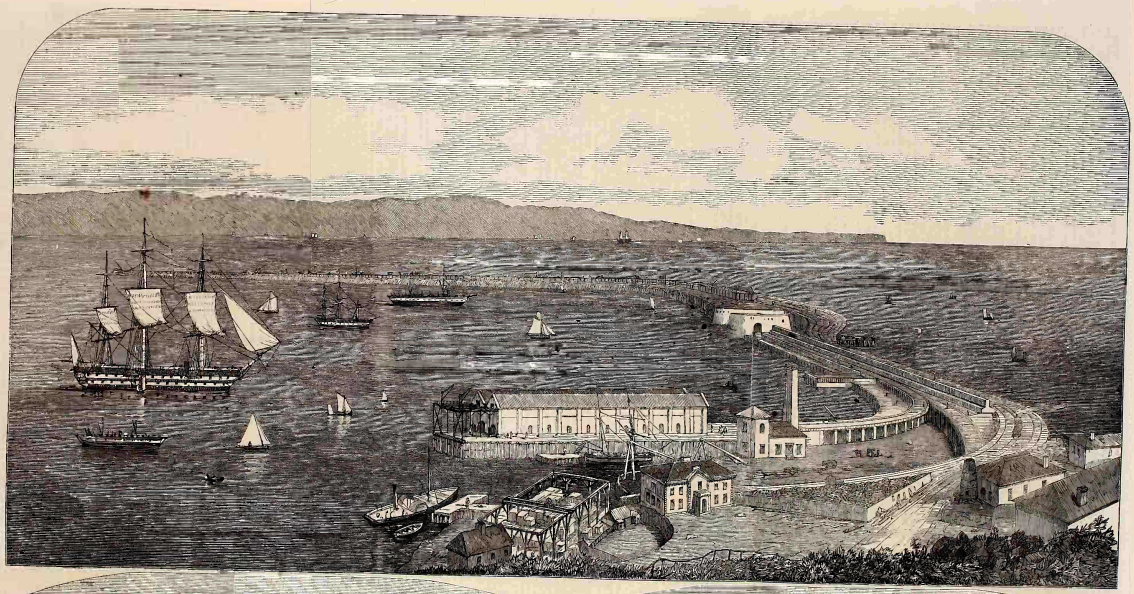
Roman Catholics.	Established Church.	Presbyterians.	Other Protestant Dissenters.	Total.
6,427,712	852,064	642,356	21,808	7,943,940

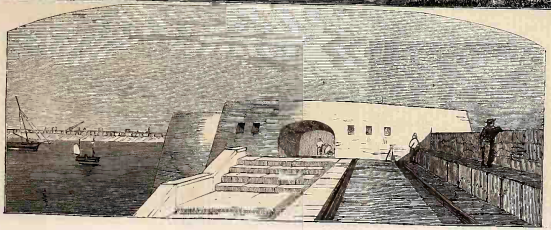
In 1834 there were 81 Roman Catholics to 19 Protestants, or 4 15th of the former to 1 of the latter. In 1861 there are 76 Roman Catholics to 22 Protestants, or 3 6-11ths of the former to 1 of the latter. Thus the proportion between the two creeds has increased 3 6-11ths since 1834—spacious which acted far more powerfully in removing the Protestant Church as the State-endowed institution of Ireland than the supposed great influx of English and Scotch into Ireland since the Reformation. Statistics Court came into operation, and in spite of all proselyting efforts the Irish Roman Catholic Church in Ireland has not been very materially affected, and still remains far above the 4 15th to 1 ratio in 1834. Whether the ratio will be 4 to 1 or less or more is not unfounded. While paying out an unparalleled emigration, the Celtic race has not been discovered, but a few steps before the advancing columns of his historical opponents.

The Scotch figure of 1841 with those of 1861, it will be seen, that the depopulation of Ireland has affected the Celtic Church more heavily than the Presbyterians, while the miscellaneous Christian denominations have increased in a greater ratio than the Celtic Church. Of the Established Church of Ireland we have no figures in the Census of 1861. They seem to vanish from the statistics.

It is earnestly to be hoped that our Dissenters and farmers will shortly overcome the objections they severely entertain to an investigation of their religious profession and agricultural condition.

VIEW OF THE CHESIL BANK FROM PORTLAND HEIGHTS.—SEE PAGE 379.





THE GREAT BREAKWATER AND GOVERNMENT WORKS AT PORTLAND.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

PORTLAND BREAKWATER.

So late as the commencement of the present century England stood far behind the Continental nations of Europe in the art of erecting hydraulic works. France could show numberless moles, piers, seawalls, and docks in her numerous ports in the Channel, in the Bay of Biscay, and in the Mediterranean, many being splendid works erected by the great Louis. Holland was a connected mass of hydraulic works, dykes, drainages, ship-canals, and great sea-sluices existing everywhere; and the tenure by which they hold their country is that they shall maintain them. The few works of the kind then existing in England were executed by engineers from the Low Countries. It was they who collected the rock-waters of the Lake District, and other streams, and conveyed them between huge banks to the sea. Their model works are the origin of those great embankments which have since reclaimed for the pasture of the lands of Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, and other counties. In numerous ports of the Mediterranean are the remains of works executed by engineers in ancient times which in their day none have been nearly equal to some of the finest of those we now look upon as triumphs of modern engineering skill.

However behind-hand England might have been in this respect fifty years ago, she is so no longer. There exist around her coasts and in her rivers and estuaries hydraulic works surpassing in magnitude and skilful construction anything ever erected in ancient or modern times. We have evidence of this in the numerous lighthouses, piers, quays, docks, and seawalls, but more particularly in the extraordinary works executed for the lands of Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, and other counties. In numerous parts of the Mediterranean are the remains of works executed by engineers in ancient times which in their day none have been nearly equal to some of the finest of those we now look upon as triumphs of modern engineering skill.

However behind-hand England might have been in this respect fifty years ago, she is so no longer. There exist around her coasts and in her rivers and estuaries hydraulic works surpassing in magnitude and skilful construction anything ever erected in ancient or modern times. We have evidence of this in the numerous lighthouses, piers, quays, docks, and seawalls, but more particularly in the extraordinary works executed for the lands of Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, and other counties. In numerous parts of the Mediterranean are the remains of works executed by engineers in ancient times which in their day none have been nearly equal to some of the finest of those we now look upon as triumphs of modern engineering skill.

The breakwater, which is the name given to the artificial harbor constructed to defend the anchorage in harbor from the force of the sea during times of tempest and storm, is, of all the works executed by the civil engineer, the most difficult, requiring the largest amount of investigation and study in the design, as but few practical rules can be laid down about it. No two situations are precisely alike; the locality, and the circumstances of the local peculiarities of tides, currents, prevailing winds, and a hundred other things have all to be taken into consideration by the engineer in making his plans. Such a work was, therefore, of the greatest importance to this country when the work has been finished; it did not answer the purpose intended. Harbours have been constructed where the narrow fields on whether, and from which it is next to impossible to enter, and, in, as difficult to get out.

As a harbour of refuge, the subject of our present article and illustration stands out prominent, not only as being the largest and most important, but also as being the most satisfactory, knowing, and while its cost has not been enormous, it is less in amount than that could possibly be anticipated by those who planned it. The group, likewise of Portland is a long line of coast, about 10,000 feet, projecting into the sea in a north-easterly direction from the shores of the Island of that name. It includes an area of several square miles of deep water, in the surface of which half the navies of Europe might ride in safety. The bottom is an even bed of clay, free from rocks or shoals: the anchorage having room for 1,000 ships, secure, blow the wind as it may; while the sea, rushing in from the Channel with a will to destroy all before it, expends its force in the tremendous battle-ranged outside face of the artificial boundary so skilfully placed there to arrest it.

The works of the Breakwater at Portland were designed by the late Mr. J. M. Rendel, and have been carried out under the superior and personal superintendence of Mr. Alfred Dodd, who, since Mr. Rendel's death, has had the entire charge.

In operations of this kind, where a great battle has to be fought with the sea, which will sometimes, in a dark winter night, ravaged and furious, rush headlong in upon immense lines of work, and overpower forces, rush headlong in upon immense lines of work, and overpower forces, rush headlong in upon immense lines of work, and overpower forces

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Lieut.-Col. Sir H. M. Havelock has arrived at Aldershott and entered on his duties as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General of the division, in the room of Major Nugent, who has been appointed Assistant-Quartermaster-General in Nova Scotia.

The remains of the 78th Highlanders have just celebrated at Aldershott the fourth anniversary of the first relief of Lucknow by the troops under Generals Havelock in 1857. The leaders of General Lord Clyde, Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, Lieut.-General M'Neill, and other distinguished officers, who fought with great enthusiasm. The Rev. Dr. Duff, late missionary chief of the Commissariat Staff Corps have also celebrated the anniversary of their formation of that branch of the service.

The principal event at Aldershott during the last few days has been the half-yearly inspection of the various regiments composing the division. Among the regiments inspected on Tuesday morning by Major-General and Lieut.-General Lord Paget, were the Royal Engineers (a troop), second company and fourth company, by Col. Stanley-Clarke; the Royal Artillery (A Battalion), the 1st battalion Rifle Brigade (King's Regiment), the 2nd battalion 16th Regiment, by Brigadier-General Eyre; the 2nd battalion 23rd Welsh Fusiliers Regiment, and the 2nd battalion 31st Regiment, by Brigadier-General Brown; and the 20th and 56th Regiments, by Brigadier-General Russell. The inspections of the remaining regiments is now going on. On the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and part of the 5th battalions Military Train, the 5th Lancers, the 4th Dragoons, the 5th battalions Military Train, the 5th Lancers, the 4th Dragoons, the 4th Regiment, 60th Rifles, &c., were continued on Saturday and Monday by Major-General Lord George Paget—the 2nd Troop of Brigade-General Brown (2nd Infantry Brigade), and Brigadier-General Russell (3rd Infantry Brigade). The regiments inspected were in excellent appearance.

The Right Hon. Lord Eversleigh, being on a visit to Mr. Mildmay, M.P., Shalding Park, a grand field-day in his honour was ordered for the neighbourhood of Shalding, by Major-General the Hon. A. A. Dalzell, the General in command. An elevated knoll the whole of the troops in camp, to the number of 3000, were drawn up in line, consisting of a squadron of the 4th Dragoons, four batteries of Royal Artillery, the Military Infantry, the 1st Dublin, and Royal Engineers, the 1st battalion Rifle Brigade (King's Own Borderers). After the inspection in line the Hussars trotted past in review order, followed by the Artillery, and by the infantry battalions at the time. Then the Hussars cantered past, and the artillery in half batteries and the infantry in double companies. Hussars coming up through the intervals in column of threes, passing in each direction close on the left the warm commendation of the General, the pipers of the Borderers playing an animated march. After that the whole of the troops, in front, formed several squares, the infantry in the hanging or company fire in line. Then pursuit was given to an imaginary enemy down the valley, which was skirmished through, and the batteries firing shells over the heads of the infantry were then engaged for some time, and when recalled were formed up and addressed by General Dalzell, who expressed his pleasure at the manner in which the various movements had been performed. The appearance of the men was most satisfactory; and as to the horses and the commanding officers, the commanding officer and men that he had expressed were not mere words of course, but were the strongest expressions of his thoughts. The troops then marched off the ground, and dispersed to their respective quarters.

The following fifty-four ships of war are in course of being built at the various Royal dockyards:—

Ships.	Guns.	Horse-power.	Port.	Ships.	Guns.	Horse-power.	Port.
Achilles	30	1250	Chatham.	Nassau	4	500	Pembroke.
Alarm	11	150	Devonport.	Nettle	4	200	Devonport.
Alligator	40	600	Pembroke.	Orontes	91	800	Pembroke.
Belvidera	51	600	Chatham.	Porcupine	4	200	Sheerness.
Bramble	4	60	Portsmouth.	North Star	23	400	Woolwich.
Bruiser	2	60	Devonport.	Ranger	4	200	Devonport.
Bulwark	91	800	Chatham.	Ocean	90	600	Chatham.
Caledonia	80	800	Woolwich.	Orwell	4	200	Portsmouth.
Cherub	19	400	Portsmouth.	Protector	2	60	Pembroke.
Columbine	11	150	Devonport.	Racehorse	17	200	Chatham.
Crescent	2	60	Pembroke.	Reindeer	17	200	Chatham.
Crown	2	60	Portsmouth.	Renown	91	800	Portsmouth.
Defiance	91	800	Devonport.	Repulse	80	800	Devonport.
Donegal	91	800	Woolwich.	Royal Alfred	91	800	Devonport.
Dromedary	12	100	Milford.	Royal Oak	91	150	Pembroke.
Dryad	51	600	Portsmouth.	Royal Oak	91	1000	Devonport.
Eurydice	26	500	Deptford.	Salamis	—	250	Chatham.
Enterprise	14	150	Deptford.	Scourge	—	250	Sheerness.
Favourite	22	400	Deptford.	Shannon	91	150	Pembroke.
Harpy	4	200	Pembroke.	Sphynx	4	200	Woolwich.
Hardinge	2	60	Portsmouth.	Tamar	—	400	Milford.
Hecate	6	600	Glasgow.	Tyrian	2	60	Pembroke.
Helen	26	500	Portsmouth.	Triumph	89	800	Pembroke.
Lance	80	800	Devonport.	Tweed	4	200	Sheerness.
Menai	22	400	Deptford.	Tyrian	2	60	Newhaven.
Minotaur	91	800	Chatham.	Vanguard	91	800	Sheerness.
Myrmidon	4	60	Portsmouth.	Weasel	21	600	Woolwich.
			Chatham.	Zealous	2	60	Pembroke.

Forming a total of 1266 guns, 19,850-horse power, and 39,255 tons.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Lady Havelock is about to present a handsome set of colours to the 34th Surrey (Hornsey Rangers) Rifles. The corps, which has only been established a few months, numbers upwards of 500 officers, and 40 bandsmen and buglers.

The members of the Post Office companies of the Civil Service Rifles recently competed for prizes at Wimbledon common. The ranges were 200, 500, and 600 yards. The first prize was won by Lieut. Angell.

On Saturday week a handsome flag, presented by Mrs. Newington, wife of Captain Newington, to the 41st Kent Rifle Volunteers, was received by the Duke of Wellington at the Deptford station.

The 10th Kent Volunteer Artillery marched at the annual gate about three p.m. on Saturday, and, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Boys, proceeded to Rosherville common for battalion drill. On their arrival at the common the regiment, consisting of about 700 men, were put through several evolutions, which were exceedingly well executed. The actual strength of the corps is now 1200 men.

The members of the 30th (North-West) Middlesex Rifles commenced shooting for their prizes on Tuesday week at the new butts at Willesden. The first company's prize, a silver cup, was won by Sergeant Campbell, who, at 200 yards, made seven points out of a possible 10 points, four bulls and three inners. On Saturday the silver cup was won by Sergeant Hutchinson; the rifle, given by the Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant Biggs, and competed for at the ranges of 200, 500, and 600 yards, was won by Sergeant Fraser, of the 29th or North Middlesex.

On Saturday Major Russell, M.P., distributed the prizes to the successful competitors in the second competition between the members of the Inns of Court Rifle Volunteers, which took place at the head-quarters of the corps. The first prize, a handsome silver cup, was won by Corporal Cooper, of Lincoln's Inn, who made 31 points. A silver watch and gold chain, shot for by members of the Inns of Court Rifle Corps, at 200 yards range, five shots each man, was won by Private Cook, scoring 23 points. In addition to the above there was a large number of money prizes, contributed by the commanding officer and officers of the corps, Colonel Lambert.

On Monday week the fourth company of the 9th Middlesex (Paddington) Rifles competed for the first company prize, of a handsome silver goblet and effective stand, at the ranges, Wormwood Scrubbs. The first prize, a silver cup, with Government mummitts, and five rounds were fired at each of the English rifles, silver goblet, value £5 5s., was won by Private Peter, with 29 points. In a spirited competition, was won by Sergeant Hill scoring 29 points. In addition to the above, there was presented an English rifle, value £5 5s., to be competed for at 200 and 500 yards, and won by Private Potter; and Sergeant Layborne was the successful competitor for the same prize at the same ranges, and a rifle was won by Private Cook scoring 20 points. At the termination of the match Lady Isabella Lawrence presented a drawing-room clock to the wife of Captain Twomey at the Rifle Pavilion, Wormwood Scrubbs.

The annual prize meeting of the Victoria Rifles, Corps Pollock, Clapham Rise, on Saturday last, at their head-quarters, Hanover Park, Peckham. The third-class prize, a silver cup, with Sir Sag and Sir Sergeant, was won by Private Hill, in full three points, four inners, four bullseyes of Major Leonard, who has become their honorary colonel. As soon as the inspection was over, Major Leonard, George Duncan, Esq., and Lieutenant-Colonel Macdonald and the members of the 1st Surrey on their officers' horses, followed by the commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Pollock, who concluded by proposing three cheers for their honorary Colonel. Divine service was then performed by the Rev. Mr. Hall, who took for his text 2nd Samuel, 6, 20, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day," after having duly exhorted the men.

The contest for the silver cup presented to the thirteenth and fourteenth companies of the 1st Middlesex Artillery Corps by Mr. Richard Hoyer Jarvis took place yesterday week at Ealstaes, in Essex. Nineteen competitors entered for the prize, and more than the usual number of rounds were fired. The silver cup was won by Sergeant Mason, of the thirteenth company, scoring 13 points out of a possible fourteen, all the others who made 11 points, and the following in the order. The first prize of the commanding officer's (Colonel Thorold) challenge cup, and a purse of money added, was well contested at 200, 500, and 600 yards, four shots at each range. The prize was won by Ensign Lewis, of the 94th Kent (Deptford), who made 18 points. The second prize was a cup given by Major Fennell for the best shot in the battalion through the yearly course of military drill and target practice as shown by the returns. This prize, valued at £25, was awarded to Private Hilton, of the 4th Kent (Woolwich). The third prize, to the second-best shot during the year's practice, was awarded to Private Head, of the 32nd Kent (Rochester). The fourth prize, a watch, given by the Adjutant to the non-commissioned officers in the battalion who had proved the best shot during the year, was awarded to Sergeant Graham, of the 24th Kent (Charlton). The fifth, sixth, and seventh prizes, consisting of a sabretasch by the baldric, of the value, respectively, of £10, £5, and £3, were awarded to Sergeant Major Lee, who made 210 and 205 yards, five points in all. The first was won by Corporal Wild, of the 34th Kent (Deptford), who obtained 21 points; the second by Sergeant, of the 4th Kent (Woolwich), with 17 points; and the third was a tie between Captain Satterthwaite, of the 16th Kent (Greenwich), and Private Young, of the 11th Kent, who each obtained 15 points. The tie was shot off, and won by Captain Satterthwaite.

The annual prize meeting in connection with the 9th (Chatham) Kent Rifle Volunteers took place on Thursday week, at the head-quarters, Fort Pitt, Chatham. St. Sgt.'s, Chatham, and Rochester corps were contended for. The weather being beautifully fine, the attendance of spectators was very large. The first prize, a handsome silver cup, was given by the officers of the corps; ranges 200 and 300 yards, five shots at each; 15 points was the highest number, seven competitors, and Sergeant Cooper, of Rochester, who scored 16 points. The second prize was a silver goblet, value £14, for the corps shot; to be member of corps for this prize was necessary. There were 50 volunteers. The ranges were the same as in the previous match. The first prize was ultimately won by Corporal Dunn, with 31 points, and Sergeant Cooper the next match, which was the most interesting in the day's proceedings, was for a piece of new sovereigns, given by Mr. J. Baddow, for the best shot. This match was open to the whole of the troops of Chatham garrison as well as the volunteers. There were sixty-three competitors, the ranges 200 and 500 yards, with five shots at each. After an exciting contest the first prize was won by Private Bell, 19th Kent Volunteers, for 18 points. The first prize throughout was won by Private Bell, 19th Kent Volunteers, for 18 points. The firing throughout was very good, and the shooting of the volunteers was much better than that of the troops of the line. The whole of the arrangements were under the direction of Major Mudge, assisted by Captain Hall, Adjutant of the 9th Kent Volunteers; and the firing under the superintendence of Lieut. C. Isaac, 9th Kent.

The annual prize meeting of the Victoria Rifle Corps (Pedestrians) company of Kent Rifle Volunteers took place yesterday week at the Devonport Butts, Plumstead Marshes, in the presence of a large number of spectators. The prize distributed was the challenge cup, to be held for twelve months, and also a second prize, a silver cup, presented by the company, to be held for three months, and also a second prize, 500, and 600 yards. The prize was ultimately won by Private Hall.

On Saturday last the annual prize meeting of the Victoria Rifle Corps took place on Shooter's Hill, Kent, by permission of Colonel Fletcher. The second prize was for the city prize, open to the whole corps, and was competed for by the members of the corps who had five shots at each. For this prize there were thirty-two competitors, the first prize being a silver cup, presented by Colonel Gordon, C.B., M.P. for Dartford, Kent, who scored 6 points. A prize of a silver cup, given by Alderman Challis, was won by Private Hodgkinson, who scored 5 points. Private Hodgkinson, who made 18 points in five shots each at 200 and 500 yards. The last prize was a silver cup, given by Mr. Duke of Mudeley to the company, for the best shot in the volunteers, five shots at 200 yards. This was won by Sergeant Wyles, 19th Kent.

The Tunbridge Artillery Volunteers were inspected in the course of last week by Colonel Boys, of the 10th Kent Artillery, at the Castle, and afterwards marched to the gunnery practice of the corps, and he considered that it was perfect. The Tunbridge Volunteers also attended the inspection of the 10th Kent Artillery at Chatham. Private Wilson, some of the distinguished archers who came down with his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, Colonel Gordon, C.B., M.P., and Colonel Kent, who scored 6 points. A prize of a silver cup, given by Alderman Challis, was won by Private Hodgkinson, who scored 5 points. Private Hodgkinson, who made 18 points in five shots each at 200 and 500 yards. The last prize was a silver cup, given by Mr. Duke of Mudeley to the company, for the best shot in the volunteers, five shots at 200 yards. This was won by Sergeant Wyles, 19th Kent.

The Tunbridge Artillery Volunteers were inspected by Colonel Boys, 10th Kent Artillery, at the Castle, and afterwards marched to the gunnery practice of the corps, and he considered that it was perfect. The Tunbridge Volunteers also attended the inspection of the 10th Kent Artillery at Chatham. Private Wilson, some of the distinguished archers who came down with his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, Colonel Gordon, C.B., M.P., and Colonel Kent, who scored 6 points. A prize of a silver cup, given by Alderman Challis, was won by Private Hodgkinson, who scored 5 points. Private Hodgkinson, who made 18 points in five shots each at 200 and 500 yards. The last prize was a silver cup, given by Mr. Duke of Mudeley to the company, for the best shot in the volunteers, five shots at 200 yards. This was won by Sergeant Wyles, 19th Kent.

On Thursday week the Victoria Rifle Corps was inspected by Colonel Boxall, who, with Major Nelson, were under the command of Major Marsh, by the regulations for the movements of the corps. The corps was then divided into companies, and marched to the Common, where they were put through the various evolutions, five shots at 200 yards. This was won by Sergeant Wyles, 19th Kent.

The Tunbridge Artillery Volunteers were inspected by Colonel Boys, 10th Kent Artillery, at the Castle, and afterwards marched to the gunnery practice of the corps, and he considered that it was perfect. The Tunbridge Volunteers also attended the inspection of the 10th Kent Artillery at Chatham. Private Wilson, some of the distinguished archers who came down with his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, Colonel Gordon, C.B., M.P., and Colonel Kent, who scored 6 points. A prize of a silver cup, given by Alderman Challis, was won by Private Hodgkinson, who scored 5 points. Private Hodgkinson, who made 18 points in five shots each at 200 and 500 yards. The last prize was a silver cup, given by Mr. Duke of Mudeley to the company, for the best shot in the volunteers

THE NEW CATTLE MARKET AT DERBY.

THE DERBY NEW CATTLE MARKET.

THE Derbyshire Agricultural Society held its first show on Friday, the 27th ult., in the new Cattle Market, Derby—at which we give an Engraving from a photograph by Mr. Bemman. Subjoined are some particulars of the market, abridged from an account which appeared in the Derby and Chesterfield Reporter of the 9th inst.:—

"Proceeding along the new road, over the old Mill-stream, from the Morledge (the site of the present Cattle Market), the first thing that meets our view is the new bridge over the Derby Canal, at the aqueduct or bridge over the 'cast metals,' not yet complete. Passing across this bridge, directly in front of us are the temporary caravan-stages where the show is held, and to the left an office being built for the general transaction of business, and a little further on the commodious and well-arranged new market. The first object that meets our observation is the uncovered wrought-iron pens for pigs and sheep, and to the left an office being built for the general transaction of business, and a long shed along the boundary wall, with 20 large wrought-iron pens for calves (in season)—occupied on Friday last for the show of nests and vegetables produce. Turning round, and working our way down the market, we come upon the first double row of pens, 28 in number, intended, we believe, for the regular pig market, and the succeeding three double rows of 84 pens for sheep. The accommodation here provided is for 300 calves, 500 pigs, and 1680 sheep, calculating at the rate of 10 and 20 respectively to each pen, the dimensions of which are 9ft. 6in. by 9ft. 3in. On Friday last these pens were arranged and used for the show of stock somewhat similar to the contemplated arrangements of the ordinary markets to be hereafter held in the new market. Proceeding down the centre longitudinal avenue, we observe that the numerous access and cross transverse avenues leading from the main road to the horse trial-ground. Passing this department of the market, we next come upon the open pens for sheep and lambs in number. They are arranged double, and laid out transversely across the market, and divided into five 26ft. pens on each side, or nearly in all, which, at 5ft. 6in. to each head, or eight to a pen, will hold seven hundred and twenty head of cattle. There are also covered pens for beasts under the sheds, and a long row of open pens on the southern side of the main road, used on Friday for refreshments, and for stands for horses, which will hold another 144 head of cattle, making in all for standing space for 864. The market is surrounded on three sides, the north, east, and west, with good warm sheds, inclosed on the outside north, east, and west, with an iron-past and oak-rail fence, closely boarded, and on the south by an iron-past and oak-rail fence, closely boarded. The sheds on the north side are intended for horses and lambs and sucking pigs; indeed, the whole market seems to be a good example of systematic arrangement, and appears to be laid out with the utmost regard to comfort and convenience, economy of space, and durability; so much so that we have no hesitation in saying that when the pens are paved, the roads macadamized and asphalted, the bridge over the River Derwent, now in course of erection by Mr. James Haywood, of the Phœnix Foundry, under the direction of Mr. Crossley, engineer, of the Midland Railway Company, and the new road on the north-east side of the River Derwent, through the Derwent Meadows, completed, it will be one of the best provincial markets in the Kingdom. The adoption of a liberal scale of charges, and of good regulations for its government, will make it become in a short time a most important investment, yielding considerable revenue to the borough fund. Besides market, yielding considerable revenue to the borough fund. Besides a main road, forming a noble thoroughfare the whole length of the market, 42ft. wide, one centre, there are four main avenues, with numerous minor avenues.

"The whole of the works are being carried out from the designs and under the direction and superintendence of Mr. T. C. Thorburn, C.E., the borough surveyor, by the following contractors—viz., Mr. William Dyson, for the new bridges and works of the southern approach; Messrs. J. and J. Cliff, of Bradford, Yorkshire, the iron castings and wrought-iron work of the pens and sheds; Mr. Josh. Toulmon, for the severing, roadmaking, penning, and the other works generally for the erection of the new market and the new road for the northern approach from Exeter-street and the new Cattle Docks of the Midland Railway Company, in the Derwent Meadows; and Mr. Henry Hargreaves, for the market superintendent's house and office, the whole of which there is every prospect of being completed in about a month or six weeks for about the sum (£2500) voted by the Town Council for this great public improvement. Land is reserved for market purposes on both sides of the new market, and the works have been laid out with a view to future extension; for it may fairly be expected that in proportion to the facilities afforded so will the market increase."

NEW LANDING-STAGE FOR BIRKENHEAD WOODSIDE FERRY.

THE northern portion of this gigantic landing-stage was launched on Monday, the 26th ult., with the most complete success; the other end is quite as forward as regards building, and will follow as soon as the place is ready to receive it. The immense structure, which measures 500ft. in length by 80ft. in breadth, is in process of being built for the Woodside or town ferry of Birkenhead by Mr. John Vernon, shipbuilder, of Brunswick Dock, Liverpool, from the designs of T. B. Hartley, Esq., the dock surveyor and engineer of that town. This portion of the stage is nearly one half of the structure, the whole of which when put together will consist of fifty iron pontoons, each 80ft. in length, 10ft. in width, and 5ft. 3in. in depth, the first three at either end being 12ft. in width, all securely bound to five iron keelsons, varying from 4 to 12ft. in depth, and running the entire length of the construction. On these 6ft. in depth, and running the entire length of the construction. On these 6ft. in depth, and running the entire length of the construction. On these keelsons the deck rafters, 2ft. in depth, are laid, with a flooring 3in. thick, keelsons the deck rafters, 2ft. in depth, are laid, with a flooring 3in. thick, containing altogether about 2500 tons of iron, and 80,000 cubic feet of wood-work. The communication with the shore will be by two iron bridges, 10ft. in length, which are now being put together in the great floating-dock, each having a double roadway for carts and carriages and a double roadway for passengers.

The launching operation was such as might have been expected to occupy several days; there were eleven launch-ways about 300ft. long each, seven very powerful winches for warping out, and five sets of paying out or check gear; yet the whole was so arranged and in so perfect a manner that the launching occupied only half the day. At a given signal the dogger of the eleven launch-ways were simultaneously cut down, and the magnificent structure immediately descended by its own impetus 150ft. down the ways, and, with other slight assistance, completed nearly 200ft. towards the water (whence the next springs will float her), amid the hearty cheers and congratulations of a large concourse of visitors. The construction of the whole stage is a magnificent piece of engineering, and reflects the highest credit on her builder, who has besides on the stocks two vessels of 1230 tons, one of 1000, and two of 600 tons, all A 1 at Lloyd's.

NEW LANDING-STAGE FOR BIRKENHEAD WOODSIDE FERRY.

THE ITALIAN PEOPLE AT THEIR NATIONAL EXPOSITION.

THE first Italian Industrial Exposition may now be pronounced to be a success. The number of visitors on the paying days has steadily increased, and continues to do so; and on Sunday, the 22nd of September, when the admission was gratuitously, the interest taken by the masses in the doors were thrown open gratuitously, the interest taken by the masses in the doors were thrown open gratuitously, the interest taken by the masses in the doors were thrown open

KET AT DERBY.

d, undeviating progress of the crowd in regular march throughout the of the interminable galleries, corridors, and suites of rooms of the ry buildings. If our readers have ever attempted the task of threadmazes of "the labyrinth" in the garden of Hampton Court they orm an idea of the sort of progress to which the Sunday visitors to the ition were condemned. But in the mazes of the labyrinth one green just like its neighbour. You see your companions in the advance losing in a contrary direction on the other side of the hedge, but you reason to wish to be in their path rather than your own. Not so, ver, in the case of the exposition labyrinth. Looking with an eye ertently rebellious to the programme of the authorities across the back of, you see within a few yards of you the objects which, above all else, you in the exposition. But to approach them is utterly forbidden you in the exposition. But to approach them is utterly forbidden you must, after a patient progress through never-ending lanes hedged hems, after a patient progress through never-ending lanes hedged all the results of human industry, you will reach the objects of your est.

may be that such precautions in the case of a vast crowd are a necessary of controlling it. But it does seem that the same crowd which could so much to its annoyance, perfectly restrained by the barrier of a sofa or ar which any child of six years old could push aside or step over might been safely trusted to enjoy the same liberty of free movement which owed to these whose responsibility is guaranteed by the payment of a e. It should, moreover be remembered that one of the great objects of the exposition is to show workmen the work of their fellows in the various cities of Italy; that cheap means of transit to Florence have been organised especially with this view; and that the intention of the Parliament in decreasing that the exposition should be free on every holiday, and at least on one day in every week, was precisely this—that the operative classes might profit by the opportunity of instructing themselves by the examination and comparison of the produce of different parts of the peninsula. Now, it is needless to point out how entirely all examination and comparison was rendered perfectly out of the question by the manner in which the intentions of the Parliament have been carried out. In a word, we think that the encouragement of the paying classes and the discouragement of those who pay not was somewhat overdone.

Nothing could be more admirable than the behaviour of the tens of thousands who visited the exposition on the first free day. It should be observed that there were no means of any sort adopted for selecting or moderating the numbers of the persons admitted; no tickets to be asked for, nor other formality to be gone through. The crowds merely had to walk up to the doors and enter through turnstiles, which registered the number of those who went in. The number was by this means ascertained to be upwards of one and twenty thousand—a number which bears about the same relation to the population of Florence that six hundred thousand would bear to that of London. But it may be safely asserted that no crowd of twenty thousand persons gathered to see a gratuitous exhibition from out of the population of either London or Paris would have behaved as well or made so decent an appearance as did this gathering of Tuscan peasants and artisans. There was neither accident, disorder, complaint, nor trouble of any kind. As is always the case in Florence, the crowd was much better dressed than a similar congregation of persons would be in any other city of the world. But this is one of the specialties of Florence. A sufficiency of bread to eat if possible—but a decent coat, or jacket, or gown, for a fiesta at all events, is the order in which the necessities of life range themselves in the economy of a Florentine proletary.

That the artisan class in several of the different provinces of Italy has thoroughly comprehended the nature of the object proposed and the advantages to be attained by the exposition has been very satisfactorily proved by the arrival of a number of workmen sent as deputies by working-men's associations, with a mission to examine and report on the comparative advance and methods used in their several trades and on the different branch of ment or backwardness of the different cities in each different branch of industry. Such deputies have been sent from Milan, Parma, Reggio, Modena, and some other towns of Piedmont and Emilia.

The sketch made by our Artist gives a very exact representation of this scene as it appeared about one o'clock in the afternoon on the Sunday. It is taken from a spot halfway along the nave of the main building, on the right-hand side of a person entering by the great doors, and looking across the threefold nave. The statue which is seen in the foreground of the Engraving, and which occupies the exact centre of the building, is that of Sallustio Bandini of Siena, who was born in 1677, and died in 1760, the illustrious economist who was beforehand with Adam Smith in asserting several of the most principles of economical science of which we are apt to think our countryman the first discoverer. The inscription on the base of the statue, which very appropriately in thus placed in the central spot of the great industrial gathering, is to the effect that Sallustio Bandini benefited the human race by the discovery of truths which he attained before Adam Smith. The priority of the Siennese economist and the identity of many of his ideas with those of the Scotch philosopher are undeniable. But the discovery of the latter, ab ovo, is in no way form in which it can be controverted, or superiority on the part of the other philosopher, but simply because the one sowed his seed in unprepared ground and the other in a soil comparatively prepared to receive it. When Bandini went to Florence to lay his ideas before the Grand Ducal Government of that day, it was seriously questioned whether he ought not to be consigned to Bonifazio—the Florentine Bethlem!

In the centre of the background of the Engraving is the entrance to the department containing the sculpture and the pictures—a portion, that is, of the enormous collection of pictures which have been brought together. There are also whole suites of rooms full of pictures up stairs, opening off the galleries of the main building.

Against the pier to the left hand of the statue is seen a large piece of furniture, which was purchased on the first day of the exposition by Mdme. Ristori. It is a fine bookcase, with cupboards below, entirely worked in the most elaborate "intarsia," that wood inlaying for which Florence is still, as three hundred years ago, famous.

Carving and ornamental cabinetwork is very largely represented in the exposition—Florence, Siena, and Turin being the principal contributors. And it may be remarked, since we have been led to speak of this subject, that a curious and suggestive difference may be observed in the style of the art as practised in the two Tuscan cities and in their subalpine rival. In both cases the object has been to gratify the prevailing taste for the Cinque-cento style and taste in ornamentation. But the productions of Turin are Cinquecento, after the modern Parisian fashion. The mischievous influence of French taste is visible in every outline and portion of the ornaments of the models after which they have been conceived have come out of Parisian workshops and boulders. Those produced by the more purely and essentially Italian cities of Tuscany have been inspired by the abundant specimens of real Cinque-cento art in all kinds which still remain in them. The difference is very remarkable, and proves that, if the Tuscans have much to learn industrially from their more modernised northern fellow-countrymen, Florence remains, as it has ever been, the real and indisputable artistic capital of Italy.

BIRKENHEAD WOODSIDE FERRY

THE METROPOLITAN EXHIBITION OF DOGS.

THE experiment of a dog show having been tried with success at Birmingham and Leeds, the promoters of the metropolitan show were induced to follow in their wake. The exhibition was held at the new Horse Repository in High Holborn. On Monday week an exciting scene was witnessed when the "show-dogs" arrived from each successive railway-train in all kinds of vehicles, from the gentleman's brougham, cabs, hampers, railway-carts, under the protecting wing of the London fancy. The tiny "pets" and "toys" were greeted by the crowd assembled at the entry with exclamations of "Pretty dears!" "What a beauty!" and so forth; a wide berth, however, was given for the "bold bloodhound," thoroughbred bull, &c., as with shakespeare they glared on the mob and pulled hard upon the leash. On Tuesday the judges met to make their awards, £300 being given in prizes for the best dogs in their various classes, consisting of forty-three. Most of the breeds were represented, but fox and other hounds had not a solitary candidate. The decision of the arbitrators on such a novelty point an "canine fancy" appeared to be satisfactory, and to the initiated in such matters the show was of an unusual and highly interesting character. There were dogs of all sizes, from the chief mastiff of Mount St. Bernard to the toy of not much more than a pound in weight, "giving tongue" in their own peculiar style. The exhibition, which closed yesterday week, was a perfect success both as an exhibition of the properties of the various breeds of the animals shown and as a monetary point of view.

PRIZE DOGS SHOWN IN OUR ILLUSTRATION.

1. Pomsie Blue-Belle Pup, Class 3a, No. 172.
2. Mr. Hunter's Animal Inn and Inn, Class 3a, No. 166.
3. Mr. Percival's Bulldog, Class 3b, No. 116.
4. Mr. Percival's, Class 3b, No. 117.
5. Mr. Hoseford's White Terrier, Class 3c, No. 125.
6. Mr. Fox's Toy Spaniel, Class 2b, No. 97.
7. Mr. Hoseford's Spaniel, Class 2c, No. 103.
8. Mr. Bowyer's Fox Terrier, Class 3b, No. 118.
9. Mr. Fraser's Italian Greyhound, Class 3 2b, No. 93.
10. Mr. Smith's Maltese Terrier, Class 3c, No. 124.
11. Mr. Lowther's Irish Waterspaniel, Class 2a, No. 85.
12. Mr. Wise's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 7.
13. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 8.
14. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 9.
15. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 10.
16. Mr. Taylor's Irish Setter, Class 2b, No. 98.
17. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 11.
18. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 12.
19. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 13.
20. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 14.
21. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 15.
22. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 16.
23. Mr. Hunter's Greyhound, Class 3, No. 17.
24. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 99.
25. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 100.
26. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 101.
27. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 102.
28. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 103.
29. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 104.
30. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 105.
31. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 106.
32. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 107.
33. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 108.
34. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 109.
35. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 110.
36. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 111.
37. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 112.
38. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 113.
39. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 114.
40. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 115.
41. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 116.
42. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 117.
43. Mr. Fleming's Setter, Class 2b, No. 118.

WROXETER EXCAVATIONS.

The following letter from Mr. Thomas Wright, dated October 5, appeared in Tuesday's Times:—

I venture again to ask a place in your columns to inform the public of the state of the work of excavation on the site of the Roman city of Uriconium. We had been obliged to suspend the excavations for some months for the want of the funds at the disposal of the committee; and when—chiefly through the liberality of Mr. Botfield, M.P., who for the second time came to the rescue—further supplies were money enough in hand to proceed, the ground which we wished to excavate was covered with a crop of barley, which we decided to wait till this was cleared off, rather than begin digging close to it. There was some difficulty in finding men until the harvest was over, and it was not till late in the month of September that, with the ready and obliging assistance of a tenant-farmer (Mr. Fisher), we began to dig on one of the principal cemetery of Uriconium. I am glad to say that, in the short interval which has since elapsed, nothing has occurred to interrupt the operations.

The cemetery lies on the north-eastern side of the town, a little distance without the wall, along the road which led to London, and which was called by the Anglo-Saxons the Watling-street road. This road, as I have mentioned before, the time, which is now called the Wallins-street road, runs under a hot bank on the north-east side, and then crosses the river Severn. Archæological observers of an older date led us to the belief that the principal monuments would be found on the slope next but one to the road, and we have not been disappointed in our expectations by running trenches in the directions where seemed most likely to be found. We have succeeded in finding the outer walls of several monuments, but most of the several interments consisted of ashes and burnt bones, with sepulchral urns of coarse pottery, and a few of glass, and a number of small coins, the latter chiefly of the reigns of Constantine and his family, by every day's work. At length the men came upon a regularly-paved street, of good width, running down the hill, and on each side of which were found, and through the middle of the cemetery, at a small angle eastward from the Watling-street road. This street, I am inclined to think, was the road which, at the foot of the bank, was the original Roman road from Uriconium to Londinium; and we probably find it, further on, in the same direction, meets bordered upon it on each side, as at Pompeii: it was, in fact, the street of Pompeii of Uriconium. A small urn, inclosing ashes and burnt bones, was found on the western side close to the street, and was at first supposed from its form to be two vases; but it will probably be found to be one of the urnicaria, or place for burning the dead body before interment. For in most be stored, as in fact of some interments, the body was burnt on the spot, and inclose of an interment in the Roman cemetery in which the body had not been burnt, and I confirm the belief, which I expressed in my former letter, observations made in other parts of the island, that cremation of the dead continued to be practised in Britain after the time when it was no longer common. The remains of the wood on which the corpse had been placed for burning—perhaps the last funeral pile of a man still pagan—were found within it, the ends being but imperfectly burnt; and a strand who was present to the last funeral. This stand, I am inclined to think, was the "bier" which, at the foot of the bank, was the original Roman road from Uriconium to Londinium; and we probably find it, further on, in the same direction, meets bordered upon it on each side, as at Pompeii: it was, in fact, the street of Pompeii of Uriconium. A small urn, inclosing ashes and burnt bones, was found on the western side close to the street, and was at first supposed from its form to be two vases; but it will probably be found to be one of the urnicaria, or place for burning the dead body before interment. For in most be stored, as in fact of some interments, the body was burnt on the spot—the instance

EXCAVATIONS ON THE SITE OF CHERTSEY ABBEY.

PURSUANT to the notice which has appeared in the papers inviting the public to visit the excavations now progressing on the site of Chertsey Abbey, a large number of persons assembled last Saturday afternoon, including many of the gentry of the neighborhood.

It appears that in 666 Frithwold, petty King of the Surrezians, under Wulphere, King of Mercia, in conjunction with Erkenwald, afterwards Bishop of London, built a monastery on this site, and it was called accordingly Chertsey, the itinerant priests who circulated through the district. This was probably a simple structure, formed of wood, in connexion with earlier ecclesiastical remains of the Danes Chertsey suffered severely, and the monastery was destroyed by fire, and entirely rebuilt of its existence, had the reputation of having accumulated considerable wealth, and the lands, privileges, &c. of having accumulated considerable wealth, and the lands, privileges, &c. of monastery, and the lands, privileges, &c. of monastery, and the lands, privileges, &c. of monastery

THE AMERICAN PONY EXPRESS, BY ROUTE FROM THE MISSOURI RIVER TO SAN FRANCISCO.—FROM A DRAWING BY G. H. ANDREWS.

SOME of our readers may possibly be puzzled, when reading American news, to find most important intelligence from California, Oregon, British Columbia, and the Pacific side of the continent of North America embalmed in a short paragraph headed "By Pony Express," and the questions naturally arise, What is meant by a pony express? Where does it come from? where does it go? and why is it a pony express, and not a horse, or a stage-coach, or a railway express? For the purpose of giving some information on this point, our Special Artist has taken the trouble to visit the locale of the pony express, to see it arrive and depart at its eastern terminus, and also to get a view of it in its route on the plains.

The great importance of maintaining a rapid communication between the States of the American Union situated on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard has long been felt, and numerous projects for connecting them by railways have been continually before Congress, but to the present time scarcely anything has been done either towards the railway or telegraph. Between the Missouri River and California—a distance of 2000 miles—there exists a huge wilderness of prairies, arid plains, mountains, forests, and two huge mountain-chains—the Rocky and the Cascade Ranges. Through the whole of this must an Atlantic and Pacific railway be carried when it is made, if it be made through United States' territory. The railway works were extraordinary in perforating and climbing the Alleghanies. Railways are now being made through the mountains in India, and in other places where tremendous obstacles have to be overcome, yet no one of the lines made or being made do such formidable barriers exist as are found between the Atlantic and Pacific States of the American Union. The present unhappy state of affairs—the waste of war—is draining the national exchequer dry, and deferring to a distant date the completion of the most important work the United States' Government has had in hand since the declaration of independence—the binding their eastern and western territory together with a band of iron.

Mr. W. H. Russell, of the firm of Russell, Major, and Waddell, extensive Government contractors for the conveyance of stores overland to the States on the west side of the Rocky Mountains, having observed the daily-increasing importance of more rapid means of communication than then existed, hit upon the exceedingly bold idea of running a pony express from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, carrying a telegram from New York, or any other part of the States, to San Francisco in eight days, and a letter in thirteen. Those who knew the country through which the express must pass shook their heads, and said it would never do; the route was far north, the winter severe, the trails impassable, the snow lying often fifteen feet deep on the ground. It then took 115 days to make a quick passage between New York and San Francisco.

Mr. Russell was not the man to set aside a plan he had made up his mind he could carry out by any multiplication of difficulties; wherefore prepared to make the attempt. First he built stations all along the line and stocked them well and plentifully, then engaged a corps of fearless and trustworthy riders, and purchased about six hundred horses, the very best that money could procure. Having done all this and a great deal more that was necessary, on April 9, 1860, two ponies started simultaneously, one from San Francisco, and the other from St. Joseph, on the Missouri; and, although the season was most unfavourable, the mail being in some places two or three feet deep, yet the entire distance, one thousand nine hundred miles, was run in seven days and a half, carrying despatches from New York and San Francisco. This performance is the more remarkable because the early part of April is considered the very worst season of the year: the snows on the mountains are deep, and on the plains the rivers are swollen and filled with floating ice. Old mountaineers consider April as bad as any winter month on the mountains, and worse on the plains. The pony express, being "un fait accompli," continued to run regularly with letters once a week from each end, travelling invariably to a time schedule, until the month of June, when a source of trouble appeared which had long given cause for anxiety. The wild Indians of the western plains began to meddle with the express, and shot dead from his horse one of the couriers. His body was found a few days after, stripped of everything; but the bag of letters remained beside him untouched. The horse and the firearms are what the Indians want, and they wisely consider that meddling with the letters would only unnecessarily irritate Uncle Sam without doing them any good.

The dangerous ground extended about three hundred and fifty miles from Salt Lake, in Utah territory, west to Carson city. In this district the interruptions became so incessant that it was considered necessary to "haul off the pony" from that particular section of the route. On the other portions the express continued to run, delivering its letters at Salt Lake and Carson City, where they accumulated, waiting the first favourable opportunity to push through with safety.

THE ITALIAN EXPOSITION AT FLORENCE ON THE FIRST DAY OF FREE ADMISSION.—SEE PAGE 382.

Those unacquainted with the country west of the Rocky Mountains can scarcely appreciate the difficulty and danger attending a journey through it. For hundreds of miles it is a long dreary waste, inhabited only by bands of warlike Indians, who prowl about robbing and killing as they choose, and dotted at every fifteen miles of distance with the stations of the pony express, in charge of two or three persons. Occasionally its monotony is broken by the passage of a train of emigrant wagons bound west to California or Oregon. Night and day, heedless of the weather or the attacks of the redskins, the pony courier dashes along, at the rate of twelve miles an hour, his revolver in his belt, his hand on the trigger of his rifle, his eye watching intently for redskins, so that he may have the first shot; under him, on the saddle, is the bag of letters so anxiously looked forward to in New York, for they tell important things—how ships have sailed for Europe laden with Californian gold, of terrible wrecks and losses, or of rising markets and great gains, or perhaps how the votes have counted that decide the destiny of States. Not only to America is this bold and solitary rider's leather saddle-bag of interest, but on to Europe will electricity and steam send many a long-looked-for message which it contains; and the merchant on many a change in the Old World will tell of news he has received so soon from the farthest shores of the Pacific. He little knows, and less cares, for the hairbreadth dangers run by this lonely courier of the plains and mountains. Altogether, the Pony Express Company have lost six men killed by the Indians. They, however, provide liberally for the wives and families, if there be any.

It is a remarkable fact that they have as yet lost only one mail, and this one was lost under peculiar circumstances. The letters are inclosed in two leather bags, which are slung across the pony's back, and are kept in their place by the rider sitting on them, so that in case of anything happening to him the bags fall off and are not covered, though the pony scamper off and be lost. In the case alluded to the rider had, against special instructions, fastened the bags to the saddle. On a dark night in July, 1860, the express, bound east, was crossing the bridge over the Platte River, stumbled over an ox that had taken up its quarters there for the night, and was precipitated into the river. The rider reached the shore, but the pony and the mails were gone no one knows whither, never having been heard of to this day.

The company have suffered severely from first to last by the depredations of the Indians; they are, however, now in a much better state. The express was almost driven off the line west of Salt Lake City, their stations being burnt or otherwise destroyed, their people killed, and their horses stolen. All, however, is now repaired and in better order than ever—the troops of the United States' Government and a force organised by the company having driven the Indians away, and made them as scarce, and their occupation as dangerous, as it would be in the State of New York.

There is nothing very particular about either the pony or the rider: the riders are small, courageous, active young men, capable of great endurance; the ponies, or rather small horses, are the best description of animals for the purpose that can be procured. There is nothing showy or ornamental about either riders or horses; yet they are very picturesque, and are evidentally got up entirely for business. Our Artist saw one of the expresses arrive at St. Joe. The young man who rode was a long, wiry, reddish-haired chap, who looked made to gallop through the world on a horse's back. He wore a red worsted shirt, a rowdy hat, and a long, light blue great-coat, with a little cape and plenty of brass buttons. This young man had ridden on one occasion two hundred miles in twenty-four hours without rest or food, except such as he could get on the pony's back. The rider usually rides fifty miles, using two ponies, who run twenty-five miles each.

The pony express does not pay the running expenses directly, but the company continue it nevertheless, allowing a little extra time during the winter.

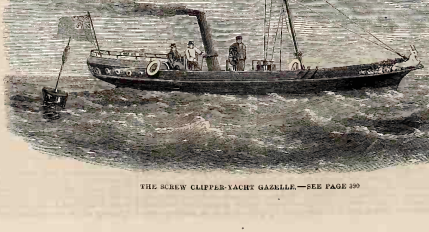
St. Joseph, or St. Joe, as it is irreverently called by the Americans, is a pretty good town situated on the east bank of the Missouri River; it is the western terminus of the Hanibal and St. Joe Railway, which completes the American system of railways westward.

St. Joe has much the same relation to the great plains that a seaport has to the ocean: it is the point of arrival and departure after a three-months' voyage overland of hundreds of travellers and waggon-loads who make the passage between California, Oregon, and the Western States of the Union. The passage across the mountains and over the plains is as lonely as a voyage across the ocean. Neither towns nor villages are met with, and the emigrant-train has to depend upon its own resources as much as a ship does while navigating the sea.

There is a wild look about the people at St. Joe. Nearly everybody carries a rifle, and has that peculiar expression of combativeness which indicates the possession of the ability to take care of himself and cut up particularly rough if interfered with. Some awful roughs may be seen about occasionally, but these are held in good check by the respectable portion of the place; and, although St. Joe is a wild, out-of-the-way place, almost beyond the reach of the law, yet the people go about as safely, and carry on their business as securely, as if they were in the neighbourhood of Boston. Should any of the border ruffian class attempt any villany, Lynch law would soon likely cut short his career, and he might find himself hanging to the branch of a tree before he had time to engage counsel to prove his innocence of the crime which he was caught in the act of executing. It is an even and a picturesque scene to see one of the long trains of waggons arrive from the westward, the people looking so brown and weather-worn and the children healthy and happy, and the rush all make immediately at certain shops and stores. One great delight on the part of the men seems to be to get themselves shaved as clean as possible; fine bright-coloured shirts and handkerchiefs are immediately obtained and ostentatiously exhibited.

Market-day at St. Joe is a peculiar sight, and gives a better idea of the back-settlement life than can be obtained anywhere else. The farmer and his family, in their particular waggon, which, with the exception of the wheels, they have made themselves, are things to be seen. There is no place in the United States where greater variety of character, interesting incidents, and opportunity for the study of human nature, exists to a greater extent than at St. Joe, on the Missouri.

We shall give an illustration of the town of St. Joe in an early Number.



THE SCREW CLIPPER-YACHT GAZELLE.—SEE PAGE 390

LITERATURE.

MEMOIR, LETTERS, AND REMAINS OF ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE. Macmillan.

This book is mainly a translation from a work of M. Gustave de Beaumont, which is already well known and widely circulated in French Considerable additions, however, have been made to the original, and much has been done beyond mere translation to render it acceptable to the English public; among them are to be found selections from the journals of Mr. Senior, which contained notes of his conversations with M. De Tocqueville, and, though confessedly slight and inadequate, they are given as specimens of a talent which the subject of this memoir possessed in so much perfection as the art of writing; and they are valuable as the only existing records of his conversational power. The now known and parts of letters are published. The work which the English publics were, it is supposed, omitted by M. de Beaumont as unintelligible to any but persons who have some knowledge of French politics were probably deemed to be offensive to the existing Government in France. Neither of those objections apply to an English publication, and we are glad to possess the whole of the work from which the present editor had in view. He states that he is anxious to exhibit M. de Tocqueville in two characters, in each of which he was eminent, that of a conversor and that of a practical politician. It is argued that M. de Beaumont's book could not exhibit him in the former, and, although it does show him in the latter, the representation is rather an outline than a picture. It does justice to his ardent love of liberty, his courage, and the sagacity with it was allied. In Beaumont's memoir and the published letters show principally his public views, whereas the extracts made from Mr. Senior's journals and from the hitherto unpublished journals contain De Tocqueville's feelings and opinions on the public events of France and England as they took place. His criticisms of the past, his antici pations of the future, his regrets, his fears, his hopes, and his plans, were expressed too fully, and on too intimate terms generally, to be fit for a French publication; but they are likely to be appreciated in this country—at least, in the wide circle to which the writer's name and works are familiar and valued. In 1836, soon after the publication of his first work, "Democracy in America," and the appearance in the London and Westminster Review, Mr. John Stuart Mill, asked De Tocqueville for an article upon France; upon which he wrote a very striking paper entitled "Social and Political State of France," which appeared in the Review in April of that year, translated by Mr. Mill himself. This article is now republished, and is made a preface to the two chapters of his work on the French Revolution, which was to have formed the second part of his task. "I Lavisse, I regime et la Revolution," the first part of which was published in 1856. This, with two chapters of "France before the Consulate," "Extracts from a Tour in Sicily," "A Visit to Lord Lyndhurst," and "A Fortnight in the Wilderness," make up the list here given of De Tocqueville's unpublished works. He, however, left another unfinished manuscript, upon which the most considerable was probably that which he had commenced on the "Establishment of the Constitution of the United States" entitled this important question, and collected a considerable number of documents relating to it. The book was to have been divided into three parts: the first of the first in the year of the French State of British India." The whole of this part was written out, and would make about sixty pages of print. Here are the chapter-heads:—"The Hindoo religion is abominable; perhaps the only one that is worse than an atheism." The first is a fact that the writer has carefully written, though the order of the thoughts and distribution of subjects were settled—was "Effects of the British Empire upon the Hindoos." Was the blind part was settled "How the British Power in India may be Overturned." Looking to what has occurred since this work was projected and planned, it is a curious matter of speculation to know how so acute an observer and so practical a politician could have dealt with the last event of the list. It is clear that the writer's very important manuscript, under the name of "Souvenirs," which, it is stated, will certainly be one day published, and will make up an octavo volume. These souvenirs, which he commenced at Sorrento in 1850 and 1851, relate chiefly to the revolution of 1848 and to the following year. They will no doubt form a most precious fragment of contemporary history; but the time for publishing them has not yet come, the writer having expressed a wish that no part should appear during the life of any whom it might injure. It is, however, to his private letters that De Tocqueville's biographer and the intelligent translator is mainly indebted for the rich materials which he has so fully written, though the order of the thoughts and distribution of subjects were settled—was "Effects of the British Empire upon the Hindoos." Was the blind part was settled "How the British Power in India may be Overturned." Looking to what has occurred since this work was projected and planned, it is a curious matter of speculation to know how so acute an observer and so practical a politician could have dealt with the last event of the list. It is clear that the writer's very important manuscript, under the name of "Souvenirs," which, it is stated, will certainly be one day published, and will make up an octavo volume. These souvenirs, which he commenced at Sorrento in 1850 and 1851, relate chiefly to the revolution of 1848 and to the following year. They will no doubt form a most precious fragment of contemporary history; but the time for publishing them has not yet come, the writer having expressed a wish that no part should appear during the life of any whom it might injure. It is, however, to his private letters that De Tocqueville's biographer and the intelligent translator is mainly indebted for the rich materials

The yellow-haired laddie, Gerard Gerardine, belongs not to Fiction but to History. She has recorded his birth in her memoirs:—"Here ends Pauline Lafont's history in the Rue Rivoli. Here begins that of Madame Gerardine, whose name only changes because Rivarol, Count de Rivarol, has her yet to do. She has no more composition than Mr. Bull: everything with her and other persons is spontaneous. She has handed nameless Erasmus from one other person to another, from one parish to another, from one country to another, from one house to another, from one garret to another, from one cellar to another, from one prison to another, from one hospital to another, from one lunatic asylum to another, from one madhouse to another, from one grave to another, from one resurrection to another, from one immortality to another, from one eternity to another, from one nothingness to another, from one something to another, from one everything to another, from one all to another, from one universe to another, from one infinity to another, from one God to another, from one creation to another, from one creator to another, from one creature to another, from one man to another, from one woman to another, from one child to another, from one baby to another, from one cradle to another, from one nurse to another, from one mother to another, from one father to another, from one family to another, from one tribe to another, from one nation to another, from one people to another, from one race to another, from one species to another, from one genus to another, from one order to another, from one class to another, from one kingdom to another, from one sphere to another, from one world to another, from one system

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, SOUTH DALTON, YORKSHIRE.

THE new Church of Dalton-Holme, near Beverley, in the East Riding of York, was consecrated a short time since by the Archbishop of York, by the name of St. Mary, South Dalton, as the parish church of the parish of Dalton-Holme, or the united parish of South Dalton and Holme-on-the-Wolds, now to be formed by an order of the Queen in Council under the provisions of the 18 and 19 Vic., c. 127. This was considered desirable from the smallness of the endowment of Holme, and was deprived of the objections which might have attached to the arrangement from the circumstance that the two villages are less than half a mile apart, that both the old churches are in a very dilapidated condition, and that the united population is under 500 souls. The new church is a good example of a country church. It is from the designs of Mr. J. L. Pearson, of Earley-court, and has been built as a thank-offering by Lieut.-General Lord Hotham, M.P., the patron and principal landowner, at a cost exceeding £20,000. The style is late Early English or Transition Decorated. Outside it is Stanley and Ireton Park grey stone, which last is laid in dark mortar, to relieve its whiteness; but there is an absence of constructive and decorative polychrome, which is now the vogue, and which Mr. Pearson has himself freely used in some of his recent works. Except the encaustic tiles of the floor and the windows by Clayton and Bell (who filled the large windows at the east and west with glass of extreme richness, the whole of the other windows of which were filled by the same artists with ornamental stars), the effect of shadow from recessed arcading and panels, and deep mouldings, and the abundant employment of bold carving in the cornices, capitals, and soffits, have been relied on rather than the use of colour. The plan is cruciform—deep chancel with two side chapels, transepts, and nave, with a south porch; but the chief feature is a richly-ornamented western tower and spire, 200ft. high, with an open belfry-stage. The roofs of the porch and tower are grooved in stone, and the remainder of the church has a bold open-timber roof. The chancel stalls are by Rattee of Cambridge, and the seats in the body of the church by Bingham of Ipswich, all of oak, and enriched by elaborate carving. The screen inclosing the chapels—the one for an organ and vestry, the other for the Hotham monuments removed from the old church—as all the other iron work, is by Skidmore of Coventry. The stone carving is by Mr. J. J. Smith. The bells are by Mears; and the clock, with a chimes the quarters, is by Frodsham.

NEW ALMSHOUSES AT OLD BUCKENHAM.

We had the pleasure of announcing a few weeks ago that a range of buildings, forming ten almshouses, had been erected at Old Buckenham, Norfolk. The inmates were installed a short time since by their benefactor, Mr. Robert Cocks, of New Burlington-street, London, who at his own cost purchased the land and erected these buildings for the benefit of the poor deserving inhabitants born in the above-named village. Mr. Cocks has also endowed them with 2s. a week each and a ton of coals yearly for ever. A Bible, of large type, is placed in each house for the use of the inmates. The frontage of the buildings is about 222ft. Each house consists of a living-room and bedroom, each 10ft. 6in. square and 9ft. high in the clear, both lighted from the front. The floors of the living-rooms are paving-tiles on 6in. of concrete; those of the bedrooms are of wood. Each room has a fireplace fitted with Pierce's cottager's stove; also a cupboard and other conveniences. Opening from the living-rooms are washhouses 8ft. square, with sink and a place for coals; also a separate closet for each house. The buildings are of red brick, with white brick and Bath stone dressings, the two ends being brought forward 3ft., with pointed gables and moulded stone coping and angular buttresses. In each gable is a shield and monogram (R.C.) in a quatrefoil. There are two porches to centre houses, projecting, and carried up with a gable and buttress, also containing a stone tablet with inscription. The whole is roofed with Bangor Duchess slating, and surmounted by an ornamental ridge and crest tiling. The sashes are of cast iron. Three sides of the ground are inclosed with a red brick wall, 8ft. 9in. high, coped with white saddle-back coping bricks, the gate piers being carried up somewhat higher and surmounted with stone caps, weathered, and gables on all sides. At the rear of the buildings, in the centre, forming the water supply, is a well of spring water and a rain-water tank; the whole of the rain water being collected from the various roofs and conducted by means of glazed earthenware pipes into the tank. The cost of the buildings, including the purchase of the ground, is about £2000, this sum being exclusive of the architect's fees and the endowment. The builders are Messrs. Loveday, of Old Buckenham, who have executed the work from the designs and under the superintendence of Mr. Thos. Dyke, architect, of London.

THE GAZELLE.

THIS screw clipper-yacht was built at Rotherham for Mr. F. W. Dodds, C.E., for the purpose of testing the capabilities of his patent steeled plates for shipbuilding purposes, as well as to test the patent "wedge" expansive motion for marine engines. The vacht is 71ft. in length, 7ft. in breadth, 3ft. draught forward, and 4ft. 3in. aft; the plates are 11 wire gauge, except the plates on each side of the keel, which are 3-16ths of an inch thick; the keel is one solid forging from stem to stern. The advantages attained by the use of these steel plates are extreme lightness, with increased strength, and the liability to oxydize is reduced to one-fifth that of iron. The engines are high-pressure, direct-acting, of 16 horse-power, fitted with the "wedge" expansive motion, which reduces the working parts very materially, there being but one eccentric working direct to both valves, without the intervention of weigh-bars or other intermediate machinery, and by which means the engines are worked with variable expansion, stopped, or reversed, by one handle; in fact, the engines are the simplest ever introduced for marine purposes. The boiler is on the locomotive principle, with copper firebox and brass tubes. The steel screw is 3ft. 10in. diameter and 6ft. pitch. This elegant little vessel is beautifully fitted up, and the cabin is capable of holding thirteen persons comfortably.

The first trial of speed on the River Ouse was considered satisfactory, she having run twenty miles in one hour and twenty minutes, with tide in her favour. In the second trial, with tide in favour all the way, a run of thirty-three miles was made on the Humber in one hour fifty minutes; and in running back against the tide the run of thirty miles was made in two hours thirty-five minutes. To show the strength of the Gazelle, it may be mentioned that she has been suspended at the stem and stern (having the engines and boiler on board) without any perceptible deflection.

THE FIRST ENGLISH CHURCH IN AUSTRIA.

On Friday, Sept. 13, the first stone of an English church was laid at Karlsbad, Bohemia, the "King of German watering-places." For upwards of five years this project has been under discussion, the many hundreds of English families yearly visiting Karlsbad having meanwhile no better place of worship than a ballroom or the saloon of an almost inaccessible Gasthaus. The Colonial and Continental Church Society had given its aid, and a subscription had been raised; but a commencement this year was only rendered practicable through the exertions of the Rev. R. W. Greaves, a member of the society's committee, who chanced to be a visitor. He was warmly seconded in his endeavours by Sir Henry Buntinck (a Crimean hero), Colonel Thoresby, the Rev. Augustus Hewitt, and others, to whom the English may consider themselves indebted for the carrying out of their long-cherished wish. The ceremony was conducted in the presence of the English clergyman, and also of many inhabitants, who testified a lively interest in the event. Sir Henry Buntinck laid the stone, with an appropriate address, which was translated into German; and a Karlsbad banker, containing coins and inscriptions, was deposited in a hollow of the block of granite. The design is by Edwin Christian, Esq., and shows great taste, being a simple Early English church, with high-pitched roof and bell turret. A portion of the Gartenthal, a site both quiet and easy of access, was purchased for the sum of £200, and vested, by direction of the Austrian Government, in the names of five English noblemen and gentlemen. It is estimated that about £150 have still to be collected; and, as many who have benefited by the waters of Karlsbad may like to contribute, we may mention that subscriptions for the English church in Karlsbad "will be gladly received by the treasurer, R. Marjoribanks, Esq.; Messrs. Coutts, Strand; or by the Rev. Messe Thomas, secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, 9, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, E.C.

ENGLISH CHURCH TO BE ERECTED AT KARLSBAD, BOHEMIA.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, ALBERT-SQUARE, CLAPHAM.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, ALBERT-SQUARE, CLAPHAM.

THIS new church, in the parish of South Lambeth, was consecrated some short time since by the Bishop of Winchester. It is built on a waste piece of land at the back of Albert-square, in part the gift of the copyholder, Mr. T. T. Wilkinson, and enfranchised by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

The plan is to some extent cruciform, terminating at the east end with transepts, a chancel, and a vestry. It is a very pretty church externally, and the interior is very good in effect. The tower, with its lofty and elegant spire (the entire height being 140ft.), on the left of the principal and western entrance, compares well with the rest of the church. It is divided into three stages—the first is a library, the second a clockroom, and the third a belfry-floor. The walls are built of Kentish rag and Bath stone dressings. The nave is 40ft. wide and 50ft. in height from the floor to the ridge of the roof. It is in one span, and is lighted by five windows, 22ft. high, terminating in the roof. In the transepts are large traceried windows, filled with stained glass. There is a rose window over the principal entrance, and another in the chancel. The roof is supported by six arched principals, springing from a small column of red Mansfield stone. The church is calculated to hold about 1200 persons, there being 463 free seats. It has been erected at the cost of Sir Rev. Charles Kemble, M.A., Rector of Bath, from the designs of Mr. John Barrett, of Gray's Inn, the contractor being Mr. Meyers.

A parsonage-house is attached, and the Incumbent is the Rev. J. H. Titcomb, of St. Peter's College, Cambridge.

NEW ALMSHOUSES AT OLD BUCKENHAM, NEAR ATTLEBOROUGH, NORFOLK, FOUNDED BY MR. ROBERT COCKS.

RIPON CATHEDRAL.—The dilapidation and decay of the cathedral having been reported by Mr. Scott as in dangerous state of dilapidation, an influential meeting was held yesterday week at Ripon, under the presidency of Earl De Grey, to take steps to place the structure in an efficient state of repair. The estimated cost of the necessary repairs is £17,000; of the improvements and alterations necessary to restore the building to its original beauty, £10,000; and of warming, refitting, and lighting, £5000: making a total of £32,000. This it is proposed to raise by subscriptions.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1113.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE PREMIER'S VACATION.

An eminent poet and laborious student who passed away some years since was accustomed to give himself what he called rest simply by changing the subjects of his literary research. When jaded with metaphysics he turned to history, and when his faculties dimmed over its pages he stimulated and refreshed them by copious draughts of poetic lore; but, as the story goes, it never occurred to him to allow his mind or his memory to lie fallow for a season. It is true that he has been convicted of his mistake by his having drifted into the state which has been described by that phrase in which Johnson described the last days of Swift, and no one is desirous of holding him up as an example. Setting aside a certain morbidity of temperament which must have underlain the mental organisation of the poet to whom we allude, and recollecting that in his case the nature of his habits indisposed, if they did not entirely preclude, him from physical exertion, he may be taken to be a type of many a man in this busy, work-a-day life of ours. A very cursory perusal of the journals for the last two months will give us a special example of the sort of activity which characterises many of our public men, but which is developed in the highest degree in him whose rank in the service of the country places him at the head of our social and governmental system, and who seems to think it necessary to do all he can to vindicate his personal claims to the position he holds. Relieved from the toils of Parliament, and perhaps the turmoils of Cabinet Councils, Lord Palmerston has vigorously taken up another kind of employment at a time when he might reasonably be expected to subside into a couple of months, at least, of well-earned leisure. It appears to be his idea of enjoying his vacation that he should go through tours of inspection of men and things, and to give as much opportunity as possible to the British public for ascertaining by personal knowledge what manner of man he is who, as the Prime Minister of England, is held in such popular esteem. To go back no further, last autumn he made what may be called a progress in the north of England, and did as much of the work which is peculiar to his position as could well be crowded into the space of time which was occupied by that which to him was a pleasant excursion. This year, however, he seems to have been multiplying himself;—to have acquired a temporary ubiquity. His appearances have been as numerous and as rapid as those of Ariel in the storm-beaten ship of the King. In the first place, having accepted the post of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and having discovered that hitherto there was nothing for that functionary to do, he fell back upon tradition, and, inculcating the necessity of adhering to prescription, he revived in his own favour the lapsed duties of the office, and, having set the hall rolling by means of a solemn and effective inaugurating ceremonial, he was to be found presiding as chairman of the meetings of a board which seemed to smack a good deal of a vestry, and adjudicating on points which might easily have been disposed of by the smallest attorney that ever enjoyed the mild importance which attaches to a clerk of justices in petty sessions assembled. Then, day after day, we hear of his attending the inspection of volunteer corps, putting in an apt word or two of encouragement, seasoned with morsels of practical advice.

THE CORONATION OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF PRUSSIA: VIEW OF KONIGSBERG FROM THE TOWER OF THE FORTIFIED BARRACKS NEAR THE HERZOGSACKER.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

Next he is head of carefully examining the first of the new ironclads any of England; and straightway we find him picking his way with sharp if not technically critical eye among the works of those fortifications which he has declared to be necessary for the security of the country, in the invincibility of which no man more thoroughly and religiously believes than himself. His latest, and most probably by no means his last, appearance during the Parliamentary recess has been at Southampton, when, in his mixed character of country neighbour and chief Minister of State, he undertook a duty which need not absolutely have demanded the services of any one beyond the rank of a local functionary, the services of any one or a Member for a county such as a Mayor or a Lord Lieutenant, or a member for a county or borough. Nevertheless, there he was, dealing with a matter which has arisen and fallen into his way in no offhand yet practical fashion, exhibiting that aptness and versatility which in him take the place of inspiration.

It is a great desideratum in oratory that a speaker should make at least one point remarkable for novelty in itself, or for the resetting of old ideas in a novel shape. As a rule, Lord Palmerston never makes a speech, certainly never on any special and predetermined occasion, in which he does not say something which is caught up at once and remembered. Sayings of this sort have been many and years ago have reached to the dignity of apothegms, some of them well worthy of traditionary preservation; others, perhaps, which he would be glad to have forgotten, but which, from their point and adaptation to the matter to which they were applied, though the judicious shake their heads at them, are quoted and words with those who cherish a witticism without caring to inquire too curiously into the morality of its expression. This time, having to deliver an address to the successful competitors for the prizes awarded to the last Oxford middle-class examinations, he gave us one of the best examples of his powers as a rhetorical and practical speaker. Admitting to the full the principle of competitive examinations, he took a broad and useful view of the whole subject, touching on its salient points with so sure, yet at the same time so light and apparently careless, a hand that the happy result which followed seemed due rather to accident than to art or effort. In his character of a patron of the system his object was to vindicate competitive examinations from the objections which have direte eventually to the admission of the best and not to have been made against them, and, if possible, to settle at least one of the vexed questions by which they are still surrounded. And here his peculiar faculty came especially into play. This was the opportunity for creating a phrase, or enunciating an epigram, which would run like wildfire through the country, and in its rapid course sweep away a whole wilderness of doubts and objections. Seizing on the word "examining," which has been the battle-horse of the opponents of the competitive system, he embalmed it in a few sentences of such point and pith as these:—"Some people say that competitive examinations tend to a system of cramming; and it is often the case that a man will insist upon a word they imagine that word to be an argument, and they go about repeating it, thinking they have arrived at some great and irresistible conclusion. When they say 'cramming' they think they have utterly discredited the system to which they apply that word; but these men imagine that the human mind is like a bottle, and that when you have filled it with anything you can pour that out, and it remains empty as it was before. That, however, is not the nature of the human mind. A boy who is crammed, as it is said, has, in point of fact, learnt a great deal, and that learning has established two objects. First of all, the faculties of his mind are exercised in being crammed; and in the next place, there remains in his mind a great portion of the knowledge so acquired which forms the basis probably of future attainments in different branches of human knowledge." Now, not to speak it profanely, few persons are better able to speak of the advantages, if any, of "cramming" than a statesman and perpetual holder of office of some fifty years' standing. He can remember well, if in a not exactly witness, some of the results of that operation in the case of the "heaven-born" Minister who, ignorant of a question of the world" be an unimpeachable master of it this day week; to-day, would be can know better than Lord Palmerston how, and on one can know better than Lord Palmerston how, and on one say, a country gentleman of moderate abilities and no experience but of quarter sessions, established and finding himself First Lord of the Admiralty, sits down before a regular official bench, receives his main and general allowance of "cramming," which, however, does not prevent the necessity of a daily dose of that commodity, to be taken on the spot by the doctors say. Taking, therefore, his Lordship's assertion with such qualification as necessarily belong to its enunciation, by one who is in some sort a dealer in that which he defends, it is undoubted that he has given a very decided buffet to a somewhat prevalent and certainly much over-strained objection to the system of competitive examinations, and so far has done a service to that system which is in a manner established among us.

Perhaps more happy, while equally pregnant, was the mode in which the Premier dealt with another objection to the system of middle-class examinations, that which is, that they tend to teach young men things which will be of no use to them in their immediate career, and that they tend to create in the students more vanity and conceit. The argument used was as ingenious as it was true, and the illustrations were apt and pointed. If this objection means anything at all, it means that certain faculties of the mind which were to be called into immediate use in the ordinary routine of life of the student were also to be exercised, and their general powers of mind were to be left dormant, if not stifled, with a result which can only be characterised as stolidity and ignorance. The wider and more efficient training of the new system aims at rousing and at the same time disciplining the powers of the youthful mind, and, while it makes the aspirant master of one at least, or it may be two, branches of knowledge, it to use the words of Lord Palmerston, "sharpens the wits, infuses general knowledge into the mind, and sets a young man thinking; and, instead of merely crowding his memory with facts, it gives him that habit of thought and that custom of exercising his intellect in a great variety of subjects which make him a better and a more able man in the particular profession which he intends to pursue." This is, in fact, the answer to an objection which is by no means novel, inasmuch as it was used as an old-world obstacle to any system of popular education at all. The cry was that the diffusion of instruction implied social disorganisation, inasmuch as it tended to nullify the system of classes by rendering those in lower stations restless, dissatisfied, and (in this world less the whole secret) unmanageable. Time and experience have given the lie to those pestilences, and the deliberate opinion of one who from the highest coign of vantage has witnessed the operation of both systems is now pronounced in favour of the later and better state of things.

It may be that the activity and energy which Lord Palmerston has exhibited to the public eye in the last few weeks are only a part of those labours in the public service to which he is known assiduously to devote himself, but it seems to us that in public appearances when they take such a tone as that at Southampton, are not among the least important of those services. A distinguished colleague of the noble Lord has just said of him that all the disparagements of and strictures which have been made upon him on the continent of Europe resolved themselves into this—that he is too essentially with regard to the interests of his country. That was interpreted, this means that Lord Palmerston is heart and soul an Englishman—that his one object is statesman and as a man is to preserve unimpaired the interests and the weal of England. This is the secret of his personal influence, and this is the impulse which bids him, while others are cringing and sneering at what they call their natural rest, from place to place, inquiring and seeing for himself, stimulating efforts for social improvement, and by his active example encouraging those who are engaged in the same battle of life; and England may well boast that it is thus that the Premier spends his vacation.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The King of Holland arrived at Compiègne on Saturday evening last, and was received by the Emperor and Empress. The Empress met him at the foot of the grand staircase. On Sunday morning the Emperor and the King arrived in Paris, and on Wednesday their Majesties returned to Vienna.

The Prince and Princess Napoleon arrived at Brest on the 7th inst., from America, having touched on their return at St. John's, Newfoundland. The voyage from Boston to Newfoundland was accomplished in three days, and from Newfoundland to Brest in six days and a half. The Prince and Princess have gone to Compiègne.

The Emperor has given a frigate to the Gulf of Mexico war steamer, which will carry the name of the Monitor, which published officially an account yesterday week of the capture of Tampico, and the appointment of Admiral Jurien de Ingraviere to the command of the squadron, and likewise of the appointment of Captains to five of the vessels of which the force part of the expedition.

A letter printed in Paris purporting to be from Napoleon III. to the King of Naples has been published in Paris, and is translated in the London Gazette and the Monitore deny its genuineness.

The Moniteur announced on Wednesday that, in consequence of the Emperor Napoleon's decision, which was taken into consideration the question of the publication of anonymous pamphlets." Such publication is forbidden for the future in France, by the Government.

A terrible calamity is reported from a mine at Lille bursting of a reservoir of water, by which more than one hundred men were killed, so that the sides collapsed, and in progress to rescue them were buried. Strenuous efforts are in progress to rescue these unfortunate men. Cries and the sound of tapping are heard from the interior of the mine. Several excavations have been made, and a strong desire to see friends and relatives awaken a strong desire to see friends in appropriate terms.

Some of the workmen buried in the mine are in a good condition.

SPAIN.

The Infanta Donna Maria de la Concepcion is better.

The Madrid Gazette contains a long account of the reception by the Queen on the 7th inst., of the Moorish Prince Muley el Abbas, and the Princes Sidi Mohamed Ben Ismaeen, Sidi Mohamed Ben Arafa Arabie, of which M. Calderon Collantes, Minister of Foreign Affairs, afterwards read a long speech. The discourse was fluid in style and answered a strong desire to see friendly relations established between Spain and Morocco. The Queen replied in appropriate terms.

Despatches of the Mexican expedition to the effect that is to act in war between the English and French squadrons. The Spanish squadron will be composed of the two frigates Isabella Triffe of force will consist of four screw-steamers, and six other vessels Lavalette and Concepcion, two large steamers, and six other vessels of lighter draught. The squadron will be commanded by Admiral Rubalcaba, as senior officer in the Antilles. The number of troops to be disembarked in Mexico is about 8000, of whom 4000 will be sent from Cuba. The Government has left the General-in-Chief the choice of the commander of the Cuban contingent. The expedition will consist of 30 ships of the line. The departure of the first squadron is expected to sail from the Spanish ports towards the end of the present month.

The Correspondencia states that the Government of Peru has protested against the annexation of St. Domingo to Spain.

The ecclesiastical authorities of Spain have commenced a prosecution of the modern form of spiritualism. All papers and tables-turners are placed under arrest. On the 9th inst., by an order from the Bishop seized and destroyed. On the 10th, all spiritualistic literature were burned on the of Barcelona, and other volumes of the same kind was under the direction of a priest in full canonical dress, carrying a cross in one hand and a torch in the other. He was hooted by the crowd assembled to witness the ceremony by spectators frequently shouted "Viva la Religion!"

The city of Gerona, in the province of Catalonia, has been visited by great inundations, whereby immense damage was done to property.

PORTUGAL.

The King is making a tour through the provinces. His Majesty has decorated Baron Riccioli with the cross of the Order of the Conception of Vila Vicosa.

The vintage has proved much more favourable than last year, but there is a deficiency in the grain crops.

A Royal decree has been issued opening the ports for the admission of foreign grain until April, 1862.

The last census of the population of Portugal and adjacent isles gives a total of 3,923,110 inhabitants.

ITALY.

The Official Gazette of Monday publishes a decree reorganising the different departments of the Ministry of the Interior.

The Kingdom decreed that all Italians who dying have deserved well of their country are to receive the honour of burial beneath the High Cross of Florence.

General Cialdini has definitively resigned the lieutenancy of Naples. He will leave Naples in the latter part of this month. His reasons are said to be the cessation of brigandage and the re-establishment of public security in the southern provinces. The Chamber of Commerce of Naples has presented a vote of thanks to General Cialdini for re-establishing public security in the Neapolitan provinces. General Della Marmora has accepted the command of the troops in the southern provinces.

It is denied that Garibaldi has left Caprera.

Events are rumoured their course at Rome. Schism is reported as rapidly receding among the clergy at the obstinacy of the Pope and his councillors. Monsignor Nardi, a priest of some social importance in his own sphere, has been arrested on a charge of having taken part in, and some executions have been seized and imprisoned as suspected, while the apartments and papers of others have been rummaged.

AUSTRIA.

According to advices received from Vienna the Empress of Austria had arrived in Albania, where she will stay for some time for the benefit of her health.

In consequence of the representations made to the Ministry by the Transylvanian Government, the opening of the Transylvanian Diet has been adjourned to the 15th of November next. Several magistrates of Hungary have prohibited the public functionaries from accepting any election as deputies to the Diet of Pesth.

The Hungarian Diet, meeting the Assembly of the Comitat of Arad, has lately dissolved, will remain in office till the 1st of November next, in order to prevent anarchy.

PRUSSIA.

The resignation of M. de Schleinitz as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his appointment to the post of Royal household, are announced. Bernstorff, the Prussian Minister in London, succeeds M. de Schleinitz in the Foreign Department.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia paid a visit on the 11th inst. to Lord Clarendon at the Royal Hotel, where Lord Ashley, Lady Charendon, and two daughters are staying.

THE CORONATION FESTIVITIES.

The ceremonials connected with the coronation commenced on Monday with the entrance of the King and Queen into Konigsberg. Their Majesties arrived at the gates of Konigsberg at twelve o'clock, where they were received by the Royal Princes, the Generals, the Presidents, and the other authorities. The King was on horseback, and the Queen and the Royal children were in a carriage. Each was surrounded by the Princes of the Royal house, the Generals, the state carriage drawn by eight horses. The carriage travelled amid the crowds on their way through the streets, which were lined with the Brandenburg guard, and was accompanied by a discharge of cannon and the ringing of bells. The procession proceeded through the gate, and the ringing of bells. The procession proceeded through the gate, formed by the corporation of the city, and consisting of the municipality, the clergy, and the crowds being everywhere very great. All the houses were richly decorated, and were filled with spectators to the highest degree. Their Majesties were received by the Princesses of the Royal house and the body of the officers and clergy. The streets of the city is enormous. After her of strangers who had arrived in the city is enormous. After her solemn entry, the King received the civil and military authorities, and the Royal suite, expressing his satisfaction, and telling them that he was full of confidence in the future development of all interests under the free action of all classes of the people." In the evening their Majesties and the Royal family visited the theatre, where they met with enthusiastic reception. At one pm. the city and the military banks and encampments were illuminated, and the streets were thronged with the great crowds until midnight.

The festivities throughout the week have taken place, with slight exceptions, according to the published programme. We propose to be able to give next week some illustrations by our Special Artists of the great ceremonies.

KONIGSBERG.

This city, in which the coronation of the King and Queen of Prussia took place yesterday, and of which we give an illustration, is among the principal cities of the Prussian Empire, and being on the frontier of the Electors of Brandenburg. It still ranks as the fourth city of Prussian dominions in extent and population, having more than 80,000 inhabitants. Konigsberg has been strongly reforced on the plan of detached forts.

Murray's Handbook for Travellers on the Continent" supplies us with the following particulars respecting this city:—

"Its palace (Schloss), a large heavy building, now converted into a Government House, was founded by Ottokar, King of Bohemia, after leading a crusade against the Grand Masters of the Teutonic Order, and became the residence of the Grand Masters from the year 1332, the time of the Dukes of Prussia, by whom it was the residence of the late King of Prussia, Frederick William III., and his Queen Louisa, where the latter died in 1810. Here, also, Frederick I. in the Schlosskirche crowned himself King of Prussia, and where he was buried, also, his Frederick Elector of Brandenburg in 1701 placed the crown upon his own head, assuming the title of Frederick I., King of Prussia. The Crown head, assuming the title of Frederick I., King of Prussia. The Crown Tables are richly covered with close-written lists of names, showing how many brave men of the province fell in the great War of Liberation. In the Dom, or cathedral church is a vast hall, 300ft. long, 140 broad, and only 19 high, destitute of ornament, called Wallenrodt's Saal, from the Archbishop of Wallenrodt, Grand Duke of the Grand Duke Bantisan Simons Strasse; directly north from Schinkel's design in 1839-43, is the Royal Library, built also north from Schinkel's design in 1839-43, is the Royal Library, built also north from Schinkel's design in 1839-43, is the Royal Library, built also likewise been compelled to suspend instruction. In St. Petersburg twenty-five students have been arrested and incarcerated the fortress as political offenders, and on the 9th instant a meeting of students was dispersed by a body of the Imperial Guard. On that occasion the students are said to have been cheered by the assembled crowd of spectators; and it is added, somewhat ominously, that "several officers and pupils of the Military School were arrested."

RUSSIAN POLAND IN A STATE OF SIEGE.

A proclamation published on Monday declares the kingdom of Poland to be in a state of siege. The military have pitched their tents in the public squares and places of Warsaw. The wearing of mourning insignia is prohibited.

The immediate cause of the proclamation of the state of siege in Poland seems to have been a grand parting banquet given by the Polish nobility to the general who is about to attend the funeral of the Archbishop of Warsaw. The Princes and Counts joined with the peasants in drinking the toast of "The Fatherland," and the orchestra afterwards conducted the peasants to the railway station, singing spirited national songs. The Government saw in these demonstrations of the effects of the Kosciusko anniversary, which would have taken place on the 15th. The result was the issue of the proclamation, by which that and all other national meetings will be prohibited.

Notwithstanding the prohibition of the authorities and the proclamation of a state of siege, the projected demonstration took place at Warsaw on Sunday. Numerous arrests were made in consequence, and the crowds of people were dispersed by a charge of cavalry, without, however, any blood being shed.

The Prussian Gazette of Thursday has news from Warsaw asserting that quiet was again refused to have reigned in the streets of Warsaw on the night of the 15th inst. were arrested by the military, who, however, paid due respect to the sanctity of the places. No person was killed or even wounded.

TURKEY.

The Sultan has ordered the reorganisation of the Imperial Guard, which is to consist of 25,000 men.

The conferences on the union of the Danubian Principalities have been re-opened, and the representatives of the European Powers have acked for instructions from their Governments.

The Montenegrin Envoy has left Constantinople. He has failed in his negotiations with the Porte.

Letters from Constantinople state that the Sultan, in order to answer to the military activity of Servia, has decided on the formation of ten Albanian regiments, to be charged with the service of the frontier.

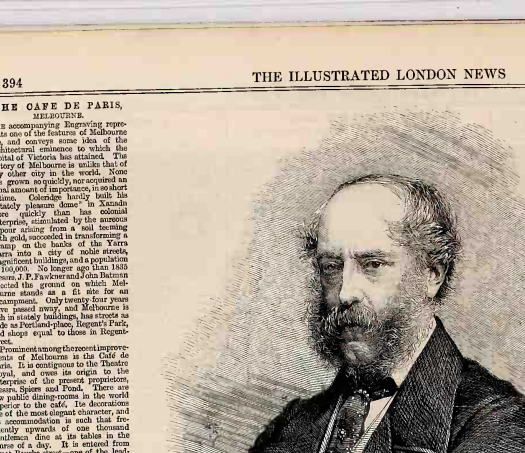
A telegram from Ragusa announces that the Turks have at length invaded the Montenegrin territory, attacking Lukovo and putting some of the inhabitants to death. The Montenegrin commander has appealed to the International Commissioners. The insurgents from Zubtsi, together with some Montenegrin volunteers, had attacked Zubtsi, together with some Montenegrin volunteers, had attacked Zubtsi, together with some Montenegrin volunteers, had attacked

THE CAFE DE PARIS, MELBOURNE.

THE accompanying Engraving represents one of the features of Melbourne life, and conveys some idea of the architectural eminence to which the capital of Victoria has attained. The history of Melbourne is unlike that of any other city in the world. None has grown so quickly, nor acquired an equal amount of importance, in so short a time. Colendge hardly hails his "stately pleasure dome" in Xanadu more quickly than has colonial enterprise, stimulated by the auriferous vapour arising from a soil teeming with gold, succeeded in transforming a swamp on the banks of the Yarra Yarra into a city of noble streets, magnificent buildings, and a population of 100,000. No longer ago than 1835 Messrs. J. P. Fawkner and John Batman selected the ground on which Melbourne stands as a fit site for an encampment. Only twenty-four years have passed away, and Melbourne is rich in stately buildings, has streets as wide as Portland-place, Regent's Park, and shops equal to those in Regent-street.

Prominent among the recent improvements of Melbourne is the Café de Paris. It is contiguous to the Theatre Royal, and owes its origin to the enterprise of the present proprietors, Messrs. Spiers and Pond. There are few public dining-rooms in the world superior to the café. Its decorations are of the most elegant character, and its accommodation is such that frequently upwards of one thousand gentlemen dine at its tables in the course of a day. It is entered from Great Bourke-street—one of the leading thoroughfares—and is in immediate proximity to the chief business portions of the town.

The project of taking the All England Eleven to Australia, if it did not originate with Messrs. Spiers and Pond, was at any rate carried out by them; those enterprising entrepreneurs having sent a confidential agent to this country with full powers and ample means to make arrangements with eleven of our picked cricketplayers to make a professional visit to Victoria. During their stay at Melbourne the Eleven will take up their abode at the Café de Paris.



THE LATE EARL OF EGLINTON AND WINTON.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 403.

THE EAGLE'S NEST.—BY SIR E. LANDSEER, R.A.

In this grand picture Sir E. Landseer gives a panoramic view of the rocky heights the abode of the golden eagle, below the silent solitude of the primeval hill. The nest of this species of eagle consists usually of a large mass of sticks and other similar materials carried to the spot from a distance, and covering some chasm in the ledge of the rock. In the composition before us the female eagle is sitting over the nest, screaming in recognition to her mate, which is darting homewards after a foray. The eye is skilfully carried up to this dizzy height by a beam of light falling on the bold head of the rock, near the midst of the picture, which afterwards glances down upon the wing of the female eagle. This fine picture, so poetic and imposing in its very simplicity, was exhibited at the British Institution in 1834. It forms part of the collection of works of modern British Artists presented to the nation by Mr. Sheepshanks, and exhibited at the South Kensington Museum.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF PRUSSIA.

FREDERICK WILLIAM LOUIS, the present King of Prussia, whose Portrait we engrave, is the second son of Frederick William III. and that Queen of Prussia whose name the harshness of Napoleon has caused to be encircled with a wreath of romance. He succeeded his elder brother, Frederick William IV., in the present year, after having, as is well known, exercised the functions of the Government of the kingdom as Regent for some time previously—that is, from Oct. 9, 1858. Having been born on March 22, 1797, he is now in his sixty-fourth year. Before he was called on to take the conduct of the affairs of his brother's kingdom he filled the posts of Military Governor of Rhenish Prussia and the King's Lieutenant in Pomerania. Until the time when he became Regent he observed a scrupulous abstinence from all uninvited interference with the affairs of the general Government, but manifested very decided sentiments whenever his opinions were invited by the King. In many, if not in most, respects he exhibited tastes and tendencies the very opposite of those for which the late King was especially noted. He displayed no ambition to be esteemed a patron of learning, a pietist, or a philosopher; and if he developed anything it was an inclination to be a Prince of Prussia of the school of Frederick the Great. He was placed nominally—though whether by his own consent or not is by no means clear—at the head of a section of politicians called the "Prince of Prussia's party," which supported the Constitution which has been so often promised, once given and withdrawn; but it was never considered certain that he would adhere to it on his accession to the throne. Alternately denounced as extreme Liberal and a stern Absolutist, he has shown himself since he has come forward into public life to be a cautious and reserved Prince, who is not anxious to connect himself with any particular abstract doctrines, but who has within him many of the qualities which enable a Sovereign in his position to maintain a strong Government, while he exhibits a due regard for the interests of his own country in her relations with the rest of Europe. The recent visit of the King of Prussia to the Emperor of the French, it is said, has been dictated by a policy which has for its object the placing of the King at the head of the German Powers; but, if the reports which are prevalent have any germ of truth in them, the caution, astuteness, and politic temperament of the King have not forsaken him on this important occasion. It is rumoured that the Emperor frankly admitted that the co-operation of Prussia towards the settlement of the Italian question, by the recognition of the kingdom of Italy, would be of great value; to which it is stated that the King replied that until Rome and Venice were annexed to the kingdom of Italy it would hardly be said to have an existence, and that the uncertainty of the present state of things in that country obliged Prussia to remain a passive spectator until things are more decided. Nevertheless, it is asserted that a special envoy from Victor Emmanuel, as King of Italy, will be received by the King of Prussia at his coronation. The subjects of the State of Denmark and that of a treaty of commerce between France and the Zollverein are assumed or believed to have been the subject of conversation between the two Sovereigns, and on both these questions we hear that the King returned guarded and evasive answers. Whatever may be the result of this visit, by means of it, as well as by the circumstance of his solemn coronation, the King of Prussia contrives to have the eyes of Europe fixed at this moment more decidedly on him than on any other potentate in Europe. His Majesty was married on the 11th of June, 1829, to the Princess Marie Louise Auguste Catherine, daughter of Charles Frederick, late Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar Eisenach, and sister of the reigning Grand Duke. By her, who was born the 30th of September, 1811, he has had issue Prince Frederick William Nicholas Charles Prince of Prussia, married in January, 1858, to the Princess Royal of England; and the Princess Louise Marie Elizabeth, married to the reigning Grand Duke of Baden.

WALTHAM ABBEY.

THE history of the celebrated Abbey of Waltham is now so well known, and so many persons have visited the remains of Harold's Church since the repairs were commenced, that at present we need refer only to the new east end, which is being rapidly completed.

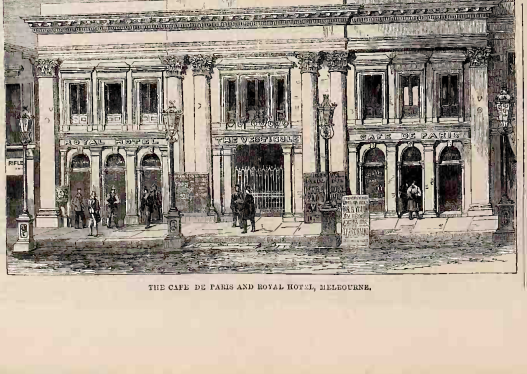
As the architecture of the early half of the thirteenth century is now universally considered the best, the east windows have been built in those styles, and they are being filled with the richest stained glass that can be obtained.

For the information of those who are interested in such works as these we may briefly state that the three lancet windows contain the root of Jesse, with the ancestors of our Lord and the prophets who prophesied concerning Him; while the rose window represents the Saviour, and around Him the seven days of creation, so that in the lower and upper windows respectively are illustrated His human and Divine nature. Visitors to the abbey church can obtain an account of the windows, as well as a history of the abbey church, and a report on the work of repair as far as it has gone.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOLS, CLERKENWELL.

Several of the parishioners have advanced, and some have given, considerable amounts for the purpose of at once completing this part of the work; it is, therefore, confidently expected that voluntary contributions from all quarters will soon furnish the required funds (about £700), in order to respond to the liberality which has been manifested. E. B. Jones, Esq., designed and executed the cartoons for the windows, which have been supplied by Messrs. Powell, of Whitefriars; W. Burges, Esq., being the architect. The whole work is considered by all who judge to be of the very best description, and the designs, as well as the execution, are much admired.

EXHIBITION OF 1862.—Her Majesty's Commissioners for the International Exhibition of 1862 have received an intimation that active steps are being taken by the Government of Brazil in furtherance of the exhibition of the produce of that empire. An exhibition of raw produce and manufactures will be shortly held in the capital of each province, and a general exhibition of the choicest specimens from their provincial gatherings will take place at Rio de Janeiro in the month of December next. From the different articles there contributed a still further selection will be made which will be transmitted to London. It has been intimated to her Majesty's Commissioners that Mr. E. R. Power, late of the civil service, has been appointed commissioner for the island of Ceylon. The Argentine Confederation have notified the appointment of the following gentlemen to represent the Republic on the occasion of the opening of the exhibition:—Mr. M. B. Simpson, Mr. J. Fair, and Mr. W. Wheelwright.



THE CAFE DE PARIS AND ROYAL HOTEL, MELBOURNE.

"THE EAGLE'S NEST." BY SIR E. LANDSEER, IN THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 20.—Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 21.—Battle of Trafalgar, 1805.
TUESDAY, 22.—Sir William Molesworth died, 1855.
WEDNESDAY, 23.—Royal Exchange founded, 1567.
THURSDAY, 24.—Daniel Webster died, 1852.
FRIDAY, 25.—St. Crispin. [quarter, 3h. 53m., p.m.
SATURDAY, 26.—Colchester surprised at Stanfordbridge, 1403. Moon's last

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 26, 1861.

Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
1 5	1 49	2 31	3 11	3 49	4 26	5 3
17	17	17	17	18	18	18

Will shortly be ready,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1862, price 1s., post-free 1s. 2d., containing GROUPS OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS (printed in Colours), from Drawings by HARRISON WEIR, and Interesting Illustrated Descriptions of the above by THOMAS MILLER; Twelve Plates of Engravings; Sun, Astronomical Diagrams (printed in Colours); &c., of Remarkable Phenomena, with Explanatory Notes by J. Rand; together with Illustrations of the Seasons, by A. Hunt. Office, 198, Strand.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—
Whole Page, £20. Half Page, £10. Quarter Page, £5.
Any smaller Advertisement, 2s. 6d. per line (fashion ordinary).
 ILLUSTRATED ADVERTISEMENTS must be received
CIRCULATION, 180,000.
Advertisements must be sent in by the 22nd inst. to ensure insertion.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN (under the Management Mrs. LOUISA PYNE and Mr. W. HARRISON), will OPEN on this Season on MONDAY, Oct. 21 (and during the Week) with an entirely New Opera by Balfe and Bunn, entitled BOTH SIDES.

THEATRE ROYAL, HAYMARKET.—MONDAY, Oct. 21, and during the Week (Saturday excepted) the Comedy of THE SPOT SEX, written by Mr. Tom Taylor, having reached the 100th night of its performance, will be followed by the Farce of CHARLES THE SECOND; or, the MERRY MONARCH, in which Mr. Charles Kean will sustain the character of Charles the Second, supported by Mr. Walter Lacy and the whole of the Company. On Monday, Oct. 28, Mr. Boucicault will appear in KING EDGAR AND ELFRIDA.

ROYAL LYCEUM THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDMUND FALCONER.—On MONDAY, Oct 28, and during the Week, in accordance with public desire, the Drama of THE WORLD AND THE STAGE. To conclude with an UNPUBLISHED FARCE.—Box Office Open Daily.

NEW THEATRE ROYAL, ADELPHI.—Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. B. Webster.—20th Night of THE COLLEEN BAWN. On Monday, Oct. 21, WITH CHANGING THEIR QUARTERS. Mr. Paul and Mrs. Hen Leslie; and LOVE AND HUNGER. Box-office open from Ten till Five.

ROYAL ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—MONDAY, and during the Week, A COZY COUPLE. A Satire on Modern Afternoon Tea-Drinking, by H. Lucas, Author; Miss Herbert, Mrs. Stirling, Mrs. E. Bruce, and Mr. Alfred Wigan. To conclude with DOUBLE DOSE. Mr. Compton, Mr. Alfred Wigan, and Mr. Frank Matthews.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The ART of BALLOONING, explaining the principles on which MONTGOLFIER and GIFFARD'S great balloons rise, by J. H. PEPPER, M.R.I. with Models of the Balloon in the Garden Only, at Three and Half-past Seven, illustrated with various models, describing diagrams, apparatus, and engravings. NEW JOHN NIXON, Wizzardus of Hoaxdom, will illustrate the ZOPH SPIRIT.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED, with Mr. JOHN PARRY, will shortly re-open their Entertainment, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, CHRYSO ROYAL CONCERTS, Every Evening except Saturday at Eight. Morning Performances every Saturday at Three. Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon. ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, REGENT-STREET.—Immediately, the Grand Concert Chair, to succeed, in advance of the Gallery, and at Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Wood's, 201, Regent-street. Grand Instrument by Messrs. Broadwood.

THE SISTERS SOPHIA and ANNIE, in their original and highly-successful Entertainment, entitled SKETCHES FROM NATURE, will appear at Lee Gardens, Oct. 21; Eyam, Oct. 23; Wakefield, Oct. 25; Hebden, Oct. 26; Pontefract, Oct. 28.

ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY. — Notice to Exhibitors.—The next Show of Fruit, Vegetables, and Cut Flowers will be held in the New Conservatory in the Gardens, South Kensington, it will take place on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, Nov. 6 and 7. Schedules may be had on application at the Society's Office, 21, South Kensington Museum, Nov. 1.

PURSUIT OF PLEASURE, a Vision of Human Life, painted by J. NOEL PATON, R.S.A.—This grand and celebrated PICTURE is now ON VIEW at Messrs. J. and R. JEFFREY, 61, Cheapside, from Ten till Five o'clock, Admission, Sixpence each person.

NATIONAL EXHIBITION OF BIRDS.
THE SECOND GREAT ANNUAL EXHIBITION of SPORTING and other BIRDS will be held in suitable premises in Tavistock-street, Bedford-street, near Exeter Hall, Strand, on MONDAY, TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th December next, when above cups and other prizes, to the value of £100, will be awarded.
Copies of Duty of Local Committees, and the Rules and Regulations to be observed, may be had at the Office of the Society.
Each Committee to be limited to 25 Members. F. TEBBUTT, Hon. Secretary.
Offices, Wellington-chambers, Bennetts-hill, Birmingham. T. W. BIGGS, Secretary.

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, EASTBOURNE, WORTHING, and SOUTHAMPTON, for the SHOOTING SEASON.—Monthly Tickets, Fortnightly, Monthly, and other SEASON TICKETS issued from London-bridge Victoria and the above towns.

FOR CALCUTTA, calling at Madras.—The well-known Clipper screw-steamship JASON, 500 tons, 300-horse power, S. H. WRIGHT, Commander, now loading in the Victoria Docks, has the greater portion of her Cargo engaged, and will positively leave Gravesend on the 15th of November. The most comfortable accommodation for Passengers, and a Surgeon carried. Apply to the Commander on board; or to Messrs. Money, Wigram, and Sons, 16, Billiter-street. The service will be continued every six weeks by one of the following fast-sailing auxiliary Screw-steamships:—

Ships.	Tons.	Commanders.	To Sail.
Golden Fleece	1,000	J. Mowbray	Oct. 1, 1861
Calcutta	700	D. W. Welch	Oct. 15
Indiana	1,000	J. Mowbray	April 1, 1862
Medjidie	700	D. H. Forbes	May 1
Sir Robert Sale	1,000	J. Mowbray	June 1
Jason	500	S. H. Wright	Aug. 15

For Freight or Passage (which do not exceed those of first-class Sailing-ships) apply to Messrs. Money, Wigram, and Co., 16, Billiter-street; or to Messrs. Grindlay, Mackillop, and Co., 55, Parliament-street, S.C.; or at the Offices of the East India and London Shipping Company (Limited), 3, Fenchurch-buildings, Leadenhall-st., E.C., where also, upon application, a Pamphlet descriptive of the Steamships intended for this service should be made. EDWARD OXER, Secretary.

NEW ZEALAND BANK.—Instituted 1854, Incorporated by Charter, 1859. Head Office, 1, Bank-buildings, Princes-street, London. Notice is hereby given that the Directors have declared a Dividend for the half-year ending 30th September, 1861, at the rate of Ten per Cent per annum, free of Income-tax, and that the same will be paid on and after the 1st day of November next. By order of the Board, GEO. MALDEN, General Manager, Natal Bank.

NATAL.—THE LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK, 83, Princes-street, for the COMMERCIAL and AGRICULTURAL BANK of NATAL, HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that they are prepared to Receive Money on account of that Bank, on the terms they will have been Letters of Credit free of charge, payable at Messrs. Peter Faure and Co.'s, Durban.
London, October, 1861. F. HEWETT, Manager.

SALMON-FISHING TO LET.—The Angling on the Rivers TAY and ISLA, in the county of INVERNESS. For full particulars apply to W. H. SMITH, Gunsmith, Inverness; or to James M'Gregor, Esq. banker, Fort William, N.B.

THE HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS (the Queen's Concert Rooms) are undergoing a Thorough Restoration and Redecoration, and will shortly be fitted with Gas Fittings of the most Recent Invention, by Messrs. Defries, of Houndsditch, in future to be called the DEFRIES LIGHT.
N.B. The Basement Story and Vaults may be engaged by a Wine or other Merchant for wine-bonded purposes.
Enquiries to be addressed to Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Regent-street. W. G. HOWARD, Estate and Surveyor, 34, Bedford-row.

SMART'S WRITING INSTITUTION. Open from Ten till Nine daily. Pupils of all ages received privately, and taught at any time suiting their convenience. Lessons in Writing, Arithmetic, Book-keeping, and Commercial Correspondence in Eight or Twelve Easy Lessons. Separate rooms for Ladies. Improved Method, as preferred Mrs. Smart will attend. For prospectuses, terms, &c., apply to the Secretary, at the first private door in Southampton-street, Quadrant, Regent-street.

WILL MISSING. — ONE THOUSAND POUNDS REWARD.—JAMES HOWDENING, deceased.—The above sum will be paid to the person who shall produce a Will by which Probate can be granted of the late JAMES HOWDENING, late of No. 18, St. Johnstreet, West Smithfield, and 13, Gloucester-terrace, Hyde Park-square, in the county of Middlesex, Gentleman, who died on the 8th day of April last, was residing at Rathmines-castle, Dublin. Application has been made to Probate has been granted.—Apply to Messrs. DOUNSON and SONS' HAVOCKS, Solicitors, 32, Chancery-lane.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Arrangements for the Week ending Saturday, Oct 26 :—
Monday.—BLONDIN'S THRILLING ASCENT.
Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday.—Display of Upper Series of Fountains, and all the usual attractions.
Thursday.—BLONDIN'S TWENTY-FIRST ASCENT.
Saturday.—Grand Concert.
Open on Monday at Nine, other days at Ten. Admission, Monday, Half-a-Crown; Saturday, One Shilling. Other days, One Shilling; Children in Arms, Sixpence. Tickets for Numbered Seats, Extra Guinea Stalls, Half-a-Crown; Reserved Seats, One Shilling. Guinea Stalls may be secured in advance, and in the Month Tickets in half blocks. The Orchestra and Nave Numbered Seats, Half-a-Crown

LITERATURE AND ART.

SUPERSHADE proves to be a hundred pounds! The price is cheap enough in all conscience; and yet such is the tariff at which it is appraised by Mr. J. Orchard Halliwell, who offers literary immortality to any one who will contribute towards the restore of Shakspeare's cottage at New Place, Stratford-upon-Avon, from the profanation of a beer-shop parlour, a probable conversion into a brickfield, and ultimate absorption in dwelling-houses or business premises. New Place—of which the house has long since disappeared—was, from its central position, as well as "eligible" a site for building purposes as Velfort Webber's cabbage-garden in Soho Square, or Mr. Gabriel's orchard in Regent Street. Bricks and mortar, hungry eyes. Unless it is speedily secured by private contract, New Place garden must assuredly be built over, and only exists for the trenchant and lengthy suggestive comments of him who was not for an age, but for all time, he destroyed or ever. Mr. Halliwell thinks that the freehold can be purchased for £1000, and only calls for fifties or guineas, de bonne volonté, to do it. Now, we have been enabled to discover a gentleman, who will put down their £100 apiece to make up the sum—provided he shall get down first. He is not, in a little short, to guarantee £100 towards it himself. The names of the patriotic donors are to be inscribed on a tablet to be erected over the entrance to the garden. We think that Mr. Halliwell's object would have been better and more expeditiously secured had he sought for private subscribers at £5 a piece, or even at £10 apiece. To a very rich man, even, a £100 is a matter of moment. We see, however, that Mr. T. B. Sheridan, M.P., for Stafford, has already undertaken to contribute one of the required instalments; and by this time next week we hope to be able to record the name of the second donor.

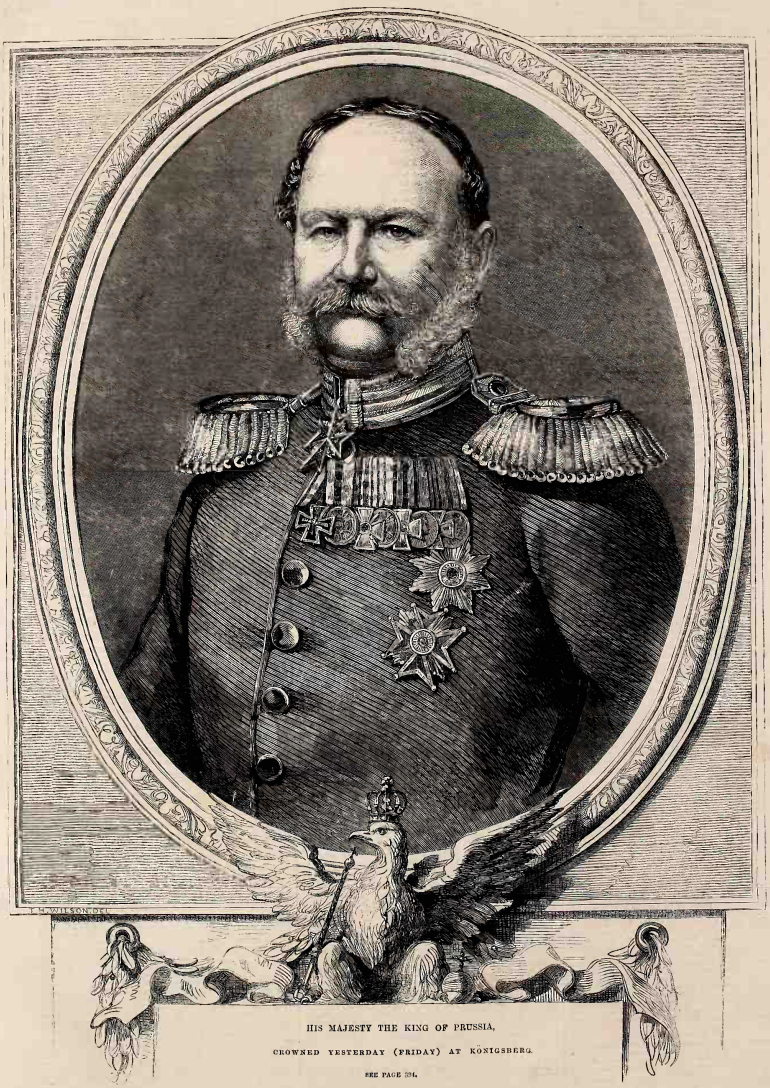
A very interesting ceremony is to take place on Thursday, the 31st, in the Middle Temple, when the memorial window recently placed in the dining-room and public spirit of that honourable society will be inaugurated by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The title of the window commemorates the visit, during eight days, with, of course, a large muster of the happy classes who have nothing to do but enjoy themselves, of many of the sovereigns and the ceremony existed to be one of the most interesting nature.

Some time in the last year a memorable memorialised the civic authorities praying them to restrain Jack Ketch from his practice of gilling the ropes employed in the strangulation of malefactors of all sorts. The memorialists, we believe, have a reason for the petition but the custom complained of "was a serious impediment to the due performance of the last solemn ceremonies of forfeiture of existence." Surely this amateur of being must have been first cousin to George Robins, when the auctioneer, during the Stowell-Lovell case, with his head off, handled the silken rope with which Lord Ferrers was hanged, and posted to Paris to witness the fatal effects of a guillotine upon the neck of four horses—of the regicide Damiens, George Sand has left plenty of successors who have a morbid taste for the last appendage to crime and criminals. The kindred class, whose chief object in life seems to be the collection of crime-literature, have a right to claim them in the first rank of the public. We hardly know what may be Southgate and Barrett's opinion of the Wednesday next and curious volumes illustrative of the "last scene of all" that ends this strange, mortal trash, and the lives and characters of the most notorious malefactors. Included in this range of study is a curious report of the proceedings of a select Parish Committee; portraits of Jack Sheppard after Thornhill; Sarah Malcolm, after Hogarth; the hearse-and-four-horses—of the regicide Damiens, George Sand has left plenty of successors who have a morbid taste for the last appendage to crime and criminals. The kindred class, whose chief object in life seems to be the collection of crime-literature, have a right to claim them in the first rank of the public. We

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN OF PRUSSIA.

CROWNED YESTERDAY (FRIDAY) AT KONIGSBERG.

SEE PAGE 394.



HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF PRUSSIA,

CROWNED YESTERDAY (FRIDAY) AT KÖNIGSBERG.

SEE PAGE 394.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It would be difficult to imagine a Newmarket meeting without a strong muster of the aristocratic patrons of sport, bookmakers, and every species of turffite which make up the grand whole of a gathering at head-quarters. The Second October Meeting, although favoured by weather scarcely out of the longest week in May, did not come to fair anticipations indulged in by the votaries of racing. The comparatively scanty assemblage on the heath on Monday was noticed and commented on, many placing the falling off to the credit of the Highland shooting-box, Beaulieu, and Baden, while there were others who declared that the performance of a "feathered" Indian in the Brampton running-ground on that day was the grand counter-attraction. Be, though, Knowsley or Scotland right the Duke's absence was not the wonderful accession of visitors to celebrate the Cesarewitch Day which the management of the above-named ground had taken its fees from every heavy betting one the race, still there was to the last a kind of motley, lightened by the belief that certain friends were reunited before the weights appeared. Monday's running may be merely ignored at. Chevy Amie must be handed her master's quarter for the Handicap Plate of 50 sovs. (Cesarewitch course), beating King of Diamonds cleverly by a length at equal weights; and Baron Munchausen quickly upset the calculations of the layers who had not noticed and commended on, many placing the falling off to the credit of the Highland shooting-box, Beaulieu, and Baden, while there were others who declared that the performance of a "feathered" Indian in the Brampton running-ground on that day was the grand counter-attraction. Be, though

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS MADE AT THE OBSERVATORY OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

Lat. 51° 29′ 07·5″; Long. 0° 18′ 47·0″ W.; Height above sea 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF				THERMOMETER.		WIND.		RAIN in 24 hours.
	Barometer reduced to 32° and Sea Level.	Dew Point.	Rain.	Relative Humidity.	Highest.	Lowest.	General Direction.	Horizontal Movement.
	Inches.		Inches.					Miles.	Inches.
Oct. 9	29·920	59·4	54·0	93	67·0	54·0	WSW.	135	·073
„ 10	29·830	50·0	49·2	·90	61·0	48·0	N.E.	176	·000
„ 11	29·742	48·5	45·9	·90	61·1	47·7	S.	111	·000
„ 12	29·737	48·3	45·7	·90	61·0	47·0	S.	111	·000
„ 13	29·844	49·1	46·2	·90	61·0	47·0	S.	111	·000
„ 14	30·043	46·9	39·7	·78	62·0	39·0	S. to S.S.E.	111	·000
„ 15	30·140	38·1	35·2	·82	49·0	32·0	E. to E.N.E.	51	·000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, taken at half-past nine a.m.:—

Barometer (in inches) reduced ...	29·926	29·864	29·827	29·837	29·940	30·071	30·071	30·017
Temperature of Air ...	57·0	52·0	50·0	50·0	52·0	49·0	46·0	45·0
Temperature of Evaporation ...	54·0	50·0	48·0	48·0	50·0	47·0	44·0	43·0
Direction of Wind ...	WSW.	W.	W.	W.	S.	S.	S.	S.

Sir John Rennie, C.B., has left Lisbon for the Azores, to undertake some engineering work on account of the Portuguese Government.

An iron-cased screw steam-frigate, called the Carmen, has just been launched by the Spaniards.

A convention has been entered into between Sweden and Holland, by which Sweden and Norwegian ship vessel in the latter country will not be required to have passports, but simply produce them to prove their identity if required.

SPANISH AMERICA.—The Government of Peru has protested against the annexation of St. Domingo by Spain. The Spanish Cabinet is accused by the Peruvian authorities of creating and encouraging disorders in most of the States of South America.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Johan Kaas as Consul at Faroe for His Majesty the King of Prussia; of Mr. Joseph Roger as Consul at Arcachon for the United States of America; and of Mr. Alexander Bonnet as Consul at Aurrachee for the Free Hanseatic City of Bremen.

An infernal machine exploded on Wednesday week in a house in the Rue Saint-Jacques, Paris, did great damage to the furniture, but caused much alarm in the quarter; fortunately, although there were fourteen persons in the house, none of them were injured. Nothing is known as to the author of the attempted massacre.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that the dividend payments have been commenced, and that the signal of peace sent to the general circumstances of the country, the money-market has been extremely inactive, and prices have had a downward tendency. The Government advance of £3,000,000 to the Bank of France to check the outflow of bullion, and to obtain means from various sources to meet the demand for discounts and advances, has caused a very considerable influence upon the market for Home Stocks; but we are of opinion that the Bank of England, as most of the Continental banks are favourable to this country, will not have so much gold as is anticipated in some quarters, unless there be loss of war to-day.

The demand for accommodation, both at the Bank of England and in Lombard-street, has been by no means active. The rate of discount at the Bank is as under:—

Short Bills ... per cent.	3½ to 3	Four Months' Bills ... 31 to 31
Three Months' Bills ... 3	3	Six Months' Bills ... 3½ to 3½

Large amounts may be had in the Stock Exchange, at from 2 to 3 per cent, according to the quality of the security offered.

On the Continent money is becoming dearer, and the supply is consequently less than it was. The rate at Paris is 4 per cent. At Berlin it is 5 per cent. The quotations for the principal cities are:—

	Bank rate. per cent.	Open market. per cent.		Bank rate. per cent.	Open market. per cent.
Paris ...	4	4	Turin ...	5	5
Berlin ...	5	5	Madrid ...	5	5
Hamburg ...	4	3	Hamburg ...	7	6
Frankfort ...	4	3½	Amsterdam ...	4	3½

The total imports of the precious metals have amounted to about £700,000, including nearly £500,000 in gold from St. Petersburg. The exchange at New York has declined 1 per cent, £6,000 in bar gold has been shipped to that port. We understand that since the departure of the previous mail from Australia no further vessel with gold on board has been despatched to England. The amount, however, is large—namely, £700,000.

Advices from Paris are, for the most part, of a gloomy character. The continued sales of Rentes by the Bank of France have rendered money very scarce on the Bourse, but it is thought that the worst of the monetary crisis has passed away.

About £2,000 in gold has been shipped to Nova Scotia, and £7100 in silver to the West Indies. The exchanges in China show a favourable movement towards the country, and prices are firm.

The London and Provincial Discount Company have resolved to increase the capital to £2,000,000.

Mercantile letters from New York state that the associated banks have agreed to advance the sum of 50,000,000 of the Federal loan.

The report of the directors of the Bank of Turkey recommends a distribution of the entire profits, amounting to the same fortnightly as during the war, as part of the Ottoman Government. An immediate return of £1 per share and of £2 per share will be made.

There was only a limited business doing in Home Stocks, and the rates of prices have undergone a slight decline. Consols for Money were done at 93¼ for the account. Bank Stock left off at 211 to 213; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93¾ ¼; Exchequer Bills, March issue, par to 3s. prem.; Ditto, June, 4s. to 3s. prem.; India Five per Cent Stock was 104¼ ½; Ditto, 1861, 3s. to 2s. prem.; Ditto Bonds, 1861, 99 to 100. The Bonds were done at from 10s. to 14s. prem. Exchequer notes were quoted on Saturday, with a moderate amount of activity. Consols sold as low as 92, but the final quotation was 92¾ for money, and 92¾ for the 7th of November. Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92¾ 93¼; Exchequer Bills, par to 2s. prem. Bank Stock was 212 to 214. India Stock marked for 221 ; Ditto Scrip, 10¼ ¾; India Five per Cents, 104 to 105. On the following day Consols for Transfer were 92¼ ; Ditto for Time, 92¾ ; Exchequer Bonds, 97¾ ; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 2s. prem.; India Stock, 220 to 222. Bank Stock declined to 210 to 211. India Stock was 222 to 224, and Exchequer Bonds, 98 to 98½. The Bonds sold at 1s. to 14s. prem. On Thursday the market showed confirmed heaviness, and prices had a downward tendency. Consols for Money were quoted 92¾ to ¾ ; for the Account, 92¾ to ¾ ; for the 7th, 92¾ to ¾ ; the Three, 93¾ to ¼ ; and Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 1s. prem. India Stock was 219 to 221, and Scrip 10 to 10¼.

In the market for Foreign Bonds there has been no change of importance to report since last week. The nominal prices of Spanish Three per Cents, 41¼ ½, were very moderate, and the following are the leading currencies:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 99½ ; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 84; Ditto, 1857, Four per Cents, 80; Chile Six per Cents, 101; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 84½ ; Mexican Three per Cents, 19½ ; Peruvian Three per Cents, 47; Ditto Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 39½ ; Russian Three per Cents, 84½ ; Ditto Five per Cents, 101½ ; Ditto Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 93½ ; Ditto Four per Cents, 85½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64; Ditto Four per Cents, 98½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64½ ; Austrian Five per Cents, 48½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64½ ; Dutch Four per Cents, 98½ ; Austrian Five per Cents, 48½.

On the whole, Joint-stock Bank Shares have ruled steady in price; but the demand for them has been by no means active. Commercial Shares may be realised 81; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 24½ ; City, 74; Chartered Mercantile, 19½ ; London, 20½ ; Union, 6½ ; Egyptian, 5½ ; Australian Chartered, 17 ; London Joint Stock, 23½ ; London and South African, 4½ ; Provincial of Ireland, 8½ ; and Union of Australia, 33.

The leading quotations for shares in new undertakings are as follow:—Crumlin Railway, 2 to 4 prem.; Thames and Medway, 1 to 1½ prem.; Wear, 1 prem.; London and Provincial Marine, 3 to 4 dis.; Commercial Union Fire, par to ¼ prem.; Crystal Palace, par to 1 prem.; Universal Marine, 1 to 1 prem.; Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 4 to 5 prem.

Colonial Government securities have been dull, but to a fair average extent. Canada Six per Cents have marked 104½; Ditto, 1883-2, 109½ ; Ditto, 1884-4, 111; Ditto, 1885-6, 113; Ditto, 1887-8, 115; Ditto, 1888-9, 116½. Cape of Good Hope Five per Cents, 103½ ; South Australian Six per Cents, 1855, 108 and upwards, 107½ ; and Victoria Six per Cent, 107½.

The miscellaneous Market has ruled inactive. Canada Land shares have been done at 3½ ; Australian Agricultural, 2½ ; Ditto Pastoral, 1½ ; Canada Land, 1½ ; London General Omnibus, 3½ ; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 94½ ; Ditto New, 4½ ; Victoria Land, 1½ ; United Kingdom Telegraph, 1½ ; Reuter's Continental Telegraph Deferred, 1½.

The Foreign Railway Market has continued steady, and prices have somewhat improved. The following are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 104½ ; East Anglian, 1½ ; Eastern Counties, 6½ ; Western Union, 8 Stock, 74½ ; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 82½ ; Great Northern, 112; Ditto, A Stock, 111; Great Western, 69½ ; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 91½ ; London and South-Western, 91½ ; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 44½ ; Metropolitan, 63 ; Midland, 104½ ; North-British, 53 ; North-Eastern—Berwick, 100½ ; Ditto, Leeds, 84½ ; Ditto, York, 95½ ; North London, 94 ; North Staffordshire, 13½ ; North and South-Western, Ireland, 58½ ; Nottingham and Grimsby, 57½ ; South-Eastern—Dover, 39½ ; South-Eastern, 78½ ; Stockton and Darlington, 57½.

LOANS LICENSED AT FIXED RENTALS.—Chester and Holyhead, 83½ ; Ditto, Flintshire-Hall per Cent, 121 ; Ditto, Five per Cent, 111 ; Hull and Selby, 120 ; London, Tilbury, and Southend, 40½ ; Midland—Bedford, 105 ; Bonyton, Hitchin, and Shepreth, 113.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 80½ Great Northern, 118; Ditto, Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 101 ; Ditto, Five per Cent, redeemable at 5 per cent prem., 107 ; Great Western—Five per Cent, 121 ; London, Chatham, and Dover, 22½ ; Midland—Bristol and Birmingham, 134 ; North British—Five per Cent, 107 ; South Wales Five per Cent, 1863, 98 ; Stockton and Darlington, 8, Six per Cent, 32 ; West Midland—Oxford, 16, Guaranteed, 114½.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 93½ ; East Indian, 101½ ; Ditto, Four per Cent Debentures, 1862-3, 103½ ; Ditto, 1864-5, 103½ ; Great Trunk of Canada, 13½ ; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 82½ ; Grand Junction Canada, 103 ; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 82½ ; Madras, Guaranteed, 4½ per Cent, 101 ; Ditto, Four per Cent, 93½ ; Ditto, Three-Quarters per Cent, 91 ; Scinde, 10½ ; Punjaub, 14½ ; Ditto, 10½.

FOREIGN.—Buenos Ayres and Santa Fé, 6½ ; Ditto, 7½ ; Great Luxembourg, 8½ ; San Paulo, 5½ ; South Australian and Lombardo-Venetian, 16½.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending the 16th inst. is the following—

Notes issued ...	£36,525,000	Government debt ...	£11,015,100
Coin and bullion ...	19,525,000	Other securities ...	14,509,900
	£36,525,000		£36,525,000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, taken at half-past nine a.m.:—

Barometer (in inches) reduced ...	29·926	29·864	29·827	29·837	29·940	30·071	30·071	30·017
Temperature of Air ...	57·0	52·0	50·0	50·0	52·0	49·0	46·0	45·0
Temperature of Evaporation ...	54·0	50·0	48·0	48·0	50·0	47·0	44·0	43·0
Direction of Wind ...	WSW.	W.	W.	W.	S.	S.	S.	S.

Sir John Rennie, C.B., has left Lisbon for the Azores, to undertake some engineering work on account of the Portuguese Government.

An iron-cased screw steam-frigate, called the Carmen, has just been launched by the Spaniards.

A convention has been entered into between Sweden and Holland, by which Sweden and Norwegian ship vessel in the latter country will not be required to have passports, but simply produce them to prove their identity if required.

SPANISH AMERICA.—The Government of Peru has protested against the annexation of St. Domingo by Spain. The Spanish Cabinet is accused by the Peruvian authorities of creating and encouraging disorders in most of the States of South America.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Johan Kaas as Consul at Faroe for His Majesty the King of Prussia; of Mr. Joseph Roger as Consul at Arcachon for the United States of America; and of Mr. Alexander Bonnet as Consul at Aurrachee for the Free Hanseatic City of Bremen.

An infernal machine exploded on Wednesday week in a house in the Rue Saint-Jacques, Paris, did great damage to the furniture, but caused much alarm in the quarter; fortunately, although there were fourteen persons in the house, none of them were injured. Nothing is known as to the author of the attempted massacre.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that the dividend payments have been commenced, and that the signal of peace sent to the general circumstances of the country, the money-market has been extremely inactive, and prices have had a downward tendency. The Government advance of £3,000,000 to the Bank of France to check the outflow of bullion, and to obtain means from various sources to meet the demand for discounts and advances, has caused a very considerable influence upon the market for Home Stocks; but we are of opinion that the Bank of England, as most of the Continental banks are favourable to this country, will not have so much gold as is anticipated in some quarters, unless there be loss of war to-day.

The demand for accommodation, both at the Bank of England and in Lombard-street, has been by no means active. The rate of discount at the Bank is as under:—

Short Bills ... per cent.	3½ to 3	Four Months' Bills ... 31 to 31
Three Months' Bills ... 3	3	Six Months' Bills ... 3½ to 3½

Large amounts may be had in the Stock Exchange, at from 2 to 3 per cent, according to the quality of the security offered.

On the Continent money is becoming dearer, and the supply is consequently less than it was. The rate at Paris is 4 per cent. At Berlin it is 5 per cent. The quotations for the principal cities are:—

	Bank rate. per cent.	Open market. per cent.		Bank rate. per cent.	Open market. per cent.
Paris ...	4	4	Turin ...	5	5
Berlin ...	5	5	Madrid ...	5	5
Hamburg ...	4	3	Hamburg ...	7	6
Frankfort ...	4	3½	Amsterdam ...	4	3½

The total imports of the precious metals have amounted to about £700,000, including nearly £500,000 in gold from St. Petersburg. The exchange at New York has declined 1 per cent, £6,000 in bar gold has been shipped to that port. We understand that since the departure of the previous mail from Australia no further vessel with gold on board has been despatched to England. The amount, however, is large—namely, £700,000.

Advices from Paris are, for the most part, of a gloomy character. The continued sales of Rentes by the Bank of France have rendered money very scarce on the Bourse, but it is thought that the worst of the monetary crisis has passed away.

About £2,000 in gold has been shipped to Nova Scotia, and £7100 in silver to the West Indies. The exchanges in China show a favourable movement towards the country, and prices are firm.

The London and Provincial Discount Company have resolved to increase the capital to £2,000,000.

Mercantile letters from New York state that the associated banks have agreed to advance the sum of 50,000,000 of the Federal loan.

The report of the directors of the Bank of Turkey recommends a distribution of the entire profits, amounting to the same fortnightly as during the war, as part of the Ottoman Government. An immediate return of £1 per share and of £2 per share will be made.

There was only a limited business doing in Home Stocks, and the rates of prices have undergone a slight decline. Consols for Money were done at 93¼ for the account. Bank Stock left off at 211 to 213; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93¾ ¼; Exchequer Bills, March issue, par to 3s. prem.; Ditto, June, 4s. to 3s. prem.; India Five per Cent Stock was 104¼ ½; Ditto, 1861, 3s. to 2s. prem.; Ditto Bonds, 1861, 99 to 100. The Bonds were done at from 10s. to 14s. prem. Exchequer notes were quoted on Saturday, with a moderate amount of activity. Consols sold as low as 92, but the final quotation was 92¾ for money, and 92¾ for the 7th of November. Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92¾ 93¼; Exchequer Bills, par to 2s. prem. Bank Stock was 212 to 214. India Stock marked for 221 ; Ditto Scrip, 10¼ ¾; India Five per Cents, 104 to 105. On the following day Consols for Transfer were 92¼ ; Ditto for Time, 92¾ ; Exchequer Bonds, 97¾ ; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 2s. prem.; India Stock, 220 to 222. Bank Stock declined to 210 to 211. India Stock was 222 to 224, and Exchequer Bonds, 98 to 98½. The Bonds sold at 1s. to 14s. prem. On Thursday the market showed confirmed heaviness, and prices had a downward tendency. Consols for Money were quoted 92¾ to ¾ ; for the Account, 92¾ to ¾ ; for the 7th, 92¾ to ¾ ; the Three, 93¾ to ¼ ; and Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 1s. prem. India Stock was 219 to 221, and Scrip 10 to 10¼.

In the market for Foreign Bonds there has been no change of importance to report since last week. The nominal prices of Spanish Three per Cents, 41¼ ½, were very moderate, and the following are the leading currencies:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 99½ ; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 84; Ditto, 1857, Four per Cents, 80; Chile Six per Cents, 101; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 84½ ; Mexican Three per Cents, 19½ ; Peruvian Three per Cents, 47; Ditto Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 39½ ; Russian Three per Cents, 84½ ; Ditto Five per Cents, 101½ ; Ditto Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 93½ ; Ditto Four per Cents, 85½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64; Ditto Four per Cents, 98½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64½ ; Dutch Four per Cents, 98½ ; Austrian Five per Cents, 48½ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 64½ ; Dutch Four per Cents, 98½ ; Austrian Five per Cents, 48½.

On the whole, Joint-stock Bank Shares have ruled steady in price; but the demand for them has been by no means active. Commercial Shares may be realised 81; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 24½ ; City, 74; Chartered Mercantile, 19½ ; London, 20½ ; Union, 6½ ; Egyptian, 5½ ; Australian Chartered, 17 ; London Joint Stock, 23½ ; London and South African, 4½ ; Provincial of Ireland, 8½ ; and Union of Australia, 33.

The leading quotations for shares in new undertakings are as follow:—Crumlin Railway, 2 to 4 prem.; Thames and Medway, 1 to 1½ prem.; Wear, 1 prem.; London and Provincial Marine, 3 to 4 dis.; Commercial Union Fire, par to ¼ prem.; Crystal Palace, par to 1 prem.; Universal Marine, 1 to 1 prem.; Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 4 to 5 prem.

Colonial Government securities have been dull, but to a fair average extent. Canada Six per Cents have marked 104½; Ditto, 1883-2, 109½ ; Ditto, 1884-4, 111; Ditto, 1885-6, 113; Ditto, 1887-8, 115; Ditto, 1888-9, 116½. Cape of Good Hope Five per Cents, 103½ ; South Australian Six per Cents, 1855, 108 and upwards, 107½ ; and Victoria Six per Cent, 107½.

The miscellaneous Market has ruled inactive. Canada Land shares have been done at 3½ ; Australian Agricultural, 2½ ; Ditto Pastoral, 1½ ; Canada Land, 1½ ; London General Omnibus, 3½ ; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 94½ ; Ditto New, 4½ ; Victoria Land, 1½ ; United Kingdom Telegraph, 1½ ; Reuter's Continental Telegraph Deferred, 1½.

The Foreign Railway Market has continued steady, and prices have somewhat improved. The following are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 104½ ; East Anglian, 1½ ; Eastern Counties, 6½ ; Western Union, 8 Stock, 74½ ; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 82½ ; Great Northern, 112; Ditto, A Stock, 111; Great Western, 69½ ; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 91½ ; London and South-Western, 91½ ; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 44½ ; Metropolitan, 63 ; Midland, 104½ ; North-British, 53 ; North-Eastern—Berwick, 100½ ; Ditto, Leeds, 84½ ; Ditto, York, 95½ ; North London, 94 ; North Staffordshire, 13½ ; North and South-Western, Ireland, 58½ ; Nottingham and Grimsby, 57½ ; South-Eastern—Dover, 39½ ; South-Eastern, 78½ ; Stockton and Darlington, 57½.

LOANS LICENSED AT FIXED RENTALS.—Chester and Holyhead, 83½ ; Ditto, Flintshire-Hall per Cent, 121 ; Ditto, Five per Cent, 111 ; Hull and Selby, 120 ; London, Tilbury, and Southend, 40½ ; Midland—Bedford, 105 ; Bonyton, Hitchin, and Shepreth, 113.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 80½ ; Great Northern, 118; Ditto, Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 101 ; Ditto, Five per Cent, redeemable at 5 per cent prem., 107 ; Great Western—Five per Cent, 121 ; London, Chatham, and Dover, 22½ ; Midland—Bristol and Birmingham, 134 ; North British—Five per Cent, 107 ; South Wales Five per Cent, 1863, 98 ; Stockton and Darlington, 8, Six per Cent, 32 ; West Midland—Oxford, 16, Guaranteed, 114½.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 93½ ; East Indian, 101½ ; Ditto, Four per Cent Debentures, 1862-3, 103½ ; Ditto, 1864-5, 103½ ; Great Trunk of Canada, 13½ ; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 82½ ; Grand Junction Canada, 103 ; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 82½ ; Madras, Guaranteed, 4½ per Cent, 101 ; Ditto, Four per Cent, 93½ ; Ditto, Three-Quarters per Cent, 91 ; Scinde, 10½ ; Punjaub, 14½ ; Ditto, 10½.

FOREIGN.—Buenos Ayres and Santa Fé, 6½ ; Ditto, 7½ ; Great Luxembourg, 8½ ; San Paulo, 5½ ; South Australian and Lombardo-Venetian, 16½.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending the 16th inst. is the following—

Notes issued ...	£36,525,000	Government debt ...	£11,015,100
Coin and bullion ...	19,525,000	Other securities ...	14,509,900
	£36,525,000		£36,525,000

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Oct. 14.—To-day's market was but moderately supplied with home-grown wheat, chiefly in fine condition. Both red and white qualities moved slowly, at Monday's quotations. Foreign wheat was in fair request, at full prices. Barley and malting samples were in limited supply, and sold at extreme rates. Malt was in good demand, at 1s. per qrr. more money. Beans and peas were in steady request, at full prices. Flour was in fair demand, at 1s. per sack advance in the quotations. Other descriptions of produce were in a dull state, at prices nearly unaltered.

ENGLISH WHEAT, per 70 lbs.—Essex and Kent, red, 38s. to 42s.; ditto, white, 40s. to 44s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s. to 42s.; ditto, white, 40s. to 44s.; grinding barley, 26s. to 28s.; distilling ditto, 30s. to 32s.; malting ditto, 34s. to 36s.; Lincoln and Yorkshire, red, 38s. to 42s.; ditto, white, 40s. to 44s.; Ringmer and Ware, 44s. to 48s.; Chevalier, 47s. to 49s.; Yorkshireand Lincolnshire, 34s. to 36s.; Scotch, 34s. to 36s.; Irish, 34s. to 36s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; peas, boilers, 30s. to 32s.; maple, 30s. to 32s.; white, 30s. to 32s.; grey, 30s. to 32s.; Harlestone, 30s. to 32s.; white, 30s. to 32s.; beans, 30s. to 32s.; Scotch and Irish, 30s. to 32s.; oats, Scotch, 20s. to 22s.; Irish, 20s. to 22s.; potato, 20s. to 22s.; flour, per sack, 40s. to 44s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, 36s. to 38s.; Irish, 36s. to 38s.

FOREIGN WHEAT, per 70 lbs.—Dantzic, 44s. to 46s.; Pomeranian, 44s. to 46s.; Marianopoli, 44s. to 46s.; Polish Odessa, 44s. to 46s.; Taganrog, 44s. to 46s.; Egyptian, 40s. to 42s.; Salonica, 40s. to 42s.; Smyrna, 40s. to 42s.; Mogadore, 40s. to 42s.; Tuscan, 40s. to 42s.; Maremma, 40s. to 42s.; Roman, 40s. to 42s.; Leghorn, 40s. to 42s.; Genoa, 40s. to 42s.; Nice, 40s. to 42s.; Marseilles, 40s. to 42s.; Adriatic, 40s. to 42s.; Trieste, 40s. to 42s.; Black Sea, 40s. to 42s.; Danube, 40s. to 42s.; Salonica, 40s. to 42s.; Greek, 40s. to 42s.; Algerian, 40s. to 42s.; Spanish, 40s. to 42s.; Portuguese, 40s. to 42s.; Russian, 40s. to 42s.; Baltic, 40s. to 42s.; Petersburg, 40s. to 42s.; Archangel, 40s. to 42s.; Polish, 40s. to 42s.; Prussian, 40s. to 42s.; Pomeranian, 40s. to 42s.; Rhenish, 40s. to 42s.; Belgian, 40s. to 42s.; Holland, 40s. to 42s.; Hamburg, 40s. to 42s.; French, 40s. to 42s.; American (U.S.), 40s. to 42s.; Canadian, 40s. to 42s.; Chilian, 40s. to 42s.; Peruvian, 40s. to 42s.; Californian, 40s. to 42s.; Australian, 40s. to 42s.; Barley, 28s. to 30s.; oats, 20s. to 22s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; peas, 30s. to 32s.; beans, 30s. to 32s.; flour, per sack, 36s. to 38s.

Nothing is known of the state of the structure for the first four centuries after it was built, but from the circumstances of the Roman empire we find it constantly mentioned—as by Martial and Lucian in the first century, Pausanias in the second, Gregory of Nazianzus in the fourth century, by Constantine Porphyrogennetus in the tenth century, who states it to be still standing in his day; by Eudocia in the fifteenth, and by Eustathius in the twelfth century, the last says of it "It was and is a wonder."

It is not known when it commenced falling into ruin. A general impression is that it owes its original destruction to an earthquake. In 1454, however, the Turks, after they had taken possession of Athens, massacre, where they built the Castle of St. Pietro, from which the modern name Bedrum is a Turkish corruption. Fontanus, the historian of the 16th century, Pausanias in the 17th, and Stuart, distinguished in the 18th century, Pausanias in the 17th, and Stuart, distinguished in the 18th century, Pausanias in the 17th, and Stuart, distinguished in the 18

THE ABBEY CHURCH OF WALTHAM HOLY CROSS: THE NEW EAST END.—SEE PAGE 394.

SCULPTURES FROM HALICARNASSUS AND CNIDUS.

PARTS OF THE FRIEZE OF THE TOMB OF MAUSOLUS.

REMAINS OF SUPPOSED STATUE OF MAUSOLUS.

friezes were found, regarding the position of which there is only conjecture, and one of them is in relief. Another appears to represent a chariot; and three portray the Battle of the Centaurs.

Finely-sculptured lions, a leopard, and other animals, were also brought to light. Amongst others were portions of colossal bones, noble in design and perfect in execution. They probably formed a part of the marble quadrigæ by which the mausoleum was surmounted.

Whilst in this neighbourhood Mr. Newton went over to Cnidus (famous for the statue of Venus by Praxiteles), and received information from an intelligent Greek from Calymno "that he had seen on a promontory a little to the east of Cnidus a colossal marble lion, similar to those found at Budrum, but on a larger scale." Accordingly, this spot was explored in the first instance by Mr. Pullen, and the noble ruin discovered. Mr. Newton truly describes it as a magnificent example of colossal Greek sculpture, worthy to be compared with the finest remains from Halicarnassus. Its dimensions are 10ft. in length and 6ft. in height from the base to the crown of the head. The body is crouching, the head turned round to the right in the same manner as the lion is represented on many of the Greek coins. It was generally in fine condition; but being found lying on the right side, the left being exposed to the weather, the surface had suffered in some degree, though not to an extent to destroy the main anatomical markings, which retain their original boldness. The entire lion has been sculptured out of one block of Parian marble, with the exception of the fore paws, which had been united to the body by a joint, and are lost. A part of the lower jaw and a hind leg are also wanting. Mr. Newton states, "The original of the design of the artist is presented to the eye with a completeness seldom to be met with in those examples of Greek sculpture which have been preserved to us. No attempt has been made to imitate the natural form of the eye, in the place of which is a deeply-recessed cavity. It is a question whether REMAINS (SUPPOSED) OF AN AMAZON.

COLOSSAL LION FROM CNIDUS.

eyes of metal or of vitreous paste were inserted in these cavities, or whether the deep shadows thus created under the overhanging brows were not designed, when viewed at a distance, to convey to the spectator an impression equivalent to that produced by the living eye. Such a mode of representation by equivalents was adopted by the ancient artists whenever more mechanical imitation failed to reproduce in art the effect of an object in nature, and this is particularly the case in the treatment of the eye, in the representation of which much variety may be remarked in different branches of ancient art."

This fine piece of sculpture was discovered on the slope of a cliff on a bold headland, opposite to Cape Crio, overlooking the sea, with Cnidus in the distance. On the summit of the cliff were the ruins of an ancient tomb of Doric architecture; and Mr. Newton considers that the lion originally stood at the top of this structure. Mr. Newton hazards the suggestion that the date of this tomb may be assigned to the half century between 350 and 400 B.C. During this period Cnidus was a Republic, and Mr. Newton is of opinion that the erection of so sumptuous and conspicuous a tomb to the memory of a private individual seems inconsistent with the jealous spirit of the ancient commonwealths before the age of Alexander the Great. It is more likely that the tomb is a polyandrion or public monument, erected to commemorate a number of citizens slain in battle." During the period above suggested two events of the kind occurred sufficiently important to have given occasion for such a work—the repulse of the Athenians in their attack on Cnidus, B.C. 412, and the defeat of the Lacedæmonians by Conon in a sea-fight off this place B.C. 394, but it is not certain that any Cnidians took part in the latter engagement.

Thanking Mr. Newton for his discovery of this lion (which is only one of many trophies sent home from the same site) and his suggestions concerning it, we cannot but acknowledge its importance as another example of the Greek mode of treatment of animal life, in which simplicity and grandeur equally prevailed. We have here the true ideal of the King of the Forests; and we cannot help thinking that its noble outline and expression might be studied with advantage by the accomplished painter intrusted with the modelling of the four-pronged lions for the Nelson Monument in Trafalgar-square.

REMAINS OF SUPPOSED STATUE OF ARTEMISIA.

 The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each Announcement.

BIRTHS.

On Aug. 10, at Oak Lodge, Newbury, Berks, the wife of John Kelgbt, Esq., of a daughter.

At Cossall, Nottsberries, Madras, India, on Aug. 29, the wife of Captain R. N. Hazen, 60th Royal Rifles, of a daughter.

At Nice, on the 9th inst., the wife of Dr. Gormey, of a son.

On the 16th inst., at 37, Grove-road, St. John's-wood, London, the wife of Albert Erskine Cumby, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On the 3rd inst., at St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Rev. Edmund Murdock, B.D., Dudley, Viscount Sandon, eldest son of the Earl of Harrowby, K.G., to the Lady Mary Frances Cecil, eldest daughter of the Marquis of Exeter, K.G., and the Marchioness of Exeter.

On the 10th inst., at St. Paul's Church, Belfast, by the father of the bride, Wm. Johnston, Esq., of Ballykilbeg House, in the county of Down, to Armiuella Frances, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Drew, D.D., Rector of Lough Island. No cards sent.

On Sept. 24, at Westminster Chapel, Westminster, Thomas Cooke, Esq., of Coventry, Southwark, to Jane, second daughter of Mr. Thomas Chick, of Nottingham-terrace, London.

On the 10th inst., at St. Catharine's Church, Hamburg, by the Rev. H. Wendt, John Charles, second son of Gen. Edwd. Reynolds, Esq., to Beatrix Helena, only daughter of Theodore Schulte, Esq., all of that city.

On the 10th inst., at Sittingbourne, Kent, by the Rev. W. H. Wollerd, M.A., brother of the bride, Edward Dunbar Malcolm, Esq., C.B., son of the late Gen. Sir Neil Malcolm, K.C.B., of Hampstead, Middlesex, to Anna Sophia, eldest daughter of the Rev. H. T. Wollerd, M.A., Vicar of Sittingbourne and Perpetual Curate of Tunstall.

DEATHS.

On the 16th inst., at Margate, Ann, wife of Louis James Lenoir, Esq., of Campden-hill, Kensington, and Bedford-street, in her 70th year.

On the 18th inst., at Dieppe, France, John Elliot Bolton, eldest son of Sir John Peter Bolton, Bart., and the Lady Catherine Bolton, of Ketton-cliffe, Bolton Abbey, Yorkshire.

On the 11th inst., at Bilbrook, near Canterbury, the Lieutenant-Colonel Congreve.

On the 6th inst., at Abermaisin Park, Carmarthenshire, aged eighty-one, Maria Owens, wife of Captain Owens.

LONDON HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL
Great Ormond-street, W.C.
The Lord LIEUTENANT.
ADDITIONAL FUNDS are still urgently REQUIRED for this the only Homœopathic Hospital in the metropolis.
Bankers—The Union Bank, Argyll-place, Regent-street.
By order, JAMES MANBY, Secretary.

LAKE'S DINING-ROOMS, 13, Gracechurch-street, E.C. The public are respectfully informed that these Rooms are of the most establishment, having been thoroughly renovated and furnished in most luxurious style, regardless of expense.
Genuine Mocha Mixture, Proprietor.

FAMILY ARMS, engraved in first-rate style on steel on seal or ring, 7s.; or cast on die, 6s. Book-plate, with arms, crest, and motto, 10s. Lineage and Arms searched with care, 6s.; three very ancient, for arms, 21s. The Heir-mark is the only guarantee for a pure gold. Illustrated Price-list gratis; price with crest, initials, or address, 1os.; best made 18s. 6d. Steel Dies, Seals, and Presses. Arms painted in proper colours, 20, Mid. and Old Bond-street (3 doors from Piccadilly), Bond-street corner of St. Martin's-court, W.

FOR FAMILY ARMS and CREST and motto, go to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office, 25, Cranbourn-street, Leicester-square. Arms Quartered and Emblazoned. Pedigrees Traced. Crests on Seals or Rings, 8s. Crest on Die, 5s. Initials, 1s. each. Arms, to crest and motto painted, 5s.; in colours, 12s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. "The Manual of Heraldry," 344 Engravings, 3s. 6d., post-free. By T. CULLETON, Lecturer on Heraldry. Gentleman attendant at St. Marylebone, R.E. The proper Place for Licenses to

---

THE NEW SUPERSEDED.—Perfection in the method of making linen so as to prevent the ink washing out is WARRANTED TO BE EFFECTED BY THE PEARL PEN, which, Nunn Pates, 34, 35, Great Pitcher, 1s.; at our establishments, 34, 66, 108, Fleet-street, 310, Regent-street, 65, Cheapside, 76, Aldgate, 10, Cornhill, 27, Charles-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane), W.

FOR FAMILY ARMS—the LINCOLN'S-INN HERALDIC OFFICE—and Seals and Dies Engraved, Painted, Emblazoned, and Quartered. Sketch, 2s. 6d.; or complete, Pedigree, Arms, Crest, and Motto, 5s. 6d. T. MORING, 44, High Holborn.

ENGRAVING, &c., in accordance only with the Decisions of Baron Alderson. Court-at-Bar-in-Error. Deed-plate Arms 10s. CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—The circumstances of such will be submitted for investigation. PATENT DIE and ENGRAVING against the London and Meridian Office.

LINCOLN'S-INN HERALDIC OFFICE.—The established office of authority. Engraved Seals and Arms, Crests, &c., authentically. "The Lincoln's-inn Manual of Heraldry," 3s., free-stamps.—H. SALT, Lincoln's-inn Gateway.

SEWING MACHINES.—The best as determined by the best judges—Messrs. FISHER, LYON, and Co.'s Patent Lock Stitch. Price £5 5s. Awarded the first medal of all others, at the Emperor Napoleon's Industrial and Manufactur Fair for their superiority of work, and as a family machine. The sewing is the same on both sides, makes no noise in working, and have their new patent hemmer, tucker, and gauge attached. Instructions gratis and guaranteed. Instructions gratis and guaranteed. Testimonials from the Queen's Laundress, &c. No. 76, Cheapside.

PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Manufacturing Silversmiths, 11 and 12, Cornhill, London, respectfully invite attention to their Stock of Electro-plate. The best wrought SILVER CHANGED for Cash. Table patterns, 7s. 4d. per ounce; dessert's pattern, 7s. 4d. per ounce.

12 Table Forks	£2	16	0	12 Table Spoons	£2	16	0
12 Table Spoons	2	16	0	12 Table Spoons	4	0	0
12 Dessert Ditto	2	4	0	12 Dessert Ditto	3	0	0
12 Table Forks	3	12	0	12 Table Forks	4	10	0
12 Dessert Ditto	2	12	0	12 Dessert Ditto	3	0	0
1 Gravy Ladle	0	12	6	1 Gravy Ladle	0	15	0
1 Soup Ladle	0	15	0	1 Soup Ladle	0	18	0
1 Sauce Ditto	0	7	6	1 Sauce Ditto	0	10	0
1 Fish Slice	0	12	6	1 Fish Slice	0	15	0
1 Fish Slice (pierced)	0	10	6	1 Fish Slice (pierced)	0	13	0
1 Pair Sugars	0	6	6	1 Pair Sugars	0	7	6
1 Pair Sugar Tongs	0	3	6	1 Pair Sugar Tongs	0	4	0

Every article is warranted to be of the best quality, and to be the cheapest house, manufactured and Sheffield plate is kept in stock. It combines the weights and prices of silver spooned and forks, silver fronts of fiddle pattern, and every article required in a family. Cash and credit-terms may part of the British dominions.

LIMOGES CHINA (first imported).—Elegant Dessert Services, from £1 5s.; a quite Dinner Service, £5 5s.; Dessert Service, from £2s. English and foreign Dinner, Dessert, Tea, and Breakfast Services, Glass Chandeliers, Table Glass, Vases, Parian and Bronze Statuettes, Vases, Jewellery, Clocks, &c., ready for Inspection of specialty suitable for presents, at MESSRS. TEDD'S, 459, Strand, 441, Strand, and 1, Northumberland-street.

GARDNERS' LAMPS are the BEST.—The most elegant, most economical, and cheapest assortment in London. Moderator Lamps, with all the new improvements, in bronze, ormolu, enamel, crystal, and moderator oil, to suit, from 10s. 6d. to 3l. 3s. per dozen. H. and J. Gardner by appointment to her Majesty, manufacturers to the Queen, Strand, Charing-cross.

TO CONNOISSEURS of ANTIQUE PLATE.—A complete SUITE of the above for a DINING-ROOM, in the Elizabethan style, of the most massive and imposing character, beautifully wrought of the purest silver, large sideboard, with richly-chased back in very handsome frame; a set of four massive candelabra, with richly-chased shafts and bases, and four massive candlesticks to match; two large wine-coolers, and enamel with rich chased scroll, similar to the above, and massive candle-shades to match. The whole of the above is now. The whole is very attractive. On view at BEDGRAVE and Co.'s, 27, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, where the whole may be viewed.

FURNITURE, CARPETS, and BEDDING.—For our Customers, obviously illustrated with nearly 90 Engravings, containing price of every article and every material, free by return post. Heroes of any class, furnished gratis, from Messrs. HEAL and SON'S, 196, Tottenham-court-road, W. Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge, London.

TO PARTIES ABOUT TO FURNISH.—An elegant SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM FURNITURE, in the Italian WALNUT WOOD, in rather considerable. FOR SALE, at reasonable terms. Price, complete, 30 guineas. It comprises a handsome couch, two easy chairs, six chairs, two occasional tables, six cloth damask, or velvet, also centre and occasional tables, beautifully-designed fireboard, fitted with elaborate lock and fenders and marble top; two fancy occasional chairs, and a very elegant glass in gilt frame. Also, a superior DINING-ROOM SUITE, in the Italian WALNUT WOOD, in rather considerable. Price, complete, 30 guineas. Also, a handsome WOOD and IRON BEDSTEAD, 4ft. 6in. by 6ft. 6in., with bedding, Kidderminster, London.

NEW BOOKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST and BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.
Now ready.
THE CRAVANGO RIVER. A Narrative of Travel, Discovery, and Adventure. By C. J. ANDERSSON, Author of "Lake Ngami." With Numerous Illustrations. 2ls.
LIFE OF GENERAL SIR CHARLES NAPIER, K.C.B., with his Correspondence from his Private Papers. By his Nephew and Aide-de-Camp, SIR W. NAPIER. 2 vols.
LADY CHARLOTTE BURY'S DOMESTIC SKETCHES in SCOTLAND. 2 vols.
Now ready.
COUNTY SOCIETY. "Verité, sans peur."
NOTICE TO QUIT. By the Author of "Hide and Seek."
EAST AND WEST. By J. F. COOKSON.
THE HOME AND THE HEARTH. By EDWARD COPPING.

This day is published, with Portrait, price 6s. 6d.,
BARON RICASOLI, Count Cavour's Successor, Prime Minister of Italy. A Biography.
By the Author of "The Private Life of King Dante." A Poem by THOMAS ROOD.
London: Rodd, at all the Libraries, two vols., 8vo.,
MY ELDEST BROTHER. By the Author of "Our Town of Four Acres." 21s.
SAUNDERS, OTLEY, and Co., 66, Brook-street, Hanover-square.

THE LITERARY BUDGET
Is still published on NOV. 1, price One Shilling, rent-free.
It will be published on NOV. 1, price One Shilling, rent-free.
The Literary Budget, a Monthly Compendium of Literature, Science, and Fine Arts, published during the previous month, and Original Essays and Reviews, Notices of Forthcoming Publications, and Literary Gossip of the day. Orders received to all Newsagents in town and country.
Office, 2, Serle-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, Publishing Agents, London.

Now ready, price 1s. post-free for 13 stamps,
THE OVERLAND GUIDE TO INDIA, Containing the Best Routes, Time, Fares, and Expenses, &c. This small work, in a small, portable form (intended for the pocket), contains the Overland Route to India, Egypt, and China. A Map, outlining the Overland Route, and a Handy Diary for Memoranda of Expenses, Letters, Packages, &c.
London: Wm. Allen and Co., 13, Paternoster-row.

THE NEW AND ILLUSTRATED EDITION,
Price Five Shillings, elegantly bound as a Gift-book,
HOME INFLUENCE: A Tale for Mothers and Daughters. By GRACE AGUILAR.
Grosvenor-place, Son of Grace Aguilar.
London: Groombridge and Sons, 5, Paternoster-row.

MR. DICKENS'S NEW WORK.
Now ready, in 8vo., with Illustrations, 15s.
GREAT EXPECTATIONS.
By CHARLES DICKENS.
Vol. LXIII. of
THE CONSTABLE OF THE TOWER. An Historical Romance. By WILLIAM HARRISON AINSWORTH. With Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.
* This day is published, the Third Edition, 8vo., 15s. 6d.,
THE CRUISE OF THE ANTARCTIC AND POLARIS. A Poem. By NEVILLE TEMPLE and EDWARD TARVOT.
London: Longman, Green, Longman, and Roberts.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d., finely printed in Gold and Colours,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS MAGAZINE FOR OCTOBER. Contents: Address—Border of Flowers—Illustrations of Flowers—Flowers in Season—Flowers in Pots—Ill. Illustrations from the Tudor to the Sixth Centuries—Poem by Tom Hood

NEW MUSIC.

LA CIRCASSIENNE.—Auber's New Opera, for Pianoforte on favourite Airs, in two Books, 2s. 6d. each. Also for Violin and Violoncello, 4s. each book. Also a Fantasia by J. ALDER, price 3s.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

THERE IS A SONG I'VE HEARD THEE SING. By JOHN BARNETT. Words by W. H. BELLAMY. Price 2s.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

NEW COMIC SONGS, composed by CHAS. W. GLOVER, and beautifully Illustrated Titles by PHIL MAY. "WHAT'S THE USE OF WORRYING?" Price 2s.
"FATHER LIKES CHAMPAGNE." Price 2s.
NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Price 2s.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.—The PRINCE OF WALES (march movement) Characteristic Portrait of the Sig, and WILD OATS (waltz). Price 3s. each.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S New Piece. ACCORDEZ MOI, for Pianoforte. Price 3s. 6d. "This piece will speak in popularity 'The Band Passes' by the same popular Composer."—Musical World, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

CUPID'S EYES.—ALFRED MELLON'S popular Ballad. Sung with immense success at the Crystal Palace, Covent-garden Theatre, Pier Pavilion, &c.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS, 210, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS.—ROBERTS and SMART, 104, Bunhill-row, invite inspection the most reasonable house in London for Hire and Purchase.—Illustrated Lists free.

PIANOS and HARMONIUMS. CHAPPELL and PACKER, 14, Soho-square, are now selling 42 the Hire Book at twenty-guinea prices—from £16 and upwards. Post Harmoniums, 20 guineas.

OETZMANN and PLUMB have Grands of all descriptions, at moderate prices, for Hire, from 20s. a month; and Cottage Pianos, at 16s. No connection with any other house in town. Discount—full, first-class.

PIANOFORTES, 25 Guineas, CHEAPSIDE, 104 and 74, Lodge-road, NICOLAS celebrated Lessons MUSICAL BOXES, 4 to 12 Tunes, from 30s. to 10 Guineas. Catalogues of Tunes and Price gratis and post-free on application.

ENGLISH CONCERTINA, £7 12s. 6d.; rosewood case, 10 keys, double action. Other models, from £2 10s. to £10. Inspection invited. Descriptive price-list gratis. W. E. WILKINS and CO., 6, Argyll-street.

BENSON'S WATCHES and CLOCKS. The Public are invited to inspect the Stock, which is the largest and most complete in London.
33 and 34, Ludgate-hill; 46 and 47, Cornhill.

BENSON'S WATCHES and CLOKS, Bond-street, London.—All watches are tested in a dark room, and keep correct time.

BENSON'S ILLUSTRATED WATCH PAMPHLET, free by post, describes, destroys the deception of Watch trade; explains persons living in any part of the world to select the best article adapted to their use. Watches sent free and safe by post on receipt of a remittance.
JAMES W. BENSON, 33 and 34, Ludgate-hill; 46 and 47, Cornhill, and 54, Old Bond-street, London.

FRODSHAM and BAKER, Chronometer Makers to the Admiralty, Clockmakers to the Queen. Pocket Chronometers, Repeating and Lever Watches of the highest construction, at moderate prices. Astronomical and other Clocks.
Address, 84, Strand, Corner of Adelaide-street, City. Established 1760.

DENT'S CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, and CLOCKS.—E. DENT, 33, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, Watch, Clock, and Chronometer Maker to special appointment to her Majesty.
33, Cockspur-street (removed from 82).

DENT, Chronometer, Watch, and Clock Maker to the Queen and Prince Consort, and maker of the Great Clock for the Houses of Parliament, 61, Strand, and 34, Royal Exchange.

WATCHES.—Gold Watches, jewelled in four holes, horizontal escapement made and finished, £2 12s.; three watches, £7 7s. each. A written guarantee given for correct performance. Chronometer, Duplex, Lever, Watches, Gold Guards, Jewellery, &c. Experienced, Workmen and Apprentices.
WILLIAM CARTER, 3, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

AMUSEMENT for WINTER EVENINGS is abundantly afforded to all purchasers of one of MECHI and BAZIN'S Sets of Games, MAGICAL and OTHER AMUSING TABLES. Prices: Complete with dice, bridge, cups, and boxes, and counters, in mahogany, 21s.; in walnut, 21s.; in oak, 21s.; in fine inlaid walnut, 30s.; in rosewood, inlaid, 42s.; in fine inlaid, 42s.; in fine inlaid, 63s.; in rosewood, with drawers, 84s.; in fine inlaid, with drawers, 105s. This stand is of the most admirable construction for playing games, although its one facilitates the entering and exact level the other. MECHI and BAZIN, 112, Regent-street, W., and 4, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

THE NEW GAME, TOMBOLA.—The new registered Round Game for any number of players, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.—MECHI and BAZIN, 4, Royal, W.G., London; and all Fancy Repositories.

BAGATELLES from 31s. 6d., complete. MECHI and BAZIN have in stock an ASSEZ and BRUNSWICK Maker, by appointment, of illustrated descriptive catalogues of Factory Grimes free on application.

DULL EVENINGS MADE MERRY.—Dissolving Views and Fairy Scenes and Evening Amusements at ASSER and SHERWIN'S, 81, Strand. An illustrated Catalogue forwarded on application.

GEOLOGY and MINERALOGY.—A Collection of Minerals, Rocks, Fossil Shells, and Fossils, to Geological Society, Museum of Economic Geology, Jermyn-street, &c., and Mr. Wall, 12, 26, 28, 30, 100 guineas each, of T. TENNANT, 149, Strand, W.C. Lists of duplicates for immediate disposal.

GRIFFIN'S PORTABLE CHEMICAL LABORATORY.—Mahogany Cabinet, containing Apparatus and Chemicals for a Course of Instruction and Amusing Experiments, at 10s. 6d., 21s., 42s., and upwards. JOHN J. GRIFFIN, F.C.S., 22, Southampton, St., London.

TYRRELL, F.—Messrs. SOLOMON'S Clothes, having formed their whole attention to it and since the publication of their last years, have invented and patented TINTED SPECTACLE LENSES of the present transparent, and yet most effective, description, which are highly recommended by any person who is unable to employ their sight at the usual distance, or who suffers from weakness of the eyes, dimness of sight, or any other defect. Careful and powerful assistance unnecessary.—9, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, W.

DEAFNESS.—A newly-invented Instrument for the Restoration of Hearing, called the Sound Magnifier, Imperceptible when in use. Sent on Condition. It fits into the ear, not perceptible to the most scrutinising observer, and will restore hearing to the most deaf. It affords immediate relief to deaf persons, and enables them to hear distinctly at church and at public meetings.—Mr. HOWARD, 17, Bedford-street, Strand.
Messrs. SOLOMON'S Establishment, Piccadilly, W.

MAGIC LANTERNS and DISSOLVING VIEWS, of the richest character, are now manufactured by DUBOSCQ and SOLEIL, Paris (successors), which can be supplied to any part the country at prices of other houses, and may be had on hire. Catalogues and Prices can be had on application to DUBOSCQ and SOLEIL, 45, Strand.

MESSRS. S. and B. SOLOMONS' New Opera Glass. Best, Light and general out-door Day and Night Race-glass. Perfect definition guaranteed. Also, Telescopes for the navy, army, sports, and astronomical research with the effect that they cannot be distinguished from the most costly 1000 pounds.—9, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

OPERA, RACE, and FIELD GLASSES.—Matchless in power and definition. An immense variety to select from at CALABRAI'S, 28, Ave. New Bond-street, corner of Conduit-street. N.B. Sole Agent for the celebrated small and powerful Race-glasses, manufactured by Voigtlander, Vienna. Superior in all points. A guarantee is invited.

VOLUNTEER and ARCHERY PRIZES.—PETROWN'S LANDSCAPE GLASSES are the most powerful and perfect. Sold by Mr. Mitchell, Lee-road, City, John Battcock, 63, Cornhill; Wood and Son, 3, Arundel, 13, Duke-street, Strand.

KING and CO., SILKMERCERS, &c., 243, Regent-street, beg respectfully to announce the arrival from their Agencies, of Lyons and Abroad that the season now they can sell the same identical goods 15 per cent less than other houses in business they do a larger house and foreign trade in a less house at a small or less than other firms do with eight or ten houses in business. Their Agencies in Lyons and Abroad enable them to be paid for by the most confidential profits being marked on every article.

THE NEWEST CASHMERE and SILK SHAWLS at KING'S, 243, Regent-street, from 21s. to 10 Guineas.

THE NEWEST CLOTH PALETOTS at KING'S, 243, Regent-street. Patterns and sizes Printed despite post-free.—KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE. THE NEW SILKS, £1 a Dress, at KING'S, 243, Regent-street.

AUTUMN and WINTER FABRICS in all Qualities, Textures, and Colours, Serges, Reps, Lustre Poplins, Alexandra Watered Silks, Velvets, Velveteens, &c., &c.
Address to KING and Co., 243, Regent-street, London.

IRISH POPLINS, £1 15s. a Dress, at KING'S, 243, Regent-street. Patterns post-free. Address to KING and Co., 243, Regent-street, London.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE. BLACK SILKS, £1 a Dress, at KING'S, 243, Regent-street. Bonnets, Gros Royals, Gros d'Afrique, Gros Royal de Suisse, &c. £1 5s. to £5 the Full Robe.
Address to KING and Co., 243, Regent-street, London.

PATTERNS SENT POST-FREE. AUTUMN SILKS, £1 a Dress, at KING'S, 243, Regent-street. Rich Brocade Silks, Rich Satin Cord Poplins, Richest Faconnée Silks, Address to KING and Co., 243, Regent-street.

Oct. 16, 1861.

DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP. JAMES STRONG and COMPANY beg to announce to their friends and the Public that, in consequence of the retirement of Mr. JAMES STRONG, the business is now SELLING OFF the whole of their well-kept STOCK, consisting of Linens, Damasks, Diapers, Huckabacks, Towels, Quilts, Blankets, Flannels, Dress Goods, Millinery, Mantles, Lace, Hosiery, and all Household Linens. Welsh Flannels, Cambric Handkerchiefs, Shirtings, Calicoes, Longcloths, Sheetings, &c., at prices much reduced from the usual terms to meet most the requirements of all parties. A large call is invited.
79, Cheapside-street, E.C.

HOUSEHOLD LINEN DEPARTMENT.—JOHN HARVEY, SON, and Co., of 8, Leicester-hill, wholesale and retail dealers in all kinds of LINENS, beg to call attention to the following, all first-rate, DOUBLE DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS, 2 yards square, 3s. 6d. each; 2½ yards square, 4s. 6d. each; 3 yards square, 5s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 2½ yards, 5s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 3 yards, 6s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 3½ yards, 7s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 4 yards, 8s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 5 yards, 10s. 6d. each; 3 yards by 6 yards, 12s. 6d. each. Patterns sent free by post. Also patterns and prices of Linens, Damasks, Diapers, Huckabacks, Towels, Quilts, &c. Orders above 20s. carriage paid upon remote above 40s.

ROBERTSHAW'S WINTER HOSIERY for all ages and sizes, Merino and Cashmere, Hosiery, manufactured into Stockings, Waistcoats, Drawers, Tuban Dresses, Petticoats, Shirts, Pants, Gloves, Mittens, Caps, Hoods, Boots, Socks, Comforters, Scarfs, Shawls, Opera Jackets, Dressing Gowns, Welsh Flannels. Printed Plans of Ladies' Welsh Dressing Gowns, Gentlemen's Dressing Gowns, and Children's Pelisses, Post-free.
ROBERTSHAW'S, 31, Ludgate-hill.

OUR NEW FOULARD DRESS, 12s. 9d. Our New Foulard Pattern, 12s. 9d. Our Guinea-and-a-Half Velvet Pattern Dress, 21s. New Shapes in our celebrated Half-a-Guinea Cloth Jackets. THE MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE, 77, Oxford-street.

THE LARGEST STOCK in the WORLD and the greatest variety of Horsehair Crinoline Petticoats are at the MANUFACTORY, 30, Ludgate-street, E.C.

EVERY NOVELTY in Watch-spring Paris and American Skeleton SHIRTS in White, Scarlet, and Coloured, at 42s., 45s., and 48s. each. Patterns free.
WILLIAM CARTER, 3, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

AN ENDLESS VARIETY of Quilted Petticoats, in Silk and Satin, from 21s. each. Illustrations and a great Novelty in Quilted Petticoats are out of all.
WILLIAM CARTER, 3, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

NEW DESIGNS in Front-fastening Elastic Boots and SHOES, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d., and upwards. Slays, Hats, &c., to 30s. Measure and prize-list post-free. HOBBS and CARTER, 10, Oxford-street.

MANTLE CLOTHS. CHARLES MECKING and CO., 111, Regent-street, W., and 69, Cheapside, E.C., are selling a large stock of most beautiful goods, adapted for autumn and winter wear, at very low prices. Also, every description of Cloth for Ladies' use, adapted for the present season. Patterns free.

REAL SEALSKIN CLOAKS. R. HOWELL, JAMES, and CO. respectfully announce that they have just received a large and choice assortment of these beautiful Cloaks in all sizes and in new shapes. An inspection is respectfully solicited. 91, 92, and 93, St. Paul's-churchyard, Fulwood's-rents, Holborn.

INDIA SHAWLS and SCARFS, at greatly reduced prices.—FARMER and ROGERS invite attention to their large and choice STOCK of the above, which they are selling at nearly half the usual prices. The new Paris Mantles, Jackets, and Costumes, in Velvet, Cloth, and Silk, are now ready. Also many elegant novelties designed expressly for the present season. 171, 173, 175, Regent-street.

FORDS' WINTER MANTLES.—The new Mantles are now being opened. Illustrations of them for preparing for country residence, or wherever wish to save post-fee. 27, Oxford-street, and 1, Newman-yard.
T. Ford, 27, Oxford-street, London, W.

FORD'S NEW MATERIALS for MANTLES and JACKETS.—MANY HUNDRED pieces for choice and fashionable wear them—Patterns post-free. 27, Oxford-street, W.

FORD'S MANTLE ROOMS, 27, Oxford-street, London. Ladies will find an extensive assortment of fashionable Mantles, Jackets, &c., at moderate prices. Patterns free.

FORD'S MANTLE ROOMS, 27, Oxford-street, London, W. Ladies may safely rely on the fashion and style, in the sizes, patterns of materials, &c., free.

FORDS NEW LACE for the present Season are fully and beautifully illustrated in the "Queen's Dress Book," post-free for 13 stamps.—27, Oxford-street, W.

FORD'S GARIBALDI SHIRTS FOR LADIES, Made in Flannel, Cashmere, Velvet, &c., Prices from 2s. 6d. Illustrations and patterns post-free. Vide "Queen's."

GARIBALDI JACKET RIDDLES, now 2s. 6d. Fashionable, new pattern Riddles, for the assistance of all persons partially crippled for standing, made in Black Velvet, beautifully braided. Illustrations, &c., post-free.
FORD'S, 27, Oxford-street, London, W.

FORD'S RIDING HABITS, of superior make and style. Details of Riddles, Shapes, &c., with patterns, post-free. Illustrations, Costumes, Costume Serges, with Black Silk, 21s. 6d.—27, Oxford-street, London, W.

REAL FUR SEAL CLOAKS, For Carriage Wear and Dress. C. NICHOLSON and SON, 50, Wood-street, Cheapside, E.C. Established 1760.

NEW AUTUMN SILKS. PETER ROBINSON begs to announce the arrival of the Parisian Fashions for the Fall Dress. It parts, wide width, exceptional for the low Colours. Purple and Claret, 12s. 6d. Noir Glacé, 2s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. Gros de Afrique, Gros de Suez, £1 to £1 5s. Elegant designs in Faconnées, Brocades, &c., from £1 10s. to £2 10s. Full Dress. Patterns free.—Peter Robinson, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

REAL ABERDEEN WINCEYS, 9½d. per yard, 32 inches wide. Full Dress. Winceys for children. Printed Sarcenets for Full Dress, 9½d. per yard, 32 inches wide. Full Dress. Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

RICH IMPERIAL DROGUETS, from 10s. 6d. to 16s. Full Dress. Turkey Red Prints at 6½d. the Full Dress. Patterns free.—PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

FRENCH MUSLINS for Morning Dresses, 9½d. per yard. A desirable opportunity of purchasing for Ballds. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW AUTUMN JACKETS in Cloth, Corkscrew, and Velvet, from 10s. 6d. to 3 gs. Ladies' Riding Habits of every description cannot be supplied. Illustrations, with patterns of materials, sent free by post.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

NEW Second-Mourning MANTLES. A Book of Engravings, with Patterns of Silks and Stuffs, sent free by post.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' GARIBALDI SHIRTS, Made in Flannel, Cashmere, Velvet, &c. Prices from 2s. 6d. Illustrations and patterns post-free. Vide "Queen's."
FORD'S, 27, Oxford-street, London, W.

HOUSEHOLD LINENS. A detailed Catalogue with Patterns free. Families furnished with every description of Linen for Household purposes, by the yard or piece.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' INVISIBLE NETS, Made in the Shape of a Bow, to fit the Back of the Head. New Indie Bands, two pattern, all sizes. In 3d., 4s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. 6d. each. Post-free, 6d. extra postage.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

FAMILY MOURNING!!! PETER ROBINSON'S Family and General Mourning Warehouse is now open for extensive inspection. Families will find a great saving by forwarding their orders to this Establishment, where the best goods only can be obtained at the most reasonable prices. Mourning Bonnets, Caps, Collars, Cuffs, Handkerchiefs, Veils, Gloves, Hosiery, Dresses, Jackets, Mantles, Shawls, Ribbons, and Millinery, of the newest and most fashionable description. Widows' Dress Caps, Bonnets, and Veils, made and trimmed in the shortest notice. Observe the Address, PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street, London.

BLACK SILKS.—The Richest, Best and Cheapest in London, and the best wearing silks to be obtained. Black Glacé Silks, 2s. 6d. per yard, to 5s. 6d. the Full Dress. Black Drapery, from 9s. 6d. to 2 gs. Black Satin Cord Poplins, now re-introduced, 10s. to 16s. Black Gros Royals, 2 gs. to 3 gs. Black Rich Brocades in the richest qualities. Black Figured Silks unsurpassed for wear, at from 2s. 6d. per yard. Black Figured Silks, the most approved makes. Black Satin Duchesse, 3 gs. to 4 gs. Black Satin Merveilleux, 3 gs. to 4 gs. Black Discount Silk Robes from 3½ to 7 guineas. Patterns of every description of Black Silks sent free by post.
At PETER ROBINSON'S Family and General Mourning Warehouse, 103 to 108, Oxford-street, London.

BLACK and HALF-MOURNING FABRICS, Of the most fashionable textures for the present season. PETER ROBINSON'S Black Velvet Dress Skirts, and Velvet Jackets, in all sizes, ready for wear. Black Velvet Bonnets, French and English Hats. Black Velvet Cuffs, Collars, Ruffs, &c. The Indispensable Mourning Handkerchief Linens, The Best Cambric Handkerchiefs, 1s. 7d. to the new Queen The new Hemstitched Widows' and other Veils. Every Article of Mourning. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

BLACK SILKS.—The Richest, Best and Cheapest in London, and the best wearing silks to be obtained. Black Glacé Silks, 2s. 6d. per yard, to 5s. 6d. the Full Dress. Black Drapery, from 9s. 6d. to 2 gs. Black Satin Cord Poplins, now re-introduced, 10s. to 16s. Black Gros Royals, 2 gs. to 3 gs. Black Rich Brocades in the richest qualities. Black Figured Silks unsurpassed for wear, at from 2s. 6d. per yard. Black Figured Silks, the most approved makes. Black Satin Duchesse, 3 gs. to 4 gs. Black Satin Merveilleux, 3 gs. to 4 gs. Black Discount Silk Robes from 3½ to 7 guineas. Patterns of every description of Black Silks sent free by post.
At PETER ROBINSON'S Family and General Mourning Warehouse, 103 to 108, Oxford-street, London.

BLACK and HALF-MOURNING FABRICS, Of the most fashionable textures for the present season. PETER ROBINSON'S Black Velvet Dress Skirts, and Velvet Jackets, in all sizes, ready for wear. Black Velvet Bonnets, French and English Hats. Black Velvet Cuffs, Collars, Ruffs, &c. The Indispensable Mourning Handkerchief Linens, The Best Cambric Handkerchiefs, 1s. 7d. to the new Queen The new Hemstitched Widows' and other Veils. Every Article of Mourning. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford-street.

LADIES' WEDDING OUTFITS sent free of carriage. Descriptive Lists, with estimates, forwarded free by post. CAPTER, NOTT, and CO., 49, Greenbank-street, Dundee, N.B.

Sent post-free, Descriptive Lists of COMPLETE SETS OF BABY LINEN, which are sent home through the kindness of numerous UNDERCLOTHING FOR HOME, INDIA, and THE COLONIES, for Ladies and Children.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT. Established in 1770.

LADIES' WEDDING OUTFITS sent free of carriage. Descriptive Lists, with estimates, forwarded free by post. CAPTER, NOTT, and CO., 49, Greenbank-street, Dundee.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN BY APPOINTMENT. Established in 1770.

BABIES' BASSINETS, ready formed, and sent home free of carriage. Illustrated and Descriptive Lists forwarded to CAPTER, NOTT, and CO., 49, Greenbank-street, Dundee, N.B. Descriptive Lists, 13 stamps, sent free by post.

LADIES' LINEN one-third less than the usual prices. Sent home free. Illustrated and Descriptive Lists, 13 stamps, sent free by post. CAPTER, NOTT, and CO., 49, Greenbank-street, Dundee.

BABY LINEN one-third less than the usual prices. Sent home free. Illustrated and Descriptive Lists, 13 stamps, sent free by post. CAPTER, NOTT, and CO., 49, Greenbank-street, Dundee.

SHIRTS.—Morning and Evening Shirts of the finest possible fitting, with precision and ease, at one-half the price.—CAPTAIN and WATTS, 45, Jermyn-street, St. James's.

DO YOU WISH YOUR BOYS WELL DRESSED?—Then them to RICHARDSON, 31 and 32, Fenchurch-street, City. Established 1812. Patterns free. Size 10s. 6d. United school suits from 12s. 6d. Patterns of the cloths, with rules for measurement, free by post. Every size and pattern for children of both sexes, and prices marked in plain figures.
RICHARDSON, 31 and 32, St. Paul's-churchyard.

CLARK'S ARTIFICIAL or WINTER SKIN, for Use in the Ball-room, Theatre, &c. W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

CLARK'S AUTUMNAL and WINTER OVERCOATS and CAPES. W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

CLARK'S SCOTCH TWEED AUTUMNAL and WINTER CRIBOUSES, &c. W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

CLARK'S WATERPROOF INVERNESS WRAPPERS. W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

CLARK'S JUVENILE CLOTHING, for Gentlemen from One to Eight Years of age. Harvest Suits of every description ..... from 20s.
Knickerbocker Suits ..... from 25s.
Inverness Wrapper ..... from 21s.
W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

CLARK'S TWEED RIDING-HABITS, SPECIALITÉ. W. Clark, Tailor and Outfitter, 132, Regent-street.

VOLUNTEER UMBRELLAS.—HUTTON and CO'S Registered Volunteer Umbrella Stick, adapted to their Patent "Rotary" Umbrella Mounting only, 5 and 6, Corporation-street, London, E.C.

HAIR JEWELLERY.—ARTIST IN HAIR, DWINDLE, begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry that he constantly makes up Tapestry mounts in gold Hair Bracelets, Lockets, Brooches, Rings, &c., in the newest and most elegant style, and on the shortest notice. Hair Jewellery Repository, 214, Piccadilly, Dwindle, 212, Piccadilly-street, London.

HAIR JEWELLERY.—HOOPER, Artist in Hair, Manufacturer and Dealer in Gold Hair Jewellery, begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry that he has just received from Hardwood clock in Hair Jewellery in Bracelet, Guard Chain, Brooch, Ring, &c.
5, Piccadilly, Regent-street, W.

HAIR RESTORER PRESERVED, IMPERIAL, in Bottles, 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each. Sold by Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for Preserving, Beautifying, and Restoring the Hair. This unrivalled preparation for its beautifully nourishing properties. For children it is invaluable, as by its use in infancy the hair is rendered soft, glossy, and pliable, and is not liable to cause small, and its best habits. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists throughout the World.
Ask for "ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL."

NAPOLEON BLEACHING and the GOLDEN DEW, for restoring the hair. The fact of its being in constant use in the Royal Nurseries of the Tuileries is the best proof of its superior excellence. 3s. 6d., 7s., and 10s. per bottle.—18, New Bond-street, and 150, Regent-street, and Chemists.

PIESSE and LUBIN, SWEET SCENTS from every Flower that Blows in Fragrance. 2, New Bond-street, London.

6, GROSVENOR-STREET, BOND-STREET. ALL CONSCIOUSNESS of HAIR.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH, on a New and Improved Principle, by ATKINSON, Surgeon-Dentist, 20, Old Bond-street, Piccadilly.
Artificial Dental Preparations protected by Royal Seal, July 17, 1861, for Atkinson's Arsenical Dentifrice, for Scale and Tartar, and fixed without springs or fastenings, without pain or extraction, by Atkinson's Patent Improved Gum Enamel, Atkinson's Patent Improved Mineral Teeth.
Decayed Teeth Stopped, Loose Teeth Fastened, Discoloured Teeth Whitened, Tooth-ache Cured.—Atkinson, 20, Old Bond-street, Brighton; and Bennett's Hill, Birmingham.

DELICACY OF THE LUNGS.—Many are afflicted with any complaint, but a slight cough on the surface of the face, unpleasantly true, that without the aid of medicine, by the use of this Balm, the lungs are strengthened, the cough is immediately relieved, and the system of expectoration and rest patronise having found for which this name was introduced by their original inventor, Dr. Locock, and which for 30 years has supported its great reputation on any other article possessing the same name. Prepared only by Thomas Prout, 229, Strand, and unfortunately it has been attempted to be imitated by many, thereby inducing many to undermining the constitution. Sufferers had better not trifle with their health, but purchase at once of the best manufacturer, even though accompanied by incorrectness recommendations. Prout's Balm of Colchicum and Lithia is the only remedy for Gout, Rheumatism, and Gravel. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Agents in London, and all towns of the kingdom. A List of Prices and Agents forwarded, on all other information, and post-free on receipt of a stamped envelope.

VARICOSE VEINS, SPRAINS, &c.—Elastic Stockings, Knee-caps, Ankle-jointed Steel Supports, made on the most principle, give a far greater amount of support than any others, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Instructions for measurement and prices sent free by post.
JOHN WOODHOUSE, 4, Vere-street, Oxford-street, W.

SPARKS and SON, Patent Truss and Elastic Stocking Makers, 31, Cornhill-street, Regent-street, W. Established above 30 years.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA is an effervescing draught, and a mild but effectual Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants. Sold by all Chemists.

SIR J. MURRAY'S PATENT FLUID MAGNESIA. Highly recommended for many late years and eminent Cure of Indigestion, Sick-headache, Acidity, Heartburn, Biliousness, Loss of Appetite, &c. Purchase in and insist on per-box. Proprietors of Invalid Beverages. Agents—Wilcox and Co., 39, Sackville-street, Piccadilly.

WANTED, LEFT-OFF CLOTHES, Uniforms, Furniture, Miscellaneous Property, &c. The highest price, by Mr. and Mrs. EMANUEL, 84, Great Portland-street, W. Mrs. EMANUEL, 84, Great Portland-street, W. Letters or Cards will have the utmost value in each immediately remitted. Established 1820.

NEW MUSIC.

D'ALBERT'S ATTILA QUADRILLE. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S MILANESE POLKA. Just published, beautifully Illustrated in Colours by EDANDARD. Price 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZ. Founded on the favourite song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." "The waltz of the season." Beautifully Illustrated. 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW QUADRILLE, MADRID, Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NEW VALSE, SULTANA. Just out. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 4s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

D'ALBERT'S NELLY GRAY VALSE, with Optional Accompaniment. Now at last published. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 3s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S NEW DRUM and FIFE TUTOR. Just published, with a selection of the most popular Music. Arranged for the above Instruments by a Band Master. Price 1s. 6d., post-free. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

B RINLEY RICHARDS' FLORENCE. The last original piece by that popular Composer. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

B RINLEY RICHARDS' CHRISTY MINSTREL MELODIES, brilliantly arranged for Pianoforte:—

I'm leaving thee in sorrow, Annie 3 0
Beautiful star 3 0
Come where my love lies dreaming 3 0
Lilly Dale 3 0
Tell the bold Dragoon 3 0
Old folks at home 3 0
Gentle Annie 3 0
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

B RINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the most varied, and cheapest of all Instruction Books—containing elementary instructions, exercises, airs, and a great variety of the most popular themes on progressive lessons. Sixty pages, full music-size, price 4s. "M.R. Life of Brinley Richards." Regular Piano will be sent on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

K UHE'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE:—
Echoes "Sol Mare." Barcarolle. Price 4s.
Echoes "Fleur de Genêt." Caprice Espagnole. 4s.
Echoes "Les Hirondelles." Grand Valse Brillante. 4s.
Echoes "Stormy Shores." Caprice Pittoresque. 4s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S LA PRIERE DUNE MERE, Sacred to Her Majesty. Price 3s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S THE ANGELS' HARP. Dedicated by Permission to Her Majesty. Price 3s. 6d. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

TREKELL'S LA VIVANDIERE. Impromptu Militaire pour Piano. Price 3s. 6d. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

R OSALINE. New Song. By GEORGE BARKER. This charming song will become a favourite on the Concert-platform! "Its leading theme is sorrow, Annie!" Price 2s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NOTICE.—HALF-PRICE.—All Music, and the best Editions, at half the published price, sent post-free for postage-stamps. Catalogues gratis. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street, W.

HOWARD PAUL'S GREAT SONG.
M R. GORILLA.—Ladies and Gentlemen, how do you do?
I'm the Gorilla of Monsieur Chalilu.
Price 2s. 6d. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

Now ready,
COOTE'S SIMON BOCCANEGRA VALSE (Written this New Opera). Price 4s. Illustrated in Colours. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

Encored Nightly at Mellon's Concerts.
COOTE'S NEW YORK QUADRILLES, played with immense success. Price 4s. Solo or Duet; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Band, 8s. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

The Latest Excitement.
COOTE'S DERVIS'S LAND GALOP on the celebrated American Walk Round. Price 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s.; Orchestra, 7s. Very popular Music Lesson Quadrilles. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

COOTE'S CORNFLOWER VALSE, price 4s.; Septet, 5s. 6d.; Orchestra, 7s. Considered to be the gem of the season. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

O H, IF I HAD SOME ONE TO LOVE ME! Song. Price 2s. 6d. "Great when the words and music go hand in hand." Ballad by FRED. BUCKLEY. Price 2s. 6d. Encored nightly. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

I'D RATHER BE A VIOLET. A most pleasing Song. The melody is simple and beautiful. By FRED. BUCKLEY. Price 2s. 6d. HOWARD and CRAVE, 41, New Bond-street.

NEW MUSIC HALF PRICE.
Fairy Volins, Ballet, Rinz ... ... 2s. 6d.
Tinsel Polka, Schottisch ... ... 2s. 6d.
Soon and far Keel (Sacred Harmy ... ... 2s. 6d.
The Fettered Corsair, Illustrated ... ... 2s. 6d.
The Sylphide, Polka ... ... 2s. 6d.
The Fairy Queen, Polka, 4s. ... ... 2s.
Tis not what man Doth, but what man should do (words and mus. Dibbin, &c. ... ... 2s. 6d.
D'Albert's Crimea Rose Polka ... ... 2s. 6d.
D'Albert's Crimea Quadrilles ... ... 2s. 6d.
Wellington's Victory, Battle Effects. Dibbin ... 2s. 6d.
Wanderer of Music, Study by Calkbrenner ... ... 2s.
Nazzaro Valse de Concert. Dedicated to Rosalia ... 2s. 6d.
Published by D'ALBERT, 244, Tottenham-court-road.

A LL MUSIC HALF PRICE.—All full-price music, and the best editions, supplied on the above terms, at 1s. each post-paid. Catalogues gratis and post-free. Country orders attended to punctually.

A DAM'S DIXEY'S-LAND QUADRILLES are now being played with immense success every evening, Jullien and his principal bands. ADAM, EVANS and Co., 77, Baker-street, Portman-square, W.

A DAM'S AMERICAN GALOP, splendidly illustrated in Colours, with a view of Grand Opera Comique. The best Galop ever composed. Price 3s.; post-free for 19 stamps. ADAM, EVANS and Co., 77, Baker-street, Portman-square, W.

A DAM'S BURLESQUE QUADRILLES Contain the "Young Man from the Country," the "Portrait Cow," &c. The most dramatic set of the season. Solo, 3s.; Duet, 4s.; Septet, 5s.; Orchestra, 7s. EVANS and Co., 77, Baker-street, Portman-square, W. Post-free for 19 stamps.

U N BALLO IN MASCHERA. Mazurka Brillant. By LANGTON WILLIAMS. From Verdi's New Opera, Price 3s. Also, the 4th Edition of the DAL SEGNO MAZURKA. By the same Author. Price 3s.; Duet 4s.; Septet, 5s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, Old Bond-street, W.

THE VOICES OF THE PAST. New Ballad. By LANGTON WILLIAMS. Sung by Miss Lascelles at St. James's Hall with the greatest success. Price 2s. 6d.; free for stamps.—W. WILLIAMS and Co., 241, Tottenham-court-road.

NEW MUSIC.

BOOSEY and SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR THE WINTER SEASON.

HOWARD GLOVER'S "RUY BLAS," to be produced at the Royal English Opera, Covent-garden, on Monday next, will be published on the following morning. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE GOLDEN WREATH, a Book of twenty-four Part Songs, suitable for Choral Societies, Schools, and Private Parties. Edited by Joseph Mainzer, and adapted to popular melodies by G. Linley. Price 3s. in Leather.

CONTENTS:
Summer Evening. | Lady, be happy.
Lady, be gay. | Hail, Columbia!
The Song of the Waits. | Hark! March; or, Song of the Rifle Corps.
Where is my Mother? | Whom love marries.
Hail to the Chief. | Hail to the Bride.
The Little Fisherman. | Love's Dominion.
Spring. | A Spirtuelle Welcome.
Sweet Spring. | Hail to Fatherhood.
The Evergreen Bay. | King Christmas.
The Merry Bells. | The Joy of Youth.
Tell me what thy Will doth say. | Evening Recreation.
O, gentle, gentle Summer Rain. | Friendship.
Merry-go-round.

BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

250 CHANTS (Single and Double) for the Sabbath Voice. Pianoforte, Organ, or Harmonium. By Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Professor of Music, Oxford. Dr. Crotch, Dr. Green, Dr. Boyce, Dr. Arnold, Dr. Croft, Gibbons, &c. Cook, Dr. Nares, G. F. Harris, &c. The cheapest and best collection of Chants published. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE DEVONSHIRE MODIST, a Book of Part Songs, Glees, &c. By EDWARD CAPERN (Rural Postman, Bideford, Devon). The words and music complete. Price 2s. in cloth.

CONTENTS:
Blue Bells. | Love and Liberty.
Merry Days. | Sweet Spring, the renewed, soon.
Where the Yarbro comes. | Hail, Columbia!
The Sabbath is waiting. | Christmas Bells.
My Native Isle. | Hail to the Chief.
Come, list, my boys. | The Seagull.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Thirty easy but effective pieces, arranged for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards, Mendelssohn, Hummel, Gurnett, Dussek, and Steibelt, all fingered and with the best editions of the text.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM, Second Edition, much enlarged, published this day, price One Shilling, contains Sixteen easy but effective pieces, by Brinley Richards, in addition to a set of Quadrilles, Valses, Polka, Galop, and Mazurka, all fingered and with the best editions of the text.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

5S. EDITION OF TROVATORE, VOICE and PIANOFORTE, with Italian and English words and Portraits of Mario and Grisi, in character. Trovatore Valse and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words, price 3s. in cloth, being the cheapest and most complete edition.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

20 VIOLIN DUETS (for Two Violins), arranged by Brinley Richards, from Old Masters. Published this day, Selected from the compositions of Mozart, Meyerbeer, Beliini, Donizetti, Verdi, and Auber.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

20 HORNPIPES and MINSTREL AIRS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, in one book (with separate Violin part), price 5s. 6d. Just published.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

20 ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTCH AIRS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE, in one book (with separate Violin part). Price 5s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

12 OPERATIC AIRS for VIOLIN and PIANOFORTE in one book (with separate Violin part). Price 5s. 6d.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS QUICK-STEP JOURNAL FOR THE PIANOFORTE, published on pseudo-serie. Now ready, 13 first-rate, each containing Six Dances, Reels, &c., arranged for 4d performers, price 3s. 6d. each, post-free.
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS by CLARIBEL.—Won't you tell me, my Mother? Ballad. 2s. 6d. Old Old Paths, 2s. 6d. The Bonnie Boat, 2s. 6d.; The Mariner's Darling, 2s.; Dominland, 2s. 6d.; I remember it well, 2s. 6d.; Annie's Choice, 2s.; Annie's Reply, 2s.; The Mother's Farewell, 2s. 6d. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

NEW VOCAL DUETS, HOPEFUL AND CONFIDING, JOYOUS SPRING, FESTIVITY, AUTUMN, price 3s. each, and 4s. full-bound. These three charming duets, for "Miss' voice, are the most effective and popular duets of the season. They are the "Evil Wives Saying" "The Merry Minstrels," "Fairy Bonnes," "The Sailor Boy and his Dog," &c. Post-free for stamps. Order book wanted by all. Catalogues gratis and post-free.
London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG, by the Composer of "Will you come to the Bower?" "I'm a Little Vagabond," &c. "Mr. Glover has written a song that is the talk of the town. It is called 'Ruy Blas,' and is the most charming ballad we have heard for many a day. Mr. Glover has written nothing more melodious. The subject is so striking that it will soon be upon every organ. Published this day, price 2s. 6d. DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

C ORNETS-A-PISTONS,
Manufactured by
ANTOINE COURTOIS. ... ... £ s. d.
The Concert-room Model, with double water key, in one ... 9 9 0
The Concert-room Model, with double water key, in two ... 10 10 0
The Concert-room Model, with double water key, in three ... 12 12 0
These instruments have been adopted by MR. Levy, Bandmaster, Coldstream Guards; MR. Koenig, Bandmaster, Scots Fusilier Guards, by the principal cornet-players in the Bands of the 1st and 2nd Life Guards, Royal Horse Guards, Grenadier Guards, Coldstream Guards, Scots Fusilier Guards, and Rifle Brigade.
Drawings forwarded on application to MR. S. A. CHAPPELL (late Antoine Courtois), 50, New Bond-street, London.

SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES—
CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES, by all the best makers, from 15 guineas to 80. Also, several new Pianofortes, by Chappell and Co., at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description, Harmoniums, Concertinas, &c. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW FIVE-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, the best of all makers. In oak case, with 3 octaves of four stops each, viz., Dulciana, Diapason, Principal, and Oboe. Price Five Guineas.—A CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

NEW SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five stops, viz., Dulciana, Diapason, Principal, Oboe, and Bassoon. These instruments are lower in price and superior to all other Harmoniums hitherto produced. Drawings forwarded on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW CHURCH HARMONIUMS, with two rows of keys, by ALEXANDRE, No. 1, with double key-board, 6 stops, and 13 rows of vibrators, in an oak case, 12 guineas. No. 2, with double key-board, 8 stops, and 17 rows of vibrators, in an oak case, 16 guineas. These new and powerful instruments surpass all others for church purposes, and are equally adapted to the requirements of a drawing-room. They are particularly recommended to resist the ill-effects of damp, which is so common in churches, and are guaranteed to stand in tune for any length of time. Testimonials from the authority of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishops, and leading Clergymen, and from Sir George Smart, and Sir Henry Cassley; also from Dr. Hopkins, Dr. Gauntlett, Dr. Camidge, &c. Drawings forwarded on application, and carriage, with full descriptive Lists, will be forwarded on application to CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only Instrument of the kind which will stand in tune in any climate. It is the only instrument which is not instantly affected by changes of weather, and is always examined for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room. Full descriptive Lists on application. CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS, from 5 to 50 guineas, are the most perfect instruments ever produced in every possible variety, in the way that exclusive taste can be obtained. The most flattering unsolicited testimonials are daily received from purchasers of these celebrated Instruments. Illustrated Catalogues on application to the manufacturers, BOOSEY and SONS, 24, Holles-street, W.

G. M. INNES and CO., Wine Merchants, 60, Strand, W., strongly recommend their PALE DRY SHERRY, at 24s., 30s., 36s., and 42s.; Vin de Pasto, 48s.; Pure Malt Stout, 24s.

EAU-DE-VIE.—This Pure PALE BRANDY, 10 to 20 years old, is guaranteed, upon analysis, to be positively free from fusel oil, very superior to many brandies sold at double the price. Terms: cash before delivery, or a reference for the country, the Railway carriage paid. To agents, and to be obtained only of HENRY BRETT and Co., Wine Merchants, Dartford, Kent, and 20, Mincing-lane, London.

ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE, in Bottle, recommended by Baron Liebig and all the faculty, may now be had of the Sole Consignee of Messrs. HARDINGE, PARKER and Co., 54 Pall-mall, and 14½, Regent-street, Westminster, S.W.

ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE—FINDLATER, MACKIE, TODD, and Co. beg to announce that they are now prepared to supply ALLSOPP'S PALE ALE of the finest quality in bottle, and casks of 18 gallons and upwards. Pale-ale and London-bridge Bottling Establishment, 31½, Tooley-street, S.E.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA is "always good in fact," as tasting Tea at contract with purchasers direct from the Chinese country of the two-pound brown cartoons known as HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA. Sold by 2,000 agents. Wholesale Warehouse, 90, Fenchurch-street, and Finsbury-circus. Sold also at Old Broad-st., Stewart, 24, 26, St. Paul's-yard, 24, 25, Aldersgate-st., Goodwin, Islington, 18, Hyde-st.—Parts Exposition-place, Simpson, 33, Oxford-st. Retail agents wanted; every town in the Kingdom.

Sold by Grocers, Druggists, &c.

IMPROVED HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA. Price 1s. 6d. per lb.
Fryer Fearl Cocoa, 1s. 6d. per lb. Mixed Moss Cocoa, 2s. 6d. per lb. and Soho, Soluble and Leaden.

SWANN and CO.'S STOURPORT MALT VINEGAR are the finest in the market. Vide "Morning Post," Jan. 14 and 4 Aug. 29, 1861, Chip Bread.—WHITBREAD and CHADDOCK, Malt-vinegar Brewers, Stourport. Opposite the Saloon. Shippers and the Trade supplied on best terms.

STILTON CHEESE.—FRESH BUTTER. The finest Dairies in England are all known to be obtained of CHARLES THOMPSON,
Knightsbridge.
Established 1750. Families only.
Carts to all parts regularly.

BROWN AND POLSON'S
PATENT CORN FLOUR.
The "Lancet" states,
"This is superior to any other we have yet known."
Many Grocers, Chemists, &c., who supply the best quality, in preference to their profits, have left off selling it. See BROWN and POLSON'S Advertisement.

CELEBRATED FOR
PATENT CORN FLOUR,
BROWN AND POLSON'S,
All the Awardees and other qualities 1st. Three are often required at subsequent Exhibitions, and charged 2d.
2, G. OUDE, Chemist, 186, Oxford-street, Cockspur-street, W.

FLOUR Warranted, free to Families, in and near London, by the Sack, Truck-load, or Truck-load, at 45s. per sack. Mill, Mill, Mill,

VISIT OF THE KING OF PRUSSIA TO THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON.—THE LUNCHEON AT PIERREFONDS.

OUR columns of last week recorded the ceremonial of the brief visit of the King of Prussia to the Emperor Napoleon at Compiègne. With the numerous conjectures as to the political importance of this right Royal and right Imperial interview we have no business on the present occasion, wishing rather to entertain our readers with a short description of one of the many delightful episodes that occupied the time set apart for the friendly meeting of the Sovereigns of France and Prussia. Amidst such a rapid succession of the most elegant festivities it must have been difficult for the Monarchs to find leisure for the discussion of important political matters; yet it must be remembered that few words go far between such Potentates, and that even a sign may be the silent indication of an opinion. By some fawning people the speedy recognition of the kingdom of Italy by Prussia would have been looked upon as certain if the Royal William had requested to be served with a plate of macaroni, while a cordial invitation to a bumper of Rhine wine from the Imperial Louis to his guest might have been construed unpleasantly by his Prussian Majesty. Whatever may have passed in the rare intervals of this busy Royal pleasure-trip of less than forty-eight hours' duration, the journalists are for once at fault, and there are as yet no dicta scripta to record the serious features of an excursion that has called forth so many suppositions, but which we are inclined to regard as simply a mark of friendly courtesy on the part of the Sovereign of Prussia.

Great preparations had been made at the Palace of Compiègne for the reception of the King of Prussia, who met with the most cordial welcome from his Imperial hosts, and to all appearance entirely reciprocated their generous sentiments. Throughout the execution of the entire programme of the rejoicings on the occasion there was not the slightest hitch; for all the formal arrangements for the different diversions at the chateau succeeded à merveille. But perhaps the most agreeable part of William of Prussia's sojourn in France was the little excursion (organized by the Empress, who is passionately fond of fêtes champêtres) to the ruins of Pierrefonds, of which a Sketch has been taken for us by our artist.

The scene was delightful and the weather unrivalled as, in the afternoon of the 7th of October, the five chaises-de-poste, containing each twelve places, and drawn by four post-horses, left the park of Compiègne for the forest. The Emperor, the Empress, and the King of Prussia occupied the same seat in the first carriage. The Empress was dressed in a costume of the Louis XV. style—grey robe, rather short, and festooned round the bottom of the skirt; small flat hat, turned up at the sides and trimmed with cocks' feathers. The Princess Murat and the Princess Essling were in the same chaise as their Majesties. Shortly after four the cavalcade came in sight of the beautiful ruins of the Chateau of Pierrefonds, in the midst of which, upon blocks of stone lying about in all directions, but destined for the restoration of the edifice, the illustrious visitors partook of a collation composed of cold viands and fruit. There were not more than sixty persons (invités) present; but the enjoyment was none the less for the smallness of the number, and the King appeared delighted as he sat down on an unshapen block to pour out wine for the Emperor and Empress of the French, and all seemed much pleased at the temporary absence of etiquette. During the repast the band of the Guides, concealed among the ruins, performed some beautiful serenades, the first sounds imitating those of the Æolian harp. This musical surprise had been arranged by General Fleury, one of the Emperor's Aide-de-Camp. The King of Prussia was enchanted with the exquisite delicacy of this arrangement, which completed the charm of this delightful excursion; and his Majesty at length requested that our old friends the Guides, under the command of their talented chef, M. Moore, should put in a living appearance, which they did at the moment seized by our artist for making his Sketch. And then the portraiture of the scene would have been worthy of a Watteau; for, although all the gentlemen of the party were in ordinary morning dress, the picturesque costumes of the Empress and of the dames d'honneur and other ladies, with their short festooned skirts, braided corsages, Spanish hats, and handsome walking-sticks to assist them in their rambles through the ruins, the domestics in full Imperial livery, the scarlet Guides seen through an opening in the background, the ivy-covered ruins, the whole surmounted by a cerulean sky of the greatest beauty, combined to make up an ensemble that may sometimes have been witnessed in a poet's dream, but which it has rarely fallen to the lot of mortal to look upon as a reality.

It was nearly six o'clock when the coming shades of evening warned

VISIT OF THE KING OF PRUSSIA TO THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH AT COMPIEGNE: THE LUNCHEON AT PIERREFONDS.

INAUGURATION OF THE ERNEST-AUGUSTUS MONUMENT AT HANOVER.—SEE PAGE 414.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The erection will be shortly commenced of a fort and casemated barracks at Shelly Point, on the Suffolk coast, at a cost of £20,000.

Captain F. W. Jebb, 67th Foot, has been appointed Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster General at South Shields.

Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas M. Pratt, G.C.B., will leave Dublin to-day to assume the command of the Madras Presidency on the 20th of next month.

The gallant 37th Regiment, the heroes of Lucknow, gave on Monday night a splendid entertainment to the nobility and gentry of Plymouth and neighbourhood.

By direction of the Duke of Cambridge, a code of rules and regulations has been framed at the Horse Guards for the guidance of officers during the approaching winter, in their intercourse with the gentlemen during the cub-hunting season. A number of beautifully-executed engravings accompany these rules and regulations, under the auspices of the Council of Military Education, and have been placed under the direction of the various stations at which lectures will be delivered.

His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief left London on Monday morning on a tour of inspection of the troops in the south-eastern district; and, arriving in Dover at seven o'clock, proceeded shortly after the arrival of the train to the Shakespeare Tower, where were drawn up between the hours of 1200 troops of all arms, from Dover Garrison and Shorncliffe Camp, under the command of Major-General the Hon. A. Dundas. On Tuesday morning His Royal Highness inspected Dover Castle, and in the afternoon the garrison of Sandgate.

Two of Mr. Lancaster's cast-iron guns, strengthened upon his improved system, were fired at Woolwich Arsenal, with a view of ascertaining their bursting power. The first gun, which was charged with 12 lbs. of powder and fired with a round shot, burst into three pieces. The second gun, charged with 16 lbs. of powder and fired with longitudinal fissures or rows of wrought iron, hooped and bolted together, burst into four pieces. The third gun, charged with 20 lbs. of powder, was fired with a round shot. One of the guns has so far resisted every effort to burst it. The second only burst at the breech, after having been fired several rounds loaded with a round shot.

The Warrior, 40, iron-cased screw-frigate, Captain the Hon. Frederick Gordon, C.B., and official trial on Monday, but though formal and official it was only preliminary to a more decisive one, which will be carried out before the end of the month. The Warrior left her moorings at 10 A.M. and proceeded to the Nore, where she arrived at 1 P.M. after passing through some fitful squalls. The steel ram was in every way worthy of the name it bears, and is a most formidable weapon. The Warrior got under weigh in a very handsome manner, and after rounding the Nore light-vessel she steered for the Kentish Knock, where she remained for some time, and then proceeded to the Gunfleet Sand, where she remained for some time, and then proceeded to the Swin Middle Light-vessel, and returned to Weymouth in the afternoon.

ARMY MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS.—Surgeon-General H. C. Reade has received notice from the Weet Indies, and Surgeon-Major Dansville, M.D., has been appointed to the Staff of the Forces in Canada, in order to relieve Dr. Reade as soon as he can be spared. Assistant-Surgeon Hawkins has arrived at Hong Kong from Japan, and Dr. Wilson, Assistant-Surgeon, has arrived from China; Surgeon-Major Scott, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, and Surgeon Scott, and Barker are under orders to embark for India, as well as Staff-Surgeon Cunningham, from China, and Staff-Surgeon Bell, who has been ordered to Ceylon. The following medical officers have joined Surgeon-General Reade's staff at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning for Canada, viz.—Surgeon-Major Hall, Staff-Surgeon Cunningham, from China, Staff-Surgeon Bell, from Ceylon, Surgeon Scott, Assistant-Surgeons Barker, Wilde, Dempster, and Rojers. Staff Surgeon Cunningham, from China, has also joined the Staff at Portsmouth. Lord Panmure has appointed Dr. Wellesley took from Colchester.—United Service Gazette.

THE ARMSTRONG GUN.—Sir William Armstrong writes to the Times to say that he has not changed his opinion as to the efficiency of that during a recent trial four vent-pieces were destroyed in the course of a few rounds, and the gun rendered unserviceable. Nothing, he remarked, was considered serious which could be remedied by a few hours' work with the ordinary tools. With reference to the rifle, Sir William Armstrong considering an exhibition of the load from the bore, so obvious as to render the question of the extension of the Select Committee and of the Secretary of State to the condition of those shots, which had been fired with the full charge of 70 lbs. A report made on the spot and that they have been found capable of rest on the leaden covering of some of those shots had given rise to the idea that the action of the gas between the shot and the bore had given rise to the idea that the action of the gas between the shot and the bore had given rise to the idea that the action of the gas between the shot and the bore

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE EARL OF EGLINTON AND WINTON, K.T.

The announcement of the death of Lord Eglinton has created a deep and mournful sensation in the three kingdoms, and especially in Scotland and Ireland, of which country was proud of the late Lord, born and high-minded representative, and identified every important movement for the nationality during every national sport. Whether his Lordship was riding to hounds, or at public meetings, or in the House of Lords, or in the saddle, as a tilter at the Eglinton tournament, he was the same gallant, generous, and considerate gentleman—possessing all the attributes which Chaucer assigns to the preux Chevalier.

Truth and honour, no dread sentiment,
With meekness and humility,
And at the last stonden he shall
Before the face of his Lord Jesu.

Heir male of the Setons, Earls of Winton, and head of the Montgomeries, heir male of the Setons, Earls of Winton, and head of the Montgomeries, heir male of the Setons, Earls of Winton, and head of the Montgomeries, BIRDSEYE VIEW OF THE SULINA MOUTH OF THE DANUBE, SHOWING THE WORKS OF IMPROVEMENT LATELY CARRIED OUT UNDER THE EUROPEAN COMMISSION OF THE DANUBE BY CHARLES A. HARTLEY, ESQ., C.E., ENGINEER IN CHIEF TO THE COMMISSION.

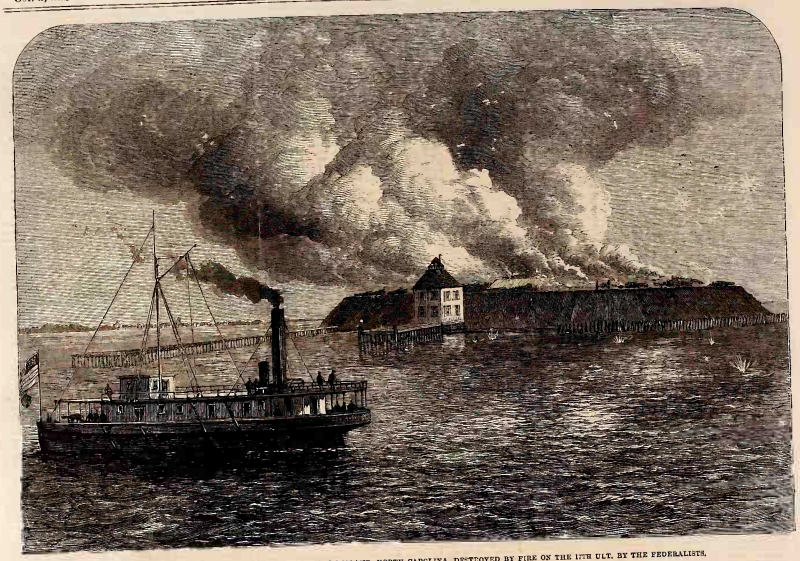
pier is 4681 feet, that of the south pier 3000 feet, the depth of the mouth had increased to 17 feet in the spring of this year, and has maintained it to this time. These facts have been solemnly established this day, the 3rd of September, 1861, by the undersigned, members of the European Commission assembled at Sulina, in presence of the representatives of the Sublime Porte and of the Government of the United Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, of the territorial and consular authorities, of the notable merchants of the ports of the Lower Danube, and of the honourable persons who have had the kindness to assist at the inauguration of the works."

The official declaration was followed by a salute of twenty-one guns from the men-of-war at the same time his Excellency Rachid Pacha, who had been appointed to represent the Sublime Porte at this fête, in a short and complimentary speech, presented Mr. Hartley with the Order of the Medjidie as an acknowledgment of his services by his Imperial Majesty the Sultan. This ceremony finished, the guests passed on board a steamer and were conveyed across to the south pier, and, completing the tour of inspection, were conducted to the banquet-hall, a large temporary building constructed for the purpose, and tastefully decorated with flags of all nations. A handsome dinner was served, and towards its close the following toasts were proposed and drunk:—"The Sultan," by Major Stokes, R.E., British Commissioner; "The Allied Sovereigns," by Baron d'Offenberg, Russian Commissioner; "Prince Couza," by Mr. Strumbio, Italian Commissioner; "The European Commission of the Danube," by his Excellency Rachid Pacha, and by Mr. Rodocanachi on behalf of the commerce of Galatz and Ibraila, at the same time presenting Mr. Hartley with a piece of plate in acknowledgment of the services rendered by him to the trade of the river. This toast was responded to on behalf of the Commission by Mr. Counsellor Beeks, Austrian Commissioner. An address was then delivered by Mr. Arnaki, Minister for Foreign Affairs for Molda-Wallachia, in which he made the important announcement that his Government was about to abolish all duties on exports. Mr. Regelhardt, the French Commissioner, then proposed "The Allied Squadrons," which was responded to by Commandant Fauligon, of the French Navy. "The Consular Corps," proposed by Mr. Saint-Pierre, Prussian Commissioner, responded to by Mr. Ghioni, Greek Consul for Galatz. Mr. Counsellor Beeks, in a few well-turned words, then proposed "The health of Mr. Hartley, the Chief Engineer of the Commission." This toast was received with rounds of applause and was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm, which was heightened by the feeling reply made by that gentleman.

Shortly after ten o'clock the company quitted the dinner-table and adjourned to the neighbouring arcade, where a brilliant display of fireworks terminated the fête.

The tonnage of vessels trading to the Danube during the last four years has been as follows:—England, 234,578; Turkey, 214,330; Austria, 143,000 Italy, 117,179; France 29,710; Russia, 14,893; Prussia, 7374 tons.



THE WAR IN AMERICA:—FORT OCRACOKE, ON BEACON ISLAND, NORTH CAROLINA, DESTROYED BY FIRE ON THE 17TH ULT. BY THE FEDERALISTS.

THE WAR IN AMERICA.—A CONFEDERATE DESERTER COMING INTO THE FEDERAL LINES AT MUNSON'S HILL.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR IN AMERICA.

DESTRUCTION OF FORT OCRACOKE, ON BEACON ISLAND, SOUTH CAROLINA.

On the 16th ult. an expedition left Fortress Monroe to take and destroy the fort on Beacon Island, near the entrance to the Sound. It was under the command of Lieutenant Rushman, of the Pawnee, and consisted of sixty-five men from the Coast Guard, and a detachment of sailors and marines from the Pawnee, in the ship's launch and the Coast Guard were on board the Fanny, which towed the launch down. The landing was safely effected. About 2 A.M. on the morning of the 17th they left the Fanny and the next day were occupied in destroying the remainder of the fort and the stores, of which twenty-five were pieces of ordnance found in the fort, of which twenty-four were rendered unserviceable. The guns were then applied to the bombproofs and magazines, and also to the lighthouse on the island. The conflagration caused hundreds of light, the light being visible for thirty miles distant. After having completed the destruction of the fort, the expedition returned to Fort Monroe without the loss of a man.

CONFEDERATE DESERTER COMING INTO THE FEDERAL LINES AT MUNSON'S HILL.

Our Special Artist in the Federal camp writes as follows respecting the second fugleman:—On the 17th inst., while I was out at the extreme advanced picket in front of the Confederate position at Munson's Hill, I was much startled by a sudden popping all along the enemy's line, the bullets pinging over our heads in every direction. Raising myself cautiously I saw a Confederate soldier bounding through the tall Indian corn, and making for our lines, while two hundred yards behind him his former comrades were doing their best to stop his career. He ran the gauntlet with a will, and was safely landed and turned out to belong to the 13th Virginian Regiment. He told us that Jefferson Davis had crossed over on the 16th to Manassas Junction, and that there were 180,000 Confederates between that post and Fairfax.

LORD PALMERSTON ON EDUCATION AND COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.

The certificates granted at the Oxford local examinations to the competitors from the Southampton district were distributed yesterday week by Lord Palmerston, whose speech upon the occasion will be found below, and Mr. C. Hardy, and the Bishop of Rochester. The Mayor presided. The Rev. Mr. Sole read the report, which, on the motion of the Bishop of Rochester, seconded by the Rev. J. G. Wright, was adopted. The certificates were then distributed by Lord Palmerston to the different successful candidates, to each of whom he addressed some words of praise and encouragement. The Hon. and Rev. C. Harris, upon the request of the noble chairman, put the votes of thanks to Lord Palmerston, and said that he felt grateful, as a member of the University of Oxford, for his lordship for endeavouring to extend the benefits of the local examinations by delivering them himself, being, as he was, a distinguished member of the Liberal University of Oxford. He remembered what had taken place, as if one University had its utmost to confer value on the certificates granted by the other Universities.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Falcey, and carried by acclamation.

Lord Palmerston was loudly cheered on rising.

THE PROGRESS OF EDUCATION.

After some introductory remarks his Lordship spoke on the subject of education and its progress:—

The most striking feature, more remarkable in the progress of the country than in the advance which of late years has been made in the diffusion and in the quality of education, is the interest which the English people, the middle classes, and in every thing which constitutes, in common opinion, the greatness of a country, is well known, and is universally acknowledged. That interest has indeed been now existing in our duty as a nation if we had not accumulated that progress in wealth and prosperity by a corresponding progress in the development of the intellectual faculties of the country; and Southampton, which has shared in the rapidity of the increase of wealth and prosperity which almost any town in the Kingdom has shown, I think, that it has kept pace with the increase of the country in its intellectual development as well as in its material prosperity. And indeed it is satisfactory to see that of those who possess the means to give to their children a liberal education a great number have distinguished themselves in that particular branch of science which of all others is the most strongly and perseveringly cultivated by the intellectual men of modern intellectual studies. And, considering how near we are to the sea, it is, much surprising that we have not more distinguished sailors; it is pleasing to see that so many of the rising generation have directed their minds to the attainment of the knowledge which is necessary for the successful discharge of those duties for many years past so object of most earnest and general solicitude as almost to be a matter of national importance in this country. We are glad to see that the Universities have started forth in that honourable career, and in my turn, though not by any means entitled to be ranked, it is peculiarly gratifying to me, a member of the University of Cambridge, to be associated to distinguished members of the other universities of the United University of Oxford. There was a time, long now gone by, when the universities of this country were known by the training of the clergy for the duties they might be destined to undertake, and in a rapid current, which served only to mark the velocity of the stream, the young men were hurried on to the duties for which they were destined. That was long since ceased to be a true representation of the Universities. They have improved, like all other institutions, in the more object, and direction of their studies, and they can now vie with any academical establishment to be found in any division of the globe.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.—GRAMMING.

Lord Palmerston then turned to the particular subject suggested by the third resolution of the day—competitive examination—as follows:—

Objection have been made to the system of competitive examinations. Some people say that it leads to a system of cramming; and it is often the case that when one cries out about a word they immediately run away with the argument, and they go about repeating it, thinking they have arrived at some great and tremendous conclusion. When they hear of cramming, they say they have utterly discredited the system to which they apply that word; but those men forget that the human mind is like a sponge, and that it will not have filled it with anything, you can pour that out, and it remains empty as it was before. That, however, is not the nature of the human mind, which, if it is crammed, as it is said, has, in point of fact, learned a great deal, and that learning is accomplished for two objects. The one object is that the mind is satisfied by being crammed; and in the next place there remains in the mind a great portion of the knowledge which has been acquired, and, probably, of correct attachments in different branches of human knowledge. Therefore it is not the case that the mind is left empty after a system of examination is out of great and infinite value because men are found who interest themselves for competition in the acquisition of knowledge with regard to which examination is to take place. Depend upon it that the boy who is crammed successfully, and only succeeds in the examination for which he is prepared, but in fact that time forms a more intellectual and better informed young man, and more capable of performing the duties of life than he by that cramming he has acquired. Well, another objection is made. It said you are inviting young men a great deal too much to come up to be put to them in the career which they are destined to pursue, and that you are thereby led to the hasty judgment that those who succeed in acquiring which they really are. Those objections are also, in my opinion, utterly futile; for to the young and ingenuous mind the desire of distinction is a powerful motive. The more it can be known to be acquired by the student, the more likely he is to be induced to make the effort. I was myself invited to acquire a knowledge of the University of Oxford, and I remember that a very able and learned gentleman, well known in former times, a Mr. Harvey Coxhe, who in conversation with a friend of mine on something which appeared to him to require some observation, to which this friend replied, "I am sure I don't know." "You don't know," said Mr. Harvey Coxhe, "why, you are a fool not to know what you don't know would make a very large book." That may be said of a great part of mankind; knowledge is not easily acquired, and the desire to acquire it is prompted out." In the paper on "Doubles" there is some homely but pointed philosophising on the "duplicities of men and women, of the healthy we all have, more or less, for casting our skin—for being one man abroad and another at home; of the marvellous capacity with which we are all gifted in greater or smaller proportions for playing a part, and not only for playing one radically and fundamentally different from the part we enact in private life, but for playing it simultaneously with the other; everybody being able to be, and being, somebody else." We remember having seen this idea somewhere capitally carried out in a sketch of a "South Country Doctor, as he appeared in Convivial Parties and in the exercise of his Profession." The illustrations here are equally happy, perhaps the most pointed being those caught from the lawyer's office in Lincoln's Inn. The attempt to invest railways with a poetic point of view in the paper on "A New Railway Line" reads like the dream of an opium-eater, by no means using the phrase in any sense which can be construed into more than is applicable to the production of a pure abstraction. Perhaps in some of the "pictures" is the Dutch painting so prominent as in those entitled "Wind Places" and "More Than Wanted?" but, if one may be excused, we should say that there was just a little too much enlargement of this subject. The chapter on "Old Ladies" is capital; the sketch of "The Pretty Old Lady" being specially noticeable. Probably less would be expected from a writer who professes to have no personal experience in the matter, when he treats of "Little Children." Those who have had with any other subject but there is a sympathetic healthful tone in this paper which ought to commend the author to all the honors which the practical maternity may be disposed to heap upon him. As a philosopher he rises speaker of the proverbial expression that "the child is father to the man" and that "sons are but children of larger growth." He says, "Can you persist in telling us that this fair-haired innocent, this sporting, revelling, kissable child, with dimpled, dumpling hands that almost foil themselves spontaneously into the attitude of supplication and prayer, with cherry lip, rose bea has strong it seeds? Leaping thanksgiving and love, with arms that long to embrace, with eyes beaming confidence, joy, pity, tenderness—I am I to be told that this infant is the future saw building, sodden, mallow-faced, flat-gilled, crop-haired, leaden-eyed, livid-lipped, bow-shouldered, shrunken-legged, swollen-headed convict in a hideous gray uniform branded with the broad arrow; with ribbed, worsted hose, and fetters at his ankles, sullenly shirking through his drudgery under the rattan of an overseer and the hayrunt of a marine in Woolwich Dockyard? Is the child whom I love and in whom I hope father to you wrists with a nose already half-dislocated with fear, with limbs half dead, with heart wholly so, who droops on his miserable pallet in Newgate cell, his chin on his knees, his hands between his knees, his legs slumbing: the story walls around him; the taciturn gaolers watching him; a Bible by his side—in which pages when he tries to read the letters slide and fall away from under his eye? Is this the father to—can this ever become that? Not only in your world-verbings must the child be father to the man, but the man is merely a child of larger growth. I deny it. Some boys are tyrants, bullies, hypocrites, and liars for fear of punishment—thieves, also, through ill example, etiquette. Some girls are selfish, jealous, spiteful, audacious, vain, and giddy, I grant. If you were to tell me that bad boys and girls would grow up to be bad men and women, I should agree with you. The evil example of you had men and women begins to corrupt boys and girls early enough, Heaven knows; but do not breed the child—you know when infancy begins and childhood terminates—with being but your own wickedness seen through the small end of the glass. And these is more equally pointed and equally foolish.

The "Confession of Colonel Quagg," written in the American vein, is too much of the real thing to be positively agreeable, but it is an admirable specimen of Mr. Sala's mimetic power. The romantic vein is well represented in the lithotony of "The Captain's Prisoner;" and, among the samples of genuine humour as distinguished from mere joking and the breadth of the Varieties, commend us to the two series of "Travels in Search of Beef." It will not, however, be for either to writer or anticipating reader to go much further into details with respect to this work. As we have before hinted, it affords an opportunity of learning in what manner an established favourite of the public can slowly and quietly woo his way to the position he occupies; and, as regards these earlier productions themselves, it may well be said that they will not derogate from his reputation of to-day: if, indeed, their freshness and vigour do not lend even to its enhancement.

The History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon, forming a Sequel to the History of the French Revolution. By M. A. Thiers. Translated from the French. Willis and Sotheran.

This is the nineteenth volume of an authorised edition of Thiers' well-known work. It contains the three "Books," severally headed "The Period of Exile," "The National Act," and "The Champ de Mai." It is, in fact, the narrative of events comprised in that extraordinary period called the "Hundred Days," a period which commenced with an extraordinary triumph, but which, soon after military operations were commenced, changed into difficulties, annoyances, and gloomy presentiments, only too fatefully fulfilled. It tells us of all those events which commenced at Porto Ferrajo, on the 26th of February, down to the 12th of June, 1815. Here is the chronicle of the series of successes which Napoleon obtained from Porto Ferrajo to Cannes, from Cannes to Grenoble, from Grenoble to Lyons, and from Lyons to Paris, when it seemed as if Fortune herself had patented to associate with her favourite, sometimes bringing a favourable wind to his sctills, and sometimes bringing to meet him, in opposition and hostility, men who could not resist his influence. Until he entered Paris he stood in contrast to the faults of the Bourbons; but when once there it was no longer the faults of the Bourbons that stood exposed to him; they were his own, the faults which had accumulated during his first reign, to remedy which all his genius seemed unavailing. The Treaty of Paris, which he had so obstinately refused in 1814, and even sacrificed his crown rather than accept, he now accepted without hesitation, and offered terms of peace to Europe with something like humility. But he was secured of offering peace, but not sincerely; and while in the attitude almost of a suppliant his offers were repulsed. Napoleon next addressed himself to France, with an offer of liberty, for, though his temper abhorred restraint, his genius enabled him to see that he could no longer govern without the nation, and that liberty was the only channel left him. France did not reply so harshly as Europe to his overtures, for she seemed to desire, and, in the absence of all hope, eventually Napoleon was obliged to convoke the Chambers at once, filled, as they were, with excited, violent, and even republican members, who offered him no support against Europe but their divisions. Repelled by Europe, and not disposed by France at a moment's notice to be called to the support she could give, Napoleon, after only twenty days of joy, took into a state of gloomy sadness which he could only shake off when carrying from the military ruins of France the army which he led to Waterloo. Perhaps no part of his career is so deeply interesting as that of which the above is a faint sketch, and the full history of which is embraced in the volume just issued. Its appearance in an English dress, at the present time here and there some idiomatic defects, the translation is well done.

Cross Country. By Walter Thornbury. Sampson Low and Co.

The tendency to gathering up detached pieces by popular authors on which we have remarked elsewhere has here found another development. So much success attended, in a complete shape, the issue of some of Mr. Thornbury's contributions to periodical literature, especially in those cases like his Sketches in a Bank, where there was a kind of sequence in all the papers, that he is hardly to be blamed for again essaying to collect his scattered leaves of print and present them to the public in a well got-up volume. In the case of the papers here brought forward might, perhaps, have been spared, as they are not the very best specimens of the writer's powers. One or two which are anecdotical or narrative are amusing enough, but the best of all are those in which the writer takes us wandering with him into Wiltshire and Somersetshire. There alone would justify the reproduction.

VOYAGE OF THE "DAMASCUS" FROM SYDNEY TO LONDON.

This fine clipper-ship arrived in the Downs on the 28th ult., after a passage from Sydney of eighty-eight days. The expectation of a quicker passage entertained in the earlier part of the voyage (Cape Horn having been reached in thirty days from Sydney) was disappointed by twenty-one days of calms and contrary winds after passing the equator.

The Damascus encountered on her homeward passage an unusual quantity of ice, extending over nearly 2200 miles, between longitudes 103 deg. and 86 deg. west, and latitudes 124 deg. and 60 deg. south, a circumstance which should be noticed for the information of navigators.

An erroneous opinion, it is believed, is entertained as to the nature and expected localities of icebergs in high southern latitudes—namely, that these masses, detached during the summer months from the antarctic circle, are drifted to the north and then melt rapidly away,—and in that process are likely to be met with,—whereas it is the writer they would remain fast locked to the land, and the track of a ship from Sydney to Cape Horn is likely to be entirely free from obstruction from icebergs during that season.

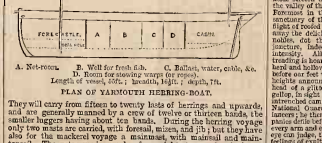
The result of the passage of the Damascus gives rise, however, to far different conclusions. The icebergs seen from that ship were of an altitude, size, and appearance not to be accounted for but by the accumulation of many years, some reaching a height of 1700ft., formed of several peaks and ridges of the most varied figures, all exhibiting the appearance of having been for long periods partially submerged. One in particular was so dark from seaweed and shellfish as to present the appearance of land, and it was, in fact, supposed to be an island; but visible a sketch was being made of its shape it turned over, and the dazzling white of its upper part reflected the sunrays. The vast quantities of weed and other products of the sea could not have been the operation of Nature during a single season; it must have proceeded through years of time. And so with respect to the other large icebergs, whatever their origin, whether formed in bays or upon the bases of wrecks (a supposition not impracticable), and accumulated by the raised moves of many winters. These are drifted about in the high southern latitudes by wind and currents, and, in fact, may be met with in any part of the ocean, according to the opinions of all on board the Damascus, they actually exist, and are liable to a warm latitude, like other ice.

The Damascus left Sydney on July 2, so as probably to reach the high latitudes during the brightness of the moon, a circumstance which greatly assisted the navigation—a judicious course which ought never to be neglected.

A second convict named Herman was captured in France the other day under peculiar circumstances. During the last year or two many robberies have been committed in the churches of Paris, Strasbourg, and Mentz; charity-boxes were broken open, and rich altar ornaments disappeared. It was at first quite unaccountable that the perpetrator was never discovered. The last crime was the robbery of the strong-box of the Hospital of Mentz, containing 40,000f. A reward of 10,000f. was obtained to the discovery, who was discovered at a certain house in the Faubourg Royal, to the keeper of which he had confided 20,000f. in notes. When taken he was found 20,000f. in 10,000f. lodged with the Comptoir d'Escompte. He had also around himself named.

THE YARMOUTH HERRING FISHERY.

Our attention having been directed to some errors which had inadvertently appeared in the paper on the herring fishery in our Number of the 28th ult., we subjoin, in correction, the following particulars relative to the great and important improvements that of late years have been made in the build and rig of the lugger employed. In the Yarmouth fishery, in particular, the vessels hailing from that port have the letters Y. H. and a number painted on the bows. They are now built of greatly finer models, with yachtlike sterns, and are fast sailers. They carry rather large mainsails, now so fashionable like the "boats," or Dutch "schuyt." They are usually constructed of the medium size of 60 tons builders' measurement, or 54 tons register. The subjoined side plan will serve to explain the partitions of the different rooms:—



PLAN OF YARMOUTH HERRING-BOAT.

They will carry from fifteen to twenty lasts of herrings and upwards, the latter quantity when the vessel is of a class of vessels called "beachers." Each Yarmouth lugger, therefore, must be provided with from twelve to fourteen score nets, each being eighteen to twenty yards long on the warp. They carry but one set of nets to sea with them, which are shot in a line, let down overboard from the lugger across the tide, and drift with the laggen. Liverpool salt mixed with hay salt is the salt used in the process of curing.

We give also an illustration of the buildings at Yarmouth fronting the sea, showing the late improvements. The view, which extends as far as the Britannia Pier, was taken from the platform of the Old Jetty, and comprises within that space those most recently erected, the most conspicuous of which, nearly in the centre, being the Sailors' Home—a striking and noble building.

An Italian Review.—The Turin correspondent of the Times describes a review of Italian troops by the King, which took place in the extensive meadows of Carrara, near Bologna, on the 8th:—"Towards my siege fellow-slavery arrive in Bologna in the long and weary experience of the Mantuan guards; but, as on this occasion the whole of the 8th Corps of the Italian Army and the National Guard of the town would muster into force of no less than 25,000 men, it was found necessary to adjourn the solemnity to a spot presenting the advantage of almost boundless space. You must have joined your feet may where in Italy without having the sight put up for the occasion enlivened and decorated, as it were, by the accessories of a magnificent procession. The Piazza d'Armi at Turin, the Campo of St. Maurice on the Venice or Milan of the Maiden, are made sublime by the great Alpine chain which crowns them round. The Cascine of Florence, which I have so often seen doing duty for a review, and the Corso are backing in the mind of the cultivated Italian of Rome, and of the hundred summits setting in emerald that bright pearl of the Tuscan crystal. I say nothing of the Austrian camps in the Master of Verona, all rising in sight of the glittering waves of Garda, and of the rugged masses of Monte Baldo and the Tyrolese mountains. But the Prato della Valle, or present musical arena, can bear comparison with these or any other more favoured spot. With the dark, mutilated Euganean hills—and, one sickly almost cry, rocking towers—of Bologna in the background, these fields stretch along the delightful range of hill sloping down either side of the valley of the Reno almost to the very precinct of the Bentivio highway. Foremost in the group is the central hill of the Certosa, with the sanctuary of the Madonna di San Luca, with the casket three-mile-long flight of arches and colonnade winding up their steep path to it. Another along the declivities villas of the Pepoli, Scarpieri, and other old Bolognese nobles, on the western side of the valley, and more than this point of junction, indeed, for the crowds of a gayer scene than that of the 7th of May. Here, on the left, the Reno rolls its sullen current on, and the plain we are standing in is the very cream of its agricultural gathering. Corn and mixed herd and leather under the harrows' hoofs, and at every step the turf yawns before our feet with deep crumbs and furrows. The ground from the Lake's heights announces the King's arrival, and loud cheers welcome him as at the head of a princely cavalcade he bounds into the field at full gallop. At full gallop, in sight of my table of spectators, past up on the north grounds of the interdicted camp, the King of Italy rides at the head of the conquered Neapolitan Guards, infantry of the line, bersaglieri, artillery, dragoons, and cavalry. Then on they go to the middle of the field, and there pull horse by compasses defile before him. The order of march is admirable—the movements of every arm and every corps are executed with the most precision; and at the spot on ridge their troops before reaching to desire, and one can share the enthusiasm with which they are greeted forth in hear hearty demonstrations from more than one of the groups about me."—And these are really Italian troops, Neapolitans, Tuscans, and Romans, and the mist dispersed, and harmony now in existence as they pass is the King of one making." Truly, all honest and patriotic pride!

INAUGURATION OF THE ERNEST AUGUSTUS MONUMENT IN HANOVER.

On the 21st ult., the birthday of his Royal Highness the Crown Prince Ernest Augustus, son of the present King George V., the town of Hanover was the scene of such a festival as, perhaps, has never been celebrated there since its foundation. This was to inaugurate the monument raised to the memory of the late King Ernest Augustus, Duke of Cumberland, fifth son of George III., who came to the throne of Hanover on the 20th of June, 1837, and died on the 18th of November, 1851, in the fourteenth year of his reign.

It has been raised entirely by voluntary contributions from the people themselves, as a testimony of the love they bore their late King, under whose good government the kingdom had more especially the capital, made rich great and rapid advancement in the arts and sciences, trade and agriculture. The total cost amounts to 35,000 thalers, or about £5250.

The statue, which was modelled by Professor Wolff in Berlin, and cast in bronze at the works of Messrs. Bernsdorff and Eschwelle, is of colossal dimensions (20ft. high and 15ft. long), and represents Ernest Augustus on horseback, in the full uniform of the hussars. It is supported on a pedestal composed of massive blocks of highly-polished granite from the Harte mountains (17ft. long, 15ft. high, and 7½ft. broad), inclosed by cast-iron palisades extremely beautiful in design. On one side it bears the inscription—"Ernest August. König von Hannover." On the other—"Dem Landesvater Sein Treues Volk."

The monument itself has a very grand appearance. It stands in that part of the town which was built under the auspices of the late King, whose name (Ernst August Stadt-theil) it bears, and forms, with the fountains on each side of it, a splendid ornament to this the most beautiful part of the town.

The festivities went off in the best possible manner. About twelve o'clock the long procession, formed by the different trades' unions of the town, carrying banners with appropriate mottoes, as well as various tokens of their craft and skill, as well as various tokens of their craft and skill, wended its way through the principal streets, arriving about one o'clock at the Ernst August Platz (Ernest Augustus Place), where the monument has been erected, and which was most tastefully decorated for the occasion, as indeed was the whole town.

His Majesty George V., then appeared on horseback, accompanied by the Crown Prince, Ernest Augustus, who wore the hussar uniform for the first time, surrounded by a numerous suite. Her Majesty the Queen, with their Royal Highnesses the Princesses, also appeared in an open carriage, and drove to the Union Hotel, where rooms had been engaged for them, whence they witnessed the proceedings.

The Lord Steward von Malortie, president of the committee for the erection of the monument, then addressed his Majesty in a short speech, to which the King replied in a few words.

The speech being finished, the firing of a cannon proclaimed the signal for the unveiling of the statue, and the mantle, which still now had enveloped it, fell amidst the repeated cheering of the vast concourse of spectators, the military bands at the same time striking up the National Anthem, "God Save the King."

In conclusion, the military present, followed by the procession, marched before the King, and proceeded in another direction from that in which they came back to the Waterloo Platz. In the evening the whole town was most brilliantly illuminated.

It is the special pride of the Hanoverians that the whole of the work connected with this noble monument, with the exception of the modelling, has been executed in their own country; and certainly they have great reason to be proud of this magnificent work of art.

Our Engraving of the inaugural ceremony is from a drawing by Louis Herhold of Hanover.

THE SAILORS' HOME AT YARMOUTH.

THE Great Yarmouth Beachmen and Fishermen's Institute, British and Foreign Sailors' Home, and Refuge for the Shipwrecked of All Nations, of which we give an Engraving, is in the Italian style, of red and white brick, with imitation stone cement dressings, and consists of four stories and a basement, with spacious premises in the rear, and a noble flagstaff in front, giving a clear land of nearly a hundred feet, employed for the double purpose of providing a portion of the income required by the establishment, and enabling vessels to report from the roadstead their wants, arrival or departure, by the New Universal Maritime Code, or Marryatt's; from which staff 3185 vessels have already, in the present year, been reported to owners, &c. The basement is open night and day, affording warm baths, dry clothing, the means of washing and drying the clothes of the shipwrecked, and all necessary appliances for the restoration of suspended animation, with convenient offices, lavatories, &c. On the ground floor is the coffee, news, and smoking room, open to every seafarer, gratis, at all hours. In the rear are the bar and parlour accommodation for the superintendent and coffee-room. From this and all the rooms in a clear view to seaward and the roadstead for the beachman or pilot, who must be ever on the watch for life and property endangered. The entrance down to the Refuge and up to the first floor leads to the secretary's office and the museum, which contains a goodly collection of maritime objects and models, mainly contributed by seafaring subscribers, and near 2000 volumes of books, with an extensive collection of maritime charts, maps, and nautical instruments, newspapers of the day, puzzles and pastimes, with all that may render a library and reading-room attractive to the class for which it is intended—where, through the bounty of the benevolent societies, every Christian mariner may hear or read God's word (many, perhaps, for the first time) in his own tongue. Adjoining is the boatroom for the use of apprentices and others who wish to prepare themselves for Government schools, or mates or masters of vessels, or get first steps in reading and writing, of which 1085 have availed themselves; and many a fisherman can now perform the necessary duties of his calling required of the pen. Passing by lavatories, &c., are the dormitories for British and foreign seamen, masters, mates, and women castaway, and the superintendent's chamber. The attic floor, over, has an access to the roof, which is so constructed as to give the most commanding view of an immense expanse of seaboard. This attic floor is intended for a store for the property of seafarers cast ashore, or left in charge, grain, when at sea or on leave; or for unclaimed goods; as well as additional accommodation for any great or sudden demand on the Home happening on a coast which 40,000 vessels pass annually, and more than half the wrecks of the United Kingdom occur, and where it has happened that 500 vessels have suddenly parted their anchors in one gale, in the depth of winter, throwing their crews unexpectedly on the sympathies and resources of the people of Great Yarmouth.

Since the commencement of this institution 799 souls, over and above the regular users of the Home, have been rescued and succoured at the Refuge from many-a-dive vessels either wrecked on the sands, foundered at sea, or disabled and seven lives have been saved by the ready means at hand, fractures and contusions having been immediately treated or taken to the hospital. The cost incurred by the foreign seaman is repaid by his Consul; that of the British seaman (should he belong to us) by that noble institution the Shipwrecked Fishermen's and Mariners' Society; masters and mariners who can pay for themselves; but the wayfarer and castaway, the most abject and helpless of all sufferers, depend upon the contributions of the charitable—having nothing.

Man-of-war's-men, fishermen, and merchant seamen of all nations have, either at the lowest possible charge, or entirely gratis, when needy, when paid off from their ships, seeking others, on leave, wrecked or detained by stress of weather, a place of refuge, of useful and nautical instruction, of leisure, encouraging all in duty to God and man by affording a means of social and intellectual intercourse, apart from temptations and associates of a lower standard.

The Board of Trade's new storm signals, worked at the signal-staff in connection with the electric telegraph on the quay, indicate the coming storm; the illuminated clock, surmounting the building, the means of ascertaining the state of the tide, the want of which has heretofore caused so much disaster. And when the fund now being raised shall be sufficient, it is intended by the directors that an electric ball shall give the Greenwich time to enable outward-bound ships to get a true reckoning.

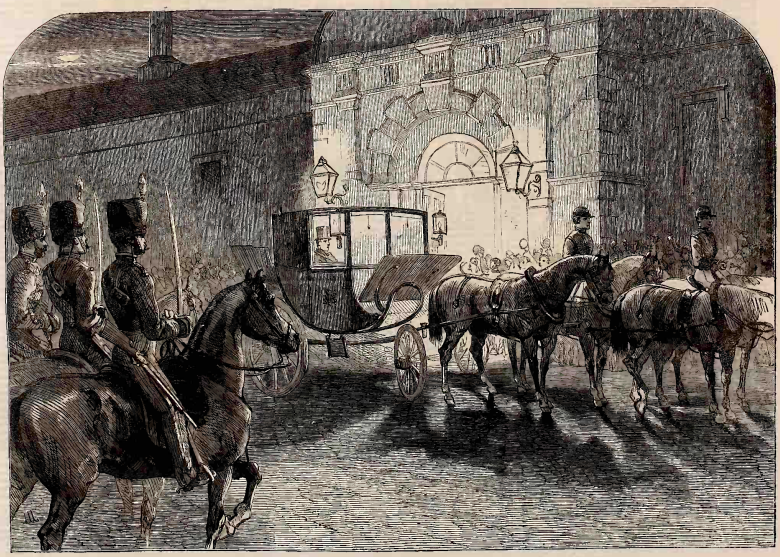
The building and all it contains were paid for before occupied—a rare occurrence in such enterprises. The Corporation of Great Yarmouth granted the site, formerly occupied by the Coastguard Station on the beach, north of the jetty, at a nominal rent, giving the buildings as a free gift. The friends of the seafarer provided its temporary deficiencies of income, hoping eventually it may be self-supporting. Until then, as sailors' homes are pronounced by highest authority to be such valuable institutions that an increase of them would be a blessing and benefit to all whosoever their bread on the waters, they must look for the sympathy of the Christian and the superabundance of the wealthy, as national rather than local institutions, for their support.

THE SAILORS' HOME AT GREAT YARMOUTH.

VIEW OF BUILDINGS FACING THE SEA AT GREAT YARMOUTH FROM THE OLD JETTY TO THE BRITANNIA PIER.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, by the Proprietor of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1861.

ENTRY OF THE KING OF PRUSSIA INTO KONIGSBERG: THE PROCESSION AT THE GRUNE THOR.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE NEXT PAGE.



THE ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE OF WALES AT CLUMBER, ON A VISIT TO THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.—SEE PAGE 434.

THE CORONATION OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF PRUSSIA.

ENTRY OF THEIR MAJESTIES INTO KONIGSBERG.

A terrible train arrived on Sunday night at twelve with the King and Queen, the Princes and Princesses of the Royal family, and most of the personages officially invited to the coronation. All the principal functionaries from Berlin to Konigsberg the populations assembled en masse to greet the King, and at several stations, where, according to the programme, no stoppage was to be made, the King ordered the train to go more slowly, and the populations followed it as far as they could.

On Monday morning at six all the population of Konigsberg, and a great number of strangers, were on the alert. At the station of Cranz, on the Baltic, a few miles from the town, the whole of the trades' corporations, in number about 3000, assembled in one of the principal rooms, and, headed by a band of music, went to the Brandenburg gate to await the arrival of the Royal cortège. Within the gate, which forms part of the fortified enceinte of the town, was erected a triumphal arch, surmounted with gigantic Royal crowns, and decorated with the arms of Prussia and Saint-Wenceslas (the Queen is a Princess of the Grand Duchy), and with the inscription, "Salutation and happiness to the King!" At ten o'clock two stands were full near the gates were occupied, one by ladies and the other by members of the municipality, and close to them were waiting fifty young ladies and in white, with garlands of the national colours and crowns of flowers on their heads. At about eleven the official deputations went to the Summer Palace, a short distance from the town, from which the Brandenburg gate to await the arrival of the Royal cortège. Within the gate, which forms part of the fortified enceinte of the town, was erected a triumphal arch, surmounted with gigantic Royal crowns, and decorated with the arms of Prussia and Saint-Wenceslas (the Queen is a Princess of the Grand Duchy), and with the inscription, "Salutation and happiness to the King!" At ten o'clock two stands were full near the gates were occupied, one by ladies and the other by members of the municipality, and close to them were waiting fifty young ladies

THE LONDON RIFLE VOLUNTEER BRIGADE.

THIS distinguished volunteer corps, officially designated "1st City of London Rifle Volunteers," was originated by Captain George Montagu Hicks, late Captain in her Majesty's 61st Regiment, who, having secured the co-operation of several influential noblemen and gentlemen, first called for volunteers who should form a regiment worthy of the city of London by an advertisement, published in March, 1859.

Little was done except the arrangement of preliminaries until the 21st of July in that year, when a meeting for the purpose of further organising the movement was held in the Guildhall, the Lord Mayor (D. W. Wire, Esq.) presiding. It was well attended, and ably addressed by Wise, Esq.) presiding. It was well attended, and ably addressed by Wise, Esq.) presiding. It was well attended, and ably addressed by Lord Elcho (in those dark days there was no "London Scottish"), Sir Charles Napier, Sir F. H. Doyle, and Dr. Crolly, in language which was enthusiastically cheered by the assembled citizens. An incident occurred at this meeting well worthy of notice now. Sir Charles Napier took occasion to say in the course of his speech, "I'll be Colonel Napier took occasion to say in the course of his speech, "I'll be Colonel not a man in this hall ever handled a rifle in his life"—when one man, only called out, "Yes I can;" a bare, Cheshire" "Come up here, only called out, "Yes I can;" a bare, Cheshire" "Come up here, then," said Napier, "and let's have a look at you." He came forward; and, after a few words had passed between the veteran, Sir Charles and, after a few words had passed between the veteran, Sir Charles and, called out, "Well, here's one, but there is not another, I know;" and, sure enough, a long pause produced no contradiction.

At this meeting several resolutions were passed affirming the expedicency of forming the corps, defining the mere outline of its provisional organisation, naming the members of a first committee of a board of management (whereof the Lord Mayor for the time being should, ex officio, be president), and nominating Alderman Carter to be Colonel and Captain Hicks to be Lieutenant-Colonel, subject to her Majesty's approval—appointments which, it must be confessed, had been considered heinous, as the first recruit for the rank-and-file forward and was accepted only at the particular of that meeting, and for a considerable time but slow progress was made in enrolling members.

The services of the regiment were formally accepted on the 28th of October. On the 5th of November about 400 members had joined, and the ceremony of swearing in and enrolment was commenced by the Lord Mayor in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, in the presence of a numerous and distinguished company. On this occasion his Lordship received from the assembled members an address embodying their thanks for the able and patriotic service he had rendered at a time when his strength was so severely tried by illness—and, indeed, he did not long survive the occasion. Captain Hicks, the founder of the brigade, received at the same time a highly-complimentary address and an ovation which plainly spoke the popularity and respect he had already achieved.

From this time members joined with considerable rapidity. The subscription that a rifle-range had been secured at the Crystal Palace was announced that a rifle-range had been secured at the Crystal Palace (which has since proved a failure), and the delights of drill at Zion College, proved strong attractions to a people longing to get to work. Soon afterwards the grant of the use of the Guildhall, followed by a donation of one hundred guineas by the Corporation of the city of London had a perceptible effect in increasing the popularity and establishing the status of the regiment, which was not a little augmented by the appointments of thorough practical soldiers—Captain Hicks (the founder) and Captain H. Vere Close, of H.M. 30th Captain Hicks (the founder) and Captain H. Vere Close, of H.M. 30th Regiment, "Rebus Close" respectively—to the lieutenant-colonelcy and the first majority. In January, 1860, Alderman Carter withdrew his claim to the colonelcy, which was accepted by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, and the brigade at once took its place among the first in position. It not the very first, of the metropolitan volunteer regiments.

The corps has had its difficulties, principally such as were unavoidable in establishing an organisation for which there was little—certainly no sufficient—precedent; and others resulting from its peculiarly general location, which renders it difficult to reach by march any good field for military evolutions, and places the barriers of some ten miles of bricks and mortar and ten more of land "strictly eligible for building purposes" between them and the rural spots where only rifle-ranges worthy of the name are to be hoped for. But, thanks to the ranges worthy of the name are to be hoped for. But, thanks to the energies, spirit, and the harmony existing among its members, spirit, and the harmony existing among its members, spirit, and the harmony existing among its members

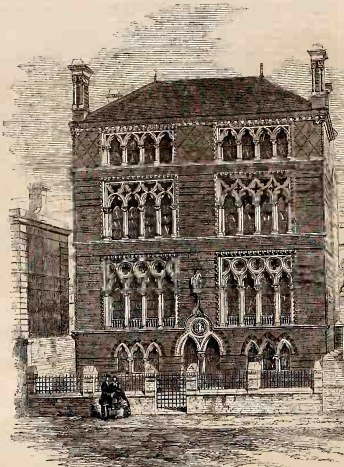
NEW ASYLUM FOR THE BLIND AT BRIGHTON.

THERE has been an institution for the blind established some years in Brighton, though located in a very indifferent neighbourhood. A few years ago Miss Oldham became suddenly blind, and naturally felt much interested in those who were afflicted in the same way, and desired at her decease that a sum of £2000 might be appropriated towards erecting an asylum for the accommodation of blind children. As Miss Oldham's bequest was for a new building, the original institution has become merged in the present blind asylum. A piece of land, with a frontage of 44ft. towards the Ruttingdean-road, and 170ft. deep, was purchased for the purpose by the Rev. H. Venn Elliott, on which the present asylum has been erected.

The new building, which was opened on Tuesday, presents a frontage of 44ft. with a depth of 77ft., and is designed in the style peculiar in Venice during the fourteenth century. It is executed in red brick facings, Bath Combe Down stone dressings, and black Kwell brick lacing courses. The windows are designed large in proportion to the width of the frontage, and, from the architect's inability to make lights in the flank walls, small courts are formed in the interior block of the edifice to give additional light and ventilation to the rooms. The new building will accommodate seventy children, but at present the finances of the charity admit of only the maintenance of eighteen inmates in all, of both sexes. This arises from annual subscriptions, there being no endowment fund whatever. On the ground floor is a committee-room, 14ft. 6in. square; a strangers' workroom and boys' workroom, and willow-soaking-room, the same size; with a kitchen, scullery, larders, laundry, washhouse, &c. On the first floor are two schoolrooms, 26ft. 6in. by 16ft., and 14ft. high; general dining and music room, 41ft. by 18ft., and 16ft. high, with master's and matron's sitting-rooms. On the second floor are the girls' and boys' dormitories, 30ft. by 20ft. 6in., with lavatories and bathrooms attached! On the third floor are two dormitories for the sick, the same size as those on the second floor, with bedrooms for servants, and linen-closets. Separate and distinct stone staircases divide the accommodation for the two sexes. In a peculiar squadrel of the entrance doorway is a bas-relief representing the Instruction of the Blind; and a full-length figure of "Charity," on an enriched corbel, forms the finial of the label encircling the archway itself.

The works have been executed by Messrs. Chessman and Co., of Brighton, under the architect, Mr. G. Somers Clarke, of London. Mr. W. Westbey was clerk of the works, and the carving and sculpture have been carefully executed by Mr. Thomas Earp, of London, under the supervision of the architect, and from his designs. The total cost of the new building, including fittings, is about £5000.

A sum of £8 per annum is paid by the parents or friends for the maintenance and tuition of each inmate, exclusive of clothing. Their education consists of reading (by touch) on embossed books, geography and arithmetic by the same means (Moon's system), singing and music, which are taught, being read to the pupils from ordinary books. The girls are taught knitting, netting, and needlework generally, and the higher portion of domestic duties. The boys learn basket-making, knitting, and netting. Day scholars are admitted at a trifling charge per week.



ASYLUM FOR THE BLIND AT BRIGHTON, OPENED ON TUESDAY.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES TO CLUMBER.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales arrived at Clumber, Notts, on the evening of Wednesday week, on a visit to the Duke of Newcastle. The Prince was escorted thither from the Retford station of the Great Northern Railway by the Clumber troop of Yeomanry Cavalry. A large number of the nobility and gentry had the honour of dining with his Royal Highness.

On Thursday morning the Prince, accompanied by the Duke of Newcastle and a number of his guests, embarked in the Lady of Lincoln and sailed down to Hardwick, where the Prince inspected the farm premises of his noble host, and also the model village in the course of erection there. At Hardwick the Duke's labourers and their families, as also a number of his tenantry, were congregated, and very enthusiastically cheered the youthful Prince, who gracefully acknowledged their manifestations of loyalty. The Prince, accompanied by the Duke and other noblemen, then went for a day's shooting in the neighbouring preserves.

On Friday morning the Prince, accompanied by the Duke and other noblemen, drove to Birklands, which is a part of the old Sherwood Forest. Thence they were driven to Worksop Manor, the residence of Lord Tolry, where they partook of luncheon. The party afterwards proceeded to the collieries at Shireoaks, belonging to the Duke of Newcastle. The Prince there inspected the engine-house, the machinery for lifting the coals, &c.

After a brief stay at the colliery, his Royal Highness, the Duke, and party, including Lady Sefton, Lady Delpre, and Lady Jessica Pelham, proceeded on foot to the village of Shireoaks, to lay the foundation-stone of a new church the Duke of Newcastle has determined to raise for his workpeople. A large crowd assembled to witness the ceremony, including members of nearly all the principal families in the neighbourhood, and the Prince was received with loud cheers and waving of hats. The Prince appended his signature to a record, of which the following is a copy:—"The foundation-stone of this church, dedicated to Almighty God in honour of St. Luke, and founded by Henry Pelham, Duke of Newcastle, K.G., &c., was laid by his Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, October 18, 1861." The document, having been also signed by the Duke, was folded and put into a glass jar, which the Prince deposited in a cavity under the foundation-stone. Prayers were then read by the Rev. H. F. Clinton, Chaplain to his Grace. His Royal Highness, having been presented by the architect with a beautiful silver trowel, proceeded to perform the ceremony of laying the stone. The Rev. Mr. Clinton then brought a blessing on the good work, and the ceremony terminated. The Prince and party left the ground amidst repeated cheers, and returned on foot, surrounded and followed by a loyal crowd, to the collieries, where carriages awaited them. The party returned at once to Clumber.

On Saturday morning Lord Foley's hounds met in the park, and the Prince inaugurated the hunting season. A fox was fortunately found, and, after a thirty minutes' quick run without a check, reynard was run to earth. He was, however, unkennelled and killed. The brush was presented to his Royal Highness. About one p.m. the cortège, preceded by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle and Lord Lincoln on horseback, and escorted by the Clumber troop of Sherwood Rangers, left the park for the Worksop station. All along the route there were thousands of people congregated, who cheered loud, long, and enthusiastically. All the feelings of loyalty of the good people of Worksop and the surrounding villages revealed themselves on this occasion. Never since the days when the old Abbey Church of Worksop was filled with priests and monks has there been such gay doings and rejoicings on either saint day or holiday as the ancient old town witnessed on Saturday last. The route round in front of the station the Sunday-school children, to the number of 800 or 1000, were stationed on a platform, and on the Prince's arrival at the station they cheered vociferously. The station, so much of it as was unoccupied by the public and the volunteers, was covered with scarlet baize. At the west end of the down platform the 2nd Lincolnshire, or Grimsby, Artillery Volunteers formed a guard of honour; and at the east end of the same platform were the Railway Corps of Rifle Volunteers, forming a part of the 3rd Manchester Regiment. The Worksop Rifle Volunteers formed a guard of honour in front of the entrance to the station. General Bruce accompanied the Prince in his carriage to the station; and there were on the platform the Duke of Newcastle, Lord Lincoln, Lord Clinton, Lord and Lady

VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES TO CLUMBER: HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PASSING THROUGH WORKSOP.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES TO CLUMBER.

Proby, Lady Galway, the Right Honourable the Speaker and Lady Charlotte Denison, Sir Thomas White, Bart., and Miss White. Shortly before two the Prince took leave of Lady Denison, Lady Galway, and Miss White; while the Duke of Newcastle, Lord Lincoln, Lord Clifton, Lord and Lady Proby, General Bruce, and Captain Hall, accompanied his Royal Highness in the saloon provided for himself and suite as far as Retford.

At Retford the volunteers formed a guard of honour, and the Mayor and Corporation were assembled on the platform with their silver-gilt regalia. Many hundreds had gathered near the station, and they cheered lustily. His Royal Highness stepped out of the saloon upon the platform. At Retford the Duke of Newcastle parted company with the Prince, and the shaking of hands was genuine and hearty. Cheers were called and given for the Duke of Newcastle, and the sightseeing was at an end.

The Prince arrived in Cambridge at half-past five on Saturday evening. His Royal Highness reached Huntingdon by the Great Northern, and travelled thence by the Eastern Counties to Cambridge. At Huntingdon one of the Royal carriages was in attendance to convey the Prince from the Great Northern to the Eastern Counties station, the stations being at opposite ends of the town. His Royal Highness, attended by the Hon. General Bruce, Captain Grey, and the usual retinue, on his arrival in Cambridge, drove from the station direct to Madingley Hall.

WORKSOP MANOR, THE RESIDENCE OF LORD FOLEY, VISITED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS YESTERDAY WEEK.

CLUMBER HOUSE AND PARK.

We give from the Sheffield and Rotherham Independent some particulars of Clumber, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle :—

Clumber is a beautiful mansion, situated on the bank of the River Idle, about four miles beyond Worksop. It is by no means an ancient ducal residence, having only been founded when the Cavendish estates, including Welbeck, passed to the Harleycks. The park on its present scale of magnificence was designed and laid out about a hundred years ago by the ninth Earl of Lincoln, the great-grandfather of the present owner, and is about a dozen miles in circumference. It was originally in the more immediate neighbourhood of the mansion, very flat in surface, with the River Idle flowing past, a sluggish and comparatively insignificant stream. The bed of the river has, however, been widened into a lake covering more than 100 acres, and the material thus obtained has been judiciously used in varying the level of the surface of the park, which now, though possessing none of the boldness of outline of Chatsworth Park, is as lovely a piece of gently undulating scenery as can well be conceived.

The house, which is in the Doric and Corinthian style of architecture, adjoins the river at the point where it is but beginning to expand into a lake. It has three fronts, looking west, south, and east. The west facade commands a beautiful view of the more elevated side of the park, including the descent of the river to the lake and a superb bridge which crosses it at the distance of nearly half a mile. In the centre which crosses it at the distance of nearly half a mile. In the centre of the stream or principal front is a light Ionic colonnade, which forms one of the most pleasing features in the building. This part opens upon a terrace extending to the lake, but considerably elevated above it, tastefully arranged in walks and flower-beds, the floral beauty of which, however, is rapidly failing as the approach of winter.

ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE AT CLUMBER.

THE LAKE AT CLUMBER.

The terrace is laid out in the Italian style, and is adorned with vases and statuary. In the centre is a fountain, which plays into a basin of fine white marble, 12ft. dia., in diameter, the basin resting upon a massive marble pedestal, having a fallgard of jets, 8ft. in diameter, and well being surmounted by a second marble basin, 4ft. in diameter, and supported by dolphins. The effect of the beautiful jets play under the sun's rays of a summer day is exquisitely beautiful. The terrace runs along the east front to the greenhouse and aviary, and descends gradually to the lake, and on the other by trees, which sweep round to the banks of the lake, some distance below the house.

The view from the house is not extensive, but is lovely in the extreme. The surface is in all directions gently undulating, and the eminences are covered with cedar, oak, elm, beech, and pine, of the finest growth, forming an admirable background to a picture of which the terrace, the lawns, and the magnificent lake, studded with a fine frigate and a multitude of smaller craft, constitute the immediate foreground. The park, and indeed the whole neighbourhood, are richly wooded, and present a picture of rural scenery rarely equalled. An old author who visited Clumber in the early part of the last century (the writer of S.—" Within the park the country opens on every side, which is often and delightful to the eye, as it is spread upon you with spacious, and gradually clothed with woody. The hills, or rather rising grounds, are so disposed as to show the variety of scenery, and the lawns are so smooth on the surface as a calm water would be. The whole park are everywhere adorned with rich stands. The walks are in the happiest succession; and, at an age when plantations, raised in the happiest succession; and, at an age when plantations, raised in the happiest succession; and, at an age when plantations, raised

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD PONSONBY.

The Right Hon. William Ponsonby, third Baron Ponsonby of Imokilly, in the county of Cork, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, who died on the 2nd inst. at Brighton, was born in 1770, the representative of a junior branch of the house of Ponsonby, Earls of Bessborough. He was the posthumous and only child of the wife, Georgiana, sixth daughter of Charles, first Lord Sackville, and of Major General the Hon. Sir William Ponsonby, K.C.B., who fell gallantly at Waterloo in 1815. He was born on the 6th of February, 1795, and succeeded as third Baron on the death of his father, in 1817. He married, in 1827, his cousin Frances, daughter of Frederick, eighth Duke of Devonshire, by whom he had a son, who died young, and a daughter, Diana, the wife of Captain the Hon. Edward Granville George Howard, R.N., brother of the present Earl of Carlisle.

THE MARCHIONESS CONYNGHAM.

The Most Noble Elizabeth, Dowager Marchioness Conyngham, who died at the age of 76, on the 16th inst. at Bifrons, her seat near Canterbury, at the age of sixty-four, was the daughter and heiress of Joseph Denison, of Dawkins, in the county of Surrey, a wealthy banker and merchant, who settled on business in St. Marylebone. It was there that the rich and beautiful heiress was wedded, on the 8th of February, 1794, by the Hon. Henry Conyngham, brother of the Army, and the widowed mother of Marquess Conyngham, Earl of Mountcashell, and Marquis Conyngham; and in this latter name Dundas, as heir of entail, succeeded to the estates of Mount Stuart fortune and estates, was created Baron Londesborough, and died in 1860. The Marchioness left three two sons and two daughters—the Countess of Aboyne, and the other Lady Somerville, who are both deceased.

MAJOR-GENERAL HELY, K.H.

Major-General James Peter Hely, K.H., a veteran Peninsular officer, formerly of the 57th Regiment, who died recently at his residence, 3, Norfolk-crescent, Bath, in his seventy-seventh year, served as a Captain in that corps at the battle of Albuera, and at Salamanca, Vittoria, Orthez, and various other battles, under the Duke of Wellington, and received medals for the whole of these services. Major-General Hely was the second son of the late Reginald Hely, of Cromwell Hall, who was killed at the battle of Ramillies, in 1706, while serving under the late Duke of York, against the end of the last century. Major-General Hely married, in 1805, Charlotte Thomson, widow of the late Thomson, Esq., of Kilbeon, Lanarkshire, and Clifton Court, Bristol. Mrs. Thomson was the third daughter of Richard Bayntun Rodney, Esq., M.P., of Cranmore Park, Gloucestershire. The General leaves no issue.

MAJOR ROBERT JOHN LITTLE.

Major Little, who died at his residence, Broomfield, Old Charlton, Kent, on the 6th of October, 1861, aged seventy-four years, was a distinguished officer of the old war. He was in the Royal Marines on Second Lieutenant's full pay on the 4th of July, 1803, became a Captain on the 31st of July, 1826, and retired on the 25th of November, 1837, after a service of fifty-four years. He was in the Channel Fleet, and at the blockade of Ferrol and Corunna in 1804, and appointed to the H.M. battleship on the Jamaica station in the autumn of 1804, and was in command of the marines in the Venerable on the coast of Holland. He commanded a detachment of marines at the night attack on the batteries on Vlieter Island, on the night of September, 1809, and received a medal for the service performed on it and lost the right hand. On the occasion he received the unanimous thanks of the Admiralty, and was appointed to command one of the Patriotic Fund. He had a pension for wounds, and had the silver war medal with one clasp. In 1836 he was awarded by the Admiralty the sum of a gratuity of £100 in consideration of his improved construction of artificial hand. Major Little was twice married, the second time on the 15th of September, 1837, to Ann Victoria, only daughter of the late Commissioner Inman, R.N. She was Capt. Thomas Surgeon Hickey, R.M., of the Unattached List of the Army; and one, Captain Richard Rodney Little, late of the Madras Horse Artillery and a Commissary of Ordnance, who died on the 6th of August, 1861, aged forty-six years. His only daughter, Caroline Mary Rodney, married, on the 31st of January, 1856, Captain Joseph Burn, of the Royal Artillery, and died on the 4th of March, aged thirty-nine.

SIR WILLIAM CURLETT.

Sir William Curlett, who died on 11th inst., after an illness which had prevented him for some years from following his professional career, was a very early pupil in the Institution of Civil Engineers, and was one of the first of the presidents. He was the son of Mr. Joseph Curlett, miller, of Boston Mills, Brentford, Middlesex, and was born on the 19th of January, 1784. By his adopted the profession of a civil engineer. From the very commencement of his career he was actively employed in several branches of engineering, and subsequently some of the most difficult engineering works of his time were executed with much success by him. He was the engineer-in-chief of the South Eastern Railway; and when the Great Exhibition of 1851 was projected the duties of its construction was assigned to him. One of the most prosperous consolidation of its labours in the erection of the edifice he received the honour of knighthood in 1851. For many years previous to his death he was engaged were the two large floating landing-stages in the Mersey at Liverpool, and the other one lately across the Mersey to Birkenhead. A remarkable effort of his skill and worthy terminations of a very active course of professional life. Sir William Curlett was a man of considerable scientific attainment, and in private he may be said to have had hosts of friends.

JOHN VANDERHEYDEN.

This highly-gifted performer, the last of that great classic school of trumpeting—the school of John Knight and Harper—is now to be number of a highly respectable family, and was born in 1758. After the usual preliminary education he was placed in the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and given on more than single occasions senior and subsequently the English stage. After leaving the Academy Mr. Vanderheyden entered the Royal Artillery, and soon adopted the theatre as a profession. He rapidly attained high celebrity for Liverpool, Manchester, and Dublin. He made his appearance at Covent-garden Theatre, Sept. 9, 1830, as King Lear, and made a highly-favourable impression. His song, however, continued to be provincial until some ten or twelve years afterwards, when he finally took the prominent position he fully deserved on the London boards. Mr. Vanderheyden, on the death of Charles Young, had in the classic style of acting so rival as the representative of Othello, Coriolanus, and Hamlet. He was also famous as Lear, and his impersonation of the King in the ancient play of "Ambigene" created quite a sensation at the time he acted it. Mr. Vanderheyden leaves two sons connected with the stage, performers of note; his daughter, Miss Vanderheyden, whose lamented death occurred but recently, was a very leading actress. Mr. Vanderheyden, to the deep regret of his numerous friends and admirers, died on the 6th inst., at his house, 34, North Bank, Regent's Park; he had retired from the stage in 1843. He was a very worthy gentleman, both in public and private life, and was everywhere much respected.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SARDINIAN BOY.—We believe you are correct in assigning Hindle's Position No. 84 to "W. E. C.," a facile of a second similarity, by 1. Q to Q 3rd (ch); K to take Q P; and 2. K to Q B 5th, mate. What says the correspondent?

H. PAGE, Dublin.—Both the proposed solutions are correct.

J. P. TAYLOR.—The solution of the Enigma in question was published.

CHESS CLUBS.—The Liverpool Library Club, 64, Bold-street, Liverpool.—Hon. Sec., Henry Kemp.

Bell's Life, 139, Strand.—Hon. Sec., Mr. Wayte.

Kent Rooms.—There is a chess club at the Retford Literary Institution, which meets on Wednesday and Saturday of every week, and to which the subscription is almost nominal.

Wellington Chess Club.—Hon. Sec., Mr. Hindle.

Wolverhampton.—A library may easily be filled, after having been in desire, provided the King has not been forced.

R. R. K., Dublin.—Your Problem is admitted here soon referred to the committee, and they will receive due attention.

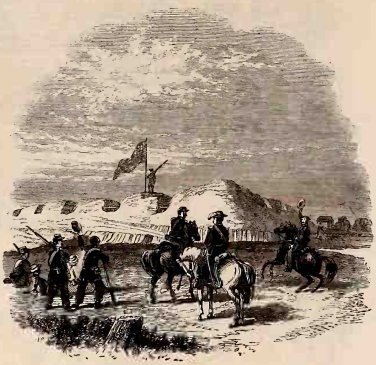
J. LOVEGROVE.—Much obliged.

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS.—No. 619 by E. L. Flora, M.D., Quilp, C. S. B., Telemachus, J. H. G., Lemuel, E. W. S., Rev. J. Owen, Dublin, Rev. J. Wayte, C. H. P., Hillsdown, W. G. W., W. R. R., Rose, A. B. S., Sacramento, Peter Parley

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA,

FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

FRANKLIN'S BRIGADE PASSING ARLINGTON MILL ON ITS WAY TO OCCUPY MUNSON'S HILL.



A PORTION OF THE CONFEDERATE WORKS ON MUNSON'S HILL.

THE Confederates having evacuated Munson's-hill, and other positions before Washington, they have been occupied, as previously reported, by the Federals as far as Lewinsville. A great part of the defences of the Confederates were make-believe, pointed logs for guns, and so forth. The scene at the top of the hill, in the earthwork itself, was (says one account) one of the most amusing that could be imagined. Everybody was laughing. The utter absurdity of the works as means of defence, their smallness, meanness, insignificance, touched everybody's sense of the ludicrous. The inclosure comprises about four acres, around which earth is roughly thrown up to a height of perhaps four feet. Of course there is no ditch, no glacis—nothing, in fact, to give it the character of a fortification of any kind. It is not even regular in form, but curls loosely and wavering[illegible] about the ground, as a huge snake might enfold it. In every respect it looks a squirmy piece of work. There are no embrasures for guns, but upon two of its projections are mounted—what? guns? No, indeed, but old logs, with a black circle painted in the centre of the sawed part to represent a formidable armament. At such a distance as that of Bailey's-cross the deception might very easily have remained undetected. In the middle of this wretched "fort" the remains of a hastily-constructed hut still stood, but, with the exception of a few trees, it contained nothing else. Behind it, on the slope of the hill, were a group of irregular shanties, thrown together for the protection of troops. Their number was sufficient for the accommodation of about one regiment—certainly not more.

Our special Artist has sent us three Sketches, herewith engraved, in connection with the advance of the Federalists on Munson's-hill. At the left of the last Illustration is depicted Count de Paris (alias Captain Louis d'Orleans), and next to him is the Duc de Chartres (alias Captain Robert d'Orleans), both of whom are on General M'Clellan's Staff.

GENERAL M'CLELLAN OCCUPYING THE CONFEDERATE POSITION AT MUNSON'S HILL.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1861.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1115.—VOL. XXXIX.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1861. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

POLAND.

IS another quarter than Italy it seems as if nationality is about to struggle into substance. A short while ago it did not appear as if Poland was to be added to the complications of Continental Europe. When, however, Warsaw is declared to be in "a state of siege" it means, if anything, that Russia thinks it necessary to govern her Polish provinces by the Cossacks once more. It means the abandonment of that half and-half conciliation which for some time past has been received as a mockery by the Poles, and that the promises of liberal institutions which have been given were meant for the ear of Europe and not for the hope of Poland. The circumstances under which this step has been taken are well known, but the real reason is not so apparent. It is supposed that when it was found that the elections for the Municipal Council had resulted in the return of men who are classed as patriots it was thought necessary to throw aside the policy of patience and liberality, and to return to the normal attributes of despotic government. The opportunity was not wanting. The anniversary of the death of Kosciusko was about to be observed by a solemn commemorative religious ceremony. This celebration was forbidden by the police. The Poles, with the marvellous persistency with which they carry out all their plans founded on that which is their policy—namely, the worrying of Russians out of their country—determined to disobey the order. The proclamation which threatened the most severe military measures in case of any demonstration afforded an opportunity to the people to show their distaste of the Government, and at any sacrifice disobedience was to be exhibited, in the hope that the Russian authorities would make exactly the blunder which they have made. The Poles are aware that it is possible to make the retention of Poland by Russia too expensive to be desirable; and every circumstance which tends to bring the system of government pursued by the agents of the Czar into odium is so much gained towards that consummation which is hoped for—namely, that ere long wiser counsels will prevail at St. Petersburg, and that Russia will cast off an acquisition which has hitherto brought her nothing but pecuniary loss and a bad name in Europe.

Now, it is hardly possible to conceive a more maladroit playing into the hands of those who cherish this policy, and lose no chance and care for no sacrifice in carrying it out, than the course pursued by the Russian Executive at Warsaw. How does it read in the eyes of the other nations of the world that at a solemn national festival a savage and intoxicated horde of Cossacks were let loose on a people assembled in their churches, where men and women fell by hundreds, wounded with muskets and pikes, priests were struck down at the altar, and ladies seized and personally maltreated (it is said that they were whipped) and dragged half naked into the streets, while three or four thousand persons were arrested? Then comes the "state of siege," of which we in this country have but a shadowy idea. In such a case no two or three persons can hold a conversation together uninterrupted, no one can linger in the streets, or wear a certain description of apparel, or sing certain songs. At a particular hour of the night—an early one—every house-door must be closed, and the least symptom of disturbance brings down armed men, who are at liberty to use their weapons at their discretion on any persons on whom they may chance to alight. It may seem a curious thing to say, but recent accounts from Warsaw state that this state of things is not viewed with regret in the abstract by those who have what they deem the true interests of Poland at heart. Of course there is a private sorrow and mourning for the physical suffering of those who are looked on as martyrs for their country is not wanting; but many of the patriotic leaders see in such an event something like a beginning of the end. The situation of the Russian empire in general is duly taken into calculation. It is believed that there is growing up in Russia Proper a people, and that the sympathy of such Russians is with the Poles. If, as is predicted and hoped, there should arise a Russian nation in the place of an autocracy and a serfdom, as heretofore, it is not possible that the Polish provinces can continue in their present condition. Something of this is even said to exist in the present; and, considering what an open and unrestrict state of affairs in St. Petersburg, there is supposed to be an understanding between a party there and in Warsaw. A rumour is abroad that telegraphic communications between the two cities, addressed to individuals, have been stopped, which indicate disorganization and preparation for action. This may be considered at least doubtful, but the fact of such a rumour is not without a pregnant significancy. There have been statements that Russian officers in Warsaw have refused to fire on the people; but even the position are said not to be Russians, but men of other countries, judiciously selected for their personal rather than their national qualities. The existence, however faint, of a public opinion in Russia in favour of Poland is perhaps the best omen of a solution of the question which does not involve a bloody sacrifice proportion and extent which it has not exhibited for some time past. While considering the surrounding circumstances of the situation, it is necessary to examine whether Poland contains within herself the indispensable elements of a national restoration. These would seem to be twofold. In the first place, no nation ever attained success in any project for its freedom or its independence which was not imbued with unanimity of feeling and opinion, as well as in determination to support that which it demands. In the present case, what a nation desires must be clearly and simply defined before any national movement is made. So far as can be ascertained, in the first requisite Poland is not wanting. All classes, all religions, are said to be united in one patriotic aspiration of the heart of the people is single and undivided. Then, as regards clearness of aim and purpose, there is, if possible, a still greater definitiveness. The claims of Poland are simply national existence and separation from Russia. That this latter is immediately on the earth is very doubtful, but it is no very rash conclusion for a future not too far distant. The former is attainable even now.

THE CORONATION OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF PRUSSIA: STATE ENTRY INTO BERLIN—THE TRADES DEFILING BEFORE THE ROYAL PARTY AT THE SCHLOSS—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 436.

Some allusion has been made above to the feeling toward Poland which is growing up simultaneously with the growth of the people of Russia, but the time has not quite arrived when any one meditating on the Polish situation can venture to ignore the existence or the power of the Emperor. It is said that the proceedings at Warsaw have been adopted without the sanction and even without the knowledge of Alexander, who has been absent in a distant part of his dominions; and that, whatever he may do in vindication of the authority of his Government, he will at least regret the extreme measures which have been taken. This Sovereign has not only a reputation for being unbiassed by the hereditary policy of his family, and it is said that he has learned to endure the name and to look forward to the existence of a people in his realm. He is believed to be actuated by political and personal tendencies which would render him accessible to the most humane wishes of a nation like Poland. Granting that he, too, has discovered that his Polish territories cost him more than they bring in, it is not an impossibility that he may also arrive at opinions favourable to a peaceful conclusion of a question which is always cropping up at awkward times, which possesses a vitality that is seldom even scotched, but never trodden out. The best friends of Poland would desire to see her advance to restored nationality by steps. In a general convulsion of Europe, originating in a struggle for nationalities, Poland might stand her chance with Venetia and Hungary. But many things tend to show that the Venetian and Hungarian questions may be settled without revolution. As regards Venetia, it will not be surprising if the anti-romantic process of bargain and sale should effect her transfer from the empire of Austria to the Kingdom of Italy; while the same policy which would influence the Emperor Francis Joseph in that matter would not be unlikely to operate on his dealings with Hungary. In reference to active rebellion, then, Poland would stand isolated and alone; and such a position as she would have to occupy would be far beyond her strength. A demand for a constitution and for rent municipal government carried on by natives, if conceded, would give time and opportunity for the consolidation of her internal resources, and the reorganization of her social system (which in the Polish of 1772 was not without its demerits and defects); and much might thus be done in the way of preparation for the good season when her name would appear in its integrity on the map of Europe. But, whatever is to come out of the quarrel as it stands, it is quite clear that a return to a policy of force and terrorism on the part of Russia must be a mistake. Military repression is not quiet; a state of siege is not emblematic even of a subdued mouth less of a tranquillized population. If all that we hear be true, the condition of Russian Poland is such as to render it no more adapted than has been the case since her subjugation for self-government and independence. If, at the same time, the attainment of those rights is the object of a unanimous national desire, force and oppression may for a while stifle and overbear it, but the time must come when it will be proved that it cannot be trampled out.

Mr. William Joshua Pfennel and Mr. Frederick Eden have been appointed inspectors of weights and metres to England.

The committees of the United Trades have presented an address to the Lord Chancellor respecting the late strike, declaring it to be a long and thanking him for his assistance in promoting industrial legislation, with especial reference to "The Consolidation of Workmen Bill."

The six new criminal statutes relating to offences against the person, malicious injuries to property, larceny, forgery, coining, and arson, series and abetting come into force on Friday (yesterday), and as many as 100 Acts and parts of Acts on the criminal law are repealed.

In the new Act on Offences against the Person there is a provision of an important character respecting furious driving, which comes into force on Friday (yesterday):—"Whosoever, having the charge of any carriage or vehicle, shall by wanton or furious driving or racing, or other wilful misconduct, or by wilfully neglect, do, or cause to be done, any bodily harm to any person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

At the ceremony which has recently taken place at Orleans for the cardinal's hat to the Archbishop of Chambéry the Apostolic Delegate addressed a speech to the Emperor, in which he said, "The Sovereign Pontiff, notwithstanding the grief by which he is overwhelmed, on account of a malady too well known to your Majesty, has yielded to the wish of the Emperor that the Archbishop of Chambéry should be raised to the rank of Cardinal." The Apostolic Delegate concluded his speech by expressing a wish that by more and more protecting religion and the Sovereign Pontiff the Emperor may obtain the Divine aid. The Emperor said, in reply, that he should always congratulate himself on the good understanding which must exist between the Holy See and the French Government. "I have just undergone a severe examination," added the Emperor, "which is so necessary, could not be better manifested than by the faithful adhesion of the prosecutors of the 20th December, by which are always mature." His Majesty concluded by recalling the sincerity of his attachment to the Government for the venerated Chief of the Church. The newly-appointed Cardinal commented and thanked the Emperor for the services he had rendered to religion, and expressed a hope that the Holy See's policy in favour of Rome and the position of its States which yet remains to it, whereby the Emperor had, he said, strongly contributed, would be established. The Archbishop concluded by "I was anxious to testify my esteem and sympathy to the clergy of Savoy, who have proved their devotion to France and their attachment to myself. I have heard with emotion your simple and touching words. You appreciate my efforts for the good of religion and the prosperity of the whole country."

The Moniteur in its bulletins of Thursday makes the following announcement with respect to the recent Papal Encyclical:—"The controversy now being carried on between several journals might have the effect of leading the public to form wrong ideas respecting the real policy of the Emperor in regard to certain changes to be effected in the internal constitution of the empire. The contents of certain secret papers would lead to the supposition that the Government emanates from all responsibility (solidarité) on account of publications which are only self-imposed, and that they are published under their own. In order to set once our short all false commentaries, we call attention to the fact that the Moniteur is the sole organ of the Government in Europe, and that no semi-official journal exists in France."

The Paris Pays says:—"The civil and military household of the Prince Imperial is fixed. It is said, from the 1st of March next, when his Imperial Highness will have completed his sixth year."

The Emperor Napoleon has created Mr. Lyall and seven crosses of the Legion of Honour to M. Bunsen and M. Kirchoff for their spectrum researches. M. Bunsen already a Chevalier, has been made an officer of the Order, and M. Kirchoff has been made a Chevalier.

It is reported that the French Senate will be prorogued for the 26th of November, for the purpose of taking into consideration certain propositions to modify the Constitution. The budget will be presented to the Corps Législatif immediately after the meeting of the Senate, which will take place at the beginning of January.

The Canadian question is disappearing. A peace is said to be once more reconcasing among Parisian politicians and speculators—rumours being circulated that proposals have been made by Russia to Austria for a European Congress at the expense of Turkey, and that the Italian Government has been pressingly urged to strengthen its army on the Roman frontier. The uneasiness is not lessened by the general appearance of another anonymous pen-pilot, full of acrimonious invectives against the Emperor, and threatening revolution on the Roman frontier be "rectified" on the north and north-west.

The Moniteur publishes a decree ordering the immediate execution of November, for the murder of Talking into consideration certain propositions to modify the Constitution. The budget will be presented to the Corps Législatif immediately after the meeting of the Senate, which will take place at the beginning of January.

The Canadian question is disappearing. A peace is said to be once more reconcasing among Parisian politicians and speculators—rumours being circulated that proposals have been made by Russia to Austria for a European Congress at the expense of Turkey, and that the Italian Government has been pressingly urged to strengthen its army on the Roman frontier. The uneasiness is not lessened by the general appearance of another anonymous pen-pilot, full of acrimonious invectives against the Emperor, and threatening revolution on the Roman frontier be "rectified" on the north and north-west.

The Moniteur publishes a decree ordering the immediate execution of November, for the murder of Talking into consideration certain propositions to modify the Constitution. The budget will be presented to the Corps Législatif immediately after the meeting of the Senate, which will take place at the beginning of January.

An exhibition is appointed in France for 1865, in which every attempt will be made to outvie all we may have done. The scheme is one of Sir Joseph Paxton's, and is to be entirely under the Imperial Government, and a crystal edifice of unheard-of proportions will rise on an open space in the Champs Elysées, which will cover the whole of the capacious enough to inclose both those in course of erection at South Kensington, will cover the whole of the open space in front of the Tuileries palace will, we are informed, be sent over for the International Exhibition, and an ample portion of space will be accorded every country willing to exhibit.

Three miners who had been buried for fourteen days in the ruins of Lalle Mine were brought out alive yesterday. The last was in a state of recovery. They suffered dreadfully when in the pit, and to appease their hunger they gnawed their sheet and wrested with each other, but, when attempted to get out, fell into a hole, and narrowly escaped drowning. After taking off his clothes he was able to squeeze out his body, and reached the surface. He said, and in that condition he was found. They also tried to get out, but found themselves too weak to climb the ladders, consider half of the number had died from their companion. It was this last that caused these additional hours' labour. Twenty dead bodies have since been got out.

SPAIN.

The bases of a treaty for the final settlement of the war indemnity to be paid to Spain by Morocco were arranged on Monday. A sum of 20 per cent on the value of real, which the Moorish nations duties is to be assigned, will make up the amount of two hundred millions of reals (£2,000,000), which is to be retained by Spain as a security.

The Cabinet has ordered the armament of the steam-frigate Concepcion, and of another of 400 horse-power actually under organization in Spanish workmen in the Mexican waters actually under organization at the Havannah. These two frigates will shortly leave Cadiz for Brest, and will accompany the Spanish division to Vera Cruz.

ITALY.

The Official Gazette of Wednesday publishes a circular addressed by the Minister of Justice to the Procureurs-Généraux, in which he says that the Government disregards the grave acts of clerical opposition against the laws of the nation and the national Government, and says that the Government respect the liberty of the clergy, but will adopt the most energetic measures if the clergy continue to attack the laws and institutions of the country, and intervene in the political arena.

Seventy-four brigands who have been infesting the country between Concello and Sala have been captured by the authorities in the neighbourhood. The Commandant has authorized Messrs. Rothschild, of Paris, to receive the last two-fifths of the national loan, which, according to a recent decree, is to be paid in monthly instalments.

The Opinione of Tuesday publishes a telegram from Brussels, announcing that the Belgian Government has recognized the kingdom of Italy.

The correspondent of the Times at Turin states that the vintage is in full tide all over Italy, and turns out to be glorious both as to quantity and quality. He anticipates for the future a large consumption of Italian wine in England.

A shock of earthquake was experienced at Ravenna last week. It lasted about 30 seconds, and was the strongest remembered there. Among other edifices the Church of St. Mark was damaged, the dome being cracked, and part of the cornice having fallen. The same occurrence at Romagna, especially at Forli, shocks were felt on the same day, and at Forli several houses were damaged. At Bologna and Venice, also, slight shocks were felt.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The Emperor has returned from Corfu, and it has been arranged that the Emperor and his wife contemplate passing the winter at Venice. While at Corfu the Emperor visited all the numerous objects of history inherent in the garrison.

A Ministerial Council was held held at Vienna on Sunday, under the presidency of the Emperor, in which it was resolved to establish a Hungarian administration which would carry out the intentions of the Government in every way. It was not, however, supposed in that council to proclaim a state of siege in Hungary.

We learn from Perth that the Cardinal Primate of Hungary has delivered a speech in his quality of Obergespanne of the Comitat of Gran, in which he declared that he would not only refuse to order the functionaries of the Comitat to co-operate in the levy of recruits for the army, but he would even forbid them to do so. He further said that the Emperor should come to Buda in order to dispel the fears of the Hungarians with regard to their Constitution, which they believed to be in danger, and should consult the Hungarian Diet as soon as possible. He expressed a desire for the postponement of the questions now before the Diet, and the levying of troops; and concluded by saying that the collection of the taxes by military execution should be immediately stopped. A despatch from Vienna, dated Tuesday, states that the philanthropic disunion has been summoned to the Council by order of the Emperor, "to justify himself with respect to his reply to the speeches of the Archbishop in reference to the military levy on the Comitats."

The whole of the magistrates in the Comitat of Perth have tendered their resignation. A few functionaries only will remain in office a fortnight longer, in order to transact the most urgent public business.

M. Ghiczy, President of the Hungarian Chamber of Deputies, has had for several weeks a detachment of forty cutrassiers quartered on his estate at Kisgyarod for the collection of taxes.

PRUSSIA.

A full account of the State entry of the King and Queen of Prussia into Berlin on Tuesday week is given in the accompanying Supplement, at page 456. According to one of the German journals, the prisoners for debt in Berlin petitioned the King of Prussia to be allowed to leave the jail on the day of his Majesty's entrance into that city, in order to join their acclamations to those of his other subjects; and they proposed to pay their word of honour to return to the prison in the evening. What answer was returned to this singular request is not stated, but we suppose that it was a negative one. Some riots among the artizans of Berlin, arising out of a trifling quarrel in a low street, took place on the night of the illuminations, and were renewed the following evening. There was no disorder, nothing in fact of a political character. The triumphal arch on the Alexander Plate was instigated by such a barricade, covered with rubble and stones, and throwing stones on the police.

The Order of Merit was presented on Thursday week by the people of Berlin with a gun-book, which he has called by the name of the city whose offering it is.

Yesterday week the review of the garrison at Potsdam was reviewed by the King, in the presence of the Queen, Prince Frederick William and the Princess Royal, Archduke Albert, the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden and Saxe-Weimar, the Grand Duchess of Baden, Prince Frederick of Holland, Prince and Princess Charles, Count of Flanders, the Duke of Oldenburg, Prince Frederick Charles, Prince Auguste of Wurtemberg, the Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, the Earl of Clarendon, the Duke of Magenta, the Duke of Gramm, General delia Rocca, Marshal Wrangel, and many superior officers.

On Saturday last a new Roman Catholic church, intended for the garrison at Berlin, was inaugurated with much pomp. The Prince and Princess Frederick William, accompanied by the Crown Princess, father and son, and other members of the Royal family, were present, also the Duke of Magenta and other representatives of foreign Courts and Powers. The Court preacher, Dr. Strauss, M. Feldrau, preached, and the Prince Bishop of Breslau consecrated the new temple.

The Crown Prince of Germany and the King, it is officially ill at his residence in Dresden. He has had several attacks of apoplexy, followed by paralysis of the right side. The Prince is the eldest son of the celebrated jurist and ex-Minister of State, M. de Savigny, died on the 25th ult. at the age of eighty-three.

DENMARK.

A Royal decree convenes the Council of State (Rigsraad) and the Legislative Assembly for Denmark and Schleswig for the Jan. 25.

The King has recommenced taking the attack of illness which has been suffering from since his return from Aalland, and presided last week at a Cabinet Council.

A monument in commemoration of the Danish poet Oehlenschläger was uncovered on the 21st ult. He was born at Copenhagen on the 14th of November, 1779, and died there on the 20th of January, 1850. His remains, which had been buried in the cemetery of Assistens, were placed in a sitting attitude. The statue is from the chisel of M. Bissen, a pupil of Thorwaldsen. It is placed on a granite pedestal, presented by Norway, in the fine promenade called the Landemsborg Palace.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

According to accounts from Odessa the Emperor would return to St. Petersburg from the Crimea on the 28th inst., so that his Majesty prolongs his stay there.

The reopening of the St. Petersburg University has been followed by disturbances more serious than those which accompanied its temporary closing. On Thursday week some 700 students demanded that their comrades who had received rustications should be restored, nevertheless be readmitted into the University; and a refusal of the demand led to a conflict with the police, in which the latter had the misfortune of the soldiery. The students, one of whom was wounded, made an active resistance, and many of them were arrested on the spot.

General Gerstenzweig, Military Governor of Poland, is dead.

The Catholic and Protestant churches and the Jewish synagogues at Warsaw remain closed, but no demonstration has yet reappeared them continue. The people pray before the doors of the churches. National mourning is universal.

The official Breslau journal of Wednesday publishes a letter from its correspondent at Petersburg stating that General Lambert has left his city in consequence of a telegraphic report of the latter Petersburg, for the purpose of making a report on the disturbances in the state of things in that city. According to the same letter, two more Lutheran priests have been arrested.

A despatch from Warsaw likewise describes the state of things in that city:—"Not more than three persons are allowed to stand together in the streets. Consequently if five persons come together, except in couple of friends, the arrival of a third is as dangerous as the attack of a numerous enemy. A moment since and in the knout. A man with either black eye (the result of a beating that General Lambert has left his correspondent at Petersburg, for the purpose of making a report on the state of affairs

THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

By the steamer City of Washington we have received New York journals to the 18th ult., and a short telegram from Cape Race to the 22nd.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS ON SEA AND LAND.

The report of the disconfiture of the Federal Blockading squadron off New Orleans is not believed by the New York Government at Washington. It is, however, reiterated with greater circumstantiality in the following despatch of Commander Mullins, of the Confederate States' Navy :—

PONT JACKSON, Oct. 12.—Last night I attacked the blockaders with my fleet. I succeeded after a very short struggle in driving them all aground in the South-west Pass, except the Preble, which I sunk. I captured a tug in the South-west Pass, and after they were fast in the sand I peppered them well, before from the mortar boats on our fort. It was a complete rout. No one was killed on our side. It was a complete rout. (Signed) HOLLINS.

A despatch from New Orleans, dated the 13th, says the force of the Federal fleet was 40 guns and about 1000 men. That of the Confederate fleet was 16 guns and 300 men.

The great naval expedition which has been preparing at New York and Boston for some weeks will rendezvous at Annapolis, on the Chesapeake, and take on board there its last quota of troops and ordnance. Among the transports attached to this expedition are the finest steamers of the late Collins and Vanderbilt lines.

The Federal Commodore who allowed the Nashville to escape from Charleston with the Southern Commissioners has been superseded.

A force of Confederates was landed on Santa Rosa Island, off Pensacola, and stormed the encampment of a New York regiment stationed there. They destroyed the tents, captured the camp equipage, and carried off a quantity of ammunition, and spiked all the guns placed in position.

Detailed accounts of the Confederate assault on the encampment on Hatteras Inlet show that the loss suffered by the Confederates was much exaggerated. The Massachusetts and Rhode Island regiments, it appears, "containing, it is judged, about fifty men each."

On the Potomac General McClellan advances but slowly. The Confederates have evacuated Vienna, destroyed the railroad, and taken refuge behind their strong fortifications at Fairfax Court-house and Bush Fairfax Court House. Two English officers who were present on the 8th ult. at the review of McClellan's artillery and cavalry on the 6th ult. report "the artillery fair, horses light; batteries rather a mixture, long and short, rough and smooth horses; cavalry very fine, men and horses well kept nor clean, but strong and serviceable; men strong and serviceable too, but not well up to a regular European cavalryman. Rifles are pretty not so formidable. Men don't ride; no seats, no setting up nothing cleaner; horses rather mixed; saddlery and equipments rather mixed; swords, sabretaches, spurs, belts, and moustaches—generally very dirty. As to bone and sinew, the men are good as can be; the impression is however, that they could not be relied on for a long day's work, or even in their present condition, and that they would do more harm than good if any attempt were made to assault them in the field."

In the Upper Potomac, where Generals Stone and Banks are in command, there has been some fighting. In the first encounter the Confederates retreated with the loss of one gun. On the second occasion 1800 Federals crossed the Potomac at Edward's Ferry, and marched in the direction of Leesburg, where they met the whole force of Confederates, who repulsed him.

In Western Virginia the death of the rebels is already such as to forbid the idea of further campaigning for the present. General Rosecrans, in command of the Federals, had fallen back with the main body of his army to Gauley Bridge, on the Upper Kanawha. The enemy, under General Lee, were encamped twenty-six miles to the south-east. Both armies are in want of the means of transport.

The opposing armies have not yet come into collision on the soil of Kentucky. Reinforcements are arriving by both sides. Ex-Vice-President Breckinridge is rousing the people of Eastern Kentucky to resist the Northern invaders.

In Western Missouri General Price, with 20,000 troops, has made a stand near Osceola. General Fremont was following him. A body of 3000 Confederates has been located at Fredericktown, in that State.

Mr. Cameron, the Secretary of War, has visited Fremont's headquarters to look for himself how matters were going on there, before leaving St. Louis he ordered General Fremont to disconcert, as unnecessary, his fortifications around that city, and to "push forward to meet Jeff. Davis"; to suspend work on the barracks for his bodyguard; to let his debts in St. Louis, amounting to 4,500,000 dollars, remain unpaid until they can be properly examined, and to allow none but the regular disbursing officers to disburse the funds. General Fremont was informed that the officers deputed by him to pay the troops were not by the President, numbering over two hundred, would not be paid. It is supposed, from the tenor of his order, that General Fremont will be removed or compelled to resign.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGNERS.

The following semi-official announcement has been made from Washington :—"First, no one has been authorised to enlist or raise troops in Canada. Second, no commissions have been offered nor any one authorised to muster troops in Canada into the service of the United States. Third, the Government has not tendered the command of the army to General Garibaldi. What is true is, that every loyal foreigner who has seen with a good character and credentials and who has offered his services to the Government in the field, and has been accepted, and no other is in the military employment of the United States. Second, General Garibaldi being a naturalised citizen, it was reported to the Government by one of his friends that the General was contemplating a visit to this country, and had intimated confidentially his desire to engage in the service of the United States. He was informed, if this were the case, his services would be accepted with pleasure, and he would receive a command. This was the extent of the action that was conferred on General Lafayette in the war of the Revolution. General Garibaldi, upon consideration of the subject, has concluded not to offer his services at present, but thinks he may by-and-by visit the United States."

MR. SEWARD'S CIRCULAR DESPATCH.

The Secretary of State has sent a letter to the Governors of the loyal States calling upon them to adopt measures for defeating the ecostts. This letter is conceived in these terms :—

Department of State, Washington, Oct. 14.

SIR,—The present insurrection has not originated in the want of any civil or political right or privilege, but in a purpose to divide their inheritance by the overthrow of the Government and the establishment of a foreign Union. Those persons known to have been in the conspiracy have not, in any important State without exception, been restrained of their liberty. Indeed, it is understood that they are permitted to hold correspondence with their agents in the loyal States without interruption. Taking circumstances of embarrassment of agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce, which are unavoidable in the present condition of the country, they have augmented at home, they seek to involve our common country in embarrassments in States which every patriot must desire to see in a state of unbroken prosperity that it shall result in relations of peace, safety, and friendship. It is also due to the just policy of the United States that no such disturbance is now less serious than it has been at any previous period during the existence of the insurrection. It is, however, manifestly proper that it has hitherto been, to take every precaution that is possible to avoid the evils of foreign war to be apprehended from the hostile combinations which are now endeavouring to exist.

One of the most obvious of such precautions is that our ports and harbours on the seas and lakes should be put in a condition of complete defence, for any nation may be tempted to take advantage of the present embarrassments and fail to close that it has sheltered itself on every side from which the storm might probably burst.

The measures which the Executive can adopt in this emergency are such only as pertain to his sanctioned and well-defined duties.

The President is putting forth the most diligent efforts to execute the measures for the defence of the country which Congress has adopted, or has recommended to the favour, and has supported with unanimity, and will support, if needful, who are rapidly bringing the military and naval forces of the United States into the highest state of efficiency.

